William Gilpin, second dragoons, 30th April, 1838.

Z. M. P. Maury, second dragoons, 28th February, 1838.

Albert E. Church, third artillery, 13th March, 1838.

John Beach, first infantry, 30th June, 1838.

C. S. Howe, fourth infantry, 23th February, 1838.

Second lieutenants, (6.)

Richard G. Stockton, first dragoons, 30th April, 1838.

Franklin Saunders, second dragoons, 30th June, 1838.

John R. Parker, second dragoons, 31st March, 1838.

Fisher A. Lewis, first artillery, 15th February, 1838.

William T. Martin, fourth artillery, 15th June, 1838.

Peter C. Gaillard, first infantry, 30th April, 1838.

Assistant surgeon, (1.)

John C. Reynolds, assistant surgeon, 25th May, 1838.

Transfer, (1.)

Second lieutenant W. D. Berrien, of the second regiment of dragoons, transferred to the 6th regiment of infantry.

Deaths (7.)

Lieutenant colonel John Fowle, sixth infantry, 25th April, 1838.

First lieutenant Asbury Ury, first dragoons, at Matanzas, 13th April, 1838.

Second lieutenant James McClure, first infantry, at Fort Brooke, Florida, 5th April, 1838.

Second lieutenant Charles H. E. Spoor, fourth infantry, Lockport, N. Y., 26th January, 1838.

Second lieutenant John Connor, 5th infantry, New Orleans, 24th February, 1838.

Assistant surgeon Willison Hughey, 25th April, 1838.

Assistant surgeon Wade Sullivan, at camp Walker, 15th May, 1838.

Dropped.

Lieutenant Charles B. Chalmers, first artillery, 14th February, 1838.

III.—The officers promoted and appointed will report according to their promotions and appointments, and join their proper stations, regiments, or companies, without delay; those on detached service, or acting under special orders and instructions, will report by letter to their respective colonels.

IV.—The graduates of the military academy appointed second lieutenants, and assigned to the four regiments of artillery, and the two second lieutenants assigned to the 2d and 5th infantry, will repair to the northern frontier, and report for duty to the several commanding officers, according to the orders transmitted from the adjutant general, and communicated through the commandant at West Point.

The second lieutenants assigned to the dragoons and the 1st, 4th, and 6th regiments of infantry, will join their respective regiments, and report for duty on the 30th of September, agreeably to regulations.

All the graduates promoted will immediately report by letter to their respective colonels, who will assign them to companies. Those on leave of absence will report their address, monthly, to the adjutant general's office.

By order:

R. JONES adj't gen'l.

Note. The numbers prefixed to the names of the second and brevet second lieutenants denote their relative rank.

FROM THE NORTHERN FRONTIER. We have been favored with the following extract from a letter, dated Niagara frontier, Chippewa, U. C., June 21.

I arrived here to-day, and find this place in a great excitement owing to a battle which took place last night at "Short Hills," about twelve miles hence, between a mounted troop of 100 British lancers and about 2,000 patriots.

It resulted in the loss of four lancers, and the capture of nearly all the rest. The patriots are fast gaining ground, and will not recede until they succeed or are exterminated. This place is garrisoned with 500 infantry, the 24th regiment, and the lancers, besides volunteers. Every person is thoroughly searched before he can leave the place.

The steamboat which lands the passengers from Buffalo is searched. They fear very much an eruption in this place, and for that reason every hotel is under guard, and every passage secured by armed men. A body of United States troops are quartered in Buffalo, and general Brady and several other officers left this morning for Detroit.

[New York Jour. of Com.]

THE MURDER AT BALTIMORE—SUPPOSED PARICIDE. It has been stated that a most diabolical murder was committed on Thursday night, near Fairmount, on the person of Benjamin Stewart, of Cambridge, Dorchester county, and that the deceased, besides being shot and stabbed, was so savagely hacked by repeated blows inflicted with a large hatchet, that his face was destroyed. It has been also stated that two men and a woman were arrested early on Friday morning, on suspicion of being concerned in the murder.

We have now to add the revolting information that, in consequence of suspicious circumstances—the grounds of which we have not heard—police officers Dimmitt and Lambert were despatched to the wharf on Saturday afternoon to await the arrival of the steamboat Maryland from Cambridge and that, on her arrival, they arrested William Stewart, the son of the deceased, on suspicion of being concerned in the murder of his father!

It appears that Benjamin Stewart, the father, William Stewart, the son, and his wife, had been in the city for some days, boarding at the house of Thomas Stewart, the brother of the deceased. It was understood that the father and son were to have left for Cambridge in the Friday's steamboat, for the purpose of closing their affairs there, and then to return and depart for the west, where they intended to settle. On Thursday evening the father and son walked out about 8 o'clock, and between 11 and 12 o'clock at night the son came in alone. On the following (Friday) morning the son left in the steamboat, and Mr. Thomas Stewart, not seeing the father, was under the impression that he had also gone in the steamboat, according to the arrangement referred to. It was not until he saw the corpse in the afternoon, and identified it to be the body of his brother by the clothes, that he was aware that he had not left the city.

William Stewart,* the son, was arrested as stated above, on the return of the steamboat on Saturday afternoon from Cambridge, and was carried before police magistrate W. A. Schaeffer, esq. On examining his person, spots were found on his pantaloons, to which spirits of turpentine had been applied. A vial half full of the same was found in his pocket, and he alleged that, having spotted his pantaloons on the steamboat, he had obtained the turpentine to cleanse them. Several bullets were also found in his pocket, and in his pocket-book was a paper containing an ounce and a half of arsenic. In the lining of his hat was found the will of his father, dated only on the 14th inst., bequeathing to his son a tract of fifty-eight acres of land.

A pair of pistols was produced by the uncle, which William, the son, had left in his room, one of which was loaded to the muzzle, and the other as if discharged, with pan open and hammer down.

Mr. Drake, hardware dealer, testified that William Stewart was the man who purchased of him, on the afternoon of Thursday, the hatchet which had been found near the murdered body.

William Stewart admitted that he had bought a hatchet of Drake, at the time specified, but that he had pledged it with Mr. Whiteley, in Pratt street.

Drake testified that the hatchet sold on Thursday was the only one sold by him for some days, and that he alone sells that kind.

The examination was closed by sending William Stewart to prison.

We hear that the woman under arrest has made disclosures, implicating one or two others in the murder.

[American.]

STEAM NAVIGATION. In an old book of "New Travels in the United States of America, performed by J. P. Brissot de Warville," is the following immediately interesting passage on steam navigation. Mr. Rumsey, whom he mentioned, was a remarkable genius, and a prophet of undoubted sagacity.

Sept. 1, 1688, [Philadelphia.]

"I breakfasted with Samuel Ameland, [Emlen] one of the richest and most beneficent of the society of friends. He is a pupil of Anthony Benezet; he speaks of him with enthusiasm, and treads in his steps. He takes an active part in every useful institution, and rejoices in the occasion of doing good; he loves the French nation, and speaks their language. He treats me with the greatest friendship; offers me his house, his horses, and his carriage. On leaving him, I went to see an experiment, near the Delaware, on the boat, the object of which is to ascend the rivers against the current. The inventor was Mr. Fitch, who had found a company to support the expense. One of the most zealous associates is Mr. Thornton, of whom I have spoken. This invention was disputed between Mr. Fitch, and Mr. Rumsey, of Virginia. However, it be, the machine which I saw, appears well executed, and well adapted to the design. The steam engine gives motion to three large oars of considerable force, which were to give sixty strokes per minute.

*A true bill was found against William Stewart, on Tuesday last, by the grand jury now in session in Baltimore.

"I doubt not but, physically speaking, this machine may produce part of the effects which are expected from it; but I doubt its utility in commerce; for, notwithstanding the assurances of the undertakers, it must require many men to manage it, and much expense in repairing the damages occasioned by the violence and multiplicity of the friction. Yet I will allow, that if the movements can be simplified, and the expense lessened, the invention may be useful in a country where labor is dear, and where the borders of rivers are not accessible, like those in France, by horses to draw the boats. This idea was consoling to Dr. Thornton, whom I saw assailed by raileries on account of the steam boat. These raileries appear to be very ill-placed. The obstacles to be conquered by genius are every where so considered, the encouragement so feeble, and the necessity of supplying the want of hand-labor, in America so evident, that I cannot without indignation, see the Americans discouraging, by their sarcasms, the generous efforts of one of their fellow-citizens."

"Since writing this letter, I have seen Mr. Rumsey in England. He is a man of great ingenuity; and, by the explanation which he has given me, it appears that his discovery, though founded on a similar principle with that of Mr. Fitch, is very different from it and far more simple in its execution. Mr. Rumsey proposed then (Feb. 1789) to build a vessel which should go to America by the help only of the steam engine, and without sails. It was to make the passage in fifteen days. I perceive with pain that he has not yet executed his project, which, when executed, will introduce into commerce as great a change as the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope." AUTHOR.

DEPARTURE OF THE GREAT WESTERN. The Courier and Enquirer says, that the departure of this vessel on Monday seemed to excite public curiosity almost as much as on her first departure. As the hour approached which was fixed upon for her to leave the wharf, the Battery, Castle Garden, the docks, the rigging of vessels in the harbor were crowded with people. Shortly after 4 o'clock, she was loosed from her moorings, and proceeded majestically down the East river, made a slight curve up the North river and then proceeded to sea. A few minutes more and she had passed the narrows, and then, nothing was visible of her from the city but the dense cloud of smoke which proceeded from her chimney, passing over the distant highlands. Several steamboats accompanied her to the Narrows, amongst them the Passaic from Newark, loaded with passengers almost down to the water's edge, the New Haven, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Fairfield and Belle, and several small craft.

She takes out no less than ninety-one passengers, and has, we are informed, about one hundred tons of merchandize on freight.

BUENOS AYRES. We have received papers from Buenos Ayres to the 14th April, eight days later than our last dates. The blockade of the port by the French squadron still continued, but the officer in command prolonged the period fixed for the departure thence of foreign vessels to the 15th June, and an official notice of this extension of time had been published by the United States and British consuls.

The correspondence between the government and French authorities on the subject of the existing differences, is published, and evinces on the part of the former, a strong determination to adhere to the ground it has taken.

[N. Y. Cour. & Eng.]

SPECIE—MEXICO. United States frigate Constellation, commodore Dallas, from Tampico, sailed on the 9th instant, touched at Vera Cruz on the 19th, and put on board the Lion $151,546 in specie, for merchants in this city, under the charge of lieutenant Radford, and proceeded to Pensacola. We have learned verbally, and from letters, that the French fleet was about to concentrate at Vera Cruz, with the intention of bombarding the city, and attacking the castle of San Juan de Ulloa, as the Mexicans would not come to any terms; it was also rumoured at Tampico that general Santa Anna had been placed in command of the Mexican troops, and was making preparations to resist the attack of the French.

The blockade at Tampico was continued by one brig, and by one at Matamoros; at Vera Cruz there were two French frigates and several brigs. The United States sloops of war Boston and Vandalia were at Vera Cruz, and the Ontario at Tampico.

[New Orleans Transcript.]

FAMOUS WINES. The late sale by Mr. Thomas and Son, of wines belonging to the late Mr. T. Butler, was very numerously attended, and the prices paid were enormous. Among other transactions, were the following. Fifteen demijohns sold at $155 each; one at $150; seven at $137; five at $117 50; ten at $110; seventeen at $105; thirteen at $102 50; four at $101;—and various other wines for lesser sums. One hundred and seventy demijohns were sold,—the whole amount of which is upwards of fifteen thousand dollars.

We have made a hurried estimate of the value of some of these wines,—and find that the price, as paid at auction, is at least half a dollar per wine glass of the usual size,—something as it were, like molten silver, and affording a plausible image of the aurum osabile. These wines, above specified, were chiefly purchased, we learn by the Butlers,—of whom it may be said, that it is marvellous if they have improved thereby upon their previous and ancient stock,—which we feel bound to decide is not an easy matter,—howsoever strong the bouquet of the last bought wines may be, of gold and silver.

[Philadelphia Gazette.]

HON. WILLIAM B. ROCHESTER. We lament to learn that our worst apprehensions with regard to the loss of our respected and valuable citizen judge Rochester, who was a passenger on board the Pulaski, are now confirmed. The judge was on his return home from Pensacola, where he had spent the winter, to his residence at Buffalo, and probably took the Baltimore route, with a view to visit his family connexions in Maryland. The melancholy event, which has plunged so many families into a grief too profound for consolation, has not inflicted a heavier blow on any of them, than that which will be felt by the surviving relations and friends of judge Rochester. No man, in all the public and private relations of life, could be more esteemed, respected and beloved. As amiable and unpretending as he was, able and upright, his death is a real calamity to the large circle of connections and friends to which he was endeared by so many ties. [Courier and Enquirer.]

REPLY UPON MISS MARTINEAU. In her last work upon this country, Miss Martineau abuses, in rather a petulant and acrid style, a certain village doctor in Vermont, who was called upon to attend her travelling companion, but from whom she could derive no satisfactory information as to the nature of her friend's complaint. "I fancy," says the female politician, "I hear now the sharp, conceited tones of the doctor, doggedly using his power of exasperating my anxiety." The doctor is question, who is a highly respectable physician at Battleboro, has published a reply to this unfeminine attack, in the papers, in which he fairly turns the tables upon his traducer. He says that he equivocated and evaded, in relation to the complaint of Miss Martineau's friend, "from motives of delicacy, and to spare the feelings of the lady. If she has been very much concerned to know, and is yet in the dark, I will enlighten her darkness. Her friend was in the first stages of deterium tremens!" And this is the tourist who, in commenting on the foibles of American ladies, regretted that they were so much addicted to intemperance! Miss Martineau should be more cautious in the choice of her travelling associates.

[New York Mirror.]

From the National Intelligencer of the 16th inst.

LETTER FROM MR. PICKENS.

Washington, House of Representatives,
June 14, 1838.

Messrs. Gales & Seaton: Gentlemen: In your brief report of what I said in the house yesterday on the Texas question, your reporter has this sentence: "A distinguished member (Mr. Adams) of the Massachusetts delegation had said, on a former occasion, it was a question of union or disunion." This is incorrect. I said "that, as the most delicate domestic questions had been dragged into this measure day after day, for the last six months, and as the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Adams) at the extra session, had declared, in his place, that a large portion of the northern people would prefer a dissolution of the union to the annexation of Texas, I was for meeting the issue he had thus tendered. I had no fears as to consequences." Again: I said too, "that our resources and population would be drawn off to Texas at an rate, &c., and that unless our government should take such position as to control the matter hereafter, Great Britain would do, and that in this view it was deeply interesting to the whole union, and not to one section only," &c. There are other points, not material for correction or notice.

I have never asked a correction before, I believe, of reports, but be so kind as to notice the above.

Yours, very respectfully,

F. W. PICKENS.

From the National Intelligencer of the 16th inst.

LETTER FROM MR. EWING, OF INDIANA.

House of Representatives, June 15, 1838.

Gentlemen: Notorious as the "Globe" newspaper now is for misrepresenting the conduct, the language, and the motives of many pure and enlightened statesmen, I do not view the unfounded calumnies and partial reports of such a reckless vehicle worthy of notice or correction in my place. Indeed, it would, on my part, be a useless waste of time, as I am aware, by experience, that no exposure will prevent a repetition of its malignant perversions; and having resolved that it shall not, at my expense, hereafter, torture truth, or make dastardly thrusts with impunity, I am content to adopt this mode, for the present, to rid myself of its base drivelling, and to illustrate its well-known propensities.

On the 7th instant, as I have already explained in your columns, I offered an amendment to the pre-emption bill, to secure to my state the exclusive right to enter all the land recently purchased of the Miami Indians, except a few quarter sections occupied and improved by bona fide citizens of the state at the date of the treaty purchase; and with this substance of my amendment, set forth in the remarks which I made upon the occasion of presenting it, duly sent in, two hours after presentation, to the office of that vehicle, and promised insertion by its accredited reporter, my remarks were suppressed, after being marked for publication, and the substance of the amendment was changed to grant pre-emption to all who have already settled upon the tract in question. This one instance of the truth and fairness of the Official, with evidence indisputable of its perversion in possession, may satisfy. The amendment alluded to was cut off in the house last evening, by the arbitrary action of the speaker of the house, and will not appear upon the journal; but I corrected the false statement of the Globe before it was so cut off, and therefore that circumstance will afford no shield, even were it so intended. I do not take the Globe. I could never read that paper without a feeling of abhorrence and disgust. But a friend has placed in my hands that issued on the 13th instant, in which I see, under the caption "Mr. Ewing's zeal for Mr. Clay," the garbled tenor of thought proper to give its dupes of my remarks on presenting my amendment is republished, and an arraignment preferred, declaring that "What Mr. Ewing—a witness not present—'pronounced false,' is established by the written notes taken down during the debate by governor Clay, of Alabama; Judge Young, of Illinois; Mr. Lyon, of Michigan; Mr. Norvell, of Michigan; all corroborating the reports of the Globe."

Now be it known, that not one of the whole array of honorable senators whose names are thus thrust forward by the Globe has, or can establish, the truth of what I know to be false, and so declared upon the occasion alluded to. Nor can the Globe's report of their speeches, as given, be tortured into a contradiction of anything I said. I said that it was utterly false that the distinguished senator (whose glorious fame and honest name are wormwood to the Globe man) had, as was reported, designated settlers on the public lands as 'land pirates;' that it was a calumny, sent abroad for party purposes—worthy of its fabricators—unworthy of belief. The settlers know that they settled down contrary to law; they do not deny or disguise this fact; and this was the sense and true meaning and intent of all that was charged against them. In substance and in fact, the president, (whose delusive echo the Globe is,) in his deliberate message to this congress, said as much, and made as many allegations to operate against the wishes and interests of those seeking pre-emption, as the much-traduced senator alluded to in the heat of debate. Have not the people read that message, and could they not mark the double aspect of its bearing upon the present state of things? But it suits the Globe man to overlook this; and in his despicable manner, and with his usual malign spirit, to labor to do wrong and inflict injury in the article I have remarked upon.

I do not believe that the defamation of the Globe can excite the prejudice of many honest men at this time of day. I trust indignant contempt of such malignant perversions will alone be called forth. Thus it is that a free and virtuous people will manifest respect for correct principles, and protect their faithful public servants from the influence of corrupt partisans. I thank God my constituents know me, and my public character can never rest upon the reports of the Globe newspaper; indeed, its praise would be mortifying; for my energies, my actions, and my opinions instinctively desire to avoid the contamination of such.

I will only add that, in correcting a false imputation against an enlightened patriot, I neither feel nor manifest any "zeal." I am no less the "zealous" friend of general Harrison, another enlightened patriot, but, in truth, my zeal for either is reserved for a different field of action. My whole zeal at present is to serve my constituents; and I trust neither duty nor honor will hereafter require of me to divert that zeal for a moment to counteract any new libels or defamation in the Globe, or resting upon its authority.

Very respectfully,

Your friend, &c.

JNO. EWING.

Messrs. Gales & Seaton.

LETTER FROM THE HON. WADDY THOMPSON, JR.

Washington, May 25, 1838.

Sir: A writer in a late number of your paper propounds certain question to me which I have neither the right nor the inclination to refuse to answer. The respectful character of the article, as well as the obviously respectable source from which it comes, forbid me to do so. I therefore send you a speech which I delivered in congress before I saw the article in your paper. I believe all the questions are answered in the speech. Let them may not be with sufficient distinctness, I now add that I am opposed to entrusting the keeping of the public money to agents appointed by the president, and removed at his pleasure. I am opposed to Mr. Rives' substitute, as being but a revival of the exploded pet bank system. I am also opposed to the charter of a United States Bank. I am in favor of special deposits with banks properly selected, preferring, in all cases where they exist, banks owned in whole or in part by states; in such manner that the money is not to be used by the banks in which it is deposited. I believe this plan, in every particular, the best. The money will be kept at less expense, will be more safe, more easily transferred, and it will cut down, if not entirely destroy, this great source of government patronage.

I am unalterably opposed to the rejection of bank notes, and the demand of gold and silver for all public dues. No possible combination of circumstances can induce me to vote for a measure which I believe will cause so much ruin and misery.

Whatever may be my opinion on the general question of the right of the constituent to instruct his representative, I do not hesitate to say that such is my peculiar relation to my constituents, that I would not throw myself in the way of their deliberately formed opinions on any subject. That "kindness and liberality" on their part to which your correspondent alludes, I am fully conscious of, and have endeavored to repay it in a manner more substantial than professions—by a stern and constant devotion to their interest of such poor power as God has given me. I am ready in their service to sacrifice that which I value far, very far beyond all other honors—their confidence and support. I have calmly and deliberately re-examined my opinion on the great questions now agitated, and I am only the more confirmed in their correctness. Until convinced that I am in error, no human power can force me to change my course. If such shall not be (as I do not doubt that in time they will be) the opinions of my constituents, it will give me much pain—nothing so much, however, as would the consciousness that any combination of circumstances should have forced me to sacrifice my own settled convictions of duty. I believe the system proposed will be injurious to the whole country, and more so to the south than any other section. If these opinions, honestly entertained and fearlessly expressed, shall forfeit me the confidence of valued friends, it will not be the first time that I have sacrificed popularity and office to a sense of public duty. I am aware of the powerful influences which have operated in my district to produce different opinions, of the small hope there is of my being able successfully to resist these influences. This in no wise diminishes the obligation to attempt it. I shall most assuredly, by all means in my power, vindicate my course as your representative, relying on the intelligence, firmness, and justice of those who sent me here. I therefore ask the favor of you to publish the speech which I send you, and I rely upon the "liberality and kindness" of each and all my constituents to read it dispassionately, and form their own conclusions; and I leave it to them to decide whether the systematic and fierce denunciation of which I have been the subject results more from a regard to the public good than from feelings of private and personal hostility.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. THOMPSON, jr.
To the Editor of the Pendleton Messenger.

INVITATION TO MR. CLAY.

Invitation of the late meeting at Masonic Hall, New York, to Mr. Clay, and his answer.

LETTER OF THE COMMITTEE.

New York, May 31, 1838.

To the hon. Henry Clay:

Sir: A meeting of our citizens was held at Masonic Hall on the evening of the 29th instant, when the address and resolutions, of which copies are enclosed, were unanimously adopted. By one of those resolutions that vast and animated assemblage committed to us the duty of inviting you to pass through the state of New York, by way of this city, Albany, and Buffalo, on your return to Lexington, after your labors at the present session of congress, shall have terminated.

The meeting lamented that the gratifying spectacle is not now presented by this state, which, but for recent events, it would have exhibited on your first journey through its widest extent. The desolation brought upon our beloved country, by a bad administration of government, although not confined to any particular interest, nor limited by state boundaries, has, in its fullest force, been visited upon us; and the indignation was, perhaps, the more dejecting, because it was dealt by those from whom a majority of our citizens had looked for benefits and gratitude. The indignation of a great people has at length checked the audacity, and foreshadowed the doom of the destroyers. Buoyant, therefore, with expectation, we can at least have the pleasure of showing you the monuments of former success and wiser counsels, and of pointing out to you the sources of our future hopes: our common schools, our canals and railroads, our spacious harbors, our noble rivers, our fertile fields, our shipping, workshops and warehouses, and our numerous and intelligent population, gifted with ingenuity, industry and enterprise, and not yet deprived of all their energies by the incubus that sits incumbent upon them. Amid the ruins which surround us, it is consolatory to see that something has been snatched from destruction by the intrepidity of yourself and your compatriots; and that there is much that was indestructible; and that materials remain, with which, under the guidance of patriotic skill, we may hereafter be able to repair the fabric of our prosperity.

Governed by these feelings, the meeting directed us to urge your acceptance of the invitation which we have above communicated. It will afford us the highest satisfaction to be enabled to state to them that their request will be complied with.—And you will, we trust, permit us to add, that the pleasure of our citizens in seeing you will be heightened by the opportunity of thanking you in person for the many and eminent services of the past; of rejoicing with you in the promises of the present; and of confirming their hopes of the future by a communion with one, who, undismayed by the perils that have from time to time threatened our country, still pursued the onward path, and taught us, by his precept and example, never to despair of the republic.

We are, sir, with the highest esteem and consideration, your faithful friends and obedient servants,

GULIAN C. VERPLANCE,
WILLIS HALL,
JOHN L. LAWRENCE,
THOMAS L. WELLS,
DUDLEY SELDEN,
ROBERT SWARTWOUT.

MR. CLAY'S REPLY.

Washington, June 8, 1838.

Gentlemen: I have to acknowledge the receipt of a letter which, as a committee appointed at a meeting of my political friends, recently convened in the city of New York, you addressed to me, transmitting a copy of their proceedings, and, in pursuance of one of their resolutions, inviting me to visit that city, and to pass through the state of New York to Buffalo, upon my return home, after the termination of the present session of congress.

I have perused the proceedings of the meeting with the liveliest feelings of gratitude; and I request you, gentlemen, to convey to those who composed it my cordial thanks, and respectful acknowledgments, for their friendly consideration of me. Whilst I feel highly gratified by the sentiments of attachment, confidence, and preference, with an expression of which the meeting has honored me, I think that it has wisely referred the designation of a suitable candidate for the office of president of the United States to the consideration and impartial decision of a national convention. Such an assemblage, representing all parts of the United States, and fairly constituted, will embody the opinions and best express the sense of the whole opposition to the present administration of the general government. It will reconcile differences, promote harmony, and secure hearty co-operation among those who are engaged in the patriotic cause of struggling to bring back the government to its former purity to heal the wounds in the constitution, and to restore the prosperity of the country.

I should be most happy to find myself under circumstances which would admit of my acceptance of the friendly invitation to visit your state. I am sure that every where, on a tour so agreeable, I should meet with the greatest kindness and hospitality, and behold in the virtue, intelligence, and enterprise of the people of New York, in the noble works of internal improvement which adorn its territory, and in the fruitful soil with which Providence has blessed it, abundant elements for repairing the temporary injuries inflicted by the errors and experiments of the federal executive. But I feel constrained to deny myself the satisfaction of contemplating these pleasing scenes. After an absence from my home, which has already extended to eight months, I am naturally most anxious to rejoin my family without any unavoidable delay. I might content myself with the assignment of this simple reason, but I have other and higher motives, which candor requires I should communicate, for declining to accept your obliging invitation. Although I am not, in fact, a candidate for any office, I am aware that my name is freely used in connexion with the highest in the gift of the American people. Whilst it is thus a subject of consideration, I have thought that it best becomes me to remain in an attitude perfectly passive, doing nothing with the intention of attracting the current of public feeling to me, nothing to disturb or affect the exercise of the free and unbiassed judgment of the people. I have accordingly acted in strict conformity with this conviction of my duty. I have visited no place, and shall visit no place, with the view of promoting my own personal advancement. Considerations both of principle and convenience have induced me to adopt this resolution. I know that sentiments of personal esteem and regard for me, and for which I am very thankful, apart from political motives, have prompted the invitation with which you have favored me; but if I were to accept it, no matter under what protestations or professions, it would be believed, whether justly or not, that it had other objects besides social intercourse, and an examination of the inexhaustible resources of your great state. The same or similar reasons with which I might be induced to visit New York, would be urged to prevail on me to go to other portions of the union. How could I discriminate? What limit should I prescribe? There would be a physical impracticability to go to every important point of the union, which I might be pressed, or prompted by the impulse of my own feelings, to visit.

The office of president of the United States is of a nature so exalted, and its functions so momentous, that it ought not to be, and, happily, never can be, reached by individual efforts to acquire it. It should only be bestowed by the free, spontaneous, and deliberate judgment of the people. When so conferred, it is more honorable to them and to the distinguished object of their choice. Thus receiving it, he will enter upon the career of its arduous duties, conscious that he has attained the elevated station by no low or unworthy arts, and overflowing with gratitude, will dedicate all his abilities, and his undivided energies, to the honor and the prosperity and the glory of his country.

Such, gentlemen, are the views which I should entertain if I were a formal candidate, and the sole candidate of the cause to which I am attached.—Far from being weakened, they appear to me to possess additional strength when we survey the actual state of the question to which they relate. The whigs have not yet determined on their candidate. They are now deliberating about it, consulting among themselves in their primary and other assemblies, as they have a right to do, and resolved to hold a great family consultation in December, 1839. Other gentlemen, of eminent abilities, of distinguished services, and of acknowledged patriotism, are justly and properly and prominently in their view, and under their consideration. Whilst this preliminary question is in progress of an amicable adjustment, I feel that it would not be right for me to make any personal exertions, or even to be voluntarily placed in situations in which it might be supposed that I was making personal exertions, to withdraw from them the confidence, so justly due to them, of our common friends, and fix it exclusively upon myself. In announcing this rule of conduct for myself, it is foreign from my intention to mark out any course for others, or to intimate any dissatisfaction with whatever line they may consider it proper to pursue.

I pray you, gentlemen, individually, to accept assurances of the high personal regard and esteem with which I am, faithfully,

Your friend and obedient servant,

H. CLAY.

OFFICIAL PAPERS.

The following message from the president of the United States, was communicated to the house of representatives on Wednesday, the 27th inst.

To the house of representatives of the United States:

I transmit in compliance with a resolution of the house of representatives of the 11th inst., reports from the secretaries of state, treasury, and war, with the documents referred to by them respectively. It will be seen that the outrages committed on the steamboat Sir Robert Peel, under the British flag, within the waters of the United States, and on the steamboat Telegraph, under the American flag at Brockville, in Upper Canada, have not been followed by any demand, by either government on the other, for redress. These acts have been, so far, treated on each side as criminal offences committed within the jurisdiction of tribunals competent to enquire into the facts, and to punish the persons concerned in them. Investigations have been made, some of the individuals inculpated have been arrested, and prosecutions are in progress, the result of which cannot be doubted. The excited state of public feeling on the borders of Canada, on both sides of the line, has occasioned the most painful anxiety to this government. Every effort has been, and will be, made to prevent the success of the design apparently formed, and in the course of execution, by Canadians who have found a refuge within our territory, aided by a few reckless persons of our own country, to involve the nation in a war with a neighboring and friendly power. Such design cannot succeed while the two governments appreciate and confidently rely upon the good faith of each other in the performance of their respective duties. With a fixed determination to use all the means in my power to put a speedy and satisfactory termination to these border troubles, I have the most confident assurances of the cordial co-operation of the British authorities, at home and in the North American possessions, in the accomplishment of a purpose so sincerely and earnestly desired by the governments and people both of the United States and Great Britain.

M. VAN BUREN.

Washington, June 20, 1838.

A number of documents accompanied this message, the contents of which may be generally inferred from the message itself. The following report from the secretary of war, however, is of sufficient consequence to be separated from the rest for publication.

Department of War, June 19, 1838.

Sir: In relation to so much of the resolution of the house of representatives of the 11th instant, as has, by your direction, been referred to this department, I have the honor to state that, on the receipt of intelligence of the destruction of the British steamer Sir Robert Peel, orders were immediately issued to the commanding officer at Fort Niagara, to detach a portion of his force to Sackett's Harbor; and shortly after, the disposable recruits at New York and Fort Monroe were ordered, part to strengthen that post, part to Plattsburg, and part to Swanton, on the Vermont frontier, at the same time, measures were taken to employ a steamer, to be manned with a competent military force, for police purposes, on each of the lakes, Erie and Ontario.

The department, having subsequently received information, communicated by the governor of the state of New York, that the disturbers of public order had taken refuge on a portion of the Thousand Islands, situated within the jurisdiction of the United States, where they were collecting arms and munitions of war, and engaged in fitting out hostile expeditions against Canada, major gen. Macomb was despatched to Sackett's Harbor, to take the command of the forces on the northern frontier, with instructions to take prompt and vigorous measures to maintain our treaty stipulations, and to execute the laws of the United States, and especially to lose no time in directing operations against the lawless men who, for the avowed purpose of committing depredations upon the territory of a friendly power, have stationed themselves on the islands in the river St. Lawrence. The general has been since advised to station a guard of regulars at each of the ferries on the river, and at each port of entry on the lakes, in order to protect the persons and property of subjects of her Britannic Majesty from any further outrage; and there is reason to believe, from the character and well-earned reputation of that officer, that he will carry these instructions into effect to the extent the limited force under his command will permit, with promptness and energy.

With regard to the "concentration and movements of foreign troops on the northern and northeastern frontiers of the United States," the department is not informed that the regular troops of her Britannic Majesty have, as yet, been stationed along the frontier, as it is believed to be the intention; that service appearing still to be performed by the volunteers and militia of Upper and Lower Canada—a force estimated, by competent judges, at about twenty-five thousand men. The regulars now in the Canadas are ten regiments of the line of six hundred and fifty men each, to be carried up to fifteen regiments; two battalions of guards, eight hundred and fifty men each; two regiments of cavalry, each of three hundred men. In New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, the regular force consists of five regiments of the line of six hundred and fifty men each. It is presumed that the usual proportion of artillery will be attached to the regular forces in these colonies, and in the Canadas, making an aggregate regular force of between fifteen and sixteen thousand men.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. R. POINSETT.

To the President of the U. S.

P. S. The accompanying extracts of letters received from his excellency the governor of New York contain such information as has been received by this department on the subject of the recent disturbances on the northern frontier.

From the Army and Navy Chronicle.

RAFT OF RED RIVER—OFFICIAL.

Louisville, June 4, 1838.

Gen. C. GRATIOT,

Chief engineer, Washington:

SIR: I have the honor to state to the department, that on the 9th of December last, the steam snag boat "Eradicator," with a keel boat in tow, left this place for the great raft in Red river, for the purpose of completing its removal. The steamer "Pearl," with a keel boat in tow, left on the 27th of January last, destined to the same service. The "Eradicator" arrived at the raft on the 23d of December, the "Pearl" on the 1st of January, and the "Laurel" on the 8th of February. The work of removing the raft was resumed by the respective boats on their arrival, and was continued by the "Laurel" to the 21st of April, by the "Eradicator" and "Pearl" to the first of May, the period for which the laborers were engaged. On the 7th of March last the first steamboat was enabled to force her way through the upper section of the raft, and up to the 29th five merchant boats had passed up, quite through the raft. On that day the entire remainder of the raft was cut, so as to leave a clear passage for boats. Still there remained in the channel a great number of snags, logs, &c., which have since been taken out by the "Eradicator." On the 1st of May the navigation through the whole extent of the raft was considered safe, and was navigated by the largest class of boats, trading in that river, with full cargoes, at the rate of seven miles an hour up stream, and twelve down, without damage to the boats. There were two boats lost near the head of the raft by striking snags: The "Black Hawk" on the 2d, and the "Revenue" on the 7th April. These accidents happened before the "Eradicator" had worked her way through that part of the river, and earlier than it was safe to risk a heavy laden steamer down the stream, by navigators that could not by any means know the river in so short a time after its channel had been opened, consequently were exposed to great danger.

The snag on which the "Black Hawk" struck was removed two days after the loss of that boat; it was found to be firmly fixed in a perpendicular position, with its roots twenty-three feet below the bottom of the river. The tree was about four feet in diameter, broken off about three feet below the surface of the water, and, situated in a current of about five miles an hour. The steamer "Revenue" had broken a wheel shaft on the passage down the river, some fifty miles above the head of the raft, and was stove by running on shore, in consequence of her unmanageable condition, having but one wheel at work. However, there is now no obstruction of a dangerous character in the raft, that is known. I consider the navigation as safe through that part of the river, where the raft was formerly located, as at any other part of it, from forty-five miles above its mouth to the head of the steamboat navigation, a distance estimated at 1150 miles.—The former location of the raft occupied 165 miles of that distance. Its removal has extended the navigation by steamboats, about 750 miles on the Red river proper. Its tributaries, from the best information I am in possession of, will afford about six hundred miles, with but partial improvements in their channels, and may be extended by improvements on the main river and its tributaries some nine hundred miles further, extending the whole line of navigation by the improvements 3,250 miles, passing through as fertile a soil as any on this continent, with a less proportion of land which is unfit for cultivation than any tract of the same extent in our country. The climate is well adapted for the cultivation of cotton; the lat. ranging from 32° to 35° N., between the original foot of the raft and the head of navigation. The lands on the river bottom, from the foot of the raft to one hundred miles above its head, have been nearly all redeemed from inundation by the removal of the timber from its bed, all of which is now settling with unprecedented rapidity. In that part of the river where the raft was located, there was not the trace of a man to be seen from its foot up to Rush island, near the Caddo agency, when the work was commenced in 1833, and which is now a continued line of cotton plantations, extending to the town of Shreveport, a distance of 115 miles. From that place to the head of the raft, there are many large improvements, and preparations now in progress to put in cultivation a large portion of the land on that part of the river. The land lying between the Red and the Sabine rivers, has also been thickly settled. There is, perhaps, a settler on every section of land in that whole district of country, covering a tract of ninety miles north and south, and forty east and west, lying within the state of Louisiana, which includes the Caddo purchase of the 1st July, 1835. The land lying between the Red river and Washita, also of about equal extent, and equal in quality, is settling with almost as great rapidity.

The state of Arkansas has its southern boundary at 33 degrees north latitude, which crosses the Red river about 15 miles due north, above the head of the great raft, and by the meanders of the river about 45 miles; and has a boundary on the river, on the southwest bank, of about 200 miles, on the northeast bank to its northern boundary some 600 miles; all of which is settling with a population that must in a few years produce some two hundred thousand bales of cotton per annum, and an immense amount of surplus provisions, being a good grain growing country, and equal to any in the United States for raising stock of any kind. Texas has a boundary on the southeast bank of the river of about 400 miles, which is also as valuable a tract of country as any within the limits of that government, a great portion of which is settled by an industrious and enterprising population.

The advantages to be derived from the removal of the great raft, cannot now be calculated. The government land on that river has been enhanced in value to an immense amount, not less, I should judge, than 15,000,000 of dollars. The settlers will reap inestimable advantages from the same work. The expenditure for its removal under my superintendence, including the building of the steam snag boat "Eradicator," designed to keep clear new accumulations of obstructions in that part of the river, called the raft, has been $311,129 50. It will be necessary to expend some $15,000 a year in that river, to work the snag boat "Eradicator," a part of each year, for which service she is constructed and is admirably well adapted, to remove such snags and logs as will from time to time rise from the bed of the river, and cave in from its banks; and to widen the stream at those points where it has been contracted to so narrow a channel as not to afford sufficient room for the drifting trees that float down during the high freshets in that river. For that service I hope congress will make provision from time to time, and in time to admit of the work being prosecuted at the most advantageous season of the year, which is from the 1st of December to the 31st of May. During the summer and fall months the water is frequently too low to operate a boat to advantage, and the work of too unhealthy a character to labor in that climate during that part of the year, when men will be subject to the prevailing diseases of the country, and the annoyance from the immense swarms of mosquitoes that abound in the valley of that river. Four years will, in my opinion, be as long as it will be necessary to keep up the improvement.

In that time the channel of the river will probably have returned to its former width, by the operation of the current on its bottom and shores, which are both wearing away continually; and by the assistance of the snag-boat to remove the logs and trees that accumulate in its bed, and clearing away the narrowest points, the navigation will be kept open without interruption. There is also some work necessary to be done on several of the bayous in the upper section of the raft, to secure the water in its original channel and prevent the enlargement to such an extent as to endanger the navigation of the river, by drawing more water from it, than could be spared from its volume in a low stage. I beg leave respectfully to recommend that provision be also made for removing the snags from the bed of the river above the raft, as high up as Fort Towson. That work is of great importance to the navigation of the river, and can be done at a small expense by the snag-boat "Eradicator." The master of that boat can run up from the raft, when the water is at the most favorable stages, and execute the necessary work, with a small additional expense, to the operations in the raft region. There are, however, some parts of that river that flow through banks that cave in to some extent, and keep up the supply of snags in that river, and large drifting trees in its current. The latter are liable to lodge at the narrow points in the raft, and give much more labor to remove them than would be required for felling the timber on the banks, and cutting it into pieces that would float down without interrupting the navigation, at the same time prevent the accumulation of snags at those points. For the execution of that work, it will require the labor of 50 men six months, at an expense of $10,000. For both of these objects I would recommend an appropriation of $15,000, in addition to the sum necessary to work the snag boat in the raft.

I am sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY M. SHREEVE, Superintendent.

THE STEAMBOAT PULASKI.

From the Wilmington (N. C.) Advertiser—extra.

Wednesday, June 30—1 o'clock P. M.

Further particulars of the loss of the steamboat Pulaski, on the night of the 14th June.

We think it highly important to state, in the first place that a gentleman of unquestionable character and judgment concur in saying the fatal explosion was caused by gross negligence on the part of those who had the direction of the machinery. Solomon, a black waiter on board, who had once been a fireman, states, that a little after 11 o'clock, as he turned from the fire-room, he heard the second engineer (who was on duty) turn the water-cock, and, from the loud shrill whistle which ensued, he knew that the water had gotten too low, and that there was imminent danger. Mr. Couper, Mr. Lovejoy, and others, give it as their opinion that the blow-cock had been negligently left open—that the boilers had been emptied, which alarmed the engineer, and caused him in his fright, to fill them suddenly with fresh water. The boiler being heated to redness, this body of water was instantly converted into steam with an expansive force which the sides of the boilers were too feeble to resist. It is further positively stated that during the whole passage, within twenty minutes of the catastrophe, the steam gauge-cock indicated from 27 to 29 inches of steam. The facts which immediately followed are given correctly by Mr. Hibberd, as published in our extra of the 18th, until it reaches the statement of the sinking. This was not the case, but she parted into three pieces.

In the breaking up, the whole boat went under water; but, upon the separation of the keel from the upper part of the boat, the bow and stern emerged again. Very shortly after, the forward portion of the stern was depressed beneath the water, and the binder portion elevated into the air, upon the highest portion of which were from 50 to 60 persons, more than two-thirds of whom were ladies and children. This continued within view of those passengers upon the bow of the boat (from whom this statement is made) about one hour, when it entirely disappeared. The keel, after its separation, came to the surface bottom upwards, when it floated in immediate contact with the bow for a half hour, when it was seen no more. There was no one upon this fragment.

We will now proceed to speak of the bow, and the fate of those whom it contained. Upon this portion of the wreck there was originally 18. Al immediately proceeded to lighten their fragment, by throwing into the sea every thing not necessary to secure salvation, which gave it greater buoyancy. On Friday, about 12 o'clock, while floating upon the ocean, two sails were seen, one in a northeasterly direction, and the other in a southwesterly direction, about five or six miles distant. On Saturday morning, early, a portion of the wreck was discovered, about five miles distant, with a small sail and a flag flying. This remnant made a successful attempt to reach those upon the bow, whom they joined about noon. They were 5 males. They attached themselves immediately to their fellow sufferers upon the bow, whose number they swelled to 23, and abandoned their raft.

The twenty-three then proceeded to erect a jury mast, upon which a square sail was hoisted; the wind continuing to blow from the S. E. (in which quarter it had been ever since the wreck,) they were blown towards land, which became visible about 4 o'clock P. M. At sunset quite a strip of land was seen, and trees discovered. The night was passed without any material change, and on Sunday morning, upon the occasional lifting of fog, land was quite apparent about three or four miles off, which they continued to approach until they got within half a mile. The wind, which had been gradually coming round, settled down to N. E. about 11 o'clock, which blew the wreck along the coast, about the same distance from land during the day. The wind gradually increased in violence, and the rain poured down during the whole of Sunday, until 5 o'clock, when it became calm, and the rain ceased. On that night the wind came out from the N. W. On Monday it was clear and calm. At 12 o'clock that day the wind blew a light breeze from the S. W. About 4 o'clock four vessels passed within three miles, steering east.

On Tuesday morning about sunrise the schooner Henry Cameron, captain Davis, was seen about five miles off in an easterly direction. She continued to near until within three miles, when the exhausted sufferers were discovered; she then immediately squared sails and bore down to the wreck, which she spoke about half past eight o'clock A. M. She then passed by, and anchored within a short distance. Captain Davis lowered his boats immediately, and succeeded in transferring the whole of the sufferers to his vessel, where every proper comfort, at his command, was humanely furnished these unfortunate beings. Intelligence was given by these that they had seen another portion of the wreck during the whole of the preceding day, and early that morning. The captain immediately bore down in the direction designated, (easterly,) and in about an hour came up to it; from this he had the gratification of rescuing Mrs. Noah Smith, and Miss Rebecca Lamar, Charles Lamar, two gentlemen, and two negro women, in an exhausted and worn out condition. This work of humanity being finished, captain Davis bore away immediately for Wilmington, where he arrived about 7 o'clock on Tuesday P. M.

To attempt to describe the feelings of these thirty persons towards their preserver, captain Davis—the sympathy of the crowd assembled at the landing—or the mingled emotions of those companions in misery who had been separated, and here met again in safety, though in suffering, time does not allow, nor is human language adequate. We can only add that fifty-nine souls in all have escaped a watery grave, of whom 48 have already arrived in this community, all of whom, it is hoped and believed, will be again restored to their anxious friends.

P. S. Since writing the above, we received the following additional intelligence:

Thirteen persons saved, among them Mr. Lamar. They reached shore near New River Inlet. Mr. Lamar and several others came ashore in a boat; the others on fragments of the wreck. Five are said to be near town, 12 miles. All are said to be likely to live. Two of whom have just arrived.

Samuel Bryley, Talbot co. Md., and Owen Gallagher.

From the Fayetteville Observer.

Seven persons died on one of the pieces of the wreck the day before they were fallen in with; among them, the Rev. Mr. Wuart, of the episcopal church, and lady. To such extremities had the sufferers been reduced, that the day of their deliverance had been fixed on as the fatal day to select by lot a victim to appease the cravings of hunger.

From the Baltimore Chronicle.

The intense interest taken by the public in the recital of the details of this most heart-rending disaster has induced us to seek, from all the sources within our reach, all particulars that we can rely upon as authentic. The annexed narrative is derived from information which we procured, in person, from J. H. Couper, esq., of Glynn county, Georgia, and Major James P. Heath, of this city, two of the survivors. The arrival of the latter amongst us, at the moment when the whole city had given him up as lost, excited the most pleasurable sensation, and was the occasion of universal joy.

The steam packet Pulaski, Captain Dubois, sailed from Savannah, on Wednesday the 13th of June, having on board about 80 passengers. She arrived at Charleston the same afternoon, and sailed the next morning with 65 additional passengers. In the afternoon the wind was fresh from the east and produced a heavy sea, which retarded her progress, and required a full pressure of steam. At half past 10, the wind continued fresh with a clear star-light, and there was every promise of a fine night. At 11 o'clock, the starboard boiler exploded with tremendous violence, blowing off the promenade deck above, and shattering the starboard side about midships—at the same time the bulk-head between the boilers and forward cabin was stove in, the stairway to it blocked up, and the bar room swept away. The head of the boiler was blown out and the top rent fore and aft. In consequence of the larboard boiler and works being comparatively uninjured, the boat heeled to that side, and the starboard side was kept out of the water, except when she rolled, when the sea rushed in at the breach. The boat continued to settle rapidly, and in about 40 minutes the water had reached the promenade deck above the ladies' cabin. Previously to this period, the ladies, children, and the gentlemen who were in the after part of the boat were placed on the promenade deck. About the time that the water reached that point, the boat parted in two with a tremendous crash, and the bow and stern rose somewhat out of the water; but the latter again continued to sink until the water reached the promenade deck, when it separated in three parts, upset, and precipitated all on it into the water. Many then regained the detached portions. The gentlemen who occupied the forward cabin, took refuge on the extreme point of the bow, when the boat broke in two, and clung to it and the foremast; others had placed themselves on settees, and the fragments of the wreck.

There were four boats belonging to the boat; two being swung to the sides, and two placed on the top of the promenade deck. The side boats were both lowered down, within five minutes of the explosion. In that on the starboard side the first mate, Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Swift and one other person had placed themselves;—in that on the larboard side were Mr. J. H. Couper with Mrs. Nightingale and child, and Mrs. Fraser and her son, who were under his charge, Captain R. W. Pooler and son, and Mr. Wm. Robertson, all of Georgia, Barney and Solomon belonging to the crew, and two colored women. By direction of the mate two of the crew launched one of the deck boats and got into her; but as, from her long exposure to the sun, her seams were all open, she immediately filled, and Mr. Hibbert removed the men to his boat. The boats met, when those in the second proposed to Mr. Hibbert to strike for the land, as it had on board as many as it could with any safety carry; this he declined to do, as he said he was determined to stay by the wreck until daylight, and had yet room for more persons. Both boats then continued to row about the wreck until the mate's boat had picked up as many as she could carry, when Mr. Hibbert yielded to the propriety of consulting the safety of those in the boats, by going to the land, as their further stay would endanger them, without affording any aid to their suffering friends, and they left the wreck at 3 P. M. The boats took a N. W. course, being favoured by a heavy sea and strong breeze from S. E.

At 12 o'clock they made the land, and at 3 P. M. were near the beach. Mr. Hibbert then waited until the second boat got up; and informed them that those who were in the boat refused to row any farther and insisted on landing;—Mr. Couper united with him in protesting against this measure, as, from the heavy breakers which were dashing on the beach, as far as the eye could reach, it was obviously one of great peril. Being overruled, they submitted to make the attempt. The mate, who had previously taken the two colored women from the second boat, then proposed to lead the way, and requested Mr. Couper to lie off, until he had effected a landing and was prepared to aid the ladies and children. The first boat then entered the surf, and disappeared for several minutes from those in the other boat, having been instantly filled with water. Six of the persons in her, viz: Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Swift, Mr. Tappan, Mr. Leuchtenberg, and West and Brown of the crew landed in safety. An old gentleman, supposed to be Judge Rochester, formerly of Buffalo, N. Y., but recently of Pensacola, Mr. Bird of Georgia, the two colored women and a boat hand, whose name is unknown, were drowned. The other boat continued to keep off until about sunset, when, finding the night approaching and there being no appearance of aid or change in the wind, which was blowing freshly in to the land, and the persons in the boat having previously refused to attempt to row any further, Mr. Couper reluctantly consented to attempt the landing.

Before making the attempt, it was thought necessary, to prevent the infant of Mrs. Nightingale, which was only seven months old, from being lost, to lash it to her person, which was done. Just as the sun was setting, the bow of the boat was turned to the shore, and, Mr. Couper sculling, and two men at the oars, she was pulled into the breakers—she rose without difficulty upon the first breaker, but the second, coming out with great violence, struck the oar from the hand of one of the rowers. The boat was thus thrown into the trough of the sea, and the succeeding breaker struck her broadside, and turned her bottom upwards. Upon regaining the surface, Mr. Couper laid hold of the boat, and soon discovered that the rest of the party, with the exception of Mrs. Nightingale, were making for the shore;—of her, for a few moments, he saw nothing, but, presently, feeling something like the dress of a female touching his foot, he again dived down and was fortunate enough to grasp her by the hair. The surf continued to break over them, with great violence, but, after a struggle, in which their strength spent its last efforts, they reached the shore, utterly worn out with fatigue, watching, hunger, thirst, and the most intense and overwhelming excitement. Besides this, the ladies and children were suffering severely from the cold. The party proceeded a short distance from the shore, where the ladies laid down upon the side of a sand hill, and their protectors covered them and their children with sand, to prevent them from perishing. Meantime some of the party went in quest of aid, and about 10 o'clock, the whole of them found a kind and hospitable reception, shelter, food, and clothing, under the roof of Mr. Singlee Redd, of Onslow county.

Mrs. Nightingale is the daughter of John A. King, esq. of New York, and a grand daughter of the late distinguished Rufus King. During the whole of the perils through which they passed, she and Mrs. Frazer displayed the highest qualities of fortitude and heroism. They owe the preservation of their own and their children's lives, under Providence, to the coolness, intrepidity and firmness of Mr. Couper and his assistants, and to the steadiness which they seconded the wise and humane efforts of that gentleman in their behalf.

On Monday they reached Wilmington, where they found a deep sympathy for their misfortune pervading the whole city, and generous emulation among its inhabitants to render them every possible assistance.

The forward part of the boat, after her separation, continued to float. On it were maj. Heath and twenty-one others. We have had a long conversation with major Heath, in which he related with great minuteness every thing attending the preservation of the persons who were on the wreck with him. It is impossible to convey in words any thing more than a faint idea of the suffering they underwent, or of the many harrowing and distressing circumstances which occurred during the four days they were on the wreck.

But a short time previous to the explosion it was remarked by one of the passengers to major Heath that the gauge showed thirty inches of steam. On the attention of the engineer being called to this fact, he replied that it would bear with safety forty inches. Major Heath had just retired to the after cabin. A number of passengers were lying on the settees, and when the boiler burst, the steam rushed into the cabin, and, it is thought, instantly killed them, as they turned over, fell on the floor, and never were seen by the major to move afterwards. He had, on hearing the noise of the explosion, got out of his berth and ran to the steps, the steam meeting him in the cabin. He got under the steps, as did also Mr. Lovejoy of Geo., and they were thus shielded from its effects.

In a few moments he went on deck, and found all dark. He called for the captain, and, receiving no answer, made for the mast, as he felt that the boat was sinking. Before he could secure himself the sea burst over him, and carried him away. Fortunately, however, a rope had caught round his leg, and with this he pulled himself back. The mast, as soon as he had been washed from it, fell, and crushed one of the passengers, Mr. Auze, a French gentleman, of Augusta. The boat now broke in two, and the deck forward of the mast, was carried away from the rest of the vessel, seemingly, very swiftly. Nothing more was seen after this, by major Heath of the yawl or the after part of the boat, but, in about half an hour, he heard a wild shrill scream, and then all was quiet! This must have been when the promenade deck turned over, with at least one hundred human beings upon it!

When daylight broke, he found that there were twenty-two on the wreck with him—among them Captain Pearson, who had been blown out into the sea, but who had caught a plank, and succeeded in reaching them during the night.

The danger of their situation was at once fully realized:—The heavy mast lay across the deck on which they rested, and kept it about twelve inches under water, and the planks were evidently fast parting! Captain Pearson, with the rest, set himself to work to lash the wreck together by the aid of the ropes on the mast—letting the ropes sink on one side of the raft, which, passing under, came up on the other side, and by repeating this operation they formed a kind of net work over it. They also succeeded in lashing two large boxes to their raft, which formed seats.

Friday passed away without any vessel coming in sight. Their thirst now became intense. The heat of the sun was very oppressive, its rays pouring down on their bare heads and blistering their faces and backs, some not having even a shirt on, and none more than a shirt and pantaloons.

The suffering of the younger portion of their company, at this time, became very great. Major Twigg, of the U. S. A. had saved his child, a boy about twelve years of age. He kept him in his arms nearly all the time—and when he would call on his mother who was safe at home, and beg for water, his father would seek in vain to comfort him by words of kindness, and clasping him closer to his heart.

On Saturday they fell in with another portion of the wreck, on which were Chicken and three others, whom they took on their raft. Towards the close of evening they had approached within half mile of shore, as they thought, and many were very anxious to make an effort to land. This was objected to by major Heath, as the breakers ran very high, and would have dashed the raft to pieces on the shore. Mr. Greenwood, from Georgia, told the major that he was one of the best swimmers in the country, and that he would tie a rope around him and swim to the shore. "No! No!" replied the major, "you shall not risk your life for me, under these circumstances, and in such an attempt you would lose your life. No! I am the oldest man in danger, and will not increase the risks of others." All hope of landing then was shortly afterwards given up, as a slight breeze from the shore was now carrying them out into the sea. Despair now seemed to seize on some of them, and one suggested that if relief did not soon reach them, it would be necessary to cast lots! The firmness and decision of major Heath soon put this horrid idea to flight. "We are christians," he told them, "and we cannot innocently imbrue our hands in the blood of a fellow creature. A horrible catastrophe has deprived hundreds of their lives, brought sorrow to many a hearth, and thrown us upon the mercy of the winds and waves. We have still life left, let us not give up all manliness and sink to the brute. We have all our thoughts about us, and should face death, which must, sooner or later, overtake us, with the spirit that becomes us as christian men. When that hour arrives I will lay down my life without a murmur, and I will risk it now for the safety of any one of you, but I will never stand by and see another's sacrificed that we may drink his blood and eat his flesh!" With such words as these did he quiet them, and reconcile them to await the issue. The day wore away again, without the sight of a vessel to cheer their drooping spirits.

On Sunday morning it commenced raining, with a stiff breeze from the northeast, which soon increased to a severe gale. Every effort was made to catch some of the falling rain in the piece of canvass which they had taken from the mast, but the sea ran so high that the little they did catch was nearly as salt as the water of the ocean. Still the rain cooled them, and, in their situation, was refreshing and grateful.

On Monday morning they saw four vessels. They raised on a pole a piece of the flag that was attached to the mast, and waved it, but in vain. The vessels were too far off, and hope was nearly lost, as they watched them, one after another, pass from their sight. They had now been without food or water for four days and nights; their tongues were dry in their mouths—their flesh burnt and blistered by the sun, and their brains fevered, and many of them began to exhibit the peculiar madness attendant on starvation. They could not sleep either, as the raft was almost always under water, and it required continual watchfulness to keep themselves from being washed over by the sea. Major Heath tells us that never for one moment did he lose his consciousness, and we hear from others, that his cheerful spirit and encouraging conversation kept alive the hope of safety in the breast of others, and banished despair from their minds.

On Tuesday morning, a vessel hove in sight, and her track seemed to lie much nearer them, than those they had seen the day before. They again waved their flag and raised their feeble voices. Still the vessel kept on her track, which now appeared to carry her away from them. "She is gone," said one of the crew, a poor fellow who had been dreadfully scalded, and he laid himself down on one of the boxes, as he said, "to die!"—Capt. Pearson, who had been closely watching the vessel, cried out "she sees us! she is coming towards us!" And so it was. All sails set, and full before the wind, the vessel made for them. The schooner proved to be the Henry Cameron, bound from Philadelphia to Wilmington, N. C. As soon as the captain came within speaking distance, he took his trumpet and cried out, "Be of good cheer, I will save you!" It was the first strange voice that had reached their ears for five days, which were to them as an age.

When the schooner came along side, they all rushed frantically on deck, and it was with some difficulty that the captain could keep them from the water casks. He immediately gave each of them a half pint of water, sweetened with molasses, and repeated it at short intervals. His prudence, doubtless, preserved their lives.

During the morning major Heath and his company had seen another portion of the wreck, with several persons on it, and as soon as the captain of the Henry Cameron was told of it, he sailed in the direction it had been seen and shortly afterwards came in sight. On this wreck which was a part of the promenade deck, were Miss Rebecca Lamar, Mrs. Noah Smith, of Augusta, master Charles Lamar, of Savannah, and Mr. Robert Hutchinson, also of Savannah. The two ladies were much exhausted, and master Lamar was almost dead. Every comfort that the schooner was possessed of was freely bestowed by the captain, and major Heath, on behalf of those who were saved with him, has asked us to return, thus publicly, to him the thanks, the deep and heartfelt thanks of the beings whom he rescued from a condition of such misery and peril, that the heart sickens at the contemplation of it. Mr. Hutchinson had lost in this disaster his wife and child. His wife was the daughter of Mr. Elliott, formerly in the United States senate from Georgia.

When the promenade deck separated from the hull, many persons took refuge on this portion of it. Among them was Mr. G. B. Lamar, of Savannah, and two children, the rev. Mr. Woart and lady of Florida, and a child of Mr. Hutchinson, and the 2d mate of the Pulaski. On Saturday morning, finding that there was no other hope of safety, the mate proposed to take the boat which they had secured, being the 2d deck boat—and with five of the most able of those on the raft to endeavor to reach the shore, and to send out some vessel to cruise for them. This being assented to, the mate, with Mr. Lamar and four others, took their departure, and on Wednesday morning they reached New River Inlet in safety. The passengers remaining on the raft, with the exception of the four mentioned as taken off by the John Cameron, died from exhaustion,—among them was the rev. Mr. Woart and lady, whose christian resignation to their fate excited the admiration of all around them. They expired within a few minutes of each other. Seven persons were reported to have died on Monday.—The body of Mr. Parkman of Savannah floated to the raft, and was recognised by his friends.

It was ascertained at Wilmington on Wednesday morning that eight other persons from the wreck had reached New River Inlet, but their names, with two exceptions, are unknown.

The passengers who escaped were almost without exception in the clothes in which they were sleeping, and suffered very severely from the blistering effects of the sun, and the chilly wind of the night. They were entirely destitute of water or food of any kind. Those who were last saved were most of them in a dreadful state of ulceration and debility.

The passengers were every where received with the most unbounded sympathy and kindness; and the Wilmington and Raleigh rail road company, the Portsmouth and Roanoke rail road company, and Baltimore and Norfolk steam packet company, tendered to them in a most liberal manner a conveyance in their cars and boats to the various points of their destination.

The cause of the disaster was obviously the neglect of the second engineer in permitting the water to boil off, or to blow off in the starboard boiler, and then letting in a full supply of water in the heated copper. One of the hands saved had, a few moments before the explosion, examined the steam gauge and found it fluctuating rapidly from 26 to 29 inches. Another had just left the engine room when he heard the shrill whistling sound of high pressure steam as the engineer tried the water cock; in a few seconds the explosion took place. Capt. Dubois was seen asleep in the wheel house ten minutes before the explosion. Capt. Pearson, the second captain, was blown out of his birth into the sea, and was also Chicken the first engineer. They both regained the bow of the boat.

The following is a recapitulation of the number saved at different times:

In the two boats,	16
On the two rafts	30
In the boat with Mr. G. B. Lamar,	5
On other fragments,	8
	59

TWENTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION—SENATE.

June 22. Mr. Norvell rose and said that, in consequence of remarks made in the senate, in relation to the moneys collected for a monument proposed to be erected to the memory of Washington in this District, he had been requested to present a memorial on the subject from the managers of the Washington monument association. The memorial was designed to correct the errors into which one or two of the senators had fallen in regard to it. It was accompanied by a statement of the receipts, expenses, and investments of the moneys, with a list of the names of the managers and officers. He desired the papers to be read and printed.

Mr. Morris made, and subsequently withdrew, a motion to return the memorial to those who sent it. The memorial was partly read, when Mr. King interposed, and objected to the further reading, as the language of the memorial, he thought was not sufficiently respectful. Mr. Preston said a few words, understood to be rather in favor of going through with the reading. Mr. King moved to lay the memorial on the table, but withdrew the motion at the request of Mr. Norvell, who said he hoped that his friend from Alabama would, for a moment, withdraw his motion to lay the memorial on the table. This paper proceeded from as respectable a body of gentlemen as any in the country; and he did think that, as they considered themselves to have been injuriously assailed on this floor, they should have an opportunity to be heard. It was true that they had used strong language; but this, under the circumstances, was natural. Let the memorial be read, and then the senate might take what course they thought proper, as regarded the further disposition of it. By the statement of moneys collected, it appeared that the society had received only between 27,000 and 28,000 dollars, of which they had invested upwards of $27,000, principally, he believed, in Pennsylvania state stocks. Between four and five hundred remained uninvested. Except what had been allowed to collectors in the different states, as commissions for money obtained from subscribers by them, very little had been expended, as the statement would show. He was authorized to say, too, that the books, with the names of all the contributors to the monument, are in the hands of the treasurer of the association, open to the inspection of all. These were facts which, in justice to these respectable citizens, ought to be known to the senate and to the public, after what had passed here on the subject.

Mr. Sevier was understood to say that the society had a sufficient opportunity to defend themselves in the newspapers. He therefore moved to lay the memorial on the table.

A number of bills were reported.

Mr. Grundy, from the committee on the judiciary reported the bill referred to them, changing the time of holding the United States circuit court for the district of Tennessee; which bill was, by consent, considered, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. Ruggles, from the committee on patents, reported the bill referred to them, providing for the trial of inventions to prevent explosions of steam-boilers, with the amendment of the house thereto, allowing the examiners $8 per day, instead of $300 in all.

The senate, on recommendation of the committee, disagreed to this amendment of the house, and the bill was sent back to the house as it originally passed the senate.

The senate took up and agreed to the resolution fixing, after this week, the daily assembling of the senate at 11 o'clock A. M. instead of 12 M.

The senate took under consideration the amendments of the house to the bill making appropriations for certain roads in Wisconsin.

On motion of Mr. Tipton accompanied by a few explanatory remarks, the senate disagreed to the amendments of the house, and the bill was sent back as it originally passed the senate.

A number of private bills were considered and ordered to a third reading, among which was one for the relief of James Waller. It caused a long discussion on the point whether the United States would pay for the improvements made on land sold a second time by the United States. The senate decided to refund the money with interest, but not to pay for the improvements, which of course, must be lost, if not paid for by the first purchaser of the land.

The following bills were also considered, and ordered to a third reading:

The house bill confirming the act of the legislative council of Florida, chartering the Florida rail-road and steam navigation company.

The bill for the benefit of the Alabama, Florida, and Georgia rail-road company.

The bill to authorize the payment of invalid pensioners in certain cases.

The bill to transfer to the citizens of Concordia, Ia., the interest of the United States in a certain tract of land.

The senate then adjourned till 11 o'clock on Monday.

June 25. The Vice President presented a communication from the secretary of war, with a report from the commissioner on Indian affairs, in pursuance of a senate resolution of the 13th instant, containing information as to the steps which have been taken by the executive for exchanging land southwest of the river Missouri for land owned by the Pottawatomie and other Indians. Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, from the treasury department, in pursuance of a senate resolution, detailed statements, in part, of the accounts of such collectors, receivers, and disbursers of the public money as have been reported defaulters to congress at its present session, of the amounts of the deficits respectively, of the credits claimed by such alleged defaulters, with suitable explanation why those credits were not allowed, &c.; the remainder of the statements to be made out and sent to the senate as soon as practicable. Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed, with 2,000 extra copies, on motion of Mr. Young, and after some conversation by Mr. Y. and Mr. Morris.

After the presentation of a number of petitions, several reports were received; among them was one from the committee on commerce, presented by Mr. Nicholas, authorising vessels bound to the ports of Mexico, and excluded from them by blockade, to enter and secure their cargoes in the ports of the United States. Read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. Clay rose for the purpose of calling the attention of the senate to a resolution offered by Mr. Hubbard and agreed to by the senate some days ago, requiring that the original papers on private claims should not be withdrawn from the files of the senate, but allowing copies of them to be procured by the claimants on paying such compensation as is allowed for similar services in the state department of the government. Mr. C. argued that the portion of the resolution authorising pay for copies of the papers was unconstitutional, inasmuch as it was in the nature of a tax, which the senate had not the constitutional power to originate, and much less to lay, without the concurrence of the other house. Mr. C. therefore moved to rescind that portion of the resolution, including also that part which allowed copies to be obtained by the claimants.

After some conversation by Messrs. Hubbard, Clay, of Kentucky, Davis, King, Sevier, and Bayard, the motion of Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, as above, was carried in the affirmative: Yeas 20, Nays 19.

Mr. Sevier now moved to rescind the whole resolution, thus leaving the subject of withdrawing papers on private claims wholly in the discretion of the senate, as it was before the adoption of the resolution.

After some further conversation by Messrs. Hubbard, Morris, Norvell, Merrick, Bayard, and Knight, this motion was negatived as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Clay, of Kentucky, Crittenden, Merrick, Norvell, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Young—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Alabama, Clayton, Davis, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King, Knight, Linn, Lumpkin, Lyon, Mouton, Pierce, Prentiss, Preston, Roane, Robbins, Smith, of Indiana, Spence, Wall, Webster, Williams, Wright—26.

So the resolution remains in force, as modified by Mr. Clay's motion, simply requiring that the original papers on private claims should remain in possession of the senate.

Mr. Bayard, from the committee for the District of Columbia, reported the bill referred to them, providing for certain lunatics within the District of Columbia, with an amendment, which was read, extending the benefits of the bill to the case of lunatics resident within the District.

The resolution of the other house, fixing on the 9th of July next as the day for terminating the present session of congress, was received from the house, and taken up.

Mr. Buchanan having, at the suggestion of Mr. Wright and Mr. Clay, of Alabama, waived his desire for immediate action of the resolution on account of the absence of some senators, said he had no wish to take advantage of absent senators, but he was anxious that the question of adjournment should be decided as soon as possible. The other house had decided that they could adjourn on the 9th of July. Congress had now been in session nearly seven months, and Mr. B. was against perpetual parliaments. The house had now fixed on a day of adjournment, and on that very day when the senate should also fix on a day, the house would immediately go to business in earnest; but till that time neither they nor the senate would go seriously to work. But Mr. B. was willing the resolution should lie one day, giving notice that he should call it up to-morrow at the earliest hour, and with that understanding the resolution was allowed to lie on the table.

Mr. Ruggles from the committee on patents, was understood to make a report unfavorable to the passage of the international copyright bill; which report was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

A number of private bills, heretofore entitled to a third reading, were passed, and several other bills considered and ordered to a third reading; among them were the following:

The bill to authorize the issuing of patents to the last bona fide transferee of reservations under the Creek treaty or March, 1832. [Amended and discussed by Messrs. Clay, of Alabama, Young and White.]

The bill to authorize the inhabitants of township 8 N. range 32 W. Arkansas, to enter land in lieu of the 16th section.

The bill to confirm claims to lands in the district between the Rio Hondo and Sabine rivers.

The bill to grant to the Cherokee country, Ala., the tract of land on which the seat of justice for said country is located.

The bill to confirm certain land claims in the Washington district, in Louisiana.

The senate, after an executive session, adjourned.

June 26. Mr. Webster gave notice that he should, to-morrow, move to take up the bill introduced by him, in regard to the use of banks as depositories of the public money and the reception of notes of banks issuing notes of a denomination less than five dollars.

On motion of Mr. Buchanan, the senate took up the resolution of the other house, fixing on the 9th of July next to terminate the present session of congress.

Mr. Benton objected to any action on this subject at this time. He noticed several important bills that were yet to be acted on, and especially the army bill, the fate of which he was unwilling to risk by binding congress to adjourn on a certain day. Mr. B. moved to lay the resolution on the table and called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

Mr. Grundy said he was among the foremost of those who objected to the senate's fixing on a day of adjournment, which he viewed as an improper measure for the reason that, though they knew very well that they could despatch their own business in the time proposed, they could not tell what time the house would require. But now that the house had determined in what time they could perform their duty to the public, and had all their important measures already before them, and they, on deliberation, had said that they could act on every thing which the public interest required by the day on which they had fixed, Mr. G. did not know by what rule the senate could say that in this the house had decided improperly, and Mr. G. would therefore vote for the resolution.

Mr. Buchanan said he was glad that the senator from Missouri had called for the yeas and nays, and Mr. B. would cheerfully record his vote against laying the resolution on the table, not that he or the senator cared any thing about the yeas and nays in respect to their own votes. Mr. B. believed that if his friend from Alabama (Mr. King) had prosecuted the resolution of adjournment offered by him, and a day had been fixed on for adjournment, congress would at that time have been as near ready to adjourn as they would be on the 9th of July, or the 9th August, if they decided on no fixed day. They never would set to work in earnest to do the business of the country till they knew the day that was to terminate the session. It was like putting off preparation for death; and in this hot weather any plea would satisfy overworked men for putting off preparation for adjournment till the very day was known and determined. Let congress now fix on the 9th of July, and they would by that time have all the business done which they were disposed to do.

Mr. B. would be as sorry as any man, whether interested in the bill or not, if the army bill should not pass. But would the senate tell the house, who, by a vote of two to one, had fixed the adjournment on the 9th of July, that they the senate, thought proper to give them longer time than the house itself had deemed necessary, and that the senate, therefore, would not fix on the day proposed? Would the senate thus, in effect, tell the house that they did not know in what time they could accomplish their own business, and the senate therefore would determine for them, because the house would otherwise fail of their duty, and neglect the army bill? Mr. B. hoped the resolution would be agreed to at once, and congress would then go to work and accomplish all the business that required to be done.

Mr. Benton said the senator's theory was contradicted by the existing state of facts. He insisted that the senate had so far exerted themselves that for two months they had been under an easy sail, and that the house had for some time been laboring day and night to the full limit of their strength, so that, in his own knowledge, the health of several individuals had been broken down. It was, therefore, vain to expect that their work would be accelerated by fixing on the day of adjournment. The army bill had repeatedly passed the senate and failed in the other house, and Mr. B. was against running that risk again. He was for holding the question of adjournment open at least till Monday next.

Mr. Buchanan still insisted that if a day were fixed, congress would not spend so much time in debate, and would on that account hasten their business. He noticed that, with six weeks vacation, congress had now been in session ever since the first of September; and unless they were cautious, they were in a way to convert themselves into a rump parliament, and sit forever. He insisted that if the business could not be done in the time proposed, it would not be done at all, and it was better to leave it undone, than to set so bad a precedent as that of further protracting the session.

The question was now put on laying the resolution on the table, and decided in the negative as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Linn, Lyon, Norvell, Sevier, Tipton, Wright—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Ala., Clay, of Ky., Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Grundy, Hubbard, King, Knight, Lumpkin, McKean, Merrick, Morris, Mouton, Niles, Pierce, Prentiss, Preston, Roane, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Smith, of Conn., Smith, of Ind., Southard, Spence, Strange, Swift, Tallmadge, Trotter, Wall, Webster, White, Williams, Young—39.

The resolution was then agreed to without a division; so that the 9th of July is fixed as the day of adjournment.

Mr. Grundy, from the committee on the judiciary, reported the bill referred to them, granting additional compensation to Joseph K. Averill, as a witness, the committee recommending that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Messrs. Smith of Connecticut, Norvell, Morris, Hubbard, Williams, Crittenden, and Merrick, reported a variety of private bills from committees, referred to them.

On motion of Mr. Roane, the committee for the District of Columbia were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the trustees of Columbia College.

Mr. Benton, from the committee on military affairs, reported a bill to continue in force the act providing indemnity for horses and other property lost in the military service of the United States. Read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. Southard offered a resolution, which lies over one day, calling on the secretary of the navy for a copy of the naval general order issued in relation to the exploring expedition, and for information on a great variety of particulars, past, present, and prospective, in regard to that expedition.

Mr. Niles presented the petition of the heirs of Silas Dean. Referred.

Mr. Young, on leave, introduced a bill to prevent defalcations by collectors, receivers, and disbursers of the public revenue. Read twice, and referred.

Mr. Buchanan by consent, introduced the following, which was read, passed to a second reading and ordered to be printed:

A bill supplementary to the act entitled "An act to establish the treasury department."

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That the safe keeping of the public money shall continue to be entrusted to the treasurer of the United States, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish the treasury department," approved on the second day of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine: And the said treasurer, in performing this duty, is hereby authorized and required, under the direction of the secretary of the treasury, to order the collectors and receivers of the public money, at least once in sixty days, and as much often as in his judgment the safe keeping of the same may render necessary, to make special deposits, in gold and silver, of the balances then on hand, to the credit of the said treasurer, in such banks of the different states and territories, and of the District of Columbia, as he may select, and under such rules, regulations, and restrictions as the said treasurer, under the direction of the secretary of the treasury, may deem best calculated to secure the safe keeping of the said special deposits, and to render him, at all times, acquainted with the condition of the said banks: And the said secretary of the treasury shall report to congress, within one week after the commencement of their next session, the names of the banks which shall have been thus selected; and the rules, regulations, and restrictions, under which they shall have accepted the said special deposits; and the compensation, if any, for which they shall respectively, have agreed to perform this service.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for the treasurer of the United States to authorize or direct the collectors or receivers of the public money to place, either on general or special deposit, with any bank, such bank notes as they may be permitted to receive in payment of the public dues, under the provisions of the resolution relative to the more effectual collection of the public revenue, approved on the thirtieth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixteen; but the balances of such notes remaining on hand, after satisfying the drafts which may be drawn by the said treasurer upon the said collectors and receivers, and presented to them, before the end of the several periods at which they shall be directed to make special deposits, under the first section of this act, and for the payment of which the holders thereof may bona fide elect to receive bank notes, shall by the said collectors and receivers be converted into specie, which shall be placed on special deposit, at the times and in the manner prescribed by this act: Provided, That no notes or bills of any bank shall be received in payment of any debt due to the United States, or shall be disbursed by any officer or agent of the same, which shall after the first day of October next, issue, re-issue, or pay out any note or bill of any description whatsoever, of a less denomination than five dollars, or which shall, after the first day of October, one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, issue, re-issue, or pay out any such note or bill of a less denomination than ten dollars.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the first twelve sections of the act entitled, "An act to regulate the deposits of the public money," approved on the twenty-third day of June, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, except so far as to enable the treasury department to collect any debts which may be due or owing from the late deposit banks.

A number of bills ordered to a third reading yesterday were to-day read a third time and passed.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of James Taylor was considered and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill for the relief Pierre Menard and others was taken up, discussed at length by Messrs. Bayard, Crittenden, Niles, Roane, Prentiss, Knight, Norvell, Clay, of Ky., White, Young, and Calhoun.

[The claim connected with this bill was understood to be for money advanced by the original claimants for the support of Clark's expedition against Vincennes and Kaskaskias, in the time of the revolutionary war.]

A motion of Mr. Wright to strike out the interest, ($30,000 on a principal of $10,000; the claim having been originally disallowed by Virginia, but admitted in 1834,) was decided in the negative by a majority of eight or ten votes.

The bill still remaining up, with a view to further amendment,

The senate, by consent, held an executive session, and then adjourned.

June 27. The Vice President presented a communication from the navy department, understood to be in compliance with the resolution offered by Mr. Southard, calling for information in detail relative to the exploring expedition. Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Tallmadge, the committee on naval affairs were discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of — Montgomery and Samuel Meade.

Mr. Tallmadge, from the committee on naval affairs, reported bills for the relief of Loammi Baldwin and of Samuel Warner, which were severally read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. Williams and Mr. Hubbard reported several private bills from committees, referred to them.

The bills for the relief of Pierre Menard and others, and of the heirs of James Taylor, were severally read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Webster, the senate proceeded to consider the bill introduced by him, further providing for the collection and keeping of the public revenue.

Mr. Webster explained and advocated the bill at some length, confining himself, however, to topics immediately connected with the bill.

Mr. Buchanan moved to amend the bill by substituting for it the bill introduced by him yesterday, and he proceeded at large to advocate the substitute, and to oppose the original bill as introduced by Mr. Webster.

Mr. Strange, after a few remarks, expressing doubt as to the expediency of each and either of the measures, moved to lay the subject on the table, with the understanding that it should be called up to-morrow or next day.

The bill and substitute were accordingly laid on the table.

The bill to revive the act to enable claimants to land in Missouri and Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims, was discussed at much length by Messrs. Sevier, Benton, Linn, Hubbard, Moulton, White, Clay, of Ala., Southard, Davis and Bayard, amended, on motion of Messrs. Sevier and Benton, laid temporarily on the table, and ordered to be printed with the amendments.

The senate took up the bill to divide the state of Delaware into two collection districts.

Mr. Bayard offered a substitute for the bill, making New Castle a port of entry, with a deputy collector.

The subject was discussed at much length by Messrs. Bayard, Clayton, Buchanan, Niles, Hubbard.

The substitute was lost: Ayes 7, noes not counted, and the bill, as it was, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The senate then adjourned.

June 28. On motion of Mr. Fulton, from the committee on public lands, Charles Gordon was authorized to make certain additions to the maps of the public lands.

The bill to divide the state of Delaware into two collection districts, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Tipton, the senate resolved to insist in the non-concurrence with the amendments of the house to the bill making appropriations for certain roads in Wisconsin; and to ask the house to consent to a committee of conference on the subject.

On motion of Mr. Nicholas, the bill authorizing vessels bound to ports in Mexico, and excluded by blockade, to enter and secure their vessels and cargoes in ports of the United States, was considered, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. Wright, the bill supplementary to the act to establish branch mints of the United States, was considered and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The resolution from the other house for the appointment of a joint committee of the two houses of congress to take into consideration, and report, at the next session of congress, on the expediency of so taking the next census of the United States as to enable the commissioners to make the most thorough collection of statistical details in relation to the agriculture, commerce, and manufactures of the country, was taken up, and, after a few remarks from Messrs. Benton, Hubbard, and Davis, was temporarily laid on the table, with a view to an inquiry whether it ought not to be more specific.

Mr. King, from the committee on commerce, reported the joint resolution referred to them, to authorize the president of the United States to cause certain surveys to be made, with a substitute, which was agreed to by the senate; and the resolution, so amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. Strange the senate resumed the consideration of the bill introduced by Mr. Webster, making further provisions for the collection of the public revenue.

The question being on Mr. Buchanan's substitute for the bill, which substitute requires that at least once in sixty days special deposits of the public money in specie be made in banks selected by the secretary of the treasury; that the notes of such banks as, after the first of October next, should issue notes of less denomination than five dollars, or less than ten after October, 1841, shall not be received; and that the first twelve sections of the deposit act of 1836 be no longer in force—

Mr. Calhoun addressed the senate in opposition both to the bill and the substitute, but expressing a preference for the bill, and urging an unyielding and unbending perseverance in the efforts to carry the sub-treasury.

Mr. Buchanan replied in favor of his substitute, and also in favor of perseverance in the sub-treasury; but urging that, in the mean time, minor measures were not to be abandoned or neglected.

Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, and Mr. Calhoun entered into a debate of considerable length, touching at times on various collateral topics. Mr. Clay advocating the passage of the bill.

Mr. Strange spoke at length in favor of the substitute, and in opposition to the bill.

On motion of Mr. Webster, the bill was laid on the table till to-morrow.

The bill to purchase (for $10,000) the right to use, in the public service, Dr. Boyd Reilly's vapor bath was considered, and rejected on the question of its engrossment: Yeas 15, noes 20.

The bill for the relief of the representatives of captain William Williams, of N. C., deceased, was discussed at length, and laid on the table. Ayes 22, noes not counted.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of lieutenant col. John Cropper was discussed at length by Messrs. White, Prentiss, Roane, Rives, Hubbard and Pierce; and on the question of engrossment the bill was rejected. Yeas 11, noes 26.

The bill to repeal, in part the act to provide for the safe-keeping of the acts, records, and seal of the United States, and for other purposes, was taken up, explained and advocated by Mr. Grundy, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill to create a new land district in Mississippi was considered, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The senate adjourned, after an executive session.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, June 22, (evening session.) Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, resumed the floor, and continued and concluded his speech in support of the sub-treasury bill.

He was followed by Mr. Kennedy, of Maryland, who took the other side, and spoke till near 6 o'clock, when he gave way for a motion to rise, and the committee rose.

On motion of Mr. Cushman, the house took up the senate's bill providing for experiments to test the strength of steamboat boilers, and receded from its disagreement to certain amendments proposed thereto by the Senate. [The bill therefore now only wants the president's signature to become a law.]

On motion of Mr. Thomas, the house next took up the bill for greater security on board of vessels propelled by steam. Several amendments proposed by the senate were concurred in; one of them proposed to strike out the clause requiring a fire-engine and suction hose to be kept in every boat over 200 tons burden. Mr. Fillmore opposed this; stated the necessity of such fire-engines, especially on the lakes and at sea, and moved an amendment to accomplish that object. The amendment was agreed to. Mr. Petrikin opposed the whole section. Mr. Fillmore defended it, and referred to the testimony of captains on Lake Erie respecting the value and necessity of such securities against fire. Mr. E. Whittlesy earnestly advocated the provision, dwelt on the horrors of a conflagration at sea, and the number of lives continually exposed on the northern lakes. He suggested to Mr. F. the modification of his amendment, by requiring iron instead of rope for moving the tiller. Mr. Petrikin urged his objection to the section; he preferred leaving the captains to their responsibility; prosecute them in case of accident, and let them guard against it as they pleased. Mr. Grennell insisted on the importance of having iron rods or chains substituted for tiller-ropes, referring to the loss of the Ben Sherrod from having had her tiller-ropes burnt, so that she could not be run on shore. He moved an amendment to that effect. This was agreed to; and the question being on striking out the entire section,

Mr. Thomas objected to all details being inserted in the bill. These accuties were some of them very costly, and the smaller boats could not afford the expense. The boats should be classified; without this, the provision would operate partially. He opposed the section on this ground. But the house refused to strike out the section as modified.

Mr. Childs moved an amendment providing that in case of the destruction of life, the owners shall pay a fine of $5,000.

Mr. Bronson moved as a substitute for this a provision of fine and imprisonment for racing, and if death ensue in the case, the owner or master shall be considered as guilty of manslaughter. He explained and earnestly urged the importance and necessity of such a provision, as going to the root of the evil.

Mr. Hoffman thought explosions seldom arose from racing, but more frequently after stoppages, when the steam was not let off. In races the engineer was always on the alert and examining the steam; but in most fatal cases the destruction arose from neglect. He opposed the amendment, as it would never be proved before a jury that a race had taken place, or which boat was in fault.

Mr. Pope deprecated the practice of racing, but despaired of ever effectually preventing it. He should, however, vote for the amendment, as it might possibly do good. He had but little hope from the law at any rate; for if the risk of the captain and engineer's own lives would not make them cautious, no legislation was likely to effect it.

Mr. Bronson further supported his amendment, insisting that racing against time was as much racing as when another boat was alongside, and it was these trials of speed which induced the captains to hold on their steam, &c. Mr. Hoffman replied, deprecating that any instance could be found where a boat was destroyed in a race. As to racing against time, the amendment made no provision against it. Time crawled with some, trotted with others, and galloped with others; it would be hard to punish so severely racing against a thing so uncertain. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. Chapman proposed an amendment providing a fine of $5,000 in case of loss of life from an explosion within 15 minutes from leaving a wharf. This amendment was rejected, and the amendment moved by Mr. Childs was agreed to. Mr. Ayer moved an amendment requiring a certificate from the engineer of his competency, after an examination by a board appointed for that purpose, under a penalty of — dollars. Mr. Evans moved a substitute providing for the appointment of a board of examiners, the certificate to be by them given, and imposing a fine on the owner of $500 a month for employing an engineer without such certificate. Some explanations took place between Messrs. Ayer and Evans. Mr. Biddle deprecated too much legislation, and objected to the amendment as imperfect; it provided no pay for the board of examiners. He feared it would operate oppressively and become odious.

Mr. Petrikia moved the previous question, but withdrew it for Mr. Campbell, of South Carolina, on promise of renewal. He thought it might be better to limit the speed of boats to so many miles an hour, but pressed the constitutional objection which had been urged when the bill was in committee. The interposition of the federal courts was not a sufficient argument in favor of a law in itself unconstitutional. The general government could have no jurisdiction over steamboats moving within a state. The same doctrine would give the government jurisdiction over every wagon on every road in every state in the union, and the government was already a consolidation. He was anxious to vote for the bill, the voice of humanity called loudly for some legislation to guard the lives of our citizens from the recklessness of persons intrusted with the command of our steamboats. He renewed the motion for the previous question.

Mr. Robertson and Mr. Toucey urged that the demand for the previous question should be withdrawn. An adjournment was moved, and lost, 52 to 70. The previous question was not seconded: Ayes 53, noes 57. No quorum having voted, an adjournment was again moved and carried: Ayes 74, noes 53. So the house adjourned.

Saturday, June 23. Mr. Lincoln, on leave, from the committee on the public buildings, reported the following:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to inform this house whether, in resuming the work upon the new treasury building, it is intended that any portions of the walls, at the northern and southern extremities, are to be removed, or are to be extended and connected at the north with the walls of the building occupied by the state department; or whether the latter building is to be taken down, or such alterations made therein as materially to change its exterior or interior structure; and, if so, in what manner and at what cost; and that he be requested to lay before the house a definite and descriptive plan of the elevation and dimensions of the treasury building, as the same, on his approval, is to be prosecuted to its completion, with an estimate of the whole cost of the building, including any alterations which, in connexion therewith, are to be made in the building of the state department, and in the grading of the contiguous street, and the construction of the necessary walls and culverts to protect the foundation of the building, and render the approach thereto and the occupation thereof appropriate and convenient.

Mr. L. asked the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. Keim objected, because he was opposed to renewing the old controversy on the treasury building at this late period of the session, and also because it might have the effect of again throwing the workmen out of employment who had been re-engaged. Mr. Lincoln moved a suspension of the rules. Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, called for the yeas and nays; but Mr. Keim, on hearing the resolution read again, remarked that, as it was merely a call for information, he would withdraw his objection; whereupon, the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. Carter made an ineffectual attempt to make the bills extending the pension system to western warriors the special order for Thursday next.

Mr. Adams proceeded in his remarks on the report of the committee on foreign affairs in relation to the annexation of Texas, and was referring to the right of slaves to petition, and the proceedings in the house last congress upon his tendering a petition of that character, stating that he should have no hesitation in presenting a petition from a slave, if his memorial was properly couched, and on a proper subject, or something to this effect. Mr. A. was proceeding in this line of remark, when the Speaker called him to order, saying that the remarks were irrelevant to the subject under consideration. Mr. Adams said he was putting an extreme case, by way of illustration, which was in order. The Speaker again reminded Mr. A. that he was out of order. Mr. Legare rose, and said he felt compelled to call the gentleman from Massachusetts to order; and cries of order were heard in various parts of the house. Mr. Adams called upon the speaker to reduce the disorderly words to writing, and appealed from the decision of the chair. The Speaker said the chair could not be called upon to reduce remarks made out of order to writing. It had never been known, either by any rule, or by parliamentary usage; and if such a course could be sustained, it would continually bring the chair into conflict with members, and would render it impossible for the house to proceed with its business.

Several members referred to the twenty-third rule of the house, which requires that disorderly words shall be reduced to writing.

The Speaker said he was perfectly aware of that rule, and it applied to cases where one member called another to order for disorderly or personal remarks, and not to the speaker when he called a member to order for irrelevant remarks, for the rule says the speaker shall call members to order, and makes it imperatively his duty.

Mr. Adams called for the reading of the rule by which the speaker called him to order, and refused to reduce the objectionable remarks to writing.

The Speaker read the rule requiring that a member "shall confine himself to the question under debate," and said he had called the gentleman from Massachusetts to order for irrelevancy in debate. As he was about to put the question on the appeal from the decision of the chair, Mr. Adams again insisted upon having the words reduced to writing.

Cries of "order!" "order!"

The Speaker directed Mr. Adams to take his seat.

Mr. Adams continued to hold the floor, and persisted in demanding that the words should be reduced to writing, and said he would then appeal, but he would not appeal from the decision in the form in which the speaker had put it.

The Speaker then put the question upon the appeal; and the decision of the chair was sustained, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. J. W. Allen, Anderson, Andrews, Atherton, Ayer, Banks, Beatty, Birdsall, Boon, Brodhead, Bronson, Buchanan, Cambreleng, J. Campbell, Casey, Chapman, Cheatham, Clowney, Connor, Craig, Cray, Crockett, Cushman, Davee, Deberry, DeGraff, Dennis, Dismock, Edwards, Elmore, Farrington, Fairfield, Fry, Glascock, Grant, Gray, Hale, Hamer, Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Holsey, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, Wm. H. Hunter, Ingham, T. B. Jackson, Jenifer, J. Johnson, N. Jones, J. W. Jones, Keim, Klingensmith, Legare, Leadbetter, Lewis, Logan, Loomis, Lyon, Mallory, Martin, Maury, Maxwell, McKay, Robert McClellan, A. McClellan, McClure, Meneff, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, S. W. Morris, Noble, Parker, Parris, Paynter, Pearce, Pennybacker, Petrikia, Phelps, Pickens, Plumer, Potter, Pratt, J. H. Prentiss, Randolph, Reily, Rencher, Rives, Rumsey, C. Shepard, Shields, Shepler, Snyder, Southgate, Stuart, Stratton, Taliaferro, Taylor, Titus, Toucey, Turney, Vail, Vanderveer, J. White, T. T. Whittlesey, S. Williams, J. W. Williams, Word, Worthington, Yell, Yorke—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Borden, Biggs, W. B. Calhoun, Carter, Corwin, Cranston, Cushing, Darlington, Davies, Evans, Everett, Ewing, R. Fletcher, Fillmore, Goode, Grennell, Halsted, Hastings, Henry, Lincoln, S. Mason, McKennan, Mitchell, Naylor, Ogle, Patterson, Peck, Potts, Reed, Ridgway, Robinson, Slade, Stanly, Tillinghast, Elisha Whittlesey—36.

So the decision of the chair was sustained by the house, and Mr. Adams thus declared to be out of order.

Mr. Boon then called for the orders of the day.

Mr. Williams, of Kentucky, on whose motion the resolution to fix the day of adjournment was postponed till Friday next, said that, at the request of a number of gentlemen, whom he was willing to accommodate, he would move a reconsideration of that vote. From the proceedings on the steamboat bill last night, even under the melancholy disasters that had recently occurred, it seemed they could get no vote on any subject, and, therefore, he thought the sooner the session was brought to a close the better. He then made the motion indicated, and asked its consideration at this time; to which no objection was made.

Mr. Calhoun, of Massachusetts, asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. Cushing and Mr. Titus severally made objections, but it was decided to be too late, though the chair suggested the entertaining of the objections; but objection was made to it, and, after some conversation, Mr. Hopkins moved to lay the motion on the table; on which, at the call of Mr. Williams, the yeas and nays being ordered, they were: Yeas 64, nays 139. So the house refused to lay the subject on the table; and the question recurring on the motion to reconsider, it prevailed: Yeas 142, nays 61.

The question then recurring back on the original motion, to postpone till Friday, Mr. Cushman moved to postpone it till Thursday next. The Chair ruled that the first motion took precedence. Mr. Williams then withdrew the original motion; and remarked that believing the general sense of the house was in favor of the 9th of July, though he himself preferred an earlier day, and as the resolution, as modified yesterday, proposed that day, he demanded the previous question, which was seconded without a division, and the main question being ordered thereon, Mr. Davee asked for the yeas and nays, which being ordered, were: Yeas 145, nays 69. So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McKay asked leave to submit a resolution fixing a day for the consideration of the army bill; but it was objected to.

Mr. Harlan also made an appeal to the house to devote a short time to the steamboat bill; but that was also objected to.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house again went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Connor in the chair,) on the treasury bill.

Mr. Kennedy continued his remarks in opposition to the bill until the house, according to order, took its daily recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The chairman took the chair at the usual hour. Having remained in the chair for some time, and no quorum appearing, Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, moved that the committee rise. This motion was rejected—14 to 15.

Having found itself without a quorum, the committee rose, and reported that fact to the house.

Mr. Cambreleng and Mr. Thomas were averse to taking a call of the house. A quorum had but rarely appeared at this hour, after recess, during this debate, and they hoped the house would consent to go into committee of the whole on the state of the union informally.

Mr. Calhoun, of Massachusetts, thought the practice of leaving the house without a quorum ought to be broken up, and, after some further conversation, the house again resolved into committee of the whole, and Mr. Kennedy resumed and concluded his remarks in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Toucey then moved that the committee rise, for the purpose of permitting him to move to take up the steamboat bill. The motion did not prevail. Mr. T. then went on in support of the sub-treasury bill, at some length. He had not proceeded far, when he gave way to Mr. Hopkins, who made an ineffectual motion that the committee rise.

Mr. Toucey made some yet further progress, when he gave way to Mr. Robertson, who made the same motion, but with no better success, and Mr. Toucey proceeded, and was followed by Mr. Thompson, who warmly opposed the bill, and argued in favor of a special deposit system.

Mr. Jenifer took the floor, and moved that the committee rise. Lost.

Mr. Potter stated a few reasons why, having been instructed to vote against the bill by the house of representatives of his state, he should nevertheless vote for it. Before he had concluded, Mr. Parris moved that the committee rise: Yeas 63, nays 79. So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. Potter proceeded a few moments longer, when he gave way at the request of Mr. Duncan, who moved that the committee rise: Ayes 63, noes 70. So the committee again refused to rise; and Mr. Potter again proceeded with his remarks; and soon after another motion was made to rise: Ayes 74, noes 84; and Mr. P. again went on. When he had concluded his remarks, Mr. Rhett moved that the committee rise: Ayes 85, noes 84. So the committee determined to rise.

Mr. Bronson moved that the house adjourn.

Mr. Hoffman demanded the yeas and nays. Ordered. The motion was withdrawn at the request of Mr. Thomas, who, in the name of the select committee to investigate the manner in which the public printing had been done, asked leave to move that that committee have power to send for persons and papers. Objections being made, Mr. Naylor moved that the house adjourn; but withdrew the motion at the request of Mr. Thomas, who moved to suspend the rules, in order to enable him to make the motion he had indicated.

Pending this proposition, Mr. R. Garland moved an adjournment, and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays, which were ordered. And the house, by a vote of 102 yeas to 72 nays, decided to adjourn.

Monday, June 25. Mr. Adams wished to make some inquiry as to the correctness of the journal in relation to the point of order made on Saturday, during his own remarks by the speaker. The journal did not declare in what particular it was that he (Mr. Adams) had been out of order. The decision, therefore, could from no precedent in future, inasmuch as it was indefinite and vague.

The Speaker said that the entry on the journal was made in accordance with all former precedents.

Mr. Adams said that he must submit in that case, as he had done in others. There was one other thing he wished to mention. The speaker had heretofore asked leave of the house for the member to proceed.

The Speaker explained that the recent change of the rules of the house had altered that order of the house.

Mr. Adams then claimed the floor, and anticipated that objection might be made to his proceeding, having been declared out of order, and he having actually proceeded one minute after that declaration on Saturday.

The Chair recognized the right of Mr. Adams to proceed when the question should come up.

The Chair being about to call the states, in their order, for resolutions, Mr. Petrikin rose, and asked for the reconsideration of the vote of the house fixing on the 9th as the day of adjournment. He also moved that the rules be suspended to enable him to offer that motion. Mr. Lewis Williams asked a call of the house. Ordered.

One hundred and sixty-nine members answered on the first call of the roll. It was then called a second time for the absentees on the first call, and one hundred and eighty-nine members were found to be present.

The call was then dispensed with, on motion of Mr. Cushman. Mr. Sherrod Williams hoped the house would suspend the rules, and then lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question of suspending the rules for the purpose of reconsideration, as moved by Mr. Petrikin, recurring, and the yeas and nays having been ordered thereon, the house decided the question (requiring two-thirds) in the affirmative—142 to 52. And the question recurring upon reconsideration, Mr. Sherrod Williams demanded the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question was then ordered to be put. Mr. Naylor demanded the yeas and nays—ordered; and the house decided not to reconsider by a vote of 64 yeas to 135 nays.

This being the day set apart for the presentation of resolutions, the following were presented in order.

Mr. Cushman submitted the following, which was disagreed to by the house:

Resolved, That the house bill "to define the number, compensation, and duties of officers of the customs," and house bill "making appropriations for building light-houses, light-boats, beacon lights, buoys, and making surveys for 1838," be made the special order of the day for Thursday, the 28th day of June instant.

On motion of Mr. Fletcher, of Massachusetts, Resolved, That the committee on commerce be instructed to inquire into the necessity of amending the laws to prevent frauds on the revenue in the entry of goods at the custom-house.

On motion of Mr. Briggs,

Resolved, That the committee on patents be instructed to inquire into the expediency of altering the laws in relation to appeals from the decisions of the commissioner on patents.

Mr. Randolph submitted the following, which was disagreed to by the house:

Resolved, That the committee on public lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting a township of land to each of the two colleges in the state of New Jersey.

Mr. Ingham submitted the following, which was disagreed to by the house:

Resolved, That Friday next, from and after the hour of 10 o'clock in the morning, be assigned for the consideration, in preference to any other business, of such bills as have been, or may be, reported by the committee on naval affairs.

On motion of Mr. Mercer,

Resolved, That the committee on roads and canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing a survey to be made of the river Potomac from the navy yard, on the eastern branch, in the District of Columbia, to the mouth of said river, with a view to the removal of the obstructions in the navigation thereof by vessels of great draught; and that the survey made under the direction of the department of war of James river, in Virginia, with a view to the improvement of the navigation thereof, be committed to the said committee, with an instruction to inquire into the expediency of making appropriation therefor.

On motion of Mr. L. Williams,

Resolved, That the secretary of war be directed to lay before this house the correspondence between that department and major-general Winfield Scott in relation to the removal of the Cherokee Indians west of the Mississippi, which had not been already been communicated.

On motion of Mr. Rencher,

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to lay before this house a statement showing the amount of expenditure, exclusive of public debt, for each year from 1824 to 1838.

On motion of Mr. Legare,

Resolved; (the senate concurring herein,) That a joint committee be raised to take into consideration, and report at the next session of congress, the expediency of so taking the next census as to enable and require the commissioners to be appointed for that purpose to make as complete a collection as possible of statistical details in relation to the agriculture, commerce, and manufactures of the country, and all its other resources and productive powers.

On motion of Mr. Harlan,

Resolved, That the committee on Indian affairs inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, the compensation to be allowed to all persons engaged as commissioners for making Indian treaties, as agents for superintending the removal of Indians, and for other services performed under the direction of the secretary of war, in the Indian bureau, not already provided for by law.

On motion of Mr. Underwood,

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to inform this house what kind of funds were furnished pension agents in the state of Arkansas, with which to pay the claims of pensioners; distinguished between the amounts furnished in specie and bank notes, and where bank notes were furnished; stating the different banks, as far as practicable, which issued the notes so furnished and the amounts on each bank.

Mr. Adams offered the following resolution, and asked for its consideration:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to cause to be transmitted to this house the newspaper presented to the secretary of state of the United States by the late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the republic of Texas, with his note of the 12th of September, 1837, or a copy of the report of the house of representatives of the state of Mississippi, to which the said minister invites the attention of the secretary of state, and alleged, in the said note of the Texian minister, to be contained in the said newspaper.

Objection being made by Mr. Beatty, Mr. Adams moved to suspend the rules, to enable him to move to consider the resolution, and asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered—35 to 120; and the resolution was again read.

Mr. Adams asked that a passage from the message of the president of the United States, on the subject-matter of the resolution, be read.

A single member objected, and the chair decided that it could not be done.

The house then decided not to suspend the rules for this purpose, (the question requiring a vote of two-thirds to carry,) by the following vote—Yeas 84, nays 108.

Mr. Robertson offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to communicate to this house, on the first day of the next session, all the information not heretofore communicated, now in possession of the executive, or may be procured before that time, touching undue attempts or practices, if any, since the 29th May, 1830, to keep down the price of the public lands, or prevent purchasers or entries thereof, at public or private sale by force, threats, or fraud, and the measure taken since the date aforesaid to prevent, defeat, or punish such fraudulent practices, and illegal entries upon the public lands.

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury prepare and lay before this house, on the first day of the next session, a statement of all grants and donations of public lands, or of the proceeds of sales thereof, to the states, by the United States, distinguishing the amount made to each, and the purposes and considerations upon which made; and accompanying the said statement with an estimate of the amount to which each state would be entitled of similar grants and donations, according to the proportions specified in the several deeds of cession from the several states to the United States.

Secondly. A statement of the whole quantity of public land now surveyed, and an estimate of the quantity unsurveyed.—distinguishing each, and where situated; and accompanying the same with separate plans for dividing the said lands, and the proceeds of sales thereof, among the states, in the proportions aforesaid, on such conditions as to the time and manner of division and sale, graduation, reduction of price, and reservation of title in the United States, and final disposition, as may be best calculated to effect the objects of this resolution, in conformity with the original compacts entered into between the several states and the United States relating to the said lands.

Thirdly. A plan for re-organizing the land system on such principles as will best secure the public against loss from illegal entries, frauds, &c. pointing out the defects or advantages of the present system, more particularly in reference to pre-emption and sales at public auction; and in general suggesting such alterations as experience may have shown to be necessary.

Mr. Robertson asked for the suspension of the rules, in order to enable him to move to consider these resolutions at the present time, and asked the yeas and nays, which were ordered; and the house refused to suspend the rules, by a vote of 104 yeas to 70 nays. And, on motion of Mr. Calhoun, of Massachusetts, the resolutions were ordered to be printed.

Mr. McKay offered the following resolution, which he asked to have considered at this time.

Resolved, That the select committee appointed on the memorial of F. P. Blair be authorized to send for persons and papers.

Mr. Harlan thought this too late a period of the session to give a committee power to send for persons and papers, for the purpose of white-washing the editor of the Globe. He objected to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. Duncan moved to suspend the rules, in order to enable the house to consider the resolution. Mr. Gisscock demanded the yeas and nays, which were ordered; and the house decided to suspend the rules (requiring a vote of two-thirds) by a vote of 121 yeas and 51 nays.

The house therefore agreed to consider the resolution.

Mr. Dromgoole said that if the mover would so modify the resolution as to state to the house what witnesses were intended to be examined, he would go for it. He could not, unless this was done.

Mr. Harlan moved to discharge the select committee from the further consideration of the subject. There was not now time at this session to go into the proposed investigation. Other and more important business, to a very great amount, was upon the table waiting for consideration; and it was a preposterous proposition that the house should now spend its time in white-washing Mr. Blair, so as to give the Globe establishment an opportunity of again obtaining the public printing. He then moved so to amend the resolution as to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. Thomas said that the proposed inquiries are not, by the resolution already referred to the chair.

little, restricted to an inquiry into the manner in which the editor of the Globe has done the public printing, but all others who have done it. He also stated the views of the committee in asking to be clothed with this power.

Mr. Boon was not surprised to see the objection to this investigation coming from the quarter of the house it did. He thought there was nothing in the objection as to the period of the session. He hoped, when the question should be taken, it would be by yeas and nays.

Mr. Bynum spoke with earnestness and zeal in support of the character of the editor of the Globe and of that paper, and contended that a wish to slacken the character of both was the motive of gentlemen opposing this resolution, far more than a desire to white-wash them was the motive of those who advocated it.

Mr. Harlan sent to the chair the following modification of his amendment:

"And that the said committee be instructed further to inquire and report to this house how and to whom the patronage of the government has been paid for printing and for the publication of the laws of the United States; what editors of newspapers have been deprived of the publication of the laws, and the reasons therefor, and the correspondence relating to that subject; and to inquire into all abuses, if any, which have arisen under the existing laws and regulations upon the subject of the public printing and the publication of the laws; and, to this end, that the committee have leave to sit during the recess of congress."

Mr. Stanly moved the following amendment to the amendment, which Mr. Harlan accepted as a further modification of his amendment:

"And that said committee be further instructed to inquire by what authority a large number of extra Globes were folded with the messages which were ordered by members in the early part of the session, without their knowledge and consent, and thus transmitted at the public expense; and that they also inquire under what arrangement the editor of the Globe had the exclusive printing of said message, and was thus enabled to practise such device."

Mr. Duncan went at length into a support of the resolution, and against the proposed amendments, and concluded his remarks by moving the previous question. Mr. Mitchell moved to lay the whole subject on the table. The yeas and nays being ordered, this motion was rejected by a vote of yeas 47, nays 129. On seconding the call for the previous question: Ayes 84, noes 81. So there was a second. On ordering the main question, (the yeas and nays being ordered:) Yeas 93, nays 92. So the main question was ordered then to be put, and the resolution was then agreed to.

Before the call for the resolutions was completed, Mr. Briggs moved to suspend the rules, and to make an order to take up the sub-treasury bill immediately after recess. The motion prevailed.

The call for resolutions was then continued until the hour of recess.

Mr. Bell expressed the hope that there would be a common understanding that the sub-treasury bill be taken out of committee of the whole to-night.

And then the house took the usual recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The sub-treasury bill being again under consideration in committee of the whole, Mr. Rhett, of South Carolina, who had the floor, addressed the committee for about two hours in support of the bill, and especially in reply to Mr. Prentiss. He went a good deal into the question of what was a constitutional currency, denying that bank notes were in any sense money; defended the consistency of his own course, as being founded on principle; and then went into a vindication of nullification and the nullifiers; gloried in being the descendant of the British regicides and the rebels of the revolution, and concluded by expressing his approbation of the bill as being in accordance with the political principles of the Jefferson school. He considered the question as being substantially between the sub-treasury and a bank of the United States, but would prefer the latter, if this could not be carried, to a combination of state banks.

As soon as Mr. Rhett took his seat, the question was loudly demanded from all quarters.

It was accordingly taken by tellers, when the vote stood, in favor of striking out the enacting clause of the bill 92, against it 86.

So the committee agreed to strike out the enacting clause.

The committee then rose, and reported the bill, with Mr. Garland's amendment, viz. to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. Sherrod Williams immediately moved the previous question; whereupon, Mr. Wise moved a call of the house. This motion prevailing, the roll was then called, when it appeared that about fifty members were absent. [The question had been taken in committee of the whole much earlier in the day than had been generally expected.] The roll having been gone through, absentees were called, and the doors of the house were closed. Excuses were then received, and a number still remaining absent, it was ordered that the clerk make out a written list of their names, and that the officers of the house wait upon them and request their attendance. A good deal of confusion prevailed. Motions were made to suspend the call; to admit members who were waiting at the doors; to call over the absentees again, &c. A number of members were admitted, when Mr. Sherrod Williams moved to dispense with further proceedings in the call.

On this motion Mr. Lewis demanded the yeas and nays. Mr. Williams withdrew the motion. Mr. Childs renewed it. The yeas and nays were ordered, and, being taken, resulted as follows: yeas 117, nays 104. So the call was suspended, and the doors were thrown open. [All the members were now in attendance, save Mr. Smith, of Maine, absent on leave, and Mr. Bruyn and Mr. Jackson, who were excused.]

The previous question having been moved, as we stated, by Mr. Sherrod Williams, Mr. Campbell, of South Carolina, asked him to withdraw the motion. He observed that, on so important a measure as this, the object ought to be truth, not victory. The bill contained two distinct subjects, and he wished—the Chair said all debate was now out of order.

Mr. Williams said he should be glad to accommodate the gentleman from South Carolina by withdrawing the motion; but, if he should do so, the gentleman would gain nothing by it, since the question would instantly recur on concurring with the committee of the whole in their reported amendment, viz: to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The Chair then proceeded to ascertain whether the demand for the previous question was seconded, when the yeas being 126, the noes not counted. So there was a second.

The previous question being now put, Messrs. Foster and Bronson demanded the yeas and nays; but the house refused to order them. The previous question was carried. And the main question being on the engrossment of the bill, and ordering it to its third reading, Mr. Reed demanded the yeas and nays, which were ordered; and, being taken, stood as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Andrews, Atherton, Banks, Beatty, Birnie, Bicknell, Birdsall, Boon, Bouldin, Brodhead, Bronson, Buchanan, Bynum, Cambreleng, Chaney, Chapman, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Crary, Cushman, Davee, D-Graff, Dringgoole, Duncan, Elmore, Farrington, Fairfield, F. Fletcher, Fry, Gallup, Glascock, Grant, Gray, Griffin, Haley, Hammond, Hamer, Harrison, Hawkins, Hynes, Holsey, Holt, Howard, Hubley, W. H. Hunter, R. M. T. Hunter, Ingham, T. B. Jackson, J. Johnson, N. Jones, J. W. Jones, Keim, Kemble, Klingensmith, Leadbetter, Lewis, Logan, Loomis, Martin, McKay, Robert McClellan, Abraham McClellan, McClure, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, S. W. Morris, Murray, Noble, Owens, Palmer, Parker, Parmenter, Parris, Paynter, Pennybacker, Petriken, Phelps, Pickens, Plumer, Potter, Pratt, J. H. Prentiss, Reily, Rhett, Richardson, Rives, Sawyer, Sheffer, Shepler, Snyder, Spencer, Taylor, Thomas, Titus, Toucey, Towns, Turney, Vail, Wagener, Webster, Weeks, T. T. Whittlesey, J. W. Williams, Worthington, Yell—111.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Alexander, Heman Allen, John W. Allen, Ayerigg, Bell, Biddle, Bond, Borden, Briggs, W. B. Calhoun, J. Calhoun, W. B. Campbell, J. Campbell, Carter, Casey, Chambers, Cheatham, Childs, Clark, Coffin, Corwin, Cranston, Crockett, Curtis, Cushing, Darlington, Dawson, Davies, Deberry, Dennis, Dunn, Edwards, Evans, Everett, Ewing, R. Fletcher, Fillmore, Foster, James Garland, Rice Garland, Goode, James Graham, Wm. Graham, Grantland, Graves, Grennell, Hall, Halsted, Harlan, Harper, Hastings, Hawes, Henry, Herod, Hoffman, Hopkins, Jennifer, H. Johnson, W. C. Johnson, Kennedy, Kilgore, Legare, Lincoln, Lyon, Mallory, Marvin, J. M. Mason, S. Mason, Maury, May, Maxwell, McKennan, Menefee, Mercer, Milligan, Mitchell, M. Morris, C. Morris, Naylor, Noyes, Ogle, Patterson, Pearce, Peck, Phillips, Pope, Potts, S. S. Prentiss, Rariden, Randolph, Reed, Rencher, Ridgway, Robinson, Rumsey, Russell, Sergeant, A. H. Shepherd, Charles Shepard, Shields, Sibley, Slade, Southgate, Stanly, Stuart, Stone, Stratton, Taliaferro, Thompson, Tillinghast, Toland, Underwood, Vanderveer, A. S. White, J. White, E. Whittlesey, L. Williams, S. Williams, J. L. Williams, C. H. Williams, Wise, Word, Yorke—125.

So the house refused to order the bill to its third reading, thereby, in effect, rejecting the bill.

Mr. Foster made a motion to reconsider this vote; but before any vote on that motion,

The house adjourned.

Tuesday, June 26. Mr. Adams was entitled to the floor on the unfinished business of yesterday morning; but yielded it at the request of the following gentlemen:

Mr. Stone, who obtained leave to offer the following, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the committee on military affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the pay of the volunteers or draughted militia-men who are now, or may hereafter be called into the service of the United States. Also those who are or may hereafter be employed by the general government for the purpose of removing the Cherokees out of the states of Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Alabama, and settling them west of the Mississippi, as well as those volunteers who have just returned home from Florida, or who may hereafter be received into the service of the United States for either of the foregoing purposes.

Mr. Johnson, of Louisiana, who, by leave, offered the following, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the committee on the judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the fees allowed by law to the clerks, marshals, and district attorneys of the United States courts for the state of Louisiana, so as to correspond with the fees allowed for similar services in the state courts of said state.

Mr. Chapman, of Alabama, who obtained the printing of certain amendments to senate bill entitled "An act providing for the reduction and graduation of the price of the public lands."

Mr. Robertson asked to offer the following:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to take such measures as he may deem necessary—

First. To cause, as soon as may be, all payments of public dues of every description, and without discrimination, to be made hereafter in the current coin of the United States, or treasury notes, or the notes of banks situated in the state, territory, or district, wherein such dues are receivable, and whose notes are payable, and paid on demand, in such current coin.

Second. To cause all public money, as early as practicable after it shall be received, to be placed in state banks, preferring always, where such can be had, those which are depositories of the state, territory, or district, wherein situated, on condition that they will agree for reasonable compensation, not exceeding one-eighth of one per cent. to receive the same on deposit, not to be used by them as a basis, or fund for discount, or otherwise, nor mingled with other funds; to keep and render accounts, give receipts, or certificates, permit inspections and examinations, make payments and transfers, and give collateral security for the safe-keeping thereof in such manner as may be required by the secretary of the treasury, or by the laws of the United States; provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to compel such transfers at the expense of the banks, nor to authorize transfers in any case, except where the public service, or the safety of the funds, may render them necessary.

Third. To cause all notes of banks remaining on deposit, at the end of every two months, to be converted into the legal coin of the United States, and to be continued, or replaced in deposit aforesaid, and to be drawn for and used, so far as the public convenience or necessities will admit, in preference to all subsequently accruing revenue.

Mr. Robertson said that the grounds which induced him to submit the resolution, were these:

It substantially destroys all connexion, pecuniary and political, between the government and the banks. It secures an inflexible adherence to the specie standard, and as near an approach to an exclusive metallic currency as is desirable, or practicable, without a total interdict of every other kind of currency.

It secures the public as far as possible against losses incident to the continued custody of public money by collectors.

It guards against excessive issues by the banks whose notes are made receivable, by requiring that the notes paid on account of public dues shall be actually converted, at short intervals, into specie, and prohibiting discounts on public deposits.

It avoids the inconvenience and injury that might result from hoarding specie, by requiring the specie to be first disbursed; and it checks all transfers of public money, except when the public service, or the safety of the funds, renders them necessary.

Mr. Petrukin said he was against letting in through the window that which could not enter by the door; he therefore objected to the offering of the resolution.

Mr. Robertson moved a suspension of the rules, and demanded the yeas and nays. They were ordered, and, being taken, resulted, yeas 70, nays 123. So leave was refused.

Mr. Garland, who had not been in the house when the yeas and nays were calling, asked to be permitted to record his vote, which would have been in the affirmative; but leave was refused.

A similar request was made by Mr. Dromgoole, who would have voted in the negative; but this also was refused.

Mr. Adams then resumed his speech on the subject of the annexation of Texas, and continued to occupy the floor till the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. Foster, of New York, now rose and asked to submit a motion for the re-consideration of the vote of yesterday by which the sub-treasury bill was rejected.

After some conversation, leave was granted.

Mr. Foster remarked that he did not rise for the purpose of inflicting a speech upon the house in relation to the subject which had so long occupied the time and attention of both houses of congress, because he had no doubt that each member had fully formed his opinion on the whole subject, and because the time of the house was too precious to be wasted by further discussion. He desired merely to state the objects which he had in view in making the motion to reconsider, so that his vote, already given against the engrossment, and the one which he was about to give, might not be the subject of misconception; and even this he would not now do, had an opportunity for explanation occurred yesterday. He would say that the vote which he yesterday gave was a deliberate one; and he desired to be understood that his motion to reconsider was not made in consequence of any change of his opinion, but simply that he might have an opportunity now (and which the previous question yesterday prevented) to move an amendment to the bill, to make it conform substantially to the provisions of the bill upon the same subject which passed the senate some months since. Such an amendment would make the bill acceptable to him. But even though such an amendment should not be adopted, it was still important that the vote should be reconsidered, in order that some other measure for the collection, safe-keeping, and disbursement of the public revenue might be adopted.

Mr. Briggs now moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, but withdrew it at the request of Mr. Mallory, of Virginia, who promised to renew it. Mr. M. wished the floor only to explain the vote he had given against the bill. He was, personally, heartily in its favor; but the opinion of his constituents had been intimated to him in forms which he deemed equivalent to instructions; and he had therefore voted as they desired. He expressed a hope, however, of being able to persuade them to entertain better views, and that he should hereafter have an opportunity of voting for such a bill. He renewed the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. Wise asked Mr. Briggs to consent to Mr. Mallory's withdrawing the motion; to which, after some remarks from Mr. Mason, of Ohio, he assented. The motion to lay on the table having been withdrawn,

Mr. Sherrod Williams moved the previous question. Mr. Slade moved a call of the house; which was ordered. The house was called, and afterward the absentees; when it appeared that 231 members were present. Further proceedings in the call were then dispensed with. Mr. Thomas, of Maryland, asked Mr. Williams to withdraw his motion for the previous question, promising to renew it. Mr. Williams on that condition assented.

Mr. Thomas said he wished to explain his position. He should vote against the reconsideration, although he approved of the bill. It was now near the close of the session; the sense of the house had been clearly expressed; and he had seen enough to satisfy him that this bill, under no circumstances, could become a law. The house was divided into two parties—the friends and the opposition of the administration. Of the former, 111 had voted for the bill; and about the same number had voted against laying on the table the senate's bill for the same general object. Yet that bill had been laid on the table, twelve of the friends of the administration in that case voting with the opposition. The same thing had taken place now; and he saw nothing to convince him that the senate's bill could succeed much better than this. With or without what was called the specie clause, the bill could not become a law. A decided majority of the house, we all know, is hostile also to the special deposit plan. Under these circumstances, it was useless to reconsider. The only course left was to appeal to the great body of the American people, who would pass upon the acts of their representatives, and whose will must decide the question. He renewed the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, put, and carried; and the main question on reconsideration was then decided by yeas and nays as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Boon, Bronson, J. Campbell, Chaney, Davee, Fairfield, Foster, Gallup, Grant, Gray, Hawkins, Keim, Kemble, A. McClellan, Miller, Montgomery, Morgan, Parker, Parmenter, Snyder, Taylor—21.

NAYS.—Messrs. Adams, Alexander, H. Allen, J. W. Allen, Andrews, Atherton, Aycrigh, Banks, Beatty, Beirne, Bell, Bicknell, Biddle, Birdsall, Bond, Borden, Bouldin, Briggs, Bruyn, Buchanan, Bynum, Wm. B. Calhoun, J. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Wm. B. Campbell, Carter, Casey, Chambers, Cheatham, Childs, Clark, Cleveland, Coffin, Coles, Connor, Corwin, Craig, Cranston, Crockett, Curtis, Cushing, Cushman, Darlington, Dawson, Davies, Deberry, De Graff, Dennis, Dromgoole, Duncan, Dunn, Edwards, Elmore, Evans, Everett, Ewing, Farrington, Richard Fletcher, Isaac Fletcher, Fillmore, Fry, James Garland, Rice Garland, Glascock, Goode, J. Graham, Wm. Graham Grantland, Graves, Grennell, Griffin, Haley, Hall, Halstead, Hammond, Hamer, Harlan, Harrison, Harper, Hastings, Hawes, Haynes, Henry, Herod, Hoffman, Holt, Howard, Hubley, R. M. T. Hunter, Ingham, T. B. Jackson, Jenifer, H. Johnson, J. Johnson, Wm. C. Johnson, J. W. Jones, Kennedy, Kilgore, Klingensmith, Legare, Leadbetter, Lewis, Lincoln, Logan, Lyon, Marvin, J. M. Mason, Samson Mason, Martin, Maury, May, Maxwell, R. McClellan, McClure, McKennan, Meneese, Mercer, Milligan, Mitchell, Moore, M. Morris, S. W. Morris, C. Morris, Naylor, Noble, Noyes, Ogle, Owens, Parris, Patterson, Paynter, Pearce, Peck, Peinybacker, Petrikin, Phelps, Phillips, Pickens, Plumer, Pope, Potts, Potter, Pratt, J. H. Prentiss, S. S. Prentiss, Rariden, Randolph, Reed, Reily, Rencher, Rhett, Richardson, Ridgway, Rives, Robertson, Robinson, Rumsey, Russell, Sawyer, Sergeant, Sheffer, A. H. Shepperd, C. Shepard, Shields, Shepler, Sibley, Slade, Southgate, Spencer, Stanly, Stuart, Stone, Stratton, Taliaferro, Thomas, Thompson, Tillinghast, Titus, Toland, Toucey, Towns, Turney, Underwood, Vail, Vanderveer, Wagener, Webster, Weeks, A. S. White, J. White, E. Whittlesey, T. T. Whittlesey, L. Williams, S. Williams, J. W. Williams, J. L. Williams, C. H. Williams, Wise, Word, Worthington, Yell, Yorke—202.

So the house refused to reconsider.

Mr. Bouldin said that he had been waiting for several days, with the most perfect confidence in the justice of the house, for a favorable moment, when he should find himself and the house in a good humor, to make a motion to the house to pay the time they had taken from him, which was devoted to the business of the District of Columbia. They had given him but half a day, and had taken half that from him, and he had no doubt that, at some suitable period, they would return to him that time. Short as it was, he would ask no more; but would only ask for the balance of the evening after the recess for the District business.

He did not suppose it would take the whole evening. There were but few bills or matters of any kind relating to the District, and he had no idea that they would take up much of the time of the house. He would not occupy half the evening, unless other gentlemen compelled him. He said he would accept any other time that might be more agreeable to the house, if any gentleman would name it. He moved a suspension of the rules to make that motion.

The motion of Mr. B. was decided in the negative.

Mr. Kennedy called up his resolution for the employment of the banks under certain conditions, as depositories of the public moneys, and moved that its consideration be made the order of the day for 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The yeas and nays were demanded on this motion; and, being taken, stood as follows: Yeas 94, nays 110. So the motion was rejected.

The Speaker laid before the house a communication from the secretary of the treasury, in answer to the resolution of the house of the 11th instant, requiring a report from the secretaries of state, war, navy, and treasury, of what architectural plans and drawings have been prepared under the order, and for the use, of their departments, respectively, since the 4th July, 1836, in relation to the light-houses.

Mr. Sergeant made an effort to go into committee on the harbor bill, but without success.

The senate's amendments to several bills were read and agreed to.

Several senate bills were read, and referred.

The Chair now proclaimed the orders of the day, when immediately many members rose, pressing the bills in which they felt a peculiar interest.

Mr. Sergeant moved to go into committee of the whole on the state of the union; which motion prevailed, and the house went into committee accordingly. (Mr. Potter, of Pennsylvania, in the chair.) Mr. Harrison pressed for the army bill.

Mr. Sergeant moved that the committee take up the harbor improvement bill.

Mr. Shields moved a bill, (not heard.)

The question being put, the committee decided (ayes 88, noes 69) to take up the army bill.

The bill was read through at the clerk's table.

Mr. McKay moved to lay aside the bill until to-morrow, to allow time for another meeting of the military committee, to decide on certain amendments rendered proper by the altered state of the frontier; but, after a desultory conversation, in which Mr. Cambreleng and Mr. Yell participated, he withdrew the motion.

The amendments proposed by the military committee were then read.

Mr. Bell moved to lay the bill aside for the present.

Mr. Bronson moved that the committee rise. He wanted to know what the amendments might be which the military committee should agree to recommend.

Mr. Bell hoped the bill would be laid aside, and another taken up.

The question was taken on rising, and lost, ayes 38.

Mr. Mercer suggested that three regiments of infantry be authorized in lieu of the 2d regiment of dragoons, as they would be proportionably more serviceable for the national defence, and yet cost no more than the single regiment of dragoons.

Mr. Kemble moved an amendment to the amendment of the military committee; and Mr. Bronson had another read, which could not now be offered.

When, after some remarks of Mr. Grennell, in favor of having the bill laid aside, and in defence of the military committee from some pretty severe remarks of Mr. Yell, the morning session expired.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. McKay proceeded (at half past 3 o'clock P. M.) in support of the amendments pending to the army bill when the house took a recess. He had proceeded but a little way, when Mr. Thompson interrupted him, and suggested that there should be a call of the house, there evidently being no quorum present.

The Chairman, ascertaining this fact, vacated the chair, and reported it to the house.

Mr. Thompson moved a call of the house, and expressed the hope that the attendance of members would be coerced. The yeas and nays, being asked on this motion, were ordered, and the house decided that there should be a call thereof, by a vote of 86 to 24. (It was now 10 minutes past 4 o'clock.) Before the call was completed, a motion was made, and prevailed, to suspend further proceedings on the same; and, a quorum appearing, the house again went into committee of the whole, and resumed the consideration of the army bill, Mr. McKay resuming and going on with his remarks.

Mr. Kemble followed in some interesting statements as to the expediency of increasing the northern and eastern defences of the country. His remarks will be hereafter given. He was followed by Mr. Bronson, who, to give time to the military committee to prepare and propose amendments which they intend to suggest to the bill, moved that the committee rise, which motion prevailed.

A mass of bills from the senate were put under way by a first and second reading, and appropriate references. Before they were all thus disposed of, Mr. Evans moved an adjournment of the house, (it being quarter before 7 o'clock,) on which the votes were: Ayes 78, noes 49. So the house adjourned.

Wednesday, June 27. Mr. Howard offered the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioner of public buildings be directed to ascertain the plan, cost, and advantages of the mode proposed for ventilating the new parliament house in London, and report the same to this house at the next session of congress, together with his opinion of its applicability to the hall of the house of representatives.

The unfinished business being the Texas question, and Mr. Adams having the floor upon that question, Mr. Gray moved that the rules of the house be suspended in order to enable him to offer a motion with regard to the disposition of a bill from the senate. Mr. Rives hoped that the motion would be modified so as to enable all reports of committees to be received. Mr. Gray accepted that modification.

Mr. Adams, who had yielded the floor, remonstrated against this change of Mr. Gray's motion. He had been very much disposed to accommodate members who had business before the house, and who had uniformly given way whenever he had been desired to do so. Mr. Gray then withdrew the modification, and offered his original motion, to refer the senate bill for the relief of Richard T. Banks, of the state of Arkansas, to the committee on Indian affairs. Mr. Harlan, on account of whose objection the motion to suspend had been offered, withdrew his objection, and the motion of Mr. Gray prevailed. Mr. Craig then proposed that the committees be called for reports. Mr. Adams said that he was willing to yield the floor for that purpose, but without conceding it entirely. If the object was to deprive him of the opportunity of finishing his remarks upon the annexation of Texas, he could not consent to it. Mr. Craig disavowed any such wish. Mr. Adams then yielded the floor, and the house proceeded to receive and dispose of reports of committees. A large number were presented and disposed of, among which were the following:

Mr. Cushing, from the committee on foreign affairs, reported, without amendment, senate bill for the settlement of the claim of the executrix of Richard W. Meade.

Mr. Mercer, from the committee on roads and canals, reported a bill for the completion of the Cumberland road east of the state of Ohio; which bill was accompanied by a resolution that the report of the committee on roads and the canals, at the second session of last congress, on the construction of a bridge across the Ohio river, at Wheeling, accompanied by the communication of the secretary of war of the 2d inst. on the same subject, along with a reduced map of the plan of the bridge, be printed under the direction of the engineer corps; and that one hundred extra copies thereof be printed and placed at his disposal for the use of that corps.

This resolution was concurred in by the house.

Mr. Mercer, from the same committee, reported the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the report of the secretary of war to the house of representatives of the survey from the southern debauch of the Disinal Swamp canal to Winyaw bay, in South Carolina, and that the said report be printed.

Mr. Mercer also made a report upon the subject of a canal around the Muscle Shoals of the river Tennessee.

On motion of Mr. Ewing,

Resolved, That the usual number of the following named parts of the report of the secretary of war, presented to the house on the 22d instant, in relation to pensioners, pension agents, and payment of pensions, be, with the resolution of inquiry of 26th March, calling for the same, printed for this house, viz:

The names of pensioners who have died or been dropped from the rolls since August, 1834.

Names of pensioners who have been added to the roll of each agency since August, 1834.

Statement No. 1. Showing the aggregate number of each denomination of pensioners payable at the several agencies; the aggregate amount of money required to make payment, and the names of agents and dates of appointment.

2d. A letter from the secretary of the treasury, and the note of the committee, declining to print the statement therein alluded to.

3d. A report of the third auditor, showing the unexpended balances of public money in the hands of agents.

Mr. Mercer from the committee on roads and canals, reported a bill to authorize the construction of a road through the lands of the United States at Harper's Ferry.

Mr. Pearce, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Thomas Coyle, relative to his newly invented "American cement," reported in favor of an appropriation of $150, by an amendment to the bill making appropriations for repairs, &c. to the public buildings and grounds, for the purpose of testing the said cement.

Mr. Holl, from the select committee, reported a joint resolution for the erection of a monument to the memory of captain Nathan Hale.

Mr. J. W. Jones, from the committee of ways and means, reported a bill for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the armed brig Warrior.

Mr. Sergeant, from the committee of ways and means reported against the petition of citizens of New Hampshire, for an appropriation for the opening of the channel of the Cocheco branch of the Piscataqua river leading into the harbor of Dover.

Mr. Shields, from the committee on public lands, reported against the resolution of the house of 19th February last, relative to the lands for the officers and soldiers of the Virginia state line of the revolution.

Mr. Lincoln, from the committee on public lands, reported against the petition of the inhabitants of Ohio, for a donation of land for the endowment of the Sylvania Academy.

Mr. Montgomery, from the same committee, reported against the petition of citizens of Hampshire, Virginia, for relief from the oppression of the postmaster general and his contractors.

Mr. Chapman, from the committee on the public lands, reported, without amendment, senate bill for the relief of the Alabama, Florida, and Georgia railroad company.

Also, with amendments, senate bill for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, who were deprived of the benefits of the act granting preemption rights, which was approved on the 19th June, 1834; the consideration of which bill was postponed till to-morrow.

Mr. Yell, from the same committee, reported, without amendment, senate bill to authorize the location of the pre-emption certificates, given by the register of the land office at Batesville, in Arkansas, under the act of the 26th May, 1824, on any of the public lands for sale in the state of Arkansas.

Mr. Harlan reported, with amendments, senate bill to confirm certain entries of public lands permitted to be made by the registers and receivers of land districts, under the belief that the tracts had been offered at public sale; the said amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. Harlan, from the committee on private land claims, reported, with amendments, senate bill to confirm certain purchases of the public lands, under the act of the 19th June, 1834.

Mr. Bell, from the committee on Indian affairs, reported, with amendments, senate bill, entitled an act supplementary to an act entitled an act to amend an act for the appointment of commissioners to adjust the claims to reservations of land under the 14th article of the treaty of 1830, with the Cherokee Indians.

On motion of Mr. Thomas,

Resolved, That the resolution of the house, adopted on the 28th of May ultimo, "requiring" the judiciary committee to report on certain resolutions and petitions, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. Thomas, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill fixing the times and places of holding the district courts for the northern district of New York.

Mr. Lincoln, from the committee on public buildings, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee on public buildings, under the direction, and upon a plan to be previously approved by the speaker, cause the hall of the house of representatives to be altered during the recess of Congress, by changing the position of the speaker's chair and clerk's table to the opposite side of the hall, and reversing the location of the desks of the members, elevating and conforming the floor to such order of arrangement, so as, in the general design, to restore the arrangement of the chair and seats of the members to the state in which they existed previous to the alteration authorized by the house of representatives in the first session of the 22d congress, and that the expense be paid out of the contingent fund of the house.

Mr. Cambreleg thought the chair of the speaker ought to be at the opposite end of the hall, where it used to be. He also expressed the opinion that the floor should be level. As to hearing, he found no such great difficulty on this score.

Mr. Sergeant disagreed with some of these views. He was of opinion that a change like that recommended by the committee should take place.

Mr. Harlan moved the previous question; which was seconded, put, and the main question ordered, on the adoption of the resolution. And the resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Adams, the bills before the house on the subject of the remission of duties on the importation of iron for iron steamboats were made the special order for one hour after recess, on Saturday next.

Mr. Ingham asked leave to move that next Monday be specially devoted to the consideration of bills reported from the committee on naval affairs. Mr. Cambreleg said that there were several important appropriation bills yet to be acted on. He hoped there would be no special orders. Mr. Ingham insisting, Mr. Petrik entered an objection to the request for leave; and Mr. Ingham, stating the great importance of the business which he wished to have considered, moved a suspension of the rules. The motion to suspend was lost—79 to 48.

Mr. Tillinghast asked and obtained leave to present the petition of Benjamin Wright, of Foster, Rhode Island, praying compensation for loss by depreciation of paper money; which was received, and referred to the committee on revolutionary claims. Mr. Adams and Mr. Lyon also had leave to offer certain petitions.

Mr. Thomas, from the committee on the judiciary, moved to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution directing the said committee to inquire into the causes of the failure of the last term of the circuit court of the United States for the state of Louisiana; and into the conduct of the United States district judge for said state, for attempting to remove the clerk of the circuit and district courts without cause, on the ground that there was not sufficient time before the close of the session to obtain testimony with respect to the subjects of inquiry; and the committee was discharged accordingly.

The army bill was then resumed, in committee of the whole, and it was defended at length by Mr. Bronson, of New York.

EVENING SESSION.

The senate's bill for increasing the military establishment, being the unfinished business in committee of the whole—

Mr. Bronson resumed and concluded his remarks in support of the bill.

The question being on the first amendment proposed by the committee on military affairs, Mr. Fillmore made an inquiry as to the reason why new companies of artillery were proposed to be formed instead of retaining the present number of companies, and increasing the number of men? Mr. McKay explained. Mr. Harrison objected to the provisions in the committee's amendment as being utterly inefficient to meet the wants of the country; and so strongly was he opposed to the adoption of the amendment, that, to prevent it, he should avail himself of there being no quorum present to move for the rising of the committee. Mr. Mason dissuaded him from this course, as the vote in committee was not final. A quorum would soon be in attendance. Mr. Harrison then made some further remarks to show how insufficient the proposed force was for the protection of the western frontier.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the military committee, (the general effect of which is to reduce the quantum of additional force proposed by the senate,) the said amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McKay now moved a second amendment, proposing the organization of an additional regiment of infantry. Mr. Harrison moved to amend the amendment by adding also a regiment of riflemen. He made some remarks on the efficiency of such a corps, and especially on its adaptation to Indian warfare. He referred, as an illustration, to the service performed during the revolution by Morgan's riflemen, and during the last war by Forsyth's rifle corps. Mr. McKay admitted the correctness of this statement, but opposed the amendment because the bill already contained a provision empowering the president, at his discretion, to convert one regiment of infantry, or of artillery, into a regiment of riflemen. Mr. Harrison thought that provision did not meet the necessity of the case. Corps of that description would be unskilled in the use of the rifle, and unpractised in the duty of a rifle corps. He was opposed to lodging too much discretionary power in the executive, as being dangerous and pernicious. Mr. Crary inquired whether there were any rifle companies or light infantry at present in the army? Mr. McKay replying in the negative, Mr. Crary supported the amendment proposed by Mr. Harrison as necessary and proper. Mr. Grennell replied and supported the position taken by Mr. McKay in opposition to the amendment, as rendered unnecessary by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. W. Thompson expressed his willingness to vote for such an increase of the army as he deemed necessary for the protection of the western frontier. He was opposed to any increase of officers, save in the ordnance department. He advocated the employment of riflemen and mounted rangers as the best troops to contend with Indians; and explained his plan for augmenting the rank and file, so as to give, in all, an increase of 2,500 men. He was opposed to having a general-in-chief residing at Washington, but would have the army in two divisions, a major general at the head of each, and these accountable immediately to the war department and the president.

Mr. Pope approved this plan, and thought it would unite the votes of the house. He was in favor of establishing a line of posts on the western frontier, but did not think any additional regiment was necessary for the northern boundary of the union. He was for relying, in an emergency, on the militia and volunteer corps. Mr. Bronson explained. He had not wished troops on the northern frontier to defend the inhabitants against the British. Mr. Wise inquired whether they were to protect the British against our own people? Mr. Bronson replied in the negative; but only to keep up the national police, and enforce the observance of pacific conduct toward our neighbors.

Mr. Pope gave a number of statements to show the efficiency of militia and volunteers, as the best troops to fight the Indians. He commented with some severity on the expense and indulgence of our modern troops, in contrast with those who had settled the wilderness; in the use of umbrellas, porter, champagne, &c. In former times, each man found his own musket or rifle, his ammunition, horse, &c. He was opposed to increasing a standing army, and ridiculed the employment of European tactics against Indians.

Mr. Mercer reminded the house that the amendments suggested by Mr. Thompson were not now before the house, but only the proposition of Mr. Harrison for a rifle regiment. He approved of the raising of such a corps as highly efficient in the defence of a frontier exposed to the attacks of Indians. He suggested the propriety of a line of posts, at 65, or 75, or 100 miles' distance from each other, with stockades and blockhouses, to which the women and children might flee for protection in case of hostilities on the frontier; and the employment of mounted men, with videttes to give the alarm and convey the intelligence of any inroad, &c.

As to the northern frontier, the excesses there were not to be repressed by an armed force, but by the moral force of the character of the commander. It was easy, he argued, to convert troops, once well drilled as infantry, either into riflemen or light infantry, by a few days' discipline, &c.

Mr. Reed thought that the necessary garrisons for the frontier might all be spared, in time of peace, from the forts on the seaboard, and let their place be supplied by a few skillful artificers, who would keep the arms and fortifications in order. He was for the smallest practicable increase of a standing army in time of peace. Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, suggested a doubt whether the vote by which the first amendment of the military committee had been adopted could be regarded as a decision by the committee, no quorum having then been present.

This objection was overruled by the Chair, as no count had been taken, nor any objection made at the time, and so non constat but there was a quorum.

Mr. McKay further explained. The amendment moved by him by instruction of a majority of the military committee was no favorite of his. He should prefer raising the existing companies to eighty men each, and giving the president discretionary power to increase them, when necessary, to one hundred. [Mr. Wise now took the floor in a general speech (to be fully reported hereafter) against the whole bill, which he denounced as an executive measure, dangerous to the liberty, and akin to the increase of the Prætorian bands by Augustus and Tiberius.]

Mr. Yell, of Arkansas, followed in a speech of considerable length, in which he insisted on the necessity of an increase of the army to meet the dangers to our western population, which had been created by the act of the government itself, in removing so great a body of Indians, and congregating them on the borders of Arkansas and Missouri. He gave reasons why he did not go for the whole increase proposed by the senate's bill, although such might be the wish of his people; he trusted to convince them that a smaller force would be adequate. But, unless this were to be given, he hoped all garrisons would be removed, and the western people left to defend themselves.

Mr. Jenifer was strongly in favor of increasing the army so far as might be necessary to protect our citizens against the threatened dangers of an Indian war; but was for leaving the disposition of the force, and the whole regulation of the plan of defence to the appropriate department.

Mr. Bell, after expressing his belief that it would be impracticable to dispose of the bill without one more day's discussion in committee, moved that the committee rise. Mr. McKay remonstrated; but the motion prevailed: Ayes 64, noes 58. So the committee rose and reported progress; and then the house adjourned.

Thursday, June 23. After making some correction of the journal, Mr. Adams, who was entitled to the floor, yielded it to accommodate Mr. Tolland, who offered a resolution to amend the standing joint rules of proceeding by adding thereto the following:

That, after six days from the commencement of a second or subsequent session (except the final session) of any congress, all bills and joint resolutions which shall have passed in one house, and which remain undetermined in the other, shall be resumed and acted on as if an adjournment had not taken place.

This motion lies one day.

Mr. Randolph and Mr. Taylor reported certain senate bills.

Mr. Adams then proceeded in support of his amendment to the Texas report, &c. until the expiration of the hour. Mr. Kilgore moved to suspend the rules to call up his resolution to repeal the small-note section of the act of 1836. The yeas and nays were taken on this resolution, and resulted: Yeas 101, nays 81—(not two-thirds.) So the rules were not suspended.

Mr. Rencher obtained leave to offer the following:

Resolved, That the committee of ways and means inquire into the expediency of authorizing a temporary investment of the Smithsonian legacy as soon as it shall be received by the president of the United States.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. Calhoun moved a reconsideration of the vote of yesterday adopting the following resolution:

Resolved, That the resolution of the house adopted on the 23th of May ultimo, 'requiring' the judiciary committee to report on certain resolutions and petitions, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

The motion for reconsideration lies over.

On motion Mr. Hunter, of Ohio,

Resolved, That the committee on Indian affairs take into consideration the necessity of making an appropriation to defray the expenses of a treaty now pending with the Wyandott Indians, in the state of Ohio.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Ingham in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the senate's bill for increasing the army.

Mr. Bell, who had the floor, addressed the committee on the bill; opposing a large increase of the army, but in favor of increasing it to a small extent. The house took its usual recess at 2 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION

After the recess, the senate bill, proposing to increase to a certain extent the military establishment, was debated at length by Messrs. Bell, Williams, of North Carolina, Grennell, Everett, Evans, Briggs, Harrison, Johnson, of Louisiana, Robertson, Fletcher, of Vermont, and Bronson.

The amendment of Mr. Harrison to the amendment of the committee, viz. "And there shall also be one regiment of riflemen raised to be officered and organized as regiments of infantry herein provided for," was then rejected without a division.

The amendment of the committee on military affairs, to insert the following as section second, was adopted:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be raised and organized, under the direction of the president of the United States, one regiment of infantry, to be composed of the same number and rank of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, composing the regiments of infantry now in the service of the United States, who shall receive the same pay and allowances, and be subject to the same rules and regulations which now apply to other regiments of infantry, as provided for in this act."

Mr. Briggs moved to amend this section by inserting "for the term of two years" after the word "infantry" in the third line. Lost.

The following amendments, reported by the military committee, were then acted on and adopted, viz.

"In section two strike out the proviso."

"In section seven, line four, strike out 'four' and insert two."

"In section nine, fourth and fifth lines, for 'quartermaster generals' read 'quartermasters general'; and in the fifth and sixth lines, for 'deputy quartermaster generals' read 'deputy quartermasters general.'"

"In section thirteenth, fifth line, after the word 'majors,' insert 'and by the transfer to and appointment in of; and after 'lieutenants,' insert 'of artillery.'"

"In section fourteenth, line fifteen, after the word 'ordnance,' add 'equal to a company of artillery.'"

"In section fifteen, strike out to 'that,' in the fourth line; and in the fourth line, after 'staff,' insert 'exclusive of general officers;' and at the end of the sentence add this proviso: 'Provided, That, in cases where officers are entitled to and receive double rations, the additional one allowed in this section shall not be included in the number to be doubled. Strike out the remainder of the section."

The following amendment of the committee was then taken up:

Section sixteen, strike out the whole after the enacting clause, and insert:

"That from and after the passage of this act, all enlistments in the army of the United States shall be for five years, and that the monthly pay of non-commissioned officers and soldiers shall be as follows: to each sergeant major, quartermaster sergeant, and chief musician, seventeen dollars; to each first sergeant of a company, sixteen dollars; to all other sergeants, thirteen dollars; to each corporal nine dollars; and to each musician and private soldier, seven dollars."

Mr. Petrikin offered an amendment to the amendment, the effect of which was to compensate soldiers for labor on military roads, &c.

Mr. Cushman offered an amendment to this amendment, which the reporter did not hear. It was adopted.

The amendment was then adopted, as was the following:

"Section 17. The whole to be stricken out."

The 19th section of the bill, providing for a chaplain to each regiment, it was proposed by the committee to strike out.

Mr. Mallory moved so to amend the section as to make it the duty of the chaplain to perform the duties of schoolmaster to the regiment. Adopted.

The question on striking out the whole section was then decided by tellers as follows: Ayes 53, noes 81. So the motion to strike out was lost.

Mr. Randolph proposed to amend this 19th section so as to require that the chaplain be a regular licensed clergyman of some religious denomination. Lost. The following amendment of the committee was then adopted:

"Section 20. Strike out all of the word 'that,' in the seventh line; and, also, in the ninth line, strike out 'like,' and add 'now allowed to the professor of mathematics; and the secretary of war may assign to the said professor an assistant, to be taken from the officers of the line or cadets; which assistant professor will receive the pay and emoluments allowed to other assistant professors.'"

Mr. Petrikin moved to strike out the whole section. Lost. The following amendments, proposed by the committee, were adopted:

"Section 21. In the fourth line, after the word 'empowered,' add 'by and with the approbation of the secretary of war.'"

"Section 22. In the third line strike out 'the chief engineer.'"

The amendments offered by the committee, adding eleven new sections of modifications in detail of certain army arrangements and regulations, were then adopted.

Some other amendments were offered to different sections of the bill by various members, but were mostly rejected by the committee. Pending a proposition to strike out a section of the bill providing the payment to the paymasters of the army of one per cent. on the amounts disbursed, a motion was made that the committee (quarter before 9 o'clock) rise. Three counts were made by the chairman, and no quorum appeared. The chairman left the chair, and reported this fact to the house.

Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, moved an adjournment. The motion to adjourn was lost: Ayes 54, noes 67; and a quorum thus appearing, the chairman resumed his seat in committee of the whole.

Mr. Rices was opposed to striking out the section in question, and Mr. Montgomery was against it, and the amendment then prevailed, and the section was stricken out. The amendments of the committee, as amended, were then adopted.

Mr. Kemble moved several amendments, the effect of which would be to allow to officers of the army the same pay and emoluments (except forage,) as are now allowed to officers of dragoons, &c. &c. Which motion was negatived.

Some other amendments, which the reporter could not gather, were offered, and rejected. Among them was the proposition of Mr. Wise to strike out the 2d, 4th, 5th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 11th, and 13th sections of the bill.

The committee, on motion, then rose, and reported the bill, as amended, to the house.

Mr. Briggs then moved that the bill, as amended, be printed. Ordered.

A message was received from the president of the United States, in answer to the resolution of the 23d instant, in respect to the new treasury building, calling for information as to whether, in resuming the works upon said building, it is intended that any portion of the walls, at their northern and southern extremities, are to be removed, &c.

And then the house adjourned.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 19.—Vol. IV.]

WASHINGTON CITY, JULY 7, 1838.

[Vol. LIV.—Whole No. 1,397.]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

APPOINTMENT. The following appointment is announced in the last number of the "Globe," as having been confirmed by the senate:

Felix Grundy, of Tennessee, to be attorney general of the United States, from the first day of September next.

Mr. Puulding entered upon his duties as secretary of the navy on Monday last.

TREASURY NOTES. The whole amount of treasury notes authorized by the act of 12th of October, 1837, has been issued by the treasurer of the United States, viz: $10,000,000.

The amount returned to the treasury for duties and lands, and in payment of debts, is about $6,570,000.

There has been issued up to this day, under the provisions of the act of 21st of May, 1833, $4,904,014 25.

LEVI WOODBURY,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Treasury Department, July 2, 1838.

MR. THOMAS M. T. MCKENNAN of Pa. has, we regret to learn, declined being a candidate for reelection to congress. We have watched Mr. McK. in his public duties with some care, and bear honorable testimony to the faithful, enlightened and honorable manner in which they have been discharged. Most sincerely do we wish that happiness may attend him in retirement, and that the halls of congress may contain more politicians of his old fashioned, but honorable, character—men who think and act, and regard the interests of the whole country more than their popularity in Buncombe! He has at the present session alone, rendered more service than a hundred talking legislators.

VIEW OF WASHINGTON. Mr. Anderson, a promising young artist, has just published a beautiful lithographic view of this city, after an original drawing from his own pencil. All the prominent objects in the city and vicinity are marked with great accuracy, and will enable all who have not seen the metropolis to form a pretty correct idea of its general appearance and the adjacent scenery.

BANKS, CURRENCY, &c. A letter to the editor of the Baltimore American contains the following gratifying information:

Philadelphia Exchange, July 6, 1838.

At a meeting of the general committee of the banks of the city and county of Philadelphia, held at the Exchange last evening, it was resolved to recommend to the banks generally, the 1st day of August next as the time to resume specie payments.

It is believed the measure will be generally adopted and carried into effect.

The Bank of Washington, of this city, has issued the following notice, under date of the 5th instant:

With the view of rendering the notes of this institution (which has, since the first of September last, been redeeming all its issues in gold and silver) equivalent to specie throughout the union, it has, in anticipation of the general resumption of specie payments, effected such an arrangement with the Bank of America, in the city of New York, that all notes of this bank, which may be put in circulation will, as expressed on their face, be with certainty paid in specie, on demand, either at that bank or this, at the option of the holder.

The Bank of the Metropolis of this city, has declared a half yearly dividend of four per cent.

The Brandon Bank (Miss.) is handled with great severity by some of the papers of the state, while others are disposed to uphold the managers of the concern to the last point of their career. As a specimen of accommodating spirit of the bank, it is mentioned that a merchant of Natchez was offered exchange on the north at one, two, and three years date! The first year to bear no interest, the second six per cent., and the third eight per cent!

New York, July 6. The stock market yesterday opened under the influence of an improved feeling, caused by the intelligence of the signal defeat of Mr. Wright's new sub-treasury bill. The amount of business transacted in stocks, as might be supposed, was not heavy, but the prices of almost every description show a considerable improvement on Tuesday's sales. U. S. bank closed at 119 1-2; dividend off; Delaware and Hudson 84 3-4; Patterson Rail Road 60; Harlem do 68 3-4; and Stonington Rail Road 52 1-8; an advance of nearly 4 per cent.

The New York Express of Saturday last says, "a report is in general circulation in Wall street, that Mr. Biddle will be here in a week or ten days, for the purpose of making arrangements for opening his new bank or branch; and further that bank certificates of the western banks will be received at very favorable rates. Whether the report is well or ill-founded, we cannot say. Now the sub-treasury is defeated, it is a natural supposition that Mr. Biddle will take early steps to carry into effect the establishment of this bank; and any arrangement that can be made by which southern funds can be turned into cash, will produce a most beneficial effect. The public are suffering beyond all account, from the greatest difficulty in negotiating. If the exchanges on the south can be brought down to from 5 to 8 per cent., instead of from 8 to 20, as they now are, it will be more acceptable."

Philadelphia money market. Bicknell's reporter of Tuesday says: "towards the close of last week, our money market was quite animated; though the upward tendency of stocks was not so great as some had anticipated. The change was produced by the defeat of the sub-treasury bill. No movement has, as yet, been made by the Philadelphia banks. They will meet on Thursday evening next, but we learn that they will in all probability wait the adjournment of congress, unwilling to take any decided step until they know the exact position in which the country and the currency will be left by congress. Mr. Woodbury's last circular is still a source of great uneasiness; but the desire is so general to bring about a resumption, that we should not be surprised to see something attempted in the month of August; even should the banks, by such a course, be compelled to adopt a more restrictive policy with regard to discounts, than they deem conducive to the general good."

We understand that several of the western safety fund banks have declined the arrangement entered into by the Auburn committee, and that therefore the notes of some of these banks, if not all of them, may be refused by the associated New York banks. This, however, should it occur, will make no difference, for arrangements have been made by which the notes will continue to be received in New York and Albany upon the same rate (1-2 of 1 per cent.) of discount.

[Albany Eve. Jour.]

The state bank of Illinois has declared a dividend of five dollars on each share for the six months ending on the 1st instant, payable to the stockholders registered in New York on the 11th instant, immediately after the resumption of specie payments.

Boston banks. A letter from Boston dated July 1st, states that all the Boston banks and the Bank of Lowell (whose circulation is over two hundred thousand dollars,) have resumed specie payments.

WEST POINT GRADUATES. It is stated in the "Globe" that the West Point graduates of the present year, who have been appointed second lieutenants in the dragoons, and in the 1st, 4th, and 6th regiments of infantry, and to whom short leaves of absence were granted in general orders, No. 18, of the 27th June, have since been ordered to report to Gen. Scott, in the Cherokee country, where their services are necessary to aid in the removal of the Indians to the west.

NEW HAMPSHIRE. The administration party in New Hampshire have nominated John Page, ex-United States senator, for governor.

FROM CENTRAL AMERICA. We learn from Capt. Rederson, of the brig Patsy B. Blount, arrived last night from Omoa and Belize, 1st of June, via Nassau, New Providence, that the revolution in Central America continued in the interior. The revolutionary party, consisting of about 600 men, were headed by a young and ignorant mulatto, named Parerra, who with his party were committing depredations of all kinds, and several travellers had been robbed and murdered by them.

The provinces of Costa Rica and Nicaragua had declared their independence, and that of Honduras, it was expected, would also give up its allegiance to the Central American government. G. W. Montgomery, bearer of despatches from the United States for Guatamala, had arrived safely at that place. By this arrival we are also in possession of the Nassau N. P. Gazette, to the 23d ult. but its contents are unimportant. [Baltimore American.]

NORTHERN FRONTIER. From the Rochester Democrat of the 27th inst. Retreat of the patriots. We learn from Samuel Heron, esq. editor of the Dundas (U. C.) Gazette, who came over in the Traveller yesterday morning, that the patriots left the Short Hills on Saturday night, and moved towards the Grand river. This intelligence reached Hamilton on Sunday, and McNabb was immediately ordered out with the 3d Gore regiment, to meet and attack the patriots at Shoat's tavern, about 14 miles from Hamilton, on the Grand river road.

It was supposed by many that the patriots would reach the point before the royalist troops. If they did, they could very easily make good their retreat into the London district, where it was supposed large reinforcements would immediately join them.

Captain Carr, the Indian leader, has gone in among the Grand river Indians, to induce them to hunt out the patriots.

Four regiments, the Beverly, the 3d Gore, the Queen's Own, and the Queen's Rangers, together with two or three companies of regulars, is the force now in pursuit of the patriots.

A letter received by a young gentleman in this city from his mother in Toronto, says that gov. Arthur and his council are now in session at Niagara, and that 13 prisoners are there being tried. If convicted, they will, according to a law passed last winter, be immediately shot.

Steamboat on Lake Erie. In pursuance of instructions from the war department, the steamboat Erie, burden of nearly 150 tons, has been chartered for the service of the United States upon this lake. This boat is to be placed under direction of an officer to be detailed for that service by Major Young, in command of the United States force stationed at this point. She will be sailed by her captain and crew as before.

From the Buffalo, (N. Y.) Commercial of the 30th ult. Navy Island. It is true, as we stated yesterday, that Navy Island was reoccupied, but not by any very blood-thirsty patriots. A small party of them, who wished to enjoy a practical joke at the expense of the royalists, went on the island at the time stated, and fired a few musket shots across upon the main land. The alarm was instantly given, and expresses started off with the information that the island had been reoccupied by a large force.

All being still last evening or this morning, the island was explored, and the patriots were found to have vanished. This, we are assured by gentlemen from Canada, is the true version of the story.

Mr. Cumming, of the Bank of Montreal, has returned to that place, having succeeded in obtaining all the money belonging to that establishment, which was stolen from George Auldjo, esq., at the time the Sir Robert Peel was plundered and burned.

The trial of the prisoners charged with the burning and plundering of the Robert Peel, came on before Judge Cushman, at Watertown, on Friday week. That of Anderson, on the charge of arson, which was the first case taken up, was committed to the jury on Tuesday afternoon, and resulted in a verdict of "not guilty"—when the prisoner was remanded to await his trial on another indictment. On Wednesday, Forward, indicted for the same offence, was arraigned; but the trial was postponed, on motion of the prisoner's counsel, as well as those of all concerned in the affair, for the purpose of procuring testimony. "It is expected," says the Watertown Jeffersonian, "that a specialoyer and terminator will be held for the trial of these prisoners—the jail having been cleared of all others at the late term." [Argus.]

CANADA FRONTIER—ORDERS NO. 1.
Head Quarters of the Army,
Sackett's Harbor, June 23, 1838.

I. The major general commanding-in-chief, having moved his head quarters to the Canada frontier, the commanding officers of the troops on that line will, besides rendering the usual return to the adjutant general's office at Washington, make returns to general headquarters at Sacketts Harbor, until further orders, and will address the general on matters relating to the state of affairs on the border, as often as any thing important may occur. From all other quarters, general and other officers in command will address their communications to the adjutant general at Washington, as usual.

II. Brigadier general Brady will command on the frontier from Buffalo to the northern extremity of the United States—head quarters, Detroit.

Major Young, of the 3d infantry, on the Niagara frontier—head quarters, Buffalo.

Lieut. colonel Cummings, of the 2d infantry, from Fort Niagara to where the 45th degree of north latitude strikes the St. Lawrence—head quarters, Sacketts Harbor.

Colonel Cutler, of the 4th infantry, from the St. Lawrence, along the boundary line to Lake Champlain—head quarters, Plattsburgh.

Major Churchill, of the 3d artillery, from Lake Champlain, along the frontier of Vermont—head quarters at Swanton, or any other suitable place near the line.

And major Clark, of the 2d infantry, the remainder of the frontier, to the sea coast—head quarters, Houlton.

As the foregoing is but a temporary arrangement, it will not interfere with the one heretofore announced in general orders, assigning officers to the command of military districts.

III. The object of this arrangement of commands is to preserve the peace of the border and to place the troops in positions the most favorable for maintaining the treaty stipulations existing between the United States and Great Britain, and for restraining our own citizens, and others within our jurisdiction, from committing outrages upon the persons and property of her Britanic majesty.

IV. From the respect for the laws hitherto so signally evinced by the citizens of the United States on all occasions, it is apprehended that the border inhabitants of the northern frontier are not generally acquainted with the enactments, the infringement of which would render their conduct penal. The officers in command of districts, as well as of detachments, will, for general information, circulate the copies of the laws of the United States with which they have been furnished, and under which they are authorized to adopt measures for repressing all hostile acts against the subjects of a friendly power, and to preserve inviolate the neutral relations of the United States.

V. The general feels satisfied that the good citizens along the line, knowing the law, will, by their example and advice, endeavor to restrain all ill-advised and unlawful proceedings, and thus be instrumental in maintaining not only the laws and honor of the country, but that peace and harmony so essential to the happiness and prosperity of those settled on the frontiers.

ALEXANDER MACOMB.

By command of the general:

J. N. MACOMB,

Assistant adjutant general.

PROCLAMATION. The following proclamation of gov. Arthur has been issued in consequence of the affray at Short Hills, of which we made mention last week. It will be seen that all persons going to or coming from Canada, are required to give an account of themselves and be provided with passports:

Proclamation. Upper Canada. By his excellency sir George Arthur, knight commander of the royal Hanoverian Guelphic order, lieutenant governor of the province of Upper Canada, major general commanding her majesty's forces therein, &c. &c.

Whereas, on the morning of the 21st of this present month of June, a large body of armed men assembled in the township of Pelham, in the Niagara district, and attacked and plundered a house in that neighborhood, of a large sum of money, and other property, and fired upon and overpowered a small detachment of the embodied militia there stationed:

And whereas information has been received by me, that certain evil-disposed persons, connected with the brigands who have of late molested and disturbed the peace of the Americans and British frontiers, have crossed the Niagara river, and that they lurk and secrete themselves in parts of the district of Niagara, with the knowledge and connivance of some of the disaffected resident inhabitants:

And whereas it is necessary for the peace and security of the district of Niagara, that the ingress and egress of the idle and evil-minded persons should be restrained and prevented, and that the perpetrators of the above outrage, and their abettors, should be brought to condign punishment:

I do therefore strictly order and command all officers, magistrates and others whom it may concern, that no person be permitted to land upon or leave the shore on the British side of the Niagara river, coming from or going to the United States territory, unless he shall give a full and reasonable account of himself, and show that he is coming or going in the prosecution of his lawful affairs and business, which person shall be furnished with a passport, to secure him from further hindrance or molestation.

And I do hereby earnestly call upon all magistrates, officers, and other loyal subjects of the queen, for their best united exertion in restoring the peace and tranquillity of the province, in the prevention of crime and disorder, and in the apprehension of the guilty; and I assure them of every support and assistance which may be required for these purposes, to the utmost extent of the civil and military powers, which her majesty has been pleased to place in my hands.

Given under my hand and seal at arms, at Toronto, this 22d day of June, in the year of our Lord, 1838, and of her majesty's reign the second.

By command of his excellency:

GEORGE ARTHUR.

C. A. HAGERMAN, att'y. gen'l.

D. CAMERON, secretary.

Later. The Cleveland Herald of the 30th June has the following information:

The following intelligence brought by the Daniel Webster, direct from Detroit, is from such a source that we believe it may be relied on. Rumors of refugee movements, in the vicinity of St. Clair, have been current for some days, and strengthens the probability of this fresh outbreak.

Extract of a letter, dated Detroit, June 29.

Yesterday about 500 refugee patriots crossed over about 40 miles above this, near New Port on the St. Clair river. A party of Canadians and a few Grand river Indians soon after attacked them and were defeated, the refugees maintaining their ground.

Last night the British sent on a reinforcement, as will the refugees to-day. The refugees crossed in a small sloop which was afterwards taken and towed to Detroit, by United States authorities.

The United States troops are on the move. The quarter's flag of gen. Atkinson has been flying for some days on the Detroit Exchange, but I see it has been removed during the night: where to I have not learned.

Flying reports from Detroit say that the British steamboat Thames on which the reinforcement went up, has been taken by the Patriots, and that Mahlen was to be attacked last night.

We see that the Buffalo papers do not credit the above reports. The Buffalo Advertiser says—

We have Detroit papers of Saturday morning, which make no mention of any such difficulties. We have also just conversed with a gentleman who left Detroit on Sunday evening, and passed the Thames, apparently with a pleasure party on board, near Malden.

The story is doubtless made up from whole cloth. There is no question, however, that some attempt of the kind is in contemplation. There are many refugees in the neighborhood of Detroit, and rumors were rife there on Saturday of gatherings near the river Raisin and other places. The U. S. officers are on the alert, and it is to be hoped they will be able to prevent any hostile demonstrations from our side.

The St. Clair buccaneers routed. We learn from the collector of this port, that a schooner in the service of the buccaneers was captured on Thursday, some miles below the country seat of St. Clair. Having understood, from the movements in that vicinity, that an expedition was on foot, the collector immediately started for the scene of operations. A small force embarked on the steamboat Gratiot, and soon got wind of the piratical craft, which, it seems, had been across to the Canada shore, and committed depredations upon the inhabitants. As the Gratiot approached the vessel with a view to compel her to surrender, a brisk firing upon her commenced from the opposite shore. Finding themselves in peril, the crew of the vessel took to the shore, and dispersed themselves through the woods.

The vessel was then taken possession of by the revenue officers. They found two or three Canadian prisoners in the hold, some fifteen barrels of flour which had been plundered, about a dozen of the prisoners we understand, was induced to stand of arms, and other small matters. The vessel was brought to this port to be condemned. One came down, by whom, it is thought, some important testimony may be laid before the grand jury, now in session.

We are advised that most, if not all the crew, were Canadians. This promptness on the part of the officers and citizens of St. Clair will, it is confidently hoped, crush another of those incipient practical expeditions which have from time to time annoyed our frontier. [Detroit Advertiser.

Lord Durham has issued an ordinance, by virtue of special powers entrusted to him, banishing to the island of Bermuda, Messrs. Wolrid Nelson, Buchette, Viger, Marchessault, Gauvin, Goddin, Des Rivieres, and Masson, now in custody, they having acknowledged themselves guilty of high treason. They are to remain at Bermuda during her majesty's pleasure, subject to such restraint as may be necessary to prevent their return to Canada. A number of others who have absconded, among whom are mentioned Papineau, Robert Nelson, Cole, O'Callaghan, and Rodier, members of the late assembly, are forbidden to return to the provinces, without permission from government, on penalty of conviction for high treason, until the restoration of tranquillity shall render such permission proper.

A proclamation has also been issued, declaring that all proceedings on account of treasonable offences shall cease, except in the cases mentioned in the ordinance. Those persons charged with the murder of major Weir, are deprived the benefit of any indemnity.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION. Representatives in congress are to be chosen in fourteen states the present year, and the elections will take place in the following order:

Louisiana, 1st Monday in July.

Illinois, } 1st Monday in August.

Missouri, }

Vermont, 1st Tuesday in September.

Maine, 2d Monday in September.

Georgia, 1st Monday in October.

Arkansas, 1st Monday in October.

South Carolina, 2d Monday in October.

New Jersey, 2d Tuesday in October.

Pennsylvania, 2d Tuesday in October.

Ohio, 2d Tuesday in October.

New York, 1st Monday in November.

Massachusetts, 2d Monday in November.

Delaware, 2d Tuesday in November.

The election in Louisiana commenced July 2d and continued three days. [Boston Atlas.

ANOTHER INDIAN FIGHT. By the steamer Santee, we have just received intelligence of a battle with the Indians, on day before yesterday, within a few miles of Newnansville. Capt. Beal, of the dragoon, with 30 or 40 men, lieut. Howe of the same corps, with 12 men, and capt. Walker, a volunteer, fell in with a body of about 60 men, who gave them a warm salute, Walker was killed and 5 of Beal's company were wounded. Five horses were killed; among them Beal's and Howe's. Several Indians said to be killed.

Gen. Taylor with six companies of men arrived yesterday at Black creek, and we trust he will soon teach the savages better manners than to crowd themselves thus into civilized society. [Jacksonville Courier.

FROM JAMAICA. Kingston papers to the 6th ult., has been received at the New York Exchange Reading Rooms containing some interesting intelligence respecting the apprentice system.

On the 5th ult. the council and house of assembly met in special session, and were addressed by the governor to the following effect:

That he had called them together at an unusual season, to take into consideration the state of the island under the laws for the government of the laboring population; that the subject was strongly agitated throughout the British empire and in parliament, where the honorable efforts of ministers were barely sufficient to maintain the existing law, as an obligation of national faith; that excitement also existed among the apprentices, but that they had rested in sober and quiet hope, relying on the generosity of the colonial legislature for the boon that has been granted to their class in other colonies; and that it was his duty to recommend the early and equal abolition of apprenticeship for all classes.

He was commanded to inform them, however, that no question of farther compensation would be entertained by her majesty's ministers; but he entertained them to consider the impracticability of carrying on coercive labor, with any hope of successful agriculture.

After a short but animated debate in the house, the governor's address was referred to a committee of seven.

MAINE. The hon. John S. Fairfield, a member of congress from Maine, has been nominated by the democratic convention of that state as a candidate for governor.

SPEECH OF MR. BOND, OF OHIO.

Upon the resolution to correct abuses in the public expenditures, and to separate the government from the press. Delivered in the house of representatives, April, 1838.

Mr. BOND said he rejoiced that the attention of the house and of the country was again invited to the subject of retrenchment and reform. He was aware that these terms had become somewhat hackneyed, and he almost feared that their frequent repetition here had rendered them trite and unmeaning. They had been used, as was well known, with great effect, to put down one administration and elevate another. That end being attained, they seemed to have performed their office, so far at least as the party now in power are concerned. All must admit that we have had no practical retrenchment or reform.

Mr. B. said he wished gentlemen now in power to admit that they had amused, if not deceived, the people of this country with a mere "fancy sketch." If they would not make this concession, then he called upon them to specify any retrenchment or reform which they had accomplished. But, sir, if they fail in this, as I think they must, then I demand their reasons for not carrying out their great and salutary system of reform, for which they stood solemnly pledged before the country.

I am unwilling to believe that the terms retrenchment and reform have lost their just and virtuous sense. The people of this country will determine whether the necessity for such measures had passed away with the simple elevation of certain men to power.

You, Mr. Speaker, must be well aware that something more than this was promised. You professed, sir, I mean the party with which you are associated, to be moved by the purest and most sacred regard for the welfare of the people. We find recorded here, and in the senate, a solemn pledge to carry into effect a systematic reform, if you should be placed in power. This was done, sir, in March, 1833, and you have held undisturbed possession ever since. During that time, not going on ten years, what part of your pledge has been redeemed?

I desire to conduct this discussion fairly, and with entire accuracy as to facts. I wish so to state them, too, that all may form a just opinion in relation to the sincerity and good faith of those whose conduct may be brought under review.

Was it really true, sir, that the expenditures of the government were unnecessarily large? Had the president too much power, and was there a necessity for restraining it? Was the patronage of the government so enormous as to require checks to be placed on it? Was this patronage used for political ends, especially the patronage of the press? Was it true that the freedom of the press and the security of our liberty demanded that the printing patronage should be withdrawn from the several departments, and the state department in particular?

All these inquiries are suggested by the declarations and avowals of the present dominant party when they sought for elevation. But lest gentlemen may have forgotten the precise charges made against Mr. Adams' administration, I beg leave to read from certain documents of this house and of the senate, in which these facts and complaints, with the promised reforms, are duly recorded.

The first, in point of time, is a report made to the senate in 1826, by a select committee, (of which Mr. Benton was chairman,) "to which was referred a proposition to inquire into the expediency of reducing the patronage of the executive government of the United States." In this document Mr. Benton reports:

"That, after mature deliberation, the committee are of opinion that it is expedient to diminish or to regulate by law the executive patronage of the federal government, whenever the same can be done consistently with the provisions of the constitution, and without impairing the proper efficiency of the government. Acting under this conviction, they have reviewed as carefully as time and other engagements would permit them to do, the degree and amount of patronage now exercised by the president, and have arrived at the conclusion that the same may and ought to be diminished by law."

For this purpose that committee then reported six bills; one of them proposed to regulate the publication of the laws and of public advertisements; another had this imposing title—"a bill to secure in office the faithful collectors and disbursers of the revenue, and to displace defaulters." But, besides its alluring title, that bill also contained the following provision:

"That in all nominations made by the president to the senate to fill vacancies occasioned by the exercise of the president's power to remove from office, the fact of the removal shall be stated to the senate at the same time the nomination is made, with a statement of the reasons for which such officer may have been removed."

The other four bills also looked to the restraint or reduction of the president's power and patronage. It is unnecessary now to read them. The report proceeds: "The committee do not doubt but that there are many other branches of executive patronage, in addition to those which are comprehended in the provisions of these bills, which might be advantageously regulated by law. Far from thinking that they have exhausted the subject, they believe that they have only opened it, and that nothing more can be done at this time than to lay the foundation of a system, to be followed up and completed hereafter."

Mr. BOND said that, notwithstanding a series of years had elapsed, and Mr. Benton and his friends had full power, the people had looked in vain for a superstructure on this "foundation of a system of reform," which this famous report proposed to have laid. That same committee, too, assert and claim for the senate "the control over appointments to office," and say they "believe that they will be acting in the spirit of the constitution in laboring to multiply the guards and to strengthen the barriers against the possible abuse of power." This is necessary, they say, where laws "are executed by civil and military officers, by armies and navies, by courts of justice, and by the collection and disbursement of revenue, with all its train of salaries, jobs, and contracts; and where, in this aspect of the reality, we behold the working of patronage, and discover the reason why so many stand ready, in any country and in all ages, to flock to the standard of power, wheresoever and by whomsoever it may be raised." The number of office holders is spoken of as large and still rapidly increasing, and the report proceeds: "Each person employed will have a circle of greater or less diameter, of which he is the centre and soul—a circle composed of friends and relations, and of individuals employed by himself on public or on private account. By way of illustrating the great number of office-holders and their combined power, Mr. Benton then turns to the "Blue Book of the republic," which he also calls "a growing little volume," and says it "corresponds with the Red Book of monarchies."

Mr. Speaker, this Blue Book is indeed a "growing little volume," but it has grown more rapidly in the nine years of this government, administered under the advice of Mr. Benton and his friends, than it did in double that time, before they came into power. I present now, sir, for your inspection, the Blue Book for 1828, and that for the last year, 1837. It is plain that the last is nearly or quite double the size of the former; and if the contents of the two are compared, the number of office holders, their salaries and compensation, the various divisions and subdivisions of every department, it will be seen that, under this boasted system of retrenchment and reform, nothing has been curtailed, but, on the contrary, a great increase in the number of office holders, with increased salaries. To this, too, is to be added a most alarming addition in all the public expenditures of the country, greatly exceeding in amount the expenses of that administration which was charged as wasteful! And if this state of things is not checked in time, we may yet realize that this Blue Book not only "corresponds with," but has actually become, the "Red Book of a monarchy," in this our boasted republic!

Mr. Benton, in his report, exhibits a list, taken from the Blue Book of 1825, of all the officers, with their salaries, at the custom-house in the city of New York. The number thus given is one hundred and seventy-four, and the aggregate amount of their compensation is stated $119,620 39. He then exclaims—

"A formidable list, indeed!—formidable in numbers, and still more so from the vast amount of money in their hands. The action of such a body of men, supposing them to be animated by one spirit, must be tremendous in an election; and that they will be so animated is a proposition too plain to need demonstration. Power over a man's support has always been held and admitted to be power over his will. The president has 'power' over the 'support' of all these officers, and they again have power over the support of debtor merchants to the amount of ten millions of dollars per annum, and over the daily support of an immense number of individuals, professional, mechanical, and day-laboring, to whom they can and will extend or deny a valuable private as well as public patronage, according to the part they shall act in state as well as in federal elections."

And to all this, the report still adds the naval and military establishment, the judiciary, the post office, and presses, with what it calls the "unknown and unknowable list of jobbers and contractors; and the still more inscrutable list of expectants who are waiting for 'dead men's shoes,' and willing in the mean while to do any thing that the living men wish." Having thus glowingly described the state of patronage, and the subservient league and unprincipled devotion of the office-holders, Mr. Benton then says:

"The power of patronage, unless checked by the vigorous interposition of congress, must go on increasing, until federal influence in many parts of this confederation will predominate in elections as completely as British influence predominates in the elections of Scotland and Ireland, in rotten borough towns, and in the great naval stations of Portsmouth and Plymouth."

We are also told by Mr. Benton that "the whole of this great power will centre in the president," and the report then warns the country in these impressive terms:

"The king of England is the 'fountain of honor,' the president of the United States is the source of patronage. He presides over the entire system of federal appointments, jobs, and contracts; he has 'power' over the 'support' of the individuals who administer the system. He makes and unmakes them. He chooses from the circle of his friends and supporters, and may dismiss them, and upon all the principles of human action, will dismiss them, as often as they disappoint his expectations. His spirit will animate their actions in all the elections to state and federal offices. There may be exceptions, but the truth of a general rule is proved by the exception. The intended check and control of the senate, without new constitutional or statutory provisions, will cease to operate. Patronage will penetrate this body, subdue its capacity of resistance, chain it to the car of power, and enable the president to rule as easily and much more securely with than without the nominal check of the senate!" "We must look forward to the time when the nomination of the president can carry any man through the senate, and his recommendation can carry any measure through the two houses of congress; when the principle of public action will be open and avowed—the president wants my vote, and I want his patronage; I will vote as he wishes, and he will give me the office I wish for. What will this be but the government of one man? and what is the government of one man but a monarchy?"

Mr. BOND said he hoped the house would pardon him for reading from this report these passages, which so happily illustrate the growth and power of patronage. They were referred to for the purpose of sustaining the allegation which he had made, that the present dominant party professed to entertain serious fears for the perpetuity or security of our institutions and liberty, if this public patronage was not checked or restrained by some statutory remedies, which they submitted for consideration, and promised to adopt, at some convenient season, if placed in power. Well, sir, they succeeded, and got the administration of our government into their own hands: and what has the country realized? Why, the number of custom-house officers at New York has grown from 174 to 414! and the compensation is increased from $119,620 39 to $409,669 32! But, besides their stated compensation, it appears that in the year 1836 the various subordinate officers of the New York custom-house were allowed among them upwards of $53,000! And the collector at Philadelphia, during the same year, received, beyond his salary, upwards of $3,000; the same officer in Boston upwards of $2,300; and many others very considerable sums, which I will not take time to specify.

We thus realize the inordinate and dangerous increase in this branch of patronage, foretold by the report. What has been done to limit and restrain this patronage? Where is the statutory remedy, the bill which was reported for that purpose? Sir, it has had quiet repose, and has never been heard of since the success of "the party." The moment power was obtained, the admission made in the report, that the senate had control over appointments is denied in practice; and the right asserted by the committee, to call on the president for his reasons in case of a removal from office, is now scoffed at and contemned by Mr. Benton, Mr. Van Buren, and the whole party who made or approved that report! Mr. Van Buren was one of the committee by whom that report was made; and yet he and his party openly violate and disregard every principle it urged! He now holds the "power" over the "support" of these trained bands of office-holders at New York and throughout the country. "He makes and unmakes them;" and "his spirit will animate their actions in all elections." Almost the first notice we have of the appointment of Jesse Hoyt to the collector's office in New York is the announcement of his official presence and activity in the charter election of that city. We hear of him by day and by night, heading his cohort of 414 office-holders, with the 1,030 expectants; and leading them to the charge! Mr. Van Buren told us, in the report, that "the action of such a body of men, supposing them to be animated by one spirit, must be tremendous in an election;" and that they would be so animated, he said, was "a proposition too plain to need demonstration." But I suppose, he wishes us to believe that in his hands all this power and patronage will be harmless! The case of the New York collector furnishes my answer to this: and, if another illustration is needed, I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the appointment of Mr. Wolf to the collector's office in Philadelphia. That gentleman, you know, sir, after holding the honorable place of governor of Pennsylvania, proudly called the keystone state, was reduced here for a paltry clerkship. We heard recently, that he was dissatisfied in the contrast between the place given him and that provided for his political rival, (Mr. Muhlenberg.) Governor Wolf, it was said, had resolved to withdraw, and gave some indication of hostility to the president. At this juncture the power of patronage is invoked—the collector at Philadelphia is made to take the clerkship at Washington, and governor Wolf's opposition is quieted in the collector's office, thus vacated. In an instant a new allegiance is sworn, and governor Wolf initiates himself in his new office, by heading a call for a political meeting in the city of his official duties! Who does not see the peculiar features of the suggestion before quoted from the report of Mr. Van Buren and others of the select committee—"The President wants my vote, and I want his patronage; I will vote as he wishes, and he will give me the office I wish for."

Mr. Speaker, I will now add a remark or two, and pass from this report. The committee who made it consisted of Mr. Benton, Mr. Macon, Mr. Van Buren, Mr. White, Mr. Findlay, Mr. Dickerson, Mr. Holmes, Mr. Hayne, and Mr. Richard M. Johnson, all at the time the zealous friends of general Jackson, except, perhaps, Mr. Holmes. They urged the impropriety of appointing members of congress to office, and the expediency of providing against it. From the moment they came into power their report and professions are forgotten, and in four years they appoint more members of congress to office than had been done in all the previous history of the government. They also told the country, in that report, that the press, the post office, the armed force, and the appointing power, were the most dangerous portions of the federal executive patronage. And they professed to have found a remedy for these dangers in certain bills which they submitted.

They there tell us, too, that all this power is in the hands of the president, and that he is not in the hands of the people. Indeed, they say, "the president may, and, in the current of human affairs, will be against the people," and the conclusion of the whole is, "the safety of the people is the 'supreme law,' and to ensure that safety these arbiters of human fate (the press, the post office, the armed force, and the appointing power) must change position, and take post on the side of the people." Mr. Speaker, we have found it true, indeed, that the president is not in the hands of the people, and that he will even turn against them! Look, sir, at Mr. Van Buren's December message, and see the opprobrium which he casts upon the people of his own state for daring to exercise their elective franchise contrary to his will! Notwithstanding his professions, and the pledged faith of his report, he violently retains the control of these "arbiters of human fate," and will not suffer them "to change position and take post on the side of the people!"

Mr. Bond said he would next call the attention of gentlemen to what had passed in this house on the subject of retrenchment and reform; and he regretted to find such marvellous discrepancy between the "sayings and doings" of "the party," on that subject. The journals of the house show that in February, 1823, a select committee was appointed to consider and report on this whole matter: the gentlemen appointed were Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Ingham, Mr. River, Mr. Wickliffe, Mr. Cambreleng, Mr. Sergeant, and Mr. Everett; all friends of general Jackson, save the two last. They were charged to inquire into the whole machinery of the government; with a view to reduce its expenses and patronage, and to correct all abuses. They engaged in and devoted themselves to this task; their report, I mean the report of the four avowed reformers, professed to the country that the public expenditures at home and abroad were unnecessarily great; that every thing was done on too grand a scale; that each department had too many clerks and spent too much money; that this was also the case in congress, whose sessions were needlessly prolonged; and, by way of correcting this latter evil, they recommended that "the compensation of members, during the first session of each congress, be reduced to $2 per day, from and after the first Monday in April, if congress should sit beyond that day."

Mr. Bond said he would not read the report to the house, but he hoped this notice of it might aid in recalling it to public recollection, whereby it would be seen how much had been proposed and how little had been done. Here, too, it will be found, that in concert with their co-laborers in the senate, the house reformers describe most graphically the extent and power of patronage, and for all their discovered abuses they suggest remedies. But, Mr. Speaker, great as this work was represented to be, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Cambreleng) and his friends told the country in this report that they had made only a beginning, what in hunters' phrase is called a mere "priming." They then inform us that nothing more in the way of reform could be done by them, until the people should drive from the citadel of power those who then held it, and place it under the control of these zealous reformers. This was done. This specious report, like its twin-sister of the senate, was trumpeted aloud by its friends; and at public expense, under the order of the house, many thousand copies of it were scattered throughout the country. The people read, and, honestly believing it, took the alarm, and placed these reformers in power.

And now, Mr. Speaker, after your undisturbed possession for nine years, what has been done? Have you reduced any expenditure, corrected any abuse, or provided any restraint on the power of patronage? No, sir, no. But, on the contrary, your party in power have made all public expenditures greater than before; you have practised the very abuses of power of which you complained, and have not provided any restraint on executive patronage! We have thus a practical illustration of the abuse of the identical power of which your friends, when sounding the alarm, gave only a theoretic description.

Mr. B. said the resolution now under consideration still looked to reform, and especially to the correction of the abuse of power in regard to the public printing. The gentleman who offers it, (Mr. Hopkins,) though acting with the administration generally, is not blind to the abuses which may be committed. He is still demanding reform from principle, and is not satisfied that abuses have been corrected by a simple change of men. I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, to find his resolution opposed by the administration. The gentleman from New Hampshire, (Mr. Cushman,) resists it on most extraordinary grounds. He admits abuses, but says it is impracticable to correct them, and therefore useless to pass the resolution. Is it possible that such an objection can be openly avowed and sustained here? The gentleman says it is the usage of party to dispose of this patronage in its own way, and that he never heard of any complaint against Mr. Adams' administration for so doing. Here, sir, is another open avowal of the doctrine, "that the spoils belong to the victors."

[Mr. Cushman here explained, and observed he had not said the spoils belong to the victors.]

Mr. Bond admitted that the gentleman had not used those identical words, but this was the doctrine of the party with which he acted, and a distinguished member of that party, now the governor of New York, (Mr. Marcy,) had, when a member of the senate of the United States, openly used those terms, and justified this usage of party. The friends of the administration uniformly practised under this precept, whatever may be their theory. I do not wish to do the gentleman from New Hampshire any injustice, and will read from his remarks as published, and he will then have an opportunity of correcting them, if erroneously printed. The gentleman is reported as having said:

"It was well known, that since the establishment of the government, the dominant party, whichever it might be, had invariably employed what has been called, if you please, partisan printers and partisan editors. But why should they not do so? So long as the opposition had the predominance, they used to supply their own partisan printers, and no complaint was made about it; and why should any complaint arise now? He saw no reason for it."

Here, then, I think, sir, a position is taken and terms used in effect the same, and tending directly to the doctrine that the "spoils belong to the victors." But can it be possible that the gentleman thinks he is correct and sustained by the facts, when he says that no complaint was made against Mr. Adams' administration on account of the exercise of the printing patronage? Has he forgotten that Isaac Hill, the present governor of his own state, was the editor and publisher of a newspaper called "the New Hampshire Patriot," and that the discontinuance of the publication of the laws in that paper was considered so outrageous a persecution for opinion's sake, that it may almost be said to have given him his subsequent political elevation and consequence? The discontinuance of Isaac Hill as printer of the laws was occasioned, too, by his publishing a libel on the lady of the president, without the least semblance of truth, and so grossly indecent that Mr. Randolph, though a zealous opposer of Mr. Adams, said it ought not even to be read on this floor. The occasion, however, was seized, to bring the subject of public printing under discussion in this house, and Mr. Saunders, of North Carolina, introduced a resolution calling upon the secretary of state to report what changes had been made in the newspapers printing the laws, together with his reasons for such changes. A long and spirited debate followed; and as gentlemen seem to have such imperfect recollection of the events of that day, some little reference may perhaps be usefully made to what was said in that debate. It will be observed that the resolution of Mr. Saunders, and those who supported it, required reasons to be given for a removal from office. Since they came into power, however, that doctrine has been denied and repudiated.

Mr. Bond said he proposed to prove by this debate that the present administration came into power declaring that the printing patronage of the government was inordinate and dangerous; that it ought to be restrained and regulated by law; and, in fine, promising, if elevated, to withdraw its exercise from the executive hands. The mover of that resolution (Mr. Saunders) said:

"I trust I shall not be accused of getting up this call for purposes of effect, nor be told this is a small business." "He was not to be told that the pecuniary amount involved in this matter was too small to influence the editors of this country." "The total sum thus distributed could not amount to less than between twenty and thirty thousand dollars." "There were eighty-two papers employed in publishing the laws;" "it was not of the expense that he complained, but of the purpose by which it was controlled." "It was thus calculated to operate, and did actually operate, so far as it went, to control the freedom of the press, and to enlist, throughout the country, that powerful instrument in behalf of the views of the state department. In this respect, it was much more effectual and much more dangerous than the far-famed alien and sedition laws."

Mr. Saunders concluded by saying that it was his "intention to take this power from the state department and place it elsewhere." A member from Tennessee, (Mr. Houston,) afterwards governor of that state, and now the president of Texas, sustained Mr. Saunders' resolution, and denied the right of the secretary of state to change the publication of the laws for opinion's sake. He alleged that the practice of that department "had been to allow an individual who might be personally opposed to the views and opinions of the head of the department, if he was honest and capable as a public officer, to retain his place." He asked "if changes had been made in order that the patronage of the government may flow in a particular channel? Such a course would gag the free expression of opinion." He said:

"Patronage is not a thing local and circumscribed. It seeks every little ramification into which it can by any possibility insinuate itself. It is like the progress of a cancer in the human body; it seizes on every vein and artery, one after another, nor stops its progress till the sufferer sinks, and then the knife is too late applied."

Next came Mr. Hamilton, of South Carolina, the chairman of that retrenchment committee to which I have already alluded. That gentleman said:

"These eighty-two presses would be put on the diet of a wholesome regimen, and in the course of a salutary discipline. The sturdy and independent would be turned out to be fed on such offals as they might be able to pick up, until the whole pack should open in full and harmonious cry, in one common note, from the sturdy mastiff that howls at the door of the treasury, to the most strolling turnip that barks on the farthest verge of our frontier."

Mr. Bond said he would not stop to inquire whether we did now realize, in the present official organ, the Globe, "that sturdy mastiff that howls at the door of the treasury." Mr. Hamilton continued:

"Is it necessary that the executive should have a government press, to be paid for by the people out of the public coffers, to sustain the measures of the administration, whether right or wrong?" "If," said he, "a secretary of state can so apply the patronage of the government as to nourish to venal accord eighty-two presses in our country to praise every thing the administration should do, and subject their proprietors to the punishment of the loss of this patronage if they dare to censure its measures, this forms distinctly a government press, which is more alarming to the liberties of the people than the organization of the whole of gen. Brown's army of six thousand men, formed into a guard of the palace. If eighty-two presses can be made to speak as it were in one voice that all that the government does is excellent, and what all those who are opposed to them say is false and factious, this constant combined and concerted language will soon have a tendency to make those who hear little else believe all this is true."

Mr. Bond hoped the house would pardon him for this long extract. Mr. Hamilton, from whose speech it is taken, was at the time a friend of gen. Jackson, and zealously engaged in elevating him to power. In thus describing the government patronage over the press, that gentleman said he was merely warning the country of dangers which might be realized, if no restraint was imposed on that patronage. General Jackson was elevated, and Mr. Van Buren succeeded him, and is now in power. Instead of eighty-two presses thus employed by the government, they have now considerably upwards of one hundred, and the patronage is held and exercised without any manner of check or restraint. In this, surely, the country was disappointed.

But you, also, Mr. Speaker, took part in that debate, and warned the country of the danger of this patronage, and the necessity of restraining it. I hope, sir, it will not be out of order to draw on your remarks, in aid of my present purpose. The sentiments which you expressed are perfectly just, and must command the approbation of all impartial minds.

I have preferred, sir, sustaining the resolution now under consideration by the arguments and illustrations of the friends of general Jackson, rather than to attempt any new suggestions.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that some friend of Mr. Clay, the then secretary of state, intimated that the resolution of Mr. Saunders savored somewhat of the spanish inquisition. At this your indignation was aroused, and you exclaimed:

"Inquisitorial, sir! And has the time arrived in this country when it is deemed inquisitorial respectfully to ask a public officer, who is responsible to the people whose representatives we are, for the public reasons (not the private motives) of his public conduct? I intimated to demand of a public officer to explain and account for his conduct? Is the transatlantic doctrine, that 'the king can do no wrong,' to be introduced here? Though we have no alien and sedition laws, are we to have what is tantamount to them? Are the public functionaries of the government to be wrapped up in the robes of office, and to be held irresponsible to the people or the people's representatives? And are all those who have firmness and independence enough fearlessly to inquire into the conduct of public men, and the manner in which the public money is expended, to be denounced by the partisans and servile adherents of the house that now reigns, as factious opposers? Sir, (you continued, Mr. Speaker,) this power of appointing the public printer is improperly lodged where it is. It is, to say the least of it, subject to abuse, and may be improperly used for the purpose of muzzling and influencing the liberty of the press."

That being the case, you proposed, sir, "to remove his power of appointment from the department of state, and vest it somewhere else, where it would be more safely and properly exercised." The country is aware, Mr. Speaker, that you have continued to be a member of this house ever since you made the remarks just quoted, now more than eleven years. Some expectation was cherished that you would, when in a majority here, practice under these opinions, and remove this printing patronage "from the department of state, and vest it somewhere else, where it would be more safely and properly exercised." I am sorry, sir, that this public expectation has been disappointed. I can only account for it by supposing that your various political engagements and high public station have withdrawn your attention from this important subject. There is some consolation, however, in knowing that you have now an opportunity of redeeming your pledge, and the friends of retrenchment and reform indulge the hope that you will do it.

I hope you, sir, will not think this an "inquisitorial" measure. It is indeed, true that when the representatives of the people, during the last session of congress, attempted to look into the departments of the government, gen. Jackson openly resisted it, and said such a measure was "worse than the Spanish inquisition." More, sir, he, in effect, gave orders that it should not be tolerated. Mr. Speaker, did not your cheek then mantle with honest indignation? and if you had held a seat here, instead of the chair you occupy, would you not have again exclaimed, "is the transatlantic doctrine, that 'the king can do no wrong,' to be introduced here?" Or were you constrained to admit that, under the latest system of reform, "the public functionaries of the government" are now "wrapped up in the robes of office," and "held irresponsible to the people or the people's representatives?"

Mr. B. said he hoped he had, by this time, furnished some evidence to the house, and to the gentleman from New Hampshire, (Mr. Cushman) in particular, that the exercise of this printing patronage by Mr. Adams' administration, was not only questioned, but openly condemned. The friends of gen. Jackson, so far from pretending that it was impracticable to correct the abuse of this power, pledged themselves to the country, that they could and would, when in a majority provide a remedy. He would submit it to the people to say whether this had been done. Was it not notorious that the extent of the printing patronage had been greatly enlarged under the present dominant party? Is not the number of new-papers in which the laws are printed very considerably increased? Is not the ordinary printing patronage of the several departments far greater than formerly? And, as to the public printing for congress, it had so swollen, under the promised retrenchment, that we were almost induced to believe that the term was used in irony by those from whom the people expected economy.

I now propose, Mr. Speaker, to show what seductive influences this patronage over the press carries with it; and for this purpose, I must again invoke the aid of the Jackson reformers, using their own arguments, and the very language in which they admonished the country of the base uses which would be made of this power. I hope gentlemen will remember the remarks made on this subject, and which I have already given to the house, from the speech of Mr. Hamilton the chairman of the committee on reform. I reserved for the present branch of the argument a peculiarly striking and descriptive passage in the speech of Mr. Houston, before alluded to. He undertakes to describe an honest, independent editor, of good principles, and deserved influence, and then adds, such an editor as this "May not be disposed to bow or bend his principles for the sake of supporting a particular administration or individual. It may be necessary to certain plans and interests, that such a man as this should be gagged or prostrated. In that case, a very politic course would be to start a new paper some few months before new patronage is to be conferred; to use every exertion to obtain for it a sufficient number of subscribers; to take measures that, at all hazards, the paper be sustained; then to get for its editor some true and trusty fellow—a fellow that will 'go the whole,' who is troubled with no principles on any subject, but who will support a certain interest 'through thick and thin,' who will pursue no course of his own, but will ever be ready to take his cue from a certain quarter. After getting him some one or two hundred subscribers, and using every expedient to make him some character, he must then have the printing of the laws, as a token of the confidence of the government, and then all will be ready for action. Sir, I will not say that such a press is to be established and paid for out of the contingent fund; I am not warranted in such an assertion; but I say that such a new beginner must have patronage, although it be in direct opposition to the interest and wishes of the people."

Thus spoke Mr. Houston in 1827. Let us now pause for a moment, Mr. Speaker, and inquire whether those who know so well the use and abuse of this power, have not proved themselves skilful adepts in its practical application. Let us direct our attention to the official newspaper, The Globe, and see if Mr. Houston has not most aptly described "its rise, progress, and present state."

We know, sir, that at the commencement of gen. Jackson's administration, the official newspaper was the United States Telegraph, published by Duff Green. Things went on pretty smoothly for a while, and until, as was said, some jealous rivalry sprung up between the then vice president of the United States and the present president, Mr. Van Buren, who was then secretary of state. It was said Green was suspected for cherishing a stronger partiality for the vice president than for the secretary of state. But I do not profess to be familiar with the causes of this family jar. Report said that the Telegraph was not discontinued abruptly, as the official organ, but was gradually supplanted by the Globe, and its editor, Francis P. Blair, brought here for that purpose from Kentucky. Among the means resorted to for this purpose, as complained of by the Telegraph, were orders or requests to various postmasters throughout the country to furnish lists of its subscribers. The Globe was then sent to them, chiming to have the special confidence of the party. In this way it was initiated into favor among the subscribers of the Telegraph, and in due season the latter paper was wholly abjured. I have no knowledge of all the measures taken "that at all hazards the paper be sustained," and will leave it for others who know Francis P. Blair better than I do, to determine whether the administration, in furnishing an editor for the Globe, succeeded in getting a "true and trusty fellow, a fellow that will 'go the whole,' who is troubled with no principles on any subject, but who will support a certain interest 'through thick and thin.'" Thus I know, that the administration fostered and cherished the Globe with an immense amount of patronage, and in that way gave it strength and influence. That paper was first published in 1831. The whole amount paid for printing by the executive departments in 1832 and 1833, was $113,346 21, of which $17,345 42 were paid to the Globe, and the residue to various other printing establishments, editors, and publishers throughout the United States. In 1831 and 1833, the whole amount so paid was $33,966 50; of which sum, a part, say $40,

473 16, was paid to the Globe, and the residue again divided as before. For the next two years, ending with September, 1837, the several executive departments paid out, for printing, the enormous sum of $142,904 63. Of this, the Globe received $24,331 27, and the balance was divided and subdivided—the spoil being thus given in due proportions among the whole pack, from "the sturdy mastiff that howls at the door of the treasury," down "to the most starveling turnspit that barks on the farthest verge of our frontier."

But it will be observed that, so far, I have stated the amount of the executive patronage of the press only. In December, 1833, the Globe obtained the printing for the house of representatives and for the two years ending on the 30th September, 1837, its editors or publishers were paid, on that account, $105,914 53. It thus appears that, for the last six years, the Globe newspaper has received from the government, as the published documents prove, nearly $220,000. What it has received indirectly, and from office-holders and expectants, no one can tell. I will not designate each of the innumerable host of editors and printers on whom this patronage has been showered. Many of them have received small sums; others, again, do not quite equal the Globe editors; but I will name a few who seem to be among the preferred, and then leave it for their readers to say whether their papers can be supposed to be under the wholesome regimen of treasury diet.

I find that Hill and Barton, of New Hampshire, have received, in about six years, between 7,000 and $8,000. During the same time, Shadrach Penn, jr., of Kentucky, has been paid about $10,000, nearly the half of which has been paid within the last two years. During the same time, the firms of True and Green, Chas. G. Green, and Beals and Green, of Boston, have been paid $27,204 76. In the course of two years, Medary and Manypenny were paid $2,953 66; Paine and Clark $3,837 53; Millin and Parry, of Philadelphia, $1,822 26; Medary, Reynolds and Medary, $1,534; and Samuel Medary and Brothers, all of Ohio, $2,002. All these payments were made by the post office department; and, in addition to this printing patronage, some of these parties enjoyed advantageous contracts in the same department, for the supply of "paper and twine," connected with their printing of blanks. These contracts for "blanks, paper, and twine" when examined, as they were by the committees of investigation, disclosed the practice of most reprehensible partiality in the postmaster general for certain political favorites. I have not examined to see if the other departments did not simultaneously bestow a part of their printing patronage on these same individuals. This further fact, however, is disclosed by the printing accounts of these departments: that, for some time past, they have thrown large portions of their patronage into the hands of Langtree and O'Sullivan, of this city, who are publishing a periodical journal, the "Democratic Review," which professes to be a literary work, but, at the same time, devotes its columns to the cause and defence of the Administration, with a zeal equalled only by the Globe, and, in at least one of its articles recently published, shows as little regard for justice and truth, I think, as that paper does.

The executive patronage of the press was one of the great chapters of reform into which the famous retrenchment report of this house was divided. It is there stated as an alarming fact, that the amount paid for printing and advertising "by the executive departments at the seat of government for the [then] three last years, (1825, 1826, and 1827), and by the general post office, in two years, was $71,830 51." In the same report, we are also told that the printing for congress, the senate and house included, from March, 1819, to December, 1827, being a period of eight years, amounted to $271,933 37. These were thought to be extravagant expenditures, and retrenchment demanded and promised.

I beg the house to indulge me a few moments in holding up to their view, and especially to the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) who was an active member of that committee, a mirror, in which the practical reform may be seen. If the gentleman, or the party, shall find the object a hideous one, I can only say the picture reflected is the work of their own hands.

For the six years ending on 30th September, 1837, the several executive departments, inclusive of the general post office, paid out $340,116 37 for their printing. In order to get three years, so as to compare it with the term and amount before stated by the committee, let us take half of the $340,116 37, say $170,058 18. Deduct the amount stated by the committee

Amount of increase every three years
by the reformers	$99,227 67

I also find that, in six years, ending on the 30th day of September, 1837, the printing for congress, (senate and house,) and inclusive of certain land documents, books, and engraving, amounted to $731,534 62. Let us deduct the amount reported by the committee as paid for the same object in eight years by the administration which was condemned for its extravagance—that was $271,933 37. That operation will show that the reformers have paid, in the legislative patronage of the press, $179,701 25 more in six years, than the whig party paid in eight years!

Having thus shown the amount of, and how this patronage is now used by the executive, it will be appropriate to see what the friends of general Jackson said would be the consequence of such use. The committee, in their report, speak of the moral mechanism upon which this patronage acts "as a power that seems irresistible," and say they "will not stop to argue what they predicate as an undeniable fact, that, by the employment of the expenditures of the contingent funds of the departments, a government press is to all intents and purposes effectually established, as much so as if there were an annual item in the appropriation bill for the purpose of purchasing the joint and harmonious action of one hundred papers in the uncompromising vindication of those in power, and in the unrelenting abuse of those who are not." And in the debate already referred to, Mr. Hamilton, one of the reformers, in speaking of payment for the services of the press, observed—"When the government becomes the paymaster for these services, the evil is infinitely augmented. For, what are the services which the press under such circumstances is expected to render as a return for the partial kindness of the government? Why, to cover all their approaches to arbitrary power; to defend each measure of misrule and corruption; to find excuses and apologies for every act of imbecility, although the interest and honor of the country may be jeopardized by ignorance, apathy, or neglect; but, above all, to subject those who do not think 'the existing powers' entitled to the confidence of the people to the most unparading calumny and abuse." Mr. Bond said he would appeal to the house and to the country, if we are not now experiencing daily the practical application of what Mr. Hamilton mentioned as a possible state of things. Is not his description of a subsidized press in the hands of the government, so graphically true of the present administration and its press, that it might justly be conjectured that they eat for the picture? Every day's experience shows that all who oppose the present administration are "subjected to the most unparading calumny and abuse." Another of the Jackson reformers in this house, Mr. Floyd, of Virginia, observed in debate here, that "the executive influence in this government was very great, and had been exerted to calumniate members in this house as well as great and wise men out of the house." He said "it had been attempted to cut them off by dark innuendoes," and that "hiring scribblers had been paid directly or indirectly for performing the task."

Mr. Speaker, have we not felt and seen the end result of all this for the last nine years, but more particularly since Mr. Van Buren undertook "the improvement of the press," and a display of its licentious power in the hired columns of the Globe? Who has not been disgusted with the coarse and "unparading calumny" from day to day poured out upon members of congress, and of the senate in particular, who happened to think that "the existing powers were not entitled to the confidence of the people?" Who has not seen the attempt in the government press to break down the influence and power of "members of congress," and "to cut them off by hiring scribblers, paid directly or indirectly for performing the task?" Does not the Globe constantly charge Mr. Clay, Mr. Webster, Mr. Southard, and other senators, as being paid by and under the influence of the Bank of the United States when engaged in the discharge of their high constitutional duties? And when these foul slanders are howled from the throat of the "sturdy mastiff," at the door of the treasury, do not the whole kennel, "Tray, Blanche, and Sweetheart, little dogs and all," even to the "most starveling turnspit that barks on the farthest verge of our frontier," re-echo the sound? The Jackson reformer, Mr. Floyd, spoke of the slanders on members of congress and on other men elsewhere. Why, sir, we daily experience that and more. The president and his press have gone on from time to time calumniating members of congress and others individually, and at length have got to slandering the people in a body—a kind of wholesale slander business. If a congressional district, in the free exercise of its constitutional right, elect a member who will not "bow and do obeisance to the party," he is at once proclaimed to be the feed attorney of the bank, and the people of the district are stigmatized as "reproved debore."

Here, sir, I desire to read a short paragraph from the president's official newspaper—the Globe. It was printed a year since, and then met my eye. I have preserved it for the express purpose of noticing it here, on a suitable occasion; and this is the first appropriate moment I have had to do so. The paragraph in question was written on the occasion of announcing the election of one of the present senators from Ohio, (Mr. Allen,) in doing which, the Globe exults at what it was pleased to consider a defeat of Mr. Ewing, a highly distinguished and most valuable member of the senate. I do not propose to dwell on that election; it is foreign to my purpose; but I do verily believe it was achieved against the wishes of a majority of the people of Ohio, and recent events sustain that opinion. And yet, this man, whom the people of Ohio delighted, and, if the signs of the times do not deceive, will again "delight to honor," is, at the moment of his retiring from the senate to the bosom of his family, and to all the private relations of life, held up and stigmatized in the Globe as a "bank beneficiary." In the same article, sir, some fifteen senators are opprobriously named and condemned by this government press. The state of Alabama is particularly congratulated on being relieved from the "Calhounery" of Gabriel Moore. But now a new light has suddenly opened which wholly changes the medium through which the Globe sees "Calhounery," to use Mr. Blair's own phrase. How long has it been since that paper stigmatized Mr. Calhoun "as the bank's tool instrument," and said of him "that no man ever nullified the truth with so little remorse!" Now, however, the whole scene is changed, and Mr. Calhoun is almost deified by the very government press which but yesterday had so reviled him! Here, Mr. Speaker, we realize another truth spread before the country in Mr. Benton's report, which, in describing the power of the president over individuals administering the government, says: "He makes and unmakes them." A short time since, this administration and its press stood forth the advocates and friends of the state banks, and, after placing the public money in their custody, urged them to lend it out. Having thus "donauched" and seduced them from the "even tenor of their way," this same administration and press now abuse the banks and the credit system which but yesterday they applauded; and, to justify this abuse, falsehood is substituted for fact. The Globe a day or two since stated "that the legislative examination in Ohio" proved "that the directors of the banks there had drawn out more than the whole amount of their real capital." This, sir, is another daring and impudent falsehood of that paper, and furnishes additional evidence of the desperation of this administration and its "government press" in carrying out the sub-treasury system, with all its selfish purposes. The result of the "legislative examination of the banks in Ohio," is fully reported by the auditor of the state, who is a thorough-going disciple of the sub-treasury school. His report is now before me, and I invite its immediate inspection. It is most creditable to the banks of Ohio; shows them to have been prudently managed, and that they will not suffer in comparison with those of any state in the union. But let us look into the auditor's report, and test the truth of the fact stated by the Globe. "that the directors of the banks in Ohio had drawn out more than the amount of their real capital." By the auditor's report, it appears that the amount of capital stock actually paid in these banks in December last, was $11,331,613 96, and the whole amount loaned to directors and stockholders together, at that time, was only $1,466,174 56. I leave it for others to apply the proper rebuke to the Globe for its slander of the banks and the people of Ohio; but, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you and to this house if a press which is thus basely conducted, should be sustained and cherished by funds from the public treasury?

This same paper took occasion, not long since, to quote from some remarks which I had the honor to make in this house, and to say it had never intimated that the senate was a useless body. Why, sir, the gross calumny heaped by the Globe on the majority of the senate, but a short time since, must be familiar to all. I will not offend so far as to read those slanders to the house. The official organ, by its personal abuse of the senators, and repeated calumny of the body, did more than give the intimation alluded to. Did not the Globe say of the senate that "its dignity" was "impaired"—"its character for grave consideration gone"—that "its justice" was "doubted," and its power to harm by its most marked censure "contaminated and derided"? Yes, sir, this was the language held by the president's official press towards the American senate, and yet that same press now has the effrontery to deny that it ever intimated that the senate was a useless body.

But, Mr. Speaker, in pursuing the individual slanders of the Globe, I have digressed a little from my promise to show that the government press also does a "wholesale slander business," and throws its poisoned shafts at masses of men—yes, sir, at the great body of the people themselves. I beg leave now to read that part of the article from the government press which I before alluded to, announcing the result of the senatorial election then recently held in Ohio. Referring to the district which I have the honor to represent in this body, the president's official organ says:

"The bank held immense power in his [my] district, and exerted its moneyed influence in aid of the federal party, which has stronger hold in that quarter than in any other part of Ohio. It succeeded by a small majority in electing Mr. Bond the collector of its bonds there. He may be looked upon as the representative of reprieved debtors."

After the vile slanders which the government press has wantonly heaped upon many of the most eminent and justly distinguished public men of the country, Mr. B. said an humble individual like himself should not complain, but rather feel honored that he was noticed. For himself, personally, he would say nothing; but for his district—his constituents—for the people, who had honored him with their confidence, and made him their representative here, he had much to say. He could not, perhaps, express all the just indignation that he felt. My constituents, (said Mr. Bond,) in every trait of character which can justly ennoble man, are not second to those of any member of this house. With God's mercy, and their own right arm, they have been the builders of their own fortunes. In every sense, they are virtuous, intelligent, and independent freemen—"who know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain them." They love their country, and revere its constitution; but they have never yet "bowed the knee to Baal;" and because they will not, the editor of this vile press, bloated and swollen with government patronage, stigmatizes them as "reprieved debtors." Mr. Speaker, should this "hired scribbler," Francis P. Blair, ever venture into that district, I do not believe that the people, whom he has thus basely slandered, would consent to defile their hands by touching him; but they would cast upon him a scornful and withering look of honest and just indignation, which would give to his visage a more cadaverous aspect than it even now has. But who is this man who thus impudently arrays himself against the people? Why, sir, he is himself a "reprieved debtor" of the very bank which he is every day reviling. Do gentlemen require proof? The files of this house furnish it. A paper reported or filed by one of the committees of this house shows that this same Francis P. Blair, who was brought here from Frankfort, in the state of Kentucky, owed the Bank of the United States the sum of $20,744 36. It is true that only a part of this sum was his own debt; nevertheless, on his own account, and as security for others, he was debtor to that bank, on the 30th day of November, 1830, for the whole amount of the sum which I have mentioned. Did he pay it? No, sir. Does he yet owe it? No, sir. How was he discharged? He compromised, if the terms on which he was released are justly entitled to be called a compromise. What were those terms? Why he held a clerk's fee bill, amounting to $37 42, and a note on a gentleman by the name of Gratz for $240, say, together, $277 42, which he gave up to the bank, and was released from $20,744 36! Now, sir, I think Francis P. Blair may justly be called a "reprieved debtor."

Such a settlement proves that Blair was utterly insolvent at the close of the year 1830. If his insolvency was occasioned by misfortune, he should be pitied rather than condemned on that account. Of the circumstances of his failure I am ignorant. I refer to his insolvency for what I esteem a perfectly just purpose in this debate. We find him brought to Washington in 1831, and employed as the publisher or editor of the Globe, which is made the government press. We soon see streams of patronage flowing in upon him from all the executive departments. The extent and character of this patronage I have before alluded to. In a brief space of time we see him living and entertaining expensively, and going all the rounds of the court society at Washington. If Mr. Blair had no connexion with this government patronage, he might do all this, and no man would be justified in alluding to or commenting on it. It is the high prerogative of every freeman to do with his own as he pleases. But, Mr. Speaker, the sudden change in the fortunes of Mr. Blair, connected as he is with executive patronage, his single leap from insolvency to wealth, impel me to inquire if "there is not something rotten in Denmark?" Upon the whole, sir, I think his case most strongly illustrates the necessity of passing the resolution now under consideration, and, if possible, making a total separation of the newspaper press from the government.

At all events, if this shall be found impracticable, we can at least destroy the pot system of exclusive favoritism, by inviting competition, and giving the contract "to the lowest bidder," as the reforming report of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Cambreleng) and his friends induced the people to believe would be done. When the retrenchment resolutions, which produced the famous report already mentioned, were under consideration, the friends of the then administration denied the existence of any abuse, but invited investigation, and the resolutions passed almost unanimously. Now, however, when the reformers are in power, and an investigation is proposed, they admit the existence of the evils referred to in the resolution, but resist the inquiry, because, as they allege, the abuse cannot be corrected!

The gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. Cushman) may deem this end impracticable. I do not. I would rather follow the example of the gallant colonel Miller, (of the gentleman's own state,) who, when ordered on a perilous service on the Niagara frontier, during the war of 1812, did not say it was impracticable, but said "I'll try, sir," to the commanding general. He did try, and he succeeded. The achievement not only rendered essential service at this crisis, but honored his country's arms, and elevated his own fame!

In the attempt which the resolution under consideration proposes, no danger awaits us, but a great civil triumph may be obtained by it. I invite the gentleman from New Hampshire to adopt the words of his gallant statesman, and, instead of thinking it "impracticable," let him say "I'll try."

But, sir, we have been greatly disappointed in the failure of this promised reform in many other respects besides that which regarded the public printing and the executive patronage of the press. And, to establish this, I will state briefly a few items, contrasting the practice with the practice of the reformers. Imitating the example found in the report already alluded to, I may be best understood by a division of the subject into a few prominent heads. But, in the language of that report, I am "far from thinking I shall now exhaust the subject;" I shall "have only opened it." I pretend to nothing more "at this time than to lay the foundation of a system, to be followed up and completed hereafter" by the people.

The prolonged sessions of congress formed a conspicuous chapter in the book of reform. The committee denounced the usage as "one of the most serious evils attending the national legislation of the country;" and, by way of correcting it, recommended "that the compensation of the members, during the first session of each congress, be reduced to two dollars per day from and after the first Monday in April, if congress should sit beyond that time. This was the precept; now for the practice. The sessions of congress, so far from being shortened, have been prolonged, no remedy applied, and the people of the country ought to know that the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) so early as March, 1830, when an attempt was made to carry into effect the remedy proposed in the report of the committee of which he was a member, by reducing the pay of members, did himself actually resist and vote against the measure.

The report alleged that abuses had "taken place from the various and arbitrary manner in which members estimated their mileage." This abuse was ascertained to have been practised by the reformers themselves; and they have continued the practice without any restraint. I will give you, sir, an illustration, which may not be thought inappropriate. In the days of promised reform, the two senators from the state of Missouri differed in politics; one of them, the great reformer, Mr. Benton; the other, Mr. Barton, who thought the promised reform was a mere humbug. The first session of the twentieth congress commenced the 3d of December, 1827, and ended on the 26th of May, 1828. These gentlemen severally attended the whole session; their per diem allowance was 1,400 dollars each, being 175 days, at 8 dollars per day; but for mileage, reckoning 8 dollars for every twenty miles, Mr. Barton charged $939 20, whilst Mr. Benton charged $1,344 66. Mr. Barton charged his mileage by the great rail route, over land; but Mr. Benton, who was sailing out and condemning all abuses, counted his miles by all the crooks and turns and tortuous windings of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers? Mr. Barton was left at home because he did not believe in the propriety of professing one thing and practising another; and Mr. Benton was retained to correct abuses and carry out the great principles of his report on executive patronage. Ten years have intervened since the session of congress just referred to; the report sleeps undisturbed, and, in the mean time, Mr. Benton continues to count his miles every year by the way of the river, which has given him upwards of 4,000 dollars more than Mr. Barton felt authorized to charge under the same law.

Another precept. The committee reported that "the privilege of newspapers to the members ought to be abrogated;" and "that the practice too often indulged in by the house of voting to themselves copies of books," ought to be discontinued. The privilege and practice continue and without restraint.

Precept. The contingent expenses of this house were reported to be extravagant. During the year 1828, the last of Mr. Adams' administration, they amounted to 80,000 dollars.

Practice. During the year 1836, the last year of the Jackson reform administration, this item was 200,000 dollars! And, during the year 1837, being the first year of the "successor," who promised to "tread in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor," these expenses are 210,000 dollars! This must be the "magician's way" of working the rule of reduction—it was certainly unknown to old Thomas Dilworth.

Precept. The committee, of which, I again repeat, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Cambreleng) was a member, reported that they had obtained information by which they were satisfied "that by a judicious system of reform, instituted by the executive officers themselves, at least one-third of the (then) present number of clerks in the departments might be reduced with safety to the public interest."

Practice. The number of clerks has not been reduced in any one of the departments, but, on the contrary, there has been a considerable increase. I will prove it. The state department, in the year 1828, included the patent office, and the whole number of clerks was sixteen; the salary and compensation of the secretary and all his clerks and messengers, amounted to 27,750 dollars.

The whole number of clerks now employed in the state department and the patent office is forty. The joint salaries and compensation amount to $56,515!!!

The patent office, in 1828, was managed by a superintendent, with a salary of 1,500 dollars, and two clerks and a messenger, whose joint compensation was 3,700 dollars. It is now under the charge of one of the reformers; the title of "superintendent" is exchanged for that of "commissioner;" and with the change of title comes the change of salary from 1,500 dollars to 3,000 dollars! The number of clerks is increased from two to twenty-four, and the compensation from 1,800 dollars to 21,000 dollars; and, not content with one messenger, and his old salary of 400 dollars, they provide a salary of 840 dollars for messenger, and then give him an assistant, to whom is also paid 15 dollars per month.

The secretary of the treasury, in the year 1828, employed eight clerks and two messengers. His salary, and the compensation of the clerks and messengers, amounted to 18,600 dollars.

The present secretary of that department (and he was taken from the body of reformers, who made proclamation from the senate chamber) employs fifteen clerks and two messengers. His salary, and their compensation, amount to $27,100!! A similar result will be found in comparing the present with the former state of the several subdivisions of the treasury department. But, by way of "introducing economy and dispatch in the treasury department," the committee proposed to "simplify the forms of business, and to reorganize its subordinate branches, so as to dispense with one-fourth, if not one-third, of the officers in the treasury." Now, sir, no reorganization of the department has yet been attempted. Instead of reducing, they have increased the number of officers; and the forms of business, under the new mode of simplifying, have become so complicated, that the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) now chairman of the committee of ways and means, declared here, during the last special session, that, after fifteen years' experience as a member of this house, he found it difficult tioners add these treasury accounts, and the manner in which the secretary's annual report on the finances is carried!

Next, as to the war department. In 1823, the secretary of war employed a chief clerk, besides seventeen clerks and two messengers. His salary, and their compensation, amounted to $23,650. The business of Indian affairs was then managed by him also. In 1833, the secretary of that department employs, inclusive of the Indian business, about 40 clerks, besides messengers. The joint salaries and compensation of the whole amount to $63,810.

In 1823, we hear nothing of a commanding general's office, with its clerk and messenger.

In 1833, the commanding general is allowed a clerk at $1,200, and a messenger at $600 per year.

In 1823, the adjutant general's office employed three clerks, whose joint compensation was $2,950.

In 1833, the adjutant general employs seven clerks and a messenger, whose joint compensation is $8,225.

In 1823, the paymaster general employed three clerks, whose joint compensation was $3,900.

In 1833, the salary of the same number of clerks is $4,290, besides the messenger's salary.

In 1823, I have been unable to discover any allowance for clerks to the quartermaster general.

In 1833, that officer employs in the office at Washington seven clerks, whose joint compensation is $7,300.

In 1823, the ordnance office employed three clerks, whose joint salary was $2,950.

In 1833, the ordnance office employs nine clerks, besides a messenger, and their aggregate compensation is $9,225.

In 1823, the subsistence department employed four clerks, whose joint compensation was $2,950.

In 1833, the subsistence department employs four clerks, and a messenger, whose joint compensation is $5,380.

In 1823, the surgeon general was allowed a clerk, at $1,150 per year.

In 1833, the surgeon general is allowed a clerk, at $1,266, and a messenger, at $600 per year.

In 1823, the business of Indian affairs was discharged at the war department, by some one or two of the seventeen clerks which I first mentioned.

In 1833, this Indian business appears to constitute a grand division. We now hear of the "Indian department," with a commissioner, whose salary is $3,000, a chief clerk, at $1,600, and eleven clerks, and two messengers, the joint compensation and salaries being $19,400.

In 1823, there was one superintendent of Indian affairs, who was paid $1,500 a year, twenty-one Indian agents, twenty-eight sub-agents, and thirty-nine interpreters.

In 1833, we find four "superintendents of Indian affairs," with salaries of $1,500 each per year; six "superintendents of emigration" with salaries of $2,000 each per year; ten "Indian agents," with salaries of $1,500 each per year; fourteen "Indian sub-agents," with salaries of $750 per year; thirty-three "commissioners and special agents," who are paid from $5 to $8 per day, and from $1,500 to $3,000 per year; fifteen "conducting and enrolling agents," at $3, $4, and $5 per day; two "conductors of exploring parties," at $3 and $5 per day; two "valuing agents," at $4 each per day; eight "collecting agents," at $2 50 per day each; two "issuing agents," at $1 per day each; one "disbursing agent," at $5 per day; sixteen "assistant agents," at $3 and $4 per day, and from $500 to $1,200 each per year; thirty-one "interpreters at agencies," at $300 each per year; fourteen "interpreters in the emigration of Indians," at $2 50 and $3 per day each; fifteen "physicians," at salaries varying from $3, $5, and $6 a day, to $34 per month; eleven "clerks" (other than those in the office at Washington,) at salaries varying from $3 and $5 per day to $40 and $50 per month, and $300 and $1,000 per year; fifty-three "blacksmiths," with salaries varying from $2 40 to $6 30 per year; twenty "farmers and assistants," at 2, 3, 5, and $600 per year; eighteen "teachers," with various salaries, from $500 to $300 per year; five "millers," with salaries of $5 00 and $6 00; one "surveyor," at $3 per day; the whole concluding with five "miscellaneous agents," with salaries of $1 per day, and $600 per year.

But even this is not all. The commissioner of Indian affairs says the list given by him in the Blue Book is not accurate or complete. He leaves room to add or alter. Here, indeed, is a display of patronage! Ought we not to be astonished to find this state of things, under an administration whose friends professed to be shocked at a multiplication of offices, and re-published, in the report of this house in 1833, the warning of that chief magistrate, who said: "Considering the general tendency to multiply offices and dependencies, and to increase expense to the ultimate term of burden which the citizen can bear, it behoves us to avail ourselves of every occasion which presents itself for taking off the surcharge." It is appropriate, too, now, to refer gentlemen to the censure which that report cast on the secretary of war in 1823, for paying $753 for additional clerk hire in the business of Indian affairs.

Mr. B. said he was here tempted to name one or two offices in particular, which seem to have been created for special favorites: one of them under the law authorizing the president to sign land patents by an agent, instead of doing it as heretofore, in person. If he could not find time to do this duty, as Mr. Adams and all his predecessors did, then it would have been better to dispense with the signature altogether, as you have done with that of the commissioner of the general land office.

The president's name now is not even written by his proxy, as it should be, but is written by some clerk in the land office, and the whole service of the proxy or agent consists in his writing his own name! For this he is paid $1,500 per annum! The place is held by one of the president's sons, and it is an indirect mode of increasing the president's salary. The compensation is too high, under any circumstances. For a service requiring neither skill nor talent, and employing a very small portion of this young gentleman's time, he receives a higher salary than many of the governors and other high officers in the several states do!

Another office specially created is that of the "Smithsonian agent," with a salary of $3,000 a year, and furnishing a convenient sojourn for a gentleman wishing to visit London. The duties of this place might well have been discharged by ordinary correspondence, but at all events they are such as could justly be required at the hands of our resident minister at London. It cannot be overlooked that Richard Rush was secretary of the treasury, and received the censure and condemnation of the retrenchment committee. And yet Mr. Rush was appointed to the office of the Smithsonian agent. I will leave it for others to apply what the chairman of the committee on retrenchment said at that day, in debate on this floor: "Whenever an office is to be filled, even a zealous, constant, and faithful friend is compelled to yield to a mushroom apostate that may have been purchased but yesterday."

Let us next compare the navy department. Mr. Southard, who was secretary of the navy in 1823, employed in this department seven clerks, besides the chief clerk. The salary of the secretary, and the compensation of the clerks and messengers, amounted to $17,250. The department has been held for many years, and is still managed by Mr. Dickerson, who was a member of the committee, in the senate, from whom came that famous report on executive patronage, to which I first referred. He employs eight clerks besides the chief clerk; and his salary, with the compensation of his clerks and messengers, amounts to $18,850. And at this very session, he demands more clerks, and an increase in the salary of some of those he already has. The committee censure Mr. secretary Southard for unnecessary expense in subscription for newspapers for the department. They specify under this head, $624 43 for three years. It now appears that Mr. secretary Dickerson has expended, for newspapers and fashionable books and literature of the times, in one year, near $700; and, including similar expenses of the navy board, near $950.

The committee also condemn the practice of extra clerk hire. We find Mr. Dickerson not only employing three extra clerks, but, what is far more dangerous, paying extra hire to one of the regular clerks in the department, enjoying, at the time, a salary of $1,760, but to whom is paid, "for extra service as clerk," the further sum of $429 67, making his salary $2,189 67. Is not this a ready mode of providing for a favorite?

The committee also specify the sum of $466 86, as paid by the navy department, in three years, for printing, and condemn it as extravagant.

The Blue Book of 1837 shows the navy department, under the reformer, Mr. Dickerson, to have paid $9,559 22 for printing in two years!

The committee also reported that a "considerable sum varying from 100 to $200 was annually expended by the secretary of the navy in the purchase of books for his office, most of them having no appropriate relation to the naval service of the country, such as reviews, magazines, and other periodical publications, and the fashionable literature of the day." This usage was, of course, to be abolished. Has it been? I beg leave to read a few items from Mr. secretary Dickerson's contingent expense account for 1837.

2d volume Repertory of Patent Inventions,	$8 00
2d do Southern Literary Messenger,	5 00
One-fourth of Audubon's Birds,	165 00
Audubon's Birds,	55 00
No. 1, Indian Biography,	6 00
North American Review,	5 00
No. 4, Indian Biography,	6 00
One No. of American Scenery,	75
	$250 75

Here is a display of the "fashionable literature" in which Mr. secretary Dickerson indulges himself and his clerks, at the public expense. I wish the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) who aided in concocting the report from which I have just quoted, would inform us "what appropriate relation" the books and reviews just mentioned have "to the naval service?" But what means the item "one-fourth of Audubon's Birds?" Why, sir, I understand that neither of the four secretaries being "willing to take the responsibility," "as a unit" they agreed to divide it! The cost to the people is the same; it all comes from the "public coffers." And the mode of doing the thing proves that the secretaries felt that its expediency and propriety were questionable. I have read somewhere, perhaps in Sterne's works, an incident which most happily illustrates this transaction. As I recollect the story, the Abbess of Andouillet, and Margaretta, a novice, made a little journey together, in a vehicle drawn by mules. As the evening approached, they were deserted by their muleteer, when ascending a hill. The mules presently became stubborn, and stopped. The travellers were greatly alarmed, and, in their dilemma, the novice said that there were two certain words which, she had been told, would force these animals on the moment they heard them; but then the words were sinful. The novice was urged, and she gently whispered the words "brouge" and "fouter." The Abbess, in her distress, turned casuist, and said they were only a venial and slight sin, which might be divided; and by taking half, and leaving the rest, or by taking it all, and amicably halving it betwixt yourself and another person, would become diluted into no sin at all! Therefore, my dear daughter, continued the Abbess, I will say bou, and thou shalt say ger; and thou shalt say fou, and I will say ter. Accordingly, the Abbess giving the pitch note on bou, Margaretta responded ger; Margaretta continued with fou, and the Abbess drew out ter; but still the mules stood. They do not understand us, cried Margaretta; but the devil does, said the Abbess. And, I think, Mr. speaker, that these reforming secretaries will find that they are understood in their patent mode of reform, and, particularly, that the people will not be gulled into the approval of an unauthorized expenditure by dividing its amount among the departments.

By this time, I think it is apparent that the duty devolves on the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) not only to account for his voting against the measure in regard to the compensation of men, but also why it is that "a judicious system of reform" has not been instituted by his friends; "the executive officers themselves," whereby the country might realize what was promised by the gentleman's report:—"a reduction of one-third of the number of clerks in the several departments, with safety to the public interest."

We will now look to the post office department. The general post office, as it was then called, had the good fortune not only to escape the censure, but to enlist the praise, of that fault-finding era. I leave it for those who were familiar with the motives and political currents of that day, to account for this. The committee said of it:—"The efficiency of this branch of the public service is in a condition highly improved and improving." My first remark on this is, that the post office department passed into the hands of general Jackson in a healthy and efficient state. A few years, under his reform, reduced it to chaos and insolvency. The details of its mismanagement have been long since proved. The evidence is on file here and in the senate, with the reports of the several committees appointed to investigate its abuses. I refer gentlemen to the files, and will not dwell on the various abuses which were designated and established. Their enormity, coupled with the fact of the borrowing money on public account by the postmaster general, without law or authority, alarmed the country. But bad as all this was, and used, as the pecuniary patronage had been, to confer personal benefits on favorites, until the disorder and insolvency of the department became apparent, still the political uses which had been made of the appointing patronage were not disclosed, and now never will be. The present postmaster general, Amos Kendall, tells us in his account of the late destruction of that department by fire, that all the books, papers, and files of the department were saved, except the "files" of the "appointment office," and that these were destroyed!

In the first six years of general Jackson's administration, about 1,300 postmasters were removed from office, and, in most of the cases, without the assignment of any cause. When certain members of the committees of the senate and house, appointed, in 1833-'4, to investigate the abuses of that department, attempted to get at the files and correspondence of this "appointment office," with a view to ascertain and report whether the reasons for these removals were prompted by high and just public considerations, or by mere political expediency, they were denied the right by the head of the department and by the friends of the administration, who composed a majority on one of these committees! Was not this inquiry just? I refer you, sir, to Mr. Benton's famous report and bill providing for the disclosure of reasons in case of removal from office. I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to your own remarks, and to those of your friends, in the debate on Mr. Saunders's resolution, which I have already quoted. But, above all, I refer you to the remarks of the illustrious Madison, unrivalled as he was in the knowledge of the letter and spirit of our constitution and laws, and in purity and honesty of purpose. As early as 1789, in the memorable debate on the power of the executive to remove from office, he not only denied the right to exercise this power capriciously, and without assigning adequate reasons, but he thought it would be such a bold assumption of lawless power, that he thus expressed himself: "I own it as an abuse of power which exceeds my imagination, and of which I can form no rational conception."

But when Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Benton (both of whom were on the committee which reported the bill to prevent the abuse of this patronage of appointment) came into power, they changed their tone, if not their principles. Removals from office immediately followed, and they deny any obligation to assign reasons! Is it not strange, too, nay, is it not mysterious, that, in the conflagration of the post office, the only papers and files destroyed should be those relating to the exercise, if not the abuse, of the power of removal from office—the very papers which the postmaster general refused to suffer the committees of investigation to examine?

I said Mr. Van Buren changed his tone on this subject. I will at once prove it. The journal of the senate shows that he was one of the select committee who reported the bill already referred to. He entered the office of secretary of state with the commencement of general Jackson's administration. One of his first official acts was the removal of a meritorious clerk from his office in that department, and a positive refusal to assign any reason for it! The gentleman removed is now a member of this house, (Mr. Slade, of Vermont,) and the voice of the people has sustained him whom the despotism of executive patronage sought to destroy.

The manner in which this patronage is abused, and the readiness and almost telegraphic despatch with which the wires of party machinery are felt throughout and from the most distant parts of the union, may be imagined after reading this laconic note, written by Mr. Van Buren, soon after entering on the duties of secretary of state, to a gentleman in Louisiana:

Washington, April 30, 1829.

My dear sir: I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 21st ult. and of informing you that the removals and appointments you recommended were made on the day your letter was received.

"With respect, your friend, &c.

"M. VAN BUREN."

And, so far from being willing to reduce the number of clerks in his department, as the people were induced to believe would be done, Mr. Van Buren, when called on for that purpose, saw the whole affair through a new medium, and replied: "My opinion is, that there can be no reduction in the number of officers employed in the department, (of state,) without detriment to the public interest!" And yet the retrenchment committee, when Mr. Clay was in that department, reported "that they felt satisfied that, had the officer at its head concurred with them in the opinion, they might have presented a plan for not only a gradual reduction of the number of clerks, but for an actual increase in the efficiency of their labors."

But other discrepancies between the profession and practice of these reformers remain to be noticed. It will be found that the report of the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) and his friends, condemned "the practice introduced by the secretaries of the departments, of sending the reports of their clerks or heads of bureaus, instead of condensing them, and making them substantially their own communication." This practice, if bad, has never been corrected, but is daily indulged in by all the departments, as the answers to the calls and resolutions of this house abundantly show. But a still more remarkable commentary follows. When the department of war passed into the hands of John H. Eaton, a zealous reformer, he, too, was called upon to carry out his retrenchment system, and reduce the number of his clerks, in fulfillment of the public expectation, which he and others had excited. To the surprise of all, he referred the subject to the clerks themselves! and here, sir, is his reply:

"War Department, Jan. 27, 1830.

"Sir: I have the honor to lay before you reports from the several bureaus connected with the war department, on the subject of a resolution of the 5th inst. referred to me by the committee on retrenchment.

Respectfully,

"J. H. EATON."

Charles A. Wickliffe, Esq.

These bureaus, so far from agreeing to part with any of their escutcheons, actually asked for an additional supply! Thus ended that farce!

Another precept.—This retrenchment report alleged that our diplomatic relations and foreign intercourse were unnecessarily expensive, and recommended "a fixed appropriation for the contingencies of each mission," "in no case exceeding $600, (annually,) to cover the expenses of stationery, postage, office, clerk, hire, and all other contingencies whatsoever."

Let us see the practice. Andrew Stevenson, our minister at London, is allowed for these contingencies, including "presents to the menial officers and servants of the court, and others, on his presentation, and at Christmas," $2,093 56, in the space of about a year! The like expenses of nearly all our other foreign missions are in correspondent ratio.

Profession.—The grade of our foreign ministers was to be reduced in some instances, especially that at Madrid, to a charge, with a salary of $4,500.

Practice.—A minister plenipotentiary has been kept at Madrid constantly, and John H. Eaton is now there on a salary of $9,000, having also received his outfit of the same amount. And during the last session of congress an attempt was made to increase the salaries of all our foreign ministers!! Who could have anticipated this from an administration that proclaimed on this floor, (at least one of its most powerful and influential supporters, the late Mr. Randolph, who joined in the cry of retrenchment here proclaimed, and what he said received the full approbation of "the party:")

"So long as members of congress, and not of this house only or chiefly, will bow, and cringe, and duck, and fawn, and get out of the way at a pinching vote, or lend a helping hand, at a pinching vote, to obtain these places, I never will consent to enlarge the salary attached to them. We are told that they live at St. Petersburg and London, and that living there is very expensive. Well, sir, who sent them there? Were they impressed, sir? Were they taken by a press-gang on Tower-hill, knocked down, hand-cuffed, chucked on board a tender, and told that they must take the pay and rations which his majesty was pleased to allow?"

Now I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, if the moral application of these remarks has not been justly felt "in congress and not in this house only or chiefly," under the retrenchment and reform administration!

Another precept of the reforming report.—The committee thought the mode of "appointing and compensating bearers of despatches liable to strong objections, prone to degenerate into a species of favoritism little short of a convenient mode of sending favorites abroad to travel for their pleasure, health, or instruction, out of the public coffers."

Practice. The President and his secretary of state, both Jackson-reformers, now take a favorite clerk of the state department, whose salary at the time was at the rate of $1,760 per year, send him as bearer of despatches to Mexico, and, for about three months' service, pay him $1,313 58, and suffer him also to draw his clerk's salary for the period of his absence! For this I refer you to the case of Robt. Greenhow, who is the translating clerk of that department; all the facts of the case being stated in the reports of the secretary. He excuses this transaction, by saying that the translations which were required during Mr. Greenhow's absence were made at his expense. It might be well to inquire whether any translations were required during that period, and why also it would not have been quite as well to discontinue the salary for the time, and let the government pay for any translations which were needed. But do we not here distinctly realize what the retrenchment report condemned in these words: "that an actual incumbent is considered to have such a sort of property in the office as to enable him to farm out its duties, and to receive a part of its revenues for doing nothing?"

Another illustration of this "convenient mode of sending favorites abroad," "out of the public coffers," is found in the same list of contingent expenses of foreign intercourse. I allude to the case of Mr. Charles Biddle, who, when nominated by general Jackson for a judgeship in Florida, was rejected by the senate.

After this rejection Mr. Biddle, was despatched by the executive to Central America and New Grenada. What service he rendered we know not; but it appears that for this mission an allowance of $7,122 95 has been made. Mr. Charles Biddle is the same gentleman who had a controversy with Mr. senator Grundy, in which the devotion of the latter to general Jackson was questioned. We learn by one of the printed documents, occasioned by that dispute, that the senator, for the purpose of proving himself to be what is called a "whole hog Jackson-man," said he "had swallowed the hog not only whole, but wrong end foremost, taking the bristles against the grain; and had gone for all general Jackson's bob-tail nominations, even to Charles Biddle."

You may remember, Mr. Speaker, that great fault was found with Mr. Clay for an allowance to John H. Pleasants, who was employed as bearer of despatches, and sat out on his voyage, but, being taken ill, was obliged to abandon it, though he caused his despatches to be safely delivered. In the account, which I am now examining, we find the sum of $1,522 72, paid by Mr. Forsyth, the secretary of state, to Eleazer Early, sent with despatches for our charge d'affaires at Bogota, but which were never delivered. The sickness of Mr. Pleasants furnished no palliation, in the minds of the reformers, for the payment made to him, though he caused his despatches to be safely delivered. Yet these same gentlemen find ample pretext in the alleged shipwreck of Mr. Early, to pay him $311 35 for expenses, $527 37 for clothing, bedding, and books, lost or abandoned by him, and $714 for one hundred and nineteen days compensation, at $6 per day, though his despatches were never delivered!!

At this same time, too, Mr. Early appears to have been receiving a salary of $1,500 a year as librarian of the house of representatives!! It would seem that Mr. secretary Forsyth is not a stranger to this "convenient mode of sending favorites abroad, to travel for their pleasure, health, or instruction, out of the public coffers."

I also find that $2,515 are charged for contingent expenses of William T. Barry, late minister to Spain. Now, sir, it is well known that Mr. Barry never reached Spain, but died on his way there. He, of course, received the usual salary and outfit; and I am at a loss to know what contingent expenses, incurred by him, could justly be charged to the United States.

There appears, also, to have been paid to John R. Clay, in 1836, $3,381 41, as "compensation for certain diplomatic services." This gentleman, at that time, held the place of secretary of legation at St. Petersburg, with a salary of $2,000 a year, and the payment to him of the further sum of $3,381 41 may be justly questioned.

Other items, indicative of extravagance or favoritism, may be seen in this contingent expense account of foreign missions, but I will not stop to specify them.

It will also be found that, in the days of this "searching operation" and "reform," the standing committees of this house on the expenditures of the several departments attended to their vocation. But, very soon after general Jackson came into power, these committees became so much a matter of mere form that the chairman of one of them declared here, during the last congress, he had never even thought it worth his while to convene his committee, and he appeared quite surprised, or at all events amused, that any inquiry was expected to be made in regard to the expenses of these departments!! This state of things forms a strong contrast with the report made here in April, 1823, by Mr. Blair, of Tennessee, chairman of the committee on public accounts and expenditures in the state department. He, you know, Mr. Speaker, was a Jackson reformer; like the select committee, he found every thing wrong, and promised to correct it. The purchase of books, the employment of a librarian, and many other things, were censured—even the right to purchase a print or likeness of general Washington, to be suspended in the department, was questioned. How stands the matter now? Why, large sums of money are yearly expended for the library of the state department, and many books purchased, which are certainly unnecessary.

Besides the purchase of books, periodicals, and newspapers, made for this department by its disbursing agent at home, there was expended in London, during last year, for similar objects, nearly $500. A librarian is employed, at a salary of $1,540, equal to that paid to the librarian of the great public library of congress. All this, too, sir, under the auspices of gentlemen who said that this part of the expenses of that department was censurable, and ought to be dispensed with, as all the officers of the government could well avail themselves of the public library at the capitol. But, Mr. Speaker, the times changed, and Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Forsyth changed with them. The state department is now laid off into grand divisions. When Mr. Clay had charge of it, the Blue Book exhibited a list of a dozen names, all under the head of clerks. One of these acted as translator for the department, and his salary was $1,150; another paid out the funds, and was charged with the contingent expense accounts, and he received $1,150 a year. How soon is all this simplicity and economy forgotten! The Blue Book of last year divides this department into a "diplomatic bureau," a "consular bureau," a "home bureau," a "translator," whose salary is $1,760, a "disbursing agent," whose salary is $1,593, a "librarian," whose salary is $1,540, a "keeper of the archives," whose salary is $1,540, and gives one man $960 a year for "packing, filing, arranging, and preserving newspapers and printed documents." This is done by that boasted "democratic party" which affects such holy horror at any appearance of what they call "aristocratic grandeur." If the Turk, whose letters are found in Salmagundi, had seen this display of "bureaus" in the state department, he would have been better justified in his admiration at "the grand and magnificent scale on which these Americans transact their business." But I have yet to add, that those who questioned the right of the state department to purchase a print of the immortal Washington have used the money of the people to buy prints of general Jackson, and now of Martin Van Buren, for almost every room in each of the departments!!

Mr. Speaker, during this "searching operation" and capitious fault-finding, every petty expense of the several departments was looked upon with open censure. I well remember that an item of some few dollars, paid a laborer for destroying the grass which was growing between the bricks of the paved walk leading to the state department, was held up to public view as a piece of aristocratic extravagance. Now, sir, suppose I were to cite to you many similar and equally (if not more) objectionable charges in the present accounts of these departments—such as cash paid for clearing the snow off the pavement, so that Mr. Forsyth need not wet his feet; "$90 a quarter for labor," "$54 for sundries," "$16 for work," without stating what labor or work. It might have been for killing grass, or raising vegetables for the secretary. The term "sundries" may conceal the same things, and the curious might inquire what use was made of the fire-proof paint for which $73 were paid by the secretary of state. But the money is well laid out, if it will preserve the edifice! And it is to be regretted that the secretary of the treasury and the postmaster general had not made similar purchases in time to save their respective buildings. Penknives and scissors, by the dozen and half dozen, are purchased by the secretary of state, who also pays a clerk to go to Baltimore to collect a draft. An item of $100 paid by the secretary of the treasury for the transportation of money; but how much money, or from whence, or where transported, we know not. This last charge is a kind of foretaste of the hard-money sub-treasury system, by which, instead of transmitting the funds of the government by means of the cheap, safe, and rapid system of exchange, which prevailed before the banks were "debauched" by Mr. Kendall, the public money is now to be waggoned over the country at great expense and hazard, and always with delay.

The late eminent and virtuous attorney-general William Wirt, did not escape the censure of these indefatigable reformers. He had rendered some professional services, in which the United States were interested, but which were not such as his official station charged upon him. For this service an inconsiderable sum was paid to him, but its propriety was questioned. The salary of the attorney-general was then $3,500, and he was allowed $800 for a clerk. How stands the case now? The salary of Mr. Benjamin F. Butler, the present attorney-general, is $4,000, and in 1834 he was paid $4,150 for compensation, besides being allowed $1,300 for a clerk and messenger, and $500 for the contingent expenses of his office. The same additional allowance and charge, amounting together to $1,800, is made in 1835. Independent of the increased salary and the enlarged provision for a messenger, whence comes Mr. Butler's right to charge an excess of $150 19 for compensation, besides $500 for contingent expenses? In the year 1836 we hear nothing of contingent expenses, but a provision of $1,407 is made for his clerk and messenger, and for Mr. Butler's compensation that year he received $4,332, when his salary was only $4,000. Why was this excess of $332 paid to him? He appears to have been used as a sort of Caleb Quitem. He has been allowed to enjoy the salary of his own office and that of the secretary of war at one and the same time, being at the rate of $10,000 per year, pursuing too his profession, and receiving its emoluments. No wonder we see in him "the complying law officer of the crown." When did he ever give an opinion contrary to the wish of the president, if he knew what that was? Let me give an illustration. As the story is told, when the Baltimore railroad was about to be located at its termination in this city, the company consulted Mr. Butler on some point as to this right of way, under their charter. After full deliberation, his professional opinion was obtained in writing. It happened that general Jackson felt some concern about the location of this right of way, and he expressed an opinion on the same point, requiring a termination of the road, which the company did not wish, and which Mr. Butler had advised them they need not adopt. Gen. Jackson was furnished with the opinion of the attorney-general; but, instead of yielding, he endorsed on it, "Mr. Butler has not examined this case with his usual care; let this paper be referred back to him, with a copy of the charter, for his re-examination." In due time, sir, the attorney-general agrees with the president, and gives an opinion in conformity with that which general Jackson had expressed! After this, Mr. Speaker, we need not be surprised at the absurd opinion of Mr. Butler, given as a foundation or justification for general Jackson to pocket the bill repealing the treasury circular, and which had passed both houses of congress almost by acclamation. Nor, indeed, should we be astonished at any opinion of his, unless he should have happened to give one different from what he supposed the president wanted.

I wish now, to make a few comments on the professions and practice of Mr. Amos Kendall, late fourth auditor, and now postmaster general. This gentleman, you know, sir, was an eleventh-hour Jackson man. He, however, was among the first who got office; and immediately after his appointment, a letter of his is published, in which, after holding himself and a few friends up as having been persecuted, he exclaims, "what has Heaven done?" So disposed of events, as to make Barry postmaster general, and myself a more humble auditor? As to Mr. Barry, no matter "what events" made him postmaster general, we know that under his management that department was deranged and rendered insolvent!

But now for this "humble auditor," or, as from his own question, he is sometimes called, "this Heaven-born" Amos. If history does him justice, it will be found that he desired office under Mr. Clay, which, it not being in the power of the latter to provide, Mr. Kendall espoused the cause of general Jackson.

In this letter of Mr. Kendall, he says:

"I feel bound by my obligations to my country, and by the pledges so often repeated by all the principal men of our party, to promote, with all my talents and industry, the reforms which the people demand. I will prove that our declarations have not been hollow pretences. Besides, I hold the interference of federal officers with state politics to be improper in principle."

For the reform under this last paragraph, I refer you to Mr. Kendall's letters and tracts sent to various political meetings and dinners throughout the country, for a few years past, on the eve of state elections.

When Mr. Kendall entered upon the duties of his auditor's office, he caused to be published in the United States Telegraph, the then official organ, a letter, in which he says, "The interest of the country demands that this office shall be filled with men of business, and not with babbling politicians." Sir, the whole letter was the work of a babbling politician, expressly designed for political and demagogic ends, which the writer, in the same breath, said he had quit and left for others! I will read a few passages from it. "In five days I have returned to the post office twenty letters and three pamphlets, enclosed to the fourth auditor, and directed to other persons!" How long after this letter was it before Mr. Kendall, for the purpose of building up the Globe newspaper, and the fortune of his friend Francis P. Blair, (another eleventh-hour Jackson man, whom he had brought from his former residence at Frankfort, Kentucky,) sent under his frank to Kentucky, and perhaps elsewhere, the prospectus of this newspaper?

In that same letter Mr. Kendall also says:

"Upon entering this office, on Monday last, one of the first objects which struck my eye was a pile of newspapers on my table. Among them, I counted sixteen different papers, all of which I was told were subscribed for by the fourth auditor, and paid for out of the treasury."

He sent them back, as he then stated, with a note to each; of which the following is a copy:

Treasury Department,

Fourth Auditor's Office, March 24, 1839.

Sir: Not believing that I am authorized to charge the government with subscriptions to newspapers and other publications, which are not useful to me in the discharge of my official duties; and not perceiving that I can derive any assistance from your journal in settling the accounts of the United States navy, I have to request that you will discontinue sending it to this office. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

AMOS KENDALL.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is a fine display of the "pride, pomp, and circumstance" of office, if not of official insolence. But yesterday he was himself the editor and publisher of a newspaper; he next appears, in his own language, an "humble auditor." But, sir, does not the letter just read show that he had forgotten his humility, and become puffed up with official consequence?

Why did he not simply tell his brother editors, in brief and respectful language, that he had discontinued the subscription for their paper?

But a further thought is suggested by this letter of Mr. Amos Kendall, and his reason for discontinuing newspaper subscriptions. He is now, sir, postmaster general. Suppose we look at the statement of the contingent expenses of his office for the last year. Do you think we shall find any subscriptions for newspapers there "paid for out of the treasury?" Listen to a few items:

Southern Literary Messenger,	-	$10 00
New York Journal of Commerce,	-	10 00
Allegheny Democrat,	-	14 81
Pennsylvanian,	-	8 00
Indian Biography,	-	6 00
Metropolitan Magazine,	-	8 00
Three copies of the Daily Globe!!!	-	30 00
Richmond Enquirer,	-	5 00

Sundry others which I will not stop to name: the whole number being twenty or upwards, and the total of subscription within a small fraction of $200! He was frightened at a pile of 16 newspapers, but he can now take 20 at a dose! Can it be possible that a man, who came into office declaring, like the Pharisee of old, that "he was not like other men," and would even "tithe, mint, and cummin," begins already to "neglect the weightier matters of the law?" What becomes of his inflated promise "to prove" that his "declarations had not been hollow pretences?" Of what value was his declaration, made in his letter before referred to, and in which he says, "Vain I may be, proud I am, that the president has given me an opportunity to aid him in proving that reform is not an empty sound, and is not to apply merely to a change of men?" Why, sir, I quote as a reply to these questions his own words, in another passage of his own letter: "The world will know him at last, and assign him his true rank."

"Truth is omnipotent, and public justice certain." Among Mr. Kendall's reforms may be mentioned his leading agency in the removal of the public deposits from the Bank of the United States. To effect this, he carried on a system of "bidding and cooing" with the state banks, and, in the language of a certain senator, (Mr. Benton,) "debauched them." "Yes, sir, debauch is the word." I apply it to the government and banks, though the senator thought the people had been debauched, and applied it to them. For this work of "debauch," which proved so serious a curse to the country, this agent was employed thirty-two days, and was paid for this service the sum of $316 11, being about ten dollars a day for a job which has occasioned much of the embarrassment under which the country now labors. He got $10 a day for doing this injury to the public—a hard-working laborer finds it difficult to get his dollar a day. But still, Mr. Kendall belongs to the "democratic party," and whilst he received his $10 a day for that work, he also received the regular salary of his office. This appears to be an established usage of this administration. The case of the attorney-general is already mentioned. The reports from the departments show several other cases, though I will now only add that of the commissioner of Indian affairs, who was for a while acting secretary of war, and during this period drew the salaries of each office, being at the rate of $9,000 a year.

But, Mr. Speaker, no man better knows all the uses of office than Mr. Kendall. I have read a political tract, written, I think, by Denn Swift, entitled somewhat in this way: "The convenience of a place at court, or a sure mode of providing garments for a whole family." Mr. Kendall appears to understand the "modus operandi" of this matter. The printed list of clerks in his department exhibits his father-in-law and two nephews, with salaries of $1,000, $1,200, and $1,400; and thus we see a family provision of nearly $10,000 a year, including his own salary. But Mr. Kendall is not the only officer who thus takes care of his own household. If provision of this kind be evidence of "faith," few of them will be found "infidels." The president's son has an office, which I have already mentioned, of $1,500 a year. The secretary of state's son, until very lately, held the place of district attorney in Alabama. A near relation by marriage of the secretary of the treasury has a comfortable annuity of $1,400 in the navy department; another holds the appointment of naval officer in Boston, with a salary of $3,000 per year, besides being president of the Lafayette Bank of that city; and a third is the cashier of the Franklin Bank of that city, which became a special pet under the pet bank system. These gentlemen would all make excellent sub-treasurers!

Mr. Bond said, when the proposition for retrenchment was under consideration here in 1828, the friends of Mr. Adams, by way of proving that he and they desired ever just economy and reform, pointed to his message recommending it. How were they answered? Why, sir, Mr. Ingham, who soon afterwards was made secretary of the treasury, said it was indeed true that the message did recommend it, but he wanted to see more practice and less profession in this matter. There were no specified reforms found in the message; he could only find there one of those formal recommendations, which were as unmeaning, he said, as the words "your humble servant" at the foot of a letter. Mr. Randolph, in the same debate, used this language, on the subject of retrenchment and reform:

"The president did recommend them, in one of those lofty generalities with which all sermons, political or religious, abound; which might be printed in blank, like law process, and filled as occasions might require. But, sir, (said he,) I am for looking at the practices, and not at the precepts of the parson, political or religious."

Mr. Bond said this rule of Mr. Randolph was perfectly just; it was thus shown, too, to be avowed by this administration, and he was willing to judge them by their own rule, and thought to this they ought not to object. He would leave it to the house and to the people to say whether the "practices" of this administration "had conformed to their precepts."

Was the recommendation in general Jackson's inaugural address one of those "lofty generalities" just spoken of, and defined by Mr. Randolph? The "unit cabinet" must have lost the art of reading, or have "reform" was not quite so "legibly inscribed" as the general imagined. That patronage of the federal government which was said to be brought into conflict with the freedom of state elections has greatly increased, and is still unrestrained, in the same conflict.

The gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. Bell) has for years labored to bring this house to the consideration of a bill to secure the freedom of elections, and thus carry into effect the recommendation of general Jackson's inaugural address. Able as that gentleman is, and untiring as he has been in his efforts, the measure proposed by him has received the frowns instead of the favor of this administration. He and the venerable senator from the same state (Mr. White) were the early and devoted friends of general Jackson, and they still desire to carry into practical effect the principles which they, with general Jackson, professed to be governed by. They feel and know the imminent danger which threatens the country, in the increased strength of the patronage of office. They see, and we all see, that the office-holders are "abroad in the land." For a description of this growing phalanx and its powerful incentive to action, I will draw on high authority. A member of the senate, (Mr. Grundy,) a zealous friend of general Jackson, the evidence of which has been already given in his own words, held this language, when aiming to pull down the administration; "When I see (said he) an office-holder interfering in elections, it has occurred to me that he was thinking of his salary, and is, therefore, an unfit adviser of the people."

Mr. Speaker, that which occurred to Mr. Grundy no doubt of an occurred to you at the same period. The proposition is a very natural one, and I think that recent events have strengthened rather than impaired its truth. But I beg the further indulgence of the house while I read what another distinguished friend of general Jackson said, when debating the subject of retrenchment and reform on this floor. I allude to Mr. Buchanan, now a senator from Pennsylvania, and, with his continued and growing devotion to the party, what he said will certainly be considered "orthodox." I find, by that debate, that he said it was well known "That when a man is once appointed to office, all the selfish passions of his nature are enlisted for the purpose of retaining it. The office-holders (said he) are the enlisted soldiers of that administration by which they are sustained. Their comfortable existence can depend upon the re-election of their patron. Nor does disappointment long rankle in the hearts of the disappointed. Hope is still left to them; and bearing disappointment with patience they know will present a new claim to office at a future time."

This passage of Mr. Buchanan's speech proves him to have been an observer of men and things, and familiar with the leading principles of human action. He dreaded the consequences of the selfish spirit of the office-holder, and induced the country to believe that gen. Jackson and his friends would provide a suitable restraint upon it. But I fear, sir, the people will be left to conclude that this gentleman is one of those "political parsons" described by Mr. Randolph, whose "practices" do not correspond with his "precepts." It is certain under the favorite administration of the gentleman and his friends, the office-holders have received new life, instead of a check. But I must yet point out another discrepancy between Mr. Buchanan's profession and practice. In the same debate, he reviewed, with censure, several of the foreign missions, that to Russia included; and particularly condemned any practice allowing a minister to "return after one year's absence." His language is: "If such a practice should prevail, our ministers, in violation of the spirit of the existing law, will receive by adding the outfit to the salary, $13,000, instead of $9,000, for one year's service." "I am," said he, "against the practice." This, Mr. Speaker, was his precept. But, sir, in a brief space of time, after condemning and saying "I am against the practice," we see him take the bounty, and become one of the "enlisted soldiers" whom he had described, and go on a foreign mission to Russia, where, after staying "a twelve-month and a day," he pockets the "$18,000, instead of $9,000 for a year's service," and comes home!

This seems to be an appropriate time to compare the precept and practice of Mr. Randolph, too, who said he "was for looking at the practices, and not the precepts, of the parson, political or religious." In that same debate, Mr. Randolph said he "could not permit any motive connected with the division of the spoil, to mingle with" his exertions. He would not, he said, give up his constituents and the pleasure of his home, "for a clerkship in the war office, or a foreign mission; or even for a department of state." He said, "there had been an improvement in the plan of sending ministers abroad, and bringing them back, when they have finished their business; for," said he, "they are now sent abroad on eleventh-hour errands, that they may come back re-infected, to pocket their emoluments." Mr. Speaker, the Greeks and Romans both held it to be highly useful, but exceedingly difficult, matter to know one's self. Modern history and our own times, add new force to the truth of that position. I do not at all question the perfect sincerity of Mr. Randolph, when he uttered the sentiments; but great as he may have been, and said as he proceeded to be, and, no doubt, was, in the motives of human action, after events proved how little he knew of himself. Sir, we soon found Mr. Randolph giving up his constituents, and leaving all the boasted emendations of his district, for a foreign mission to Russia, where, so far as any public advantage resulted from it, he emphatically went on a "sleeveless errand," and "came back retincta, to pocket his emoluments." Indeed, this mission to Russia seems to have been specially dedicated by "the party" to short terms of six and twelve months, for the advantage of some of the "enlisted soldiers" described by Mr. Buchanan. In this way, the cost of that mission has been inordinately increased; and it is high time that this drain on the public treasury for private benefit should be checked.

Mr. Bond said it was not to be disguised that many of the politicians who engaged in the debate and strife of the times to which he had alluded, had been surprised, if not disappointed, by events which soon followed. A singular exchange of position has taken place between two of these gentlemen. When the retrenchment resolution was discussed, a friend of the then administration, Mr. Pearce, of Rhode Island, took ground, not in terms, but somewhat similar to that now avowed and professed by the dominant party, "that the spoils belong to the victors." Mr. Wickliffe, a Jackson reformer, denied and condemned such a right. He was appointed a member of the retrenchment and reform committee, and, after Gen. Jackson came into power, Mr. Wickliffe zealously endeavored to carry out the promised reform; but not finding the co-operation he had expected, he abjured "the party." About this time, it happened that the reformers avowed the doctrine "that the spoils belong to the victors," and Mr. Pearce enlisted under their banner.

Sir, has not the country been disappointed? Have not the people been deceived and allured by specious and vain promises? Has not the federal executive patronage been inordinately increased, and is it not still unrestrained? Is not the power over it abused and perverted? Do not the expenses of our general government far transcend in amount all our past history? Why are these things so, and why has not this "plague been stayed," Mr. Speaker, according to your plighted faith? I will tell you why, sir, but I prefer doing so in the language and illustration of one of your own friends, Mr. Buchanan, of the senate to whom I have before referred. In his speech here, to which I have already alluded, and when he was assailing the (then) administration, he thus exclaimed: "The very possession of power has a strong, a natural tendency to corrupt the heart. The lust of dominion grows with its possession; and the man who, in humble life, was pure, and innocent and just, has often been transformed, by the long possession of power, into a monster. In the sacred book, which contains lessons of wisdom for the politician as well as for the christian, we find a happy illustration of the corrupting influence of power upon the human heart. When Hazeel came to consult Elisha whether his master, the King of Syria, would recover from a dangerous illness, the prophet, looking through the vista of futurity, saw the crimes of which the messenger, who stood before him, would be guilty, and he wept. Hazeel asked, 'why weepeth my lord?' The prophet then recounted to him the murders and the cruelties of which he should be guilty towards the children of Israel. Hazeel, in the spirit of virtuous indignation, replied: 'Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing?' And Elisha answered, 'The Lord hath shown me that thou shalt be king over Syria.' This man afterwards became king by the murder of his master, and was guilty of enormities, the bare recital of which would make us shudder."

How true, and, alas! how applicable is this sacred illustration to those who invoked its use in elevating themselves to power!

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that some inspired Elisha had been present when you and Mr. Buchanan, with others, engaged in the debate which has been referred to, and, moved by the sympathetic tear of the prophet, you had asked, "Why weepeth my lord?" how would you have been astonished in being then told what the people of this country have since realized!

Imagine, sir, the inspired one looking through the vista of a few brief years and saying, You will be placed in power, but will greatly increase the amount of all public expenditures. You will use the offices and patronage of the country for private and not for public good. You will create offices for favorites. You will enlarge all executive power. You will deny the right to call for reasons on a removal from office, and in a few years will remove more than 1,500 persons from office for opinion's sake! You will derange and corrupt the post office department, which you now aim to be sound, and you will not reform any of your designated abuses in the other departments. You will appoint more members of congress to office in four years than has been done in all the past history of the government. Your bill for the abolition of the power and patronage over the press will sleep the sleep of death. You will retain "the press, the post office, the armed force, and the appointing power in the hands of the president, and will not suffer them to change position and take post on the side of the people." You now censure a small appropriation to purchase some additional furniture for the president's house, but you will furnish that house in luxurious style for Gen. Jackson, who will be succeeded by Mr. Van Buren; and he, not content with the second-hand furniture of his predecessor, will cast it off and make his entry into that edifice, with one appropriation of $7,300 for alterations of the house and superintendence of the grounds, and another appropriation of $20,000 for new furniture; and this, too, in one very year, when your public treasury will be bankrupt. You will increase the expenses of foreign missions and suffer your ministers to return home on such brief service as will show their appointments to have been made for individual gain rather than public good. You will increase the contingent expenses of this house from $30,000, the present annual amount, to $210,000. You will add to the like expenses of the senate and to all other public expenditures in the same ratio; and the sum total for the whole civil list and ordinary appropriations of the government, which is now $12,163,433 will be increased from time to time under your boasted reform, until it shall exceed thirty millions per year!

You now question the right of a department to purchase a print or likeness of the immortal Washington, but will decorate every room in all the departments with portraits of Martin Van Buren. You will, by means of the "office holders," the "enlisted soldiers," as you have just called them, bring the patronage of the general government into conflict with the freedom of elections, and you will resist the bill that shall be brought in to secure the freedom of those elections. You, Mr. Randolph, will go upon what you now call a "sleeveless errand," and, after saluting the emperor of Russia, will make a pleasant sojourn in "old England," and return to your estate in Virginia. You, Mr. Buchanan, will become "an office holder and enlisted soldier," go on the very mission to Russia which you are now censuring, and will pocket the $18,000 for "a twelve-month and a day's" service. You, (to the gentleman from New York,) Mr. Canby, will oppose a vote against the very measure which you now report and recommend, for reducing the pay of members, as a means of shortening the session of congress. You, Mr. Stevenson, will be made speaker of this house, and appoint its committees, and dispense its rules, with the promise of a foreign mission in your pocket. You, Mr. Benton, will vote to lay on the table the bill which you now report to take the patronage of the press from the government, and your report on executive patronage, with its six accompanying bills so imposingly introduced, will prove to have been but as "sounding brass and tinkling cymbals." You, Mr. Van Buren, who now, as a member of the committee on executive patronage, report a bill requiring reasons to be assigned for removing an incumbent from office, will be made secretary of state, and in due time president, but, from the moment you obtain power, you will forget your bill, and not only violate but refuse to be governed by its principles. You, Mr. Dickerson, also a member of that committee, will be made secretary of the navy; but the department will be so mismanaged under your direction, that it will be truly said of you on the floor of congress, "there is none so poor as to do him reverence." You, Mr. Woodbury, will take first the navy and then the treasury department, and, under your supervision, an attempt to humbug the people with the promise of an exclusive hard money currency will result in the banishment of all specie, a bankrupt treasury, and a circulation of shinplasters and treasury notes.

Imagine, then, Mr. Speaker such a response to have been made at the period of time which I have suggested. What would have been your reply, and what would Mr. Buchanan, who made the scriptural allusion, have said? Methinks I almost see and hear him exclaim, Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?

We are told that, notwithstanding the indignation of Hazeel he reached the throne of Syria by murdering the king his master, and soon committed all the enormities foretold by the prophet!

So, I fear that, in despite of the protestations of Amos Kendall, the promised "reform" was "an empty sound," "intended to apply merely to a change of men." But I leave it for this house to judge for the people of this country to judge whether their confidence has been portrayed and their hopes disappointed.

TWENTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION—SENATE.

June 29. Mr. Norvell, from the committee on commerce, reported a bill making appropriations for building light houses, making coast surveys, &c. Read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. Wright presented an analysis of the expenditures of the government, particularly for the years 1833-'37, and generally from the commencement of the government to the present time. Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed, with 2,000 extra copies.

Mr. Wright, from the committee on finance, reported a bill to make compensation to certain agents and attorneys under the treaties of indemnity with foreign nations. Read twice by consent, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

A number of petitions were now presented and referred, or otherwise disposed of.

The bills which were yesterday ordered to a third reading were to-day severally read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Bayard, the committee for the District of Columbia were discharged from the further consideration of a petition relating to Pennsylvania avenue.

The senate took up the joint resolution from the other house, instituting a joint committee of inquiry as to the expediency of so taking the next census as to collect information in detail in regard to the agriculture, commerce, and manufactures of the country.

After a few words in opposition to the resolution by Messrs. Sevier and Lenton, on motion of Mr. Sevier, the resolution was indefinitely postponed.

On motion of Mr. Preston, the bill explanatory of the acts providing for the payment of brevet officers was taken up, and made an order for to-morrow.

The senate resumed the consideration of the bill making provision for the further collection of the public revenue. The question being on Mr. Buchanan's substitute for the bill,

Mr. Webster addressed the senate at length, chiefly in an examination of the character and bearings of the substitute offered by Mr. Buchanan. Mr. Buchanan spoke in reply to Mr. Webster, and argued at large in favor of his substitute. Mr. Tallmadge spoke against the substitute, and in favor of the bill, presenting it especially in the aspect of a reinstatement of the state bank deposit system. Mr. Strange, after a few preliminary remarks, offered the following amendments to the substitute of Mr. Buchanan:

1. That the collectors and receivers of the public money should be allowed to make special deposits of bank notes in the banks during the sixty days, at the end of which they were to be converted into specie. Rejected as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Clay, of Ky., Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, McKean, Merrick, Nicholas, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Southard, Spence, Strange, Swift, Tallmadge, Webster, White—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Ala., Cuthbert, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King, Knight, Lumpkin, Lyon, Mouton, Niles, Norvell, Pierce, Roane, Robinson, Sevier, Smith, of Conn., Trotter, Wall, Williams, Wright, Young—26.

2. That the clause of the substitute allowing the public creditor the choice of specie or bank notes be stricken out. Rejected as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benton, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, of Ala., Hubbard, Lumpkin, Lyon, McKean, Niles, Norvell, Pierce, Prentiss, Roane, Smith, of Conn., Strange, Trotter, Wall, Webster, Wright, Young—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Buchanan, Clay, of Ky., Clayton, Cuthbert, Davis, Fulton, Grundy, King, Knight, Merrick, Mouton, Nicholas, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tallmadge, White, Williams—24.

3. That payments of the public creditors should be made by the officers of the government, and not by the banks. Rejected as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Alabama, Cuthbert, Fulton, Hubbard, King, Lumpkin, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Pierce, Roane, Smith, of Conn., Strange, Trotter, Wall, Webster, White—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Benton, Brown, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Grundy, Knight, Lyon, McKean, Merrick, Norvell, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, White, Williams, Young—29.

Mr. Strange also offered two other amendments, which he subsequently withdrew. Mr. Niles spoke decisively on the subject, in favor of the substitute, and of perseverance in the sub-treasury, and offered an amendment, which he afterwards withdrew on the suggestion of Mr. Buchanan, affording facilities for getting the money out of the banks.

The question now recurring on Mr. Buchanan's amendment, Mr. Rives spoke at length in opposition to the substitute. Mr. Buchanan spoke chiefly in reply to Mr. Rives.

The question being put on Mr. Buchanan's substitute, it was agreed to as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, of Alabama, Cuthbert, Fulton, Hubbard, King, Linn, Lumpkin, Lyon, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Pierce, Roane, Robinson, Sevier, Smith, of Connecticut, Strange, Trotter, Wall, Williams, Wright, Young—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, of Ky., Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Grundy, Knight, McKean, Merrick, Norvell, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, White—24.

So the substitute became the bill, and was, in its turn, rejected by the following vote, on the question of its engrossment:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buchanan, Clay, of Alabama, Cuthbert, Fulton, Hubbard, King, Lyon, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Pierce, Roane, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Trotter, Wall, Williams, Wright, Young—31.

YAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benton, Calhoun, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Grundy, Knight, Linn, Lumpkin, McKean, Merrick, Norvell, Pettis, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Smith, of Conn., Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, White—29.

Mr. Wright then gave notice that he should ask leave to-morrow to bring in a bill to modify the last clause of the fifth section of the deposit act of 1836; and then the senate adjourned.

June 30. Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, presented the petition of Origin Baeelder, understood to be in behalf of a Peace Society in New York, praying congress to interpose their good offices in the settlement of the present difficulties between Mexico and France, and recommending a proposal of mediation by the United States. Referred, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a petition from an individual, to supply a deficiency in his land. Referred.

Mr. Clayton presented the remonstrance of the Washington Navy Yard Bridge Company against the passage of a bill passed by the other house for a free bridge over the Eastern Branch. Referred.

Mr. Pierce and Mr. Williams reported various bills from committees referred to them.

Mr. Strange, on leave, introduced a bill granting to the widow of John A. Cameron (lost in the Pulaski) the amount of half a year's salary of her late husband as United States judge for Florida. Read twice, by consent, advocated by Mr. Strange, opposed by Mr. Clay, of Alabama, and rejected on the question of its third reading: Yeas, Mr. Strange and Mr. Preston; nays 82.

Mr. Clay, of Alabama, on leave, introduced a bill to remove the pension agency, in Alabama, from Decatur to Huntsville. Read twice, by consent, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. Wright asked leave, in pursuance of previous notice, to introduce a bill to modify the last clause of the fifth section of the deposit act of 1836, which prohibits the reception by the government of the notes of such banks as after the passage of that act, after July 4, 1836, issued notes of less denomination than five dollars.

Mr. Webster said: A main object of the bill which I introduced into the senate, and which was before us yesterday, was to do the very same thing which the honorable gentleman proposes by that which he now brings forward. I introduced my measure as being necessary, in my opinion, in order to carry into full effect the joint resolution by which we had abolished the specie circular. I desired, and still desire, to take off the disqualifications which now exist on many of the state banks, so that the people of the different states may all enjoy the same privileges and the same facilities. This was my object. If my bill proposed more than a majority of the senate were disposed to grant, it would have been very easy to amend it, and to make it conform to the judgment of that majority. It pleased the senate, however, by a majority of two votes, to overlay my bill, by adopting, as a substitute for it, a bill having entirely different objects in view; that is, the bill for a system of "special deposits," proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. My bill being thus put aside by that gentleman's proposed measure, that measure itself was immediately after rejected by a majority of eight votes. So here was the end of the special deposit system.

Sir, I do not complain of this mode of getting rid of my bill. It is true that gentlemen might have passed it as it was, if they had liked it, or they might have so amended it, till it had suited their opinions, and then passed it; but if they chose to put it aside without acting directly upon it, and to use the bill of the honorable member from Pennsylvania as an instrument for effecting that purpose, they had the power so to do, and nothing remains for me but acquiescence.

The responsibility is theirs. In truth, sir, it is probable enough that the pride of authorship was a little touched. It may be natural, perhaps, that some jealousy should have been felt towards my bill from the quarter in which it originated; and although I think this rather a small sort of jealousy, yet, if its indulgence has given gentlemen any gratification, I do not grudge it to them. They are in a condition not to lose any relish or taste of power which they can conveniently possess. They can not afford to be over-generous. But for my part, sir, I have no jealousy of that kind to gratify. If the gentleman's bill, which he now proposes to introduce, shall be such as shall give substantial and just relief, and fulfil the expectations of the country, I shall support it as cheerfully, certainly, as I should have supported my own bill. If I find it deficient, I shall endeavor to amend it; and if, in these efforts to amend, I should fail, as I probably may, I shall, at least, have shown what measure I think ought to be adopted; and the difference between me and others, in this respect, will constitute one item in that account, which we have all to settle with our constituents. Notwithstanding this rejection of a measure, which I thought essential to the public convenience, yet, Mr. President, in looking back upon the past, I am not dissatisfied with what we have been able to accomplish. Our duty has been to arrest the current of new and dangerous projects affecting the commerce, business, and currency of the country; and that duty we have performed.

When congress assembled last September, we were in a decided minority in both branches of the legislature. It was a new congress, and a new administration; and it was an administration which had come into power under the propitious auspices of all the favor which could be bestowed upon it, in advance, by that which had preceded it.

Under these circumstances, we received the communication of the ever-memorable message of 9th September—a message which proposed the most important changes in our whole financial and commercial administration, and important changes, too, as I think, in our constitutional duties and relations. We opposed these doctrines, sir, and all the measures founded on them; and some degree of success has attended our efforts. The sub-treasury scheme, in all forms, has been defeated. It has been defeated without the specie clauses in it; it has been defeated with the specie clauses in it; and, finally, we have defeated it, when it came forth, for the last time, wrapped up in the new disguise of a special deposit system. Gentlemen on the other side, while they have acknowledged themselves defeated, have said, nevertheless, that they have fought manfully, fearlessly, and perseveringly. That, sir, is true. They have showed zeal and ability worthy the best cause. But honor to whom honor is due. It is not to efforts made here against the proposed measures of the administration, so much as it is to the decided manifestation and vigorous action of public sentiment in the country that the failure of these measures has been owing. It is mainly the people's own work. The argument has been at the polls. The convincing reasons have been found in the ballot-boxes. The gentleman tells us, however, that the contest is yet to go on; that the great battle is not yet fought. Sir, I am aware of this. I know full well that gentlemen feel that they have staked themselves finally upon these measures; that there is no retreat; and that all which men can do will be done to bring the people to approve this sub-treasury system. I wish the country to understand this fully. I wish it to be convinced of what I said upon the first hearing of the president's message in September, and have said often since, that an entirely new system of politics, so far as concerns commerce and currency, was proposed to us by that message, and that its adoption or rejection was a matter which the people themselves would be called on to consider and decide. I never supposed any thing of less authority, than the popular voice itself could settle this question between us.

But we have done something more, sir, in the course of the session, than to defeat the sub-treasury scheme in all its various shapes. We have abolished the treasury circular of July, 1836; and although we have not as yet been able to derive all the benefit intended from that measure, yet the circular itself—an act of executive power, and, in my opinion, a very improper, injurious, and dangerous act of executive power—has been rescinded, and a prohibition enacted against all such acts in future. And finally, sir, we have done one other good thing, one other excellent thing, a thing for which the whole country will devoutly thank congress. We have adopted one measure which all the people, from Maine to Georgia, and from Georgia to New Orleans, and from New Orleans to the uppermost regions of the Missouri and the Mississippi, will regard as a measure full of mercy and good fruits; that is to say, we have agreed to adjourn. We have agreed to try no more experiments at this time, to bring forward no new projects, to exhibit no more financial contrivances or inventions, but to go home and refer to the people the final decision upon what has been proposed, and what has been resisted. This is exactly what we should do.

Sir, the people have become afraid of congress. They have been under constant alarm from the disposition manifested here for violent change and rash innovations. It is as true, sir, as that you sit in that chair, that thousands of honest men have not been able to sleep at nights, from the fear that they should hear, in the morning, that something had been done in congress, or something proposed, which should make that which is already bad enough still worse. Our constituents, sir, depend upon it, will be heartily glad to see us. When we disperse and turn our faces towards our respective homes, the people will clap their hands and shout aloud for joy.

In the mean time, sir, if the gentleman's bill shall be such as I think it ought to be, I shall cordially support it; and, indeed, if it be partial and narrow and crippled, as a measure of relief, I shall yet vote for it, if I can get nothing better.

Mr. Wright spoke in reply to Mr. Webster, and in support of the bill he proposed to introduce, &c.

Mr. Webster said: The honorable member, sir, admits that I am right, in saying that the people have become afraid of congress. But he says this fear commenced when the influence of a great money power began to be felt here. Here, sir, is the old cry. All the evils of the country are ascribed to a money power influencing congress. Pray, sir, let us look into this a little. Who are they that this pernicious money power has so much influenced? Are they the gentleman himself and his own friends? He will not admit that. They, as he will contend, are the opponents of this pernicious money power. And yet, sir, he and his friends are, and for a long time have been, in the majority, in both houses of congress. And as the public fear has been, and only could be, from what the majority might do, how does he make it out that this fear was but an apprehension of the disastrous influence of a money power? No, sir. The honorable member is right as to the time in which this fear arose, but he is wrong as to its cause. This fear and apprehension of what the government would do, in regard to the great interests of currency and commerce, began with the removal of the public deposits from their lawful custody. They had their cause and origin in that act; and nearly every thing that has since occurred has but served to keep them alive. And fear and alarm broke out afresh, and reached a new height, when the people saw the message of September, and the measures which were proposed, in pursuance of its recommendations. Schemes, ruthless experiments, and abandonment of all the well tried policy of the government—these are the reasons which have created, and most justly created, deep alarm among the people; and, as they know not when or where these projects are to stop, it will be a relief to them to hear that we have adjourned. As to this cry, now renewed, of a money power influencing congress, I trust the day has gone by for spreading delusion by that means. The people, I think, understand its object.

Sir, as to the matter of authorship, all I need say is, that on the whole subject of rescinding the treasury order, the majority of the committee differed from the majority of the senate. When the subject was before us as an amendment to the sub-treasury bill, a majority of the committee voted against the rescinding order. Yet the action passed. Again, when the subject came up as a distinct measure, the same majority voted against it. Yet it passed, and passed both houses. I brought forward the bill, therefore, as necessary, in my opinion, to complete an object which both houses were in favor of, but which a majority of the committee were not in favor of. If I had waited for them, I should have waited in vain. But, sir, all this is of little importance. It is of no moment where the measure originates. The question is, what is the measure? I hope the honorable member will have leave to bring in his bill. I hope no member of the senate will interpose his objection to its being read a second time to-day. I hope we shall immediately act upon it, and do at once what we are to do on this subject. Since we all agree that the decision of all the great questions which have divided us must now be left to the people, I hope we shall pass a proper measure to complete the object of the joint resolution; and before we have occasion to act again upon any part of the subject, the country will have had an opportunity of manifesting its opinions, and signifying its own wishes.

Leave was then granted, the bill was introduced, read twice by consent, and brought under consideration, as in committee of the whole.

Mr. Webster, after some further remarks, offered an amendment, adding a second section, repealing, for the same period, so much more of the deposit act of 1836, as prohibits those banks from being selected as depositories of the public money, which, after July 4, 1836, issued notes of less denomination than five dollars.

Mr. Strange spoke in opposition to the bill and amendment, and urged that the friends of the administration should not retreat one step further before the favorite measures of the opposition.

After some further remarks from Mr. Wright and Mr. Webster, Mr. Tallmadge and Mr. Rives spoke at length in favor of the amendment.

Mr. Adams (from an objection of Mr. Wright to the deposit act of 1836) suggested an intention to move an amendment to Mr. Webster's amendment, to repeal so much of that deposit act as requires two per cent. interest from the banks on the public money respectively in their possession.

Mr. Wright, then moved to amend the amendment by striking out Mr. Webster's proposition, and inserting a repeal of the twelve first sections of the deposit act, including all the act except what merely relates to the state deposits.

Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, spoke with great earnestness in opposition to this motion, as in effect a repeal of all law on the subject, and an abandonment of the public revenue to the discretion of the executive.

Mr. Niles spoke at length in favor of a repeal of the deposit act, and held an amusing conversation with Mr. Clay on politico personal topics. Mr. Benton said a few words in favor of the proposed repeal.

Messrs. Sevier, Orillenden, Tallmadge, and Rives, spoke at much length and with great earnestness against the repeal.

Messrs. Wright, Rives, and Tallmadge, held a conversation of some length, principally on political topics.

After some further remarks by Messrs. Clay, of Kentucky, Young, Webster and Strange, the question was put on Mr. Wright's amendment, and it was carried in the affirmative by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clay of Alabama, Cuthbert, Fulton, Hubbard, King, Linn, Lumpkin, Lyon, Moulton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Pierce, Roane, Robinson, Smith, of Connecticut, Strange, Trotter, Wall, Williams, Wright, Young—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Knight, McKean, Merrick, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tallmadge, Webster, White—21.

So the bill was modified so as to repeal the whole of the deposit act of 1836, except as above stated.

In this form the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading without a division, and The senate adjourned.

July 2. The Vice President having on Saturday, given notice to the senate that he should not again take the chair during the present session, (a report of which was then accidentally omitted,) the senate, at the usual hour, was called to order by the secretary, and notified of the necessity of choosing a president pro tem. in place of the vice president.

The senate accordingly proceeded to ballot for a president pro tem., when it appeared that 37 votes had been cast; of which Mr. King received 30, Mr. White 3, and 4 were scattering.

Mr. King was then declared duly elected president pro tem. of the senate; was led to the chair by Mr. Knight, and briefly expressed to the senate his thanks for this additional mark of their respect and confidence, and declared his intention to perform the duties of the appointment to the best of his ability, in especially in endeavoring to prevent unpleasant personal collisions.

Mr. Culhoun presented a petition from citizens of Charleston, praying security, by law, against the explosion of steam-boilers. Referred.

On motion of Mr. Hubbard, and Mr. Smith of Connecticut, committees were discharged from the further consideration of certain private petitions.

Mr. Clay, Mr. Williams and Mr. Pierce, reported various private bills from committees referred to them.

Mr. Webster, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill making further provision for the discharge of debtors in certain cases.

Mr. W. briefly explained the object of the bill to be, to allow steam vessels, from Europe, bringing a supply of coal for their return voyage to withdraw that coal free of duty. Mr. W. urged, in favor of the bill, that a sufficient trial had not yet been made of American coal, for the purpose in question, and that, at all events the general purpose of imposing duties was to lay a tax on foreign articles consumed in this country.

Mr. Niles and Mr. Buchanan objected to the bill as interfering with the sale of American coal, and as coming up too late in the session on a question which was supposed to be already settled.

On motion of Mr. Webster, (on the suggestion of Mr. Wright, who expressed some doubt on the subject,) the bill was laid on the table till to-morrow.

Several bills from the house were read twice and referred.

The bill to modify the last clause of the fifth section of the deposit act of 1836, (so as to suspend, or rather to destroy, wholly the force of the prohibition on the reception of the notes of banks issuing notes of less than five dollars till the first of October next, when it is to revive and continue in operation, &c.) and to repeal, finally, the remaining provisions of the first twelve sections of that act, including all that relates to banks and bank notes, was read a third time; and the question being announced by the chair; shall this bill pass?

Mr. Webster said there is no time to discuss this measure further—at least I do not feel called upon to pursue the discussion further—but I will ask the indulgence of the senate for a few moments while I explain what the state of things will be, according to my understanding, if this bill shall become a law.

First, then, after the first day of October next, no bank bill, great or small, can be received at the post office, or the land office, or the custom house, if the bank which issued it issues bills less than five dollars.

This will necessarily exclude the paper of nearly all the banks in the northern and eastern states, and several others. All this has been already repeatedly shown.

In the second place, no bill of any bank can be received at the post office, the land office, or the custom-house, which bill is of a less denomination than twenty dollars. This is prescribed by the last treasury circular. Now, sir, what is the plain consequence of this? How are postages, or small postage accounts, to be paid in twenty dollar bills? How are postmasters to pay back the change? If the deputy post officers in the country obey this circular, it will be the occasion of perpetual embarrassment to the selves and to the public.

I have supposed, also, that this would be found very inconvenient in the operations at the land offices. If I have been rightly informed, it is not, in some of the new states, always easy to obtain bills of a denomination of twenty dollars, or upwards. And I have supposed, especially, that the poor people who purchase forty-acre tracts would be put to considerable inconvenience. In the bill, which I introduced into the senate, a section was contained remedying this inconvenience, and allowing smaller bills, if they were the bills of specie-paying banks, to be received. This provision, however, was rejected, together with all others which the bill contained. Having spoken, sir, the other day of my bill's having been overlaid by that of the honorable member from Pennsylvania, or of his being used as an instrument to displace mine, I wish to say that I meant no complaint at all against the manner in which that gentleman brought forward his measure. His course was entirely fair, as he intended to support, and did support, the system which he proposed, throughout. His object, certainly, was to pass his own bill, not to displace mine; yet, my bill being displaced, there was a majority against his.

In the third place, sir, it is evident that the repeal of the deposit act leaves the public moneys in the entire control of the treasury department and the president, in the same manner as this control existed in their hands after the removal of the deposits; and before congress provided any regulation on the subject. By the act of 1793, so much relied on, the treasurer is to receive and keep the moneys of the United States, but the secretary of the treasury is to superintend the collection of revenue; and it was the well-known doctrine and practice of the last administration that all these officers, in the discharge of their duties, are under the immediate direction of the president, and are but his agents and instruments. So that the public moneys are now to be received, kept, and disbursed, as the president may see fit to order.

In the last place, sir, it is quite obvious that the secretary of the treasury, under direction of the president, may, if this bill shall pass, use any state banks he chooses, whether they be specie-paying banks or not; whether they issue small notes or not, or whatever may be their character or condition. He will not be obliged to use banks; but he may use them, and may select them, at his pleasure. We repeal all limitations, we dispense with all securities, and leave the whole matter to the department and to the president. I believe, sir, that the collectors now deposit the public moneys in banks, and have no doubt they will continue to do so. If they shall be called on to pay money to the treasurer, the treasurer will keep that money also in the banks, or some of them. What else can he do with it? While we thus repeal all legal connexion with the banks, guarded as that connexion has been, by many provisions for the security of the public money, we are likely to see a connexion renewed, without legal sanction or authority, with no provisions, whatever, for security, and to be extended just as far as the executive government may choose. This is the point, then, to which we have now arrived, in the process of separating the concerns of the government from the concerns of the banks, and keeping the money of the people out of the hands of corporations and individuals.

Mr. Preston followed and spoke at length in opposition to the bill, as a legislative surrender of all power over the public money into the hands of the executive, and a legal confirmation of that assumption of power made by president Jackson in 1834, and which he then declared was made for an extraordinary and temporary purpose, and which he afterwards urged congress to withdraw from him, and to regulate the subject by law.

A conversation by Messrs. Preston and Strange followed, chiefly on party political topics.

Mr. Smith, of Indiana, said, had this question been under consideration at an earlier period of the session, he would have felt justified in detaining the senate while he gave his views upon it. He was aware, however, that at this period of the session he could render his state and the country greater service by remaining silent, and saving the time he might occupy in discussion, to be employed in useful action, than by any thing he could say on this subject at this period of the session. It was action, and not speeches, that was called for. The session was in the last week, and much important business remained to be transacted, in which his state and the other states of the union were deeply interested; and however much it would have gratified his feelings to have shown the odiousness of a proposition to unite, without control, the purse and the sword in the hands of the executive, he would forego that pleasure, and content himself with asking that the question on the passage of the bill should be taken by yeas and nays, as he desired to have his name recorded against it at every step. The yeas and nays were accordingly ordered.

Mr. Benton argued that all the banks had wholly and forever incapacitated themselves from being used as depositories of the public money under the deposit act of 1836, whether that act should be repealed or not.

Mr. Tallmadge expressed his surprise that Mr. Benton, who, with the rest of the majority of the committee on finance, had very lately reported that all banks which had not issued notes of less than five dollars would, on resumption, be qualified to be selected by the secretary of the treasury as depositories of the public money—that Mr. B. should now declare that no banks whatever would be so qualified. Mr. T. said he could not comprehend the consistency of the two positions.

Mr. Culhoun briefly assigned his reasons why he should reluctantly vote against the bill, the chief of which was understood to be the surrender of power over the public money to the discretion of the executive.

The bill was then passed by the following vote: YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, of Alabama, Cuthbert, Fulton, Grandy, Hubbard, King, Linn, Lumpkin, Lyon, Moulton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Pierce, Roane, Robinson, Smith, of Connecticut, Strange, Trotter, Wall, Williams, Wright, Young—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Knight, McKean, Merrick, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, White—22.

The bill to provide for the payment of certain agents and attorneys under the late treaties of indemnity with foreign nations.

And the bill to remove the pension agency in Alabama from Decatur to Huntsville, were also severally read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Norvell, the vote of the senate rejecting the bill to purchase the right to use the medical steam apparatus of Dr. Boyd Reilly was reconsidered, and the bill was laid on the table.

The senate bill to increase the army of the United States was received from the house with various amendments, and taken up by the senate.

Mr. Benton moved to disagree to the amendments, (which had not been read,) and asked the house for a committee of conference. Mr. White and Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, objected, that it was not yet known what the amendments were; that some of them might be good, if others were not so, and that, in any case, it was unparliamentary to disagree to amendments without knowing what they were. On motion of Mr. Hubbard, the bill and the amendments were referred, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Clayton, and at the request of the delegate from Florida, the bill making an appropriation for a compilation of the laws of Florida was taken up, (yeas 18, nays not counted,) and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. Norvell, the bill making appropriations for light-houses, beacons, buoys, coast surveys, &c. for 1833, was taken up, (yeas 23, nays 14.)

A variety of amendments were offered by Mr. Davis, from the committee on commerce, and agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. Wall, the bill to establish a new judicial district in Florida was taken up, briefly explained and advocated by Mr. W., opposed by Mr. Sevier, and, on motion of Mr. S., indefinitely postponed: Yeas 19, nays 16.

On motion of Mr. Lyon, the senate took up the bill to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands for Michigan.

The amendment formerly offered by Mr. Clay, of Alabama, was agreed to, requiring the secretary of the treasury to complete the surveys in the respective land districts with all reasonable despatch, and the surveyors general then to deliver over the field notes, maps, records, &c. in their respective offices, to the secretaries of the respective states where the land is situated, and requiring that the respective land offices should thereafter be discontinued.

Mr. Tipton moved to amend the bill by striking out all except Mr. Clay's amendment, and inserting a simple provision for removing the surveyor general's office at Cincinnati, to St. Joseph's, in Michigan.

This amendment was advocated by Messrs. Tipton and Smith, of Indiana, and opposed by Messrs. Clay, of Alabama, Norvell, and Lyon, and adopted by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, of Ky., Clayton Crittenden, Davis, Knight, Lumpkin, Merrick, Niles, Prentiss, Rives, Roane, Ruggles, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Strang, Swift, Tipton, White, Williams—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Clay, of Ala., Fulton, Hubbard, King, Lyon, Moulton, Nicholas, Norvell, Pierce, Robinson, Wall, Wright, Young—16.

In this form the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill to provide for the defence of the western frontier, (amended by striking out the second section.)

And the bill to continue in force the act providing indemnity for the loss of horses and other property in the military service of the United States, were also severally considered and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The senate then adjourned.

July 3. Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, presented a petition from Daniel Luge, stating that he had made a discovery by which explosions in steamboats might be prevented, and asking congress to pass a law by which his invention might be tested, and to make him proper compensation if his invention should succeed. Referred to the committee on patents.

Mr. Preston presented the petition of the marine corps, praying additional compensation. Referred.

Messrs. Roane, Williams and Wall, reported various private bills from committees referred to them.

Mr. Tallmadge, from the committee on naval affairs, made a special report on the memorial of Henry Hall Sherwood, in relation to his discoveries in magnetism, and the application of those discoveries to the determination of latitude and longitude. Mr. T. moved that the report be laid on the table and printed. Mr. Preston said the discoveries were of so great importance to science and navigation, that he would be very glad of a large number of extra copies. He moved, therefore, the printing of 5,000 extra copies. Mr. Hubbard demanded the yeas and nays on this motion, but subsequently withdrew the call. Mr. Preston said, if the discovery was such as it had been represented, it was a vast discovery; it was no less than the rediscovery of the mariner's compass; and he would be happy of the opportunity of diffusing it widely, especially in his own part of the country. Mr. Webster hoped a considerable number would be printed, and that it would be widely diffused. It was either of very great public importance, or of no importance at all. Perhaps congress had little more power respecting it than to make it public; but, in doing this extensively, it would give an opportunity for scientific men to examine it, and to determine fully on its merit. He hoped the number proposed would be printed. Mr. Buchanan asked whether the principle on which the discovery was founded would be developed in the report. Mr. Tallmadge replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Buchanan said he would then vote for the printing of the proposed number. If it was genuine, it was undoubtedly the greatest discovery of modern times; and, if it were not, and if the principle were developed in the report, diffusing it widely would enable the scientific world to discover its want of foundation.

After a few explanatory remarks by Mr. Tallmadge and Mr. Southard, the report was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed, with 5,000 extra copies.

On motion of Mr. Merrick, the committee for the District of Columbia were discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the citizens of Georgetown, asking their recession from the United States to Maryland.

The senate took up the resolution offered some time ago, by Mr. Southard, calling on the secretary of the navy for information in detail in regard to the vessels, officers, scientific corps, and past expenses of the exploring expedition. Mr. Southard explained at considerable length the various objects embraced by this resolution. Mr. Wright replied, and moved to lay the resolution on the table. Mr. Southard. I hope the senator will withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. Wright. No.

Mr. Southard. Will not the gentleman allow me to reply to his remarks in regard to lieutenant Hudson, after the remarks he has made?

Mr. Wright. No.

The resolution was laid on the table: Yeas 22, noes not counted.

The senate concurred in the amendment of the house to the bill granting a tract of land to Cherokee county, Alabama, for a seat of justice.

The amendment of the house to the bill to confirm certain entries of lands by registers and receivers, under the erroneous belief that they had been proclaimed for sale, and the bill itself, were referred to the committee on the public lands.

On motion of Mr. Trotter, the senate took up the bill (introduced by Mr. Walker) to authorize the state of Mississippi to invest the two per cent. fund granted to that state for the construction of roads in public lands (at fifty cents per acre) that had been offered for sale. Mr. Webster moved to strike out "fifty cents," and insert "the minimum price," but subsequently modified it to a motion to strike out the mode of investment.

The bill, in its existing form, was explained and advocated at much length by Mr. Trotter and Mr. Clay, of Alabama, and opposed by Mr. Webster, Mr. Bayard, and Mr. White.

Mr. Clay, of Alabama, moved to strike out the whole bill, and insert a substitute, authorising the state of Mississippi to use the two per cent. fund in the construction of roads, railroads, and canals, within her boundaries.

This amendment was agreed to, and the bill, in this form, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. Smith, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote rejecting the bill for the establishment of an additional judicial district in Florida, and the motion was temporarily laid on the table.

The bill for the benefit of the Mount Carmel and New Albany railroad company was read a third time and passed.

The bill to authorize a subscription for stock, on the part of the United States, in the Jeffersonville and New Albany railroad company, was considered; and, on motion of Mr. Wright, finally laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. Merrick, the senate took up the bill for the relief of William and James Crooks, to make indemnity for the property of a foreigner unlawfully seized by an officer of this government.

This bill was advocated at length by Messrs. Merrick, Clayton, Linn, and Bayard, opposed by Messrs. Hubbard, White, and Niles, and rejected on the question of its engrossment by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Knight, Linn, Merrick, Nicholas, Norvell, Rives, Smith, of Indiana, Tallmadge, Young—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, of Alabama, Fulton, Hubbard, King, Lumpkin, McKean, Moulton, Niles, Pierce, Roane, Robinson, Strang, Tipton, Wall, White, Williams, Wright—21.

The bill directing the investment of certain funds belonging to Indian tribes in state stocks, &c., was taken up explained, and advocated by Mr. White, opposed by Mr. Wright; and, on motion of Mr. Wright, temporarily laid on the table.

The bill for the relief of William Jones was amended and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill for the relief of William Fuller was rejected.

The senate then adjourned.

July 4. After the transaction of some business, which will be noticed in our next, the senate, on motion of Mr. Wright, proceeded to consider the amendment of the house to the bill to modify the last clause of the 5th section of the deposit act of the 23d of June, 1836; after debate, the yeas and nays were taken and the amendment agreed to: Yeas 29, noes 17.

Some time was spent on private bills, and some other business of minor importance; after which Mr. Buchanan, from the committee on foreign affairs, presented a report on the northeastern boundary, concluding with resolutions recommending that the "bill to provide for surveying the northeastern boundary line of the United States, according to the treaty of seventeen hundred and eighty-three, be laid on the table." The resolutions were adopted nem. con., and twenty thousand additional copies of the report ordered to be printed. The senate then adjourned.

July 5. Some time was spent in considering the amendments of the house to the bill to provide for the better security of the lives and property of persons on board of vessels propelled wholly, or in part, by steam. After a brief discussion, Mr. Webster moved to strike out the last amendment of the house, proposing to inflict a fine of five thousand dollars on owners for any loss of life or lives by the explosion of a boiler, and insert a provision making an explosion, or other disaster, full prima facie evidence of negligence, sufficient for conviction, in all prosecutions at law, unless disproved; which was agreed to. The other amendments of the house were also agreed to; and, as thus amended, the bill was sent back to the house.

Several private bills were read a third time and passed, (which will be noticed in our next;) when, the senate, after an executive session, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, June 29. Mr. Johnson, of Va., obtained leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee on the judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill to continue in force all laws which will expire at the close of the present session until the close of the first session of next congress, and that the committee give the title of said laws which will so expire.

Mr. Briggs hoped that the particular laws thus to be continued in force would be named.

Mr. R. Garland suggested that the resolution be so modified as to refer the inquiry to the committee of revision and unfinished business, instead of to the judiciary.

Thus amended, the resolve was agreed to.

Mr. Naylor had leave to introduce a bill from the committee on manufactures, imposing a duty on starch. Read twice, and referred.

Mr. Bouldin, asked and had leave (Mr. Adams yielding the floor) to move that certain bills, requiring mere formal action, be taken up and acted on, viz:

1. Senate bill extending the charter of the bank of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia. Read third time and passed.

2. House bill (as amended in committee) for the relief of the widow and heirs of the late Lewis Grant Davidson, deceased. Read third time and passed.

3. House bill (as amended) for the erection of a court house in Alexandria. Read third time and passed.

4. House bill (as amended) making appropriations for the support of the penitentiary in the District of Columbia. Read third time and passed.

5. House bill (as amended) providing for the erection of a free bridge across the Eastern Branch at Washington. Read third time and passed.

Some other District bills were proposed, but, giving rise to discussion, were postponed for the present.

Mr. Worthington, from the committee on commerce, reported a bill establishing certain collection districts, and creating ports of entry therein.

Mr. Robertson asked that the house would at this time take up and consider a resolution offered by him on a former day concerning the public lands.

Objected to by Mr. Adams and withdrawn.

Mr. Adams proceeded with his remarks upon this topic, and occupied the remainder of the morning hour.

Mr. Shields moved to suspend the rules, so as to enable him to move to assign, for to-morrow at half past 4 o'clock, as the special order, the bill granting power to Tennessee to issue patents to unsettled lands in certain cases. The motion prevailed and the assignment was made.

Mr. Cambreleng said a few words in favor of appropriating this (private business) day to the consideration of the army bill, reported from the committee of the whole.

Mr. Whittlesey hoped that, immediately after the disposal of the army bill, the house would take up and consider all private (senate) bills now on the speaker's table.

Mr. Segeant asked leave to offer the following resolution, which was adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be requested to collect, and report to congress on the first day of the next session, all the information that can be obtained as to the use of steam engines in the United States, and the accidents and the loss of life or property which have attended their use, and especially that he ascertain and report:

1. The whole number of steam engines in the United States, where and by whom constructed, where they are used, how long they have been used, their capacity or power respectively, and the purposes or uses to which applied, and whether high or low pressure.

2. The explosions or other disasters which have happened to such engines, when and where, with as many of the circumstances attending the same as can be collected.

3. The causes, as far as can be ascertained, of such explosions or other disasters.

4. The loss of life or property, or injury to persons or property, which has ensued in each case, distinguishing the mode of injury, by burning, scalding, wounding, drowning, or otherwise.

5. The disasters to steamboats, when, where, and how they have occurred, by explosion, collision, fire, or otherwise; the size, capacity, or burden of the boats, their ages, and where and by whom built.

6. How such steamboats were manned, and whether intoxicating liquor was served on board, or permitted to be used by, the hands or persons employed on board the same.

7. The names of the owners and masters or commanders of the boats to which such disasters have happened, and of the officers and crews thereof.

8. In the case of boats to which no disasters have happened, the burden and size of the same, when, where, and by whom built, and the names of their owners and masters or commanders and engineers.

9. Any such other information as may seem to him material.

Mr. Toland moved to suspend the rules to enable him to move to take up and consider the joint resolution, ordered by him yesterday, and laid over, under the rule, till this day. Ayes 93, noes 26; no quorum. The Speaker. Evidently a large quorum present, and yet no quorum votes.

Mr. Toland. Let the resolution be read again; if understood, it cannot fail to be adopted.

The resolution was again read; and the house again divided, on the question of suspending the rules. Ayes 129, noes gave it up. The resolution was then adopted as follows:

"That, after six days from the commencement of a second or subsequent session (except the final session) of any congress, all bills and joint resolutions which shall have passed in one house, and which remain undetermined in the other, shall be resumed and acted on as if an adjournment had not taken place."

[Mr. Cushing afterwards moved to reconsider this vote; which motion was entered.]

A message from the senate was taken up, proposing a conference with the house upon the subject of certain proposed amendments of the latter, in which the senate non-concurred, in bill making appropriations for certain roads in Wisconsin; and three members ordered to be appointed managers of such conference on the part of the house.

Mr. Biddle wished to ask a question of the chairman of the committee on foreign relations, as to the present posture of our relations with Mexico. An individual, Mr. John Baldwin, having one of the largest and most flagrant claims upon that government, was a native of his district, and, after a residence of twenty years in Mexico, had been stripped of every thing, and had returned home in a state of destitution. The enormity of his case was established by authentic documents, as well as by the letters of Mr. Ellis. It would be recollected that the president, in accepting the overture as to an arbitration, had stated that the action of congress was not to be thereby suspended. Yet, practically, such seemed to be its effect. Mr. B. found no fault with this; but it was obvious that whilst matters remained in such a position, any quickening impulse to the negotiation must come from this house. He had understood that the time had more than passed within which a final and definite reply ought to have been received from Mexico. Under such circumstances, the claimants could not but feel the deepest uneasiness at the approaching rise of congress. Mr. B. wished to learn on what grounds the committee now forbore to act; more especially as the language of the president led the Mexican authorities to look with an anxiety to nothing but a movement by congress. After the adjournment, the arbitration might be snatched by Mexico to fall through without any just complaint, on our part, of evasion or trifling, inasmuch as the president had expressly and anxiously reserved the right to go on as if no overture had been made.

Mr. Howard asked whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania put this question as a matter of right or courtesy? Mr. Biddle. The latter, of course. Mr. Howard said it would give him great pleasure to reply. All the information he had on this subject was, that when the proposal was accepted, the Mexican minister had it not in his power to execute it. He had not been here during the whole winter, and probably has it not yet in his power to execute it. Whether this delay is a proof of serious intention of going forward in good faith, or only in baffling the action of this house, Mr. H. could not say. His own opinion of the matter was, that the Mexican government never would do justice to this country, and that its recent and present movements were only expedients to gain time. Whether this were true or not a few days would show.

The house then took up and considered the army bill as reported from the committee of the whole, with various amendments.

The amendments offered in committee were taken up, and considered, the debate thereon taking the same general range as in committee of the whole, and as heretofore reported.

The amendment first in order was the proposition reported by the committee, to insert, at the end of the first section, the following:

"That there shall be added to each of the four regiments of artillery, one company, to be organized in the same manner as authorized by existing laws, with the exceptions hereafter mentioned: that there be added to every company of artillery sixteen privates, and to every company of infantry one sergeant and thirty-eight privates, and that the number of second lieutenants of a company of artillery be reduced to one, and that this reduction be so made, in connexion with the appointment of officers to the four additional companies authorized as aforesaid, and the transfer to the ordnance department hereafter directed, that all the present second lieutenants shall be retained in service; and there shall be raised and organized, under the direction of the president of the United States, one regiment of infantry, to be composed of the same number and rank of officers, non commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, composing the regiments of infantry now in the service of the United States, who shall receive the same pay and allowances, and be subject to the same rules and regulations which now apply to other regiments of infantry, as provided for in this act."

Mr. Harrison moved to amend this amendment by striking out "infantry," and inserting "rifle-men," so as to make the proposed new regiment a rifle regiment. The motion was lost. Mr. Briggs moved to amend this amendment by striking out that part of it which authorizes the raising of a new regiment; and, on this motion, the yeas and nays were ordered. After some debate, Mr. Briggs' amendment was adopted by the following vote: Yeas 96, nays 86. The question then recurred on the above amendment as thus amended; which was adopted.

The next amendment in order was the proposition of the committee of the whole to strike out the following proviso from the second section of the bill:

"Provided, That no officer of the said corps shall be employed in any service for any state or company for which he shall receive any compensation except his pay from the United States."

This amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment proposed by the committee reduces the assistant adjutants general to be appointed, from four to two. Concurred in.

The next amendment proposed by the committee to the bill was to add to the original bill the words italicized in the following section:

"Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the president of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to add to the ordnance department, whenever he may deem it expedient to increase the same, by and with the advice of the senate, two majors, and by the transfer to, and appointment in, of ten first lieutenants, and ten second lieutenants of artillery; and that the pay and emoluments of the officers of the said department shall be the same as those allowed to the officers of the regiments of dragons."

At 2 o'clock the house took its usual recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The house resumed the consideration of the army bill; and the question being on agreeing on the amendments proposed by the military committee to the 15th section,

Mr. Adams proposed a verbal modification of it, to make it more intelligible, which was agreed to. [The section provides for the transfer to the ordnance corps of second lieutenants from the artillery.]

Mr. Evans opposed the policy of the amendment with much earnestness, insisting that the artillery could not bear this reduction of its officers without material injury, and suggesting the propriety of augmenting the ordnance in some other mode. He was supported in this view by Mr. Adams and Mr. Biddle, and opposed by Mr. McKay, Mr. Grennell, and Mr. Calhoun, of Massachusetts.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The amendment in the proviso to the 14th section was agreed to, so as to make it read:

Provided, That the officers of the ordnance department claiming the compensation of such duties and responsibilities—[viz. with respect to clothing, arms, and accoutrements of the company, under the authority of the second section of the act passed second March, eighteen hundred and twenty-seven, giving further compensation to the captains and subalterns of the army of the United States in certain cases]—shall have been actually in the command of enlisted men of the ordnance, equal to a company of artillery, and thereby incurred the aforesaid responsibilities.

In the 15th section the amendments were agreed to so as to make it read:

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additional ration per diem for every five years that he may have served or shall serve in the army of the United States; and the paymaster general, surgeon general, and commissary general of purchases, shall each be allowed six rations per diem, and the additional ration allowed in this section: Provided, That, in certain cases where officers are entitled to and receive double rations, the additional one allowed in this section shall not be included in the number to be doubled.

In the 16th section, which provides that the pay of each musician and private soldier shall be eight dollars per month, Mr. McKay moved to strike out "eight" and insert "seven." This motion was strenuously opposed by Mr. Cushman, of New Hampshire, and negatively, Mr. Petkin and Mr. Mercer endeavored to have the pay of soldiers engaged in making roads and laboring on public works increased by an allowance of 25 cents per day, afterwards modified to 15; but the amendment was sternly opposed by Mr. Evans who was indignant at a proposal to pay men lightly laboring, far from all danger, more than those who were marching, fighting, and dying, in the morasses of Florida. The amendment was rejected. Mr. Reed tried to get the pay of the marines raised to eight dollars per month, but without success. Mr. Childs, with a view to prevent desertions, introduced a proviso for retaining $2 a month of soldiers' pay to the end of the period of enlistment. This was agreed to. Mr. Ezeret moved to reconsider the rejection of that clause of the first section which provides for the raising of a new regiment of infantry, so as to sanction the addition of such regiment. In order to get at this, he first moved to reconsider the whole section. And, after opposition from Mr. Pope and Mr. Underwood, the motion prevailed: Yeas 103, nays 81. He then moved to reconsider the rejection of the infantry regiment, assigning as a reason no change of his own opinion, but the request of many gentlemen friendly to the bill. Mr. Williams, of N. C., demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered. Mr. Fillmore opposed the motion, preferring the clause as it came from the senate. This would cost less, and give greater efficiency.

Mr. Ewing hoped the motion to reconsider would fail. He feared, however, there existed an erroneous belief of the necessity for this additional regiment to those already provided for in the bill. This apprehension arises on account of the unexpected quarter from which this motion came, and a fact which transpired during debate on yesterday. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Grennell) had expressed some latent doubts of a well-authenticated fact adverted to by the gentleman from Tennessee, (Mr. Bell.) His friend of Tennessee had stated, and correctly, the opinions of some of the most experienced and meritorious field officers now in service, from whom he (Mr. E.) had letters precisely similar in sentiment; and he would read them if freedom of opinion were tolerated by the men now in power. As it is, he would only state the fact corroborative of the allegation made by his friend from Tennessee. And if the information had come from the white house, it would not be more worthy of credence, that a very small, if any, addition is required to the standing army now authorized by law. True, the British have increased their force in Canada. No new aggression upon us is contemplated by that event; the increase will have enough to do with the Canadians, who seem resolved to be free. True we are increasing the number of Indians on our western frontier, but they are helpless, and more inimical to each other than to us. A small force in that quarter only is required, and the original bill provided for enough. True, the difficulties in Florida are not entirely at an end, but the men now there and in that neighborhood, directed by the skill and chivalry of the general who now has the command, will, as soon as the season of action arrives, end all trouble in that quarter. Such being the existing state of our concerns, I cannot conceive why this great increase is urged with such pertinacity. We all know the militia, in case of war or imminent danger, must be the chief reliance. The great body of the people will defend their rights and liberty; and in time of peace, surely the bill as reported had no need of this amendment to give a sufficient increase to the standing troops.

He (Mr. E.) represented a people always prepared and willing to defend their country, and they would rejoice to see the proper patriotic feeling manifested here to organize and equip the militia. Expenditures for that purpose would be borne with cheerfulness. But we neglect our militia, or amuse them with mere reports of committees, and leave them to instruct themselves. This is not as it should be. He (Mr. E.) had one other consideration to present. A colleague (Mr. Boon) had confidently charged the great and wasteful expenditures of this administration to the opposition. The country knows this charge is unmerited, and he would have the vote upon this question, to add a regiment to those asked by the chairman of the military committee, to demonstrate who and of what party they are by whom unnecessary expense of money and of morals is sanctioned. The ayes and noes will show this.

The motion to reconsider prevailed: Yeas 100, nays 91. And the question being on the vote of a former sitting, by which the clause, on motion of Mr. Briggs, was stricken out, on this motion a very spirited debate arose.

Mr. Briggs defended his former motion to strike out the provision for the new regiment with much earnestness, complaining that Mr. Evans and Mr. Bronson were unwilling to rely on the militia for the defence of the northern frontier, and wanted to have the standing army increased in a time of profound peace. He hoped the country would note the fact that the old and approved doctrine of reliance on the militia for the defence of the country was laughed to scorn. He dwelt much on this idea, which seemed to fill him with profound indignation. He protested against doubling our standing army in time of peace.

Mr. Yell alluded to the mass of Indians the government had congregated on our western frontier.

Mr. Evans commented with severity on some of the remarks of Mr. Briggs. The gentleman had thrown himself in the breach after the war had become desperate. In the morning his mere motion, without any speech to back it, was sufficient, and prevailed; but now the majority had changed, he must make a speech. The addition of one regiment was certainly enormous, and enough to alarm all the friends of the liberty of the country. These were vast strides towards despotism. Such an augmentation of our standing army of 7,000 men was indeed formidable. The nation would do well to mark it. Yet petitions for this very thing had come up from all quarters of the land; from the west and southwest, and the whole Atlantic border, as well as from the north and northeast.

Mr. Reed wanted to know from what part of the Atlantic border?

Mr. Evans said from Massachusetts, as well as other parts of it, as the remonstrances in the war department against the transfer of troops would show. Mr. E. repelled with much warmth the imputation that he was unwilling to rely on the militia for defence: he was willing, entirely willing; but it was not the business of militia to do permanent garrison duty; and forts with garrisons were necessary as rallying points for the militia, to strengthen it, &c. He ridiculed the idea of 12 millions of freemen drawing a little army of 12,000 men. And as to Mr. Reed, he had no doubt that gentleman would make a speech for Fort Independence, in Boston Harbor. [Mr. Reed. Certainly.] Yet where was the use of a fort without any garrison?

Mr. Cushing next took the floor, and went into a speech of unusual animation, in which he scouted the perpetual cry of alarm at the horrors of a standing army. Whether we should have a standing army was not now the question: that had been settled long ago by Washington, by Adams, by Jefferson, by Madison, by Monroe, by Jackson. If the argument was good for any thing, and militia were to be our sole reliance, the proper course would be to move at once to disband the army. The question was not whether we were to have a standing army; but whether the army should be augmented. On this point we had the recommendations of the executive, and the opinions officially given of our best and most experienced officers. The senate had in repeated bills signified their conviction of its propriety. In opposition to all this, two members of the house said they had private letters of an opposite tenor. Mr. Cushing would rely on the public communications of men of high and tried honor and conduct, in preference to private anonymous authority. Of all the panic speeches, he had never heard those surpassed which had been called forth by the proposal to raise this one poor regiment of infantry. The house had been threatened with the danger of a standing army. Why, if the addition should be made, the proportion of this terrible army to the people of this country would be about one to two hundred and fifty able-bodied freemen with arms in their hands. Were Americans so timid? Did this frighten them? Parallels had been sought from history to show that 12,000 men were to put down our liberties. Why, the old women of these states would almost be sufficient to resist such a force with their distaffs and canes. The true danger to liberty was, that our army was too small. The danger was not that this little force would render our country military, but that the military spirit of the army would be overborne and destroyed by a deep infusion of the civil influence. The men who pleaded with congress for this augmentation were themselves most devoted to the liberties of the country, as they had proved on many a well-fought field. They had resisted tyranny at the cannon's mouth. It was not these men—it was not the officers of the army who were dangerous to freedom. No, it was our civil officers, who became the tools of party.

Mr. C. said the danger to liberty was just the reverse of that which had been so loudly urged. He relied, as the whole country relied, on the militia; but who were the militia? They were freemen, with arms in their hands; and whether enlisted to serve five years or draughted to serve for one, was quite immaterial. The word "militia" had been used as a name of terror to frighten the house. The real confidence of the American people was in freemen armed—in a body, with the spirit of what in some countries was called a national guard; but, under the present organization of our militia, such a body did not exist as such. He wished it did. The militia were not a substitute for an army; each had its own proper duty, and both were necessary. He again insisted that the true source of danger lay in the influence of popular leaders over the militia and volunteers, and not over a standing army. How did general Jackson attain such an unexampled predominance of influence and despotic power in this free republic? By his popularity with the militia and volunteers whom he led in battle. This was the rise of his power. He never could have attained it by means of the regular army.

Mr. C. reprobated as a consequence to this perpetual recurrence to the militia to do garrison duty, what had almost urged Massachusetts herself to nullify: the militia of a state might be, and often were, called out and commanded by a colonel of the line. The militia of the states were the reliance of the states. He appealed to the state rights gentlemen on that floor, whether they advocated such a state of things?

He again adverted to the panic at a standing army, and contended that the very form the argument had assumed, in likening our condition to that of European countries, with despotic governments, to Rome with her Praetorian cohorts, &c. proved that there was a lack of solid objection to the bill. That a body of Indians, in the circumstances of those who had been removed by force, many of them in chains, from their former homes, and placed in a body on our western frontier, should have pacific feelings toward us and our settlements, was against human nature, and would be nothing less than a miracle in morals. It was surely the duty of those who were themselves in safety, to listen to the remonstrances and petitions of those whose wives and children were exposed to such a danger. He was ready to go to the people and account to them for his vote to augment the present military establishment of the United States government.

Mr. Mercer made some remarks in reply to this speech, which he considered as one of the most extraordinary lectures ever delivered in the house. It did not touch the question actually, which was only between two modes of increasing the army—whether by additional officers, or by augmenting the rank and file. Mr. Bronson defended the raising of a new regiment as necessary for the drilling of recruits, &c. Mr. Reed explained, and stated his willingness to vote for all the necessary defences on the frontier. He again professed his readiness to relinquish for this purpose the troops now in garrison on the seaboard, and let a few artificers be retained in the forts to preserve the buildings and armament. There were three or four companies at Newport, who seemed to be only wanted to fire salutes. He had rather they were sent to fight the Indians. He was in favor of fortifications, as indispensable in time of war to defend our cities against the attacks of a marine force, but opposed to keeping large garrisons in them. He was against extending a standing army beyond what was indispensably necessary.

Mr. Briggs replied with much warmth to the remarks of Mr. Cushing and Mr. Evans; denied that he had said that the liberties of the country were in danger from an army of 12,000 men; and the thunders of eloquence which had been launched at him were wide of the mark. He believed there was nothing very impious in what he had said. As to the long and loud cry from all parts of the land for an increase of the army, he had not seen the evidence of it any where. He knew, indeed, that on that floor a very loud cry was set up by the gentlemen from the southwest and northern frontier; but the military committee, after having had the subject for months before them, were of opinion that an increase of three thousand men would be sufficient. Now, however, a new regiment was called for on the ground that new difficulties and dangers had sprung up on our northern and western lines of frontier. This reason did not seem to him sufficient. The difficulties in Florida were now chiefly over, and troops might be drawn from that quarter. His colleague (Mr. Cushing) had severely lectured him and other gentlemen, for not speaking to the question. Yet the gentleman had not sooner delivered this rebuke than he himself went off at a tangent. The gentleman had talked about declamation. Did he call his own speech logic? If so, the gentleman's notions of logic differed from his. The gentleman talked about panic and complained that so much was said about the dangers of a standing army. Mr. B. had called on the friends of the bill to show why the standing army should be increased, and, in reply, his colleague demanded of him why it should not be increased. Was this the logic of gentlemen? The two gentlemen from Maine and Massachusetts had manifested great zeal for the increase of the army, and of the expenses of the government.

Mr. Cushing here rose and said, I deny the imputation. Mr. Briggs went on to say that he did not see what excited alarm. The militia were not spoken of and treated as formerly. The gentleman from Maine thought their place was at home, and that they were not the troops that were wanted to protect the west or do garrison duty. This sort of language toward the militia would suit the mouth of a despot who wished to subjugate the liberties of the country. Such a one might, with great consistency, say to the people, stay on your farms, the defence of the country is not for you; trust all that matter to me, give me regulars, and I will take care of you.

Mr. Cushing said that he was actuated by zeal to do his duty to his country, and nothing else, and he spurned any other imputation. The question being now taken, it was decided in the negative: Ayes 95, noes 104.

So the house refused to strike out the provision for an additional regiment of infantry.

Mr. Evans now moved to strike out that part of the bill which proposed to reduce the number of lieutenants of artillery, and transfer them to the ordnance, but the motion was negatived. Mr. Thompson moved to strike out $8, and to insert 28 as the increase of the rank and file to each company. Lost. Mr. Underwood now declared that he would do his hands of the bill. He perceived the object was not to increase the force of the army, but to provide patronage for favorites. Mr. Glascock denied, with warmth, any such imputation: this was the first time in the debate in which the bill had been represented as a party or political measure; the votes would show that it was no such thing, since it was both advocated and opposed by gentlemen of all parties. Mr. Underwood argued to show that the bill involved a great increase in the expenses of the army. Mr. McKay replied, and insisted that the reverse was true: that the expenses were reduced, and that the bill was a measure of economy. Mr. Garland, of Louisiana, moved an amendment, that all officers for the new regiment should be taken from those now attached to the army. Negatived: Ayes 60, noes 89.

A motion was now made to adjourn; but it was rejected.

The remaining amendments proposed by the committee were now read in order, and the question put on the whole, with the exception of four, viz: those in the 19th, 25th, 31st, and 35th sections. The amendments in section 19 were then read, and, after a short conversation, agreed to. The amendments to the 25th section having been read, Mr. Carter strongly objected to the pay proposed to be allowed to the surgeons. Mr. Thompson and Mr. McKay replied and explained. Mr. Carter moved an amendment to reduce the pay. Mr. Mallory opposed the amendment, and it was rejected. The 25th section was then agreed to. The amendments in the 31st section having been read, Mr. Mason, of Ohio, moved to strike out the allowance to the soldiers of bounty. Mr. Childs proposed to substitute for the bounty lands an allowance of $100 in money. Negatived. Mr. Fillmore proposed to insert after the word "land" the words "fit for cultivation." Negatived. Mr. Kemble moved a reconsideration of the clause above quoted, and Mr. Campbell, of S. C., supported his motion but it was lost.

On motion of Mr. E. Whittlesey, the section was further amended by inserting a provision that the bounty lands shall be patented to the soldier or his heirs, and shall not be assignable until patented. The section was then agreed to.

The 35th section having been read, Mr. Briggs moved an amendment, providing that the regiment raised under the first section shall serve for two years only. Negatived. The section was then agreed to.

Mr. Thompson moved an amendment in the 15th section, which provides that every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additional raise for every five years that he may have served, &c. so as to make it include officers of the marine corps. Mr. Craig now moved the previous question, but withdrew it at the earnest solicitation of his colleague, Mr. Rives, who wanted to introduce a provision allowing a commission to paymasters for extra duty.

Mr. Boon hereupon renewed the call for the previous question. Mr. Rencher moved an adjournment. Lost. The call for the previous question was seconded: Ayes 92, noes 61. The previous question was put and carried, and the bill was then ordered to its engrossment by yeas and nays as follows:

YEAS—Messrs J. W. Allen, Anderson, Andrews, Atherton, Banks, Beatty, Burne, Bicknell, Biddle, Birdsell, Boon, Brodhead, Bronson, J. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Coles, Craig, Cushing, Cushman, Dawson, Davee, DeGraff, Dromgoole, Duncan, Elinore, Evans, Farrington, Fairfield, R. Fletcher, Foster, Fry, Gallup, James Garland, Glascock, Grant, Gray, Grennell, Haley, Hall, Hammond, Haner, Harrison, Haynes, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, Wm. H. Hunter, Ingham, T. B. Jackson, Henry Johnson, N. Jones, Kemble, Klingensmith, Legare, Lincoln, Logan, Lyon, Mallory, J. M. Mason, Martin, McKay, Robert McClellan, A. McClellan, McClure, Miller, Morgan, S. W. Morris, Naylor, Noble, Noyes, Palmer, Parker, Parmenter, Parris, Pavanter, Phelps, Phillips, J. H. Prentiss, S. S. Prentiss, Richardson, Rives, Robinson, Shepler, Snyder, Southgate, Spencer, Taylor, Thomas, Titus, Toland, Towns, Turney, Vail, Wagner, Webster, Werks, A. S. White, T. T. Whittlesey, J. W. Williams, J. L. Williams, Yell—107.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Alexander, Heman, Allen, Ayer, Bell, Bond, Briggs, Bynum, W. B. Calhoun, W. B. Campbell, Carter, Chambers, Cheatham, Childs, Connor, Corwin, Darlington, Davies, Dunn, Everett, Ewing, Fillmore, Goode, J. Graham, William Graham, Griffin, Harlan, Hastings, Hawes, Henry, Hoffman, R. M. T. Hunter, J. W. Jones, Leadbetter, Lewis, Marvin, S. Mason, Maxwell, McKennan, Mercer, Milligan, Mitchell, Montgomery, C. Morris, Murray, Ogle, Peck, P. Irkin, Pope, Potts, Raridan, Randolph, Reed, Rancher, Ridgway, Robertson, Rumsey, Russell, Sheffer, A. H. Sheppard, C. Shepard, Sibley, Slade, Stanley, Stone, Stratton, Taliaferro, Thompson, Tillinchest, Underwood, J. White, E. Whittlesey, L. Williams, S. Williams, C. H. Williams, Word, Yorke—77.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

And then the house adjourned.

Saturday, June 30. [We cannot find room for more than a brief abstract of the proceedings of the house, but they shall be noticed in detail in the next "REGISTER."]

After the transaction of other business, Mr. Kilgore made an ineffectual effort to have an hour assigned for the consideration of his resolution, repealing the section of the law of 1816, in reference to banks issuing small notes, which he modified so as to limit its operation to the 1st of March next. For suspending the rules 105, nays 86.

The engrossed bill to increase the present military establishment of the United States and for other purposes, was read a third time, when Mr. Carter of Tenn., moved that it be recommitted with instructions to strike out all the clauses of the bill proposing an increase in the number of officers, or increase of pay, and also the section for raising an additional regiment of infantry. This motion gave rise to a debate which occupied the attention of the house until the hour of recess.

[The subject was not resumed in the afternoon in consequence of the intervention of the special orders.]

EVENING SESSION.

The house went into committee of the whole, (Mr. Owens in the chair) and took up several bills remitting duties on iron imported for the construction of steamboats; all of which, with the exception of No. 854, were reported without amendment. The bill No. 187, to authorize the importation of iron steamboats, free of duty, was laid on the table.

The hour assigned for this subject having expired, and the special order having been called, Mr. Adams moved to suspend the rules for another hour. The motion was lost. The house then, according to appointment, went into committee of the whole on the bill to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the state of Tennessee to issue grants and perfect titles to certain lands therein described, and to settle the claims to vacant lands within the same," passed 18th of April, 1806. A desultory debate ensued, when Mr. McKean moved that the committee rise and report the bill; which motion prevailed. Finally, after a variety of proceedings, the question arose on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, when it was rejected by a vote of 61 yeas to 91 nays. Mr. Martin, of Alabama, gave notice that he would, on Monday, move a reconsideration of the vote. And then, on motion of Mr. Griffin, the house adjourned.

Monday, July 2. After a number of petitions and reports had been received and disposed of, several resolutions were submitted; all of which shall be noticed in our next. The army bill was next taken up, the pending motions being, 1st, to reconsider the vote on engrossment, and 2d, to recommit the bill with instructions. After a brief discussion, the previous question was called and seconded, when the yeas and nays were ordered and the house refused to reconsider. Yeas 94, nays 95. Finally the question was taken on the final passage of the bill, when there appeared yeas 112, nays 80. So the bill was passed and returned to the senate for concurrence in the amendments.

Several bills from the senate were read twice and appropriately referred.

On motion of Mr. Sergeant, the house went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Mason of Va. in the chair) and took up the harbor bill which occupied its attention until the hour of recess.

EVENING SESSION.

After recess, the committee of the whole proceeded with the harbor bill, which was discussed and amended; finally the committee rose, reported the bill and amendments; and at half past ten o'clock the house adjourned.

Tuesday, July 3. Mr. Adams yielded the floor to enable Mr. Slade to offer a resolution inquiring into the expediency of erecting a national foundry at the city of Vergennes, Vt. Mr. A. then resumed the floor, and consumed the morning hour in an argument against the admission of Texas into the union.

The following bill from the senate to repeal the deposit act of 1837 was read:

A BILL to modify the last clause of the 5th section of the deposit act of the 23d of June, 1836, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c. That the last clause of the 5th section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the deposits of the public money," approved 23d June, 1836, declaring that the notes or bills of no bank shall be received in payment of any debt due to the United States, which shall, after the 4th day of July, 1836, issue any note or bill of a less denomination than five dollars, shall be, and the same is hereby, modified, so that the interdiction as to reception of the bills and notes shall continue against any bank which has, since the said 4th day of July, 1836, issued bills or notes of a less denomination than five dollars or which shall issue any such bills or notes prior to the 1st day of October, 1838; but that, from and after the said last mentioned day, the bills or notes of no bank shall be received in payment of any debt due to the United States, which bank shall after that date issue, re-issue, or pay out any bill or note of a denomination less than five dollars.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the first twelve sections of the act entitled "An act to regulate the deposits of the public money," approved 23d June, 1836, be, and the same are hereby, repealed except so far as is above provided, and to enable the treasury department to collect any debts which may be due or owing from the late deposit banks.

Mr. Cambreleng arose and delivered a speech in favor of the bill. A debate now arose, during which Mr. Legare moved that the bill be referred to the committee of ways and means and printed for information. Mr. Cushman moved the previous question. Mr. Curtis moved a call of the house; which motion was agreed to. After some progress had been made in the call, Mr. Harlan moved to suspend further proceedings, which was ultimately agreed to. The question was then taken on seconding the call for the previous question which resulted as follows: Ayes 97, noes 105. So the call was not seconded, and the house refused thereby, to order the bill to its engrossment at this time.

Mr. Duncan then addressed the house until the hour of recess, in favor of the bill.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. Duncan resumed and concluded his remarks, in the progress of which he was frequently called to order.

Mr. Legare then withdrew his motion to refer and print, and moved to strike out the second section. This motion was, after discussion, adopted. Ayes 119, noes 101. The debate was now resumed, during which several amendments were offered, some of which were adopted—but without coming to a decision upon the bill, the house adjourned.

Wednesday, July 4. After some business of minor importance had been transacted, the house resumed the senate bill to repeal the 5th section of the deposit bill of 1836, which was ordered to a third reading, as amended on motion of Mr. Legare: Ayes 179, noes 33. It was afterwards passed, by yeas and noes: Ayes 173, noes 81. And, with the second section stricken out, the bill was returned to the senate for concurrence. The remainder of the session was occupied in considering the harbor bill and with other business, which will be noticed in our next.

EVENING SESSION.

The harbor bill was considered, and passed. The bill to guard against explosions on board of steamboats was also passed. The post office bill, with a number of other bills, was passed. Adjourned.

Thursday, July 5. Mr. Adams resumed his speech on the subject of Texas, and addressed the house until the expiration of the morning hour. Mr. Elmore moved to suspend the rules to enable Mr. A. to complete his speech. Negatived.

The house took up the Indian annuity bill, which was discussed, amended, and laid aside to be reported.

The house next took up the fortification bill, which was amended. The house then took up the military academy bill, which was also amended and laid aside. The bill authorizing the purchase of certain books was taken up. Mr. Cushman moved to strike out the enacting clause. Negatived. The bill was then laid aside.

On motion of Mr. Fillmore the bill to arrange the sessions, &c. of the district court of the northern district of New York, was taken up, read, and laid aside. Mr. Mercer moved to take up the harbor bill, but before any question was taken the hour of recess arrived.

EVENING SESSION.

The proceedings of the evening session, shall have a place in our next.

CHRONICLE.

Awful storm. Our town was visited on Saturday night with one of the most severe storms which we have ever witnessed. It commenced about 8 o'clock and continued until 11, during which time the lightning was incessant, and so near that scarcely a moment would elapse between the flash and the noise of the thunder. The rain came down in torrents, and the wind blew a gale during the time. We have heard of no injury which has been sustained in the town, with the exception of one house which was slightly injured by the lightning. The country, we fear, has not been so fortunate, as the wheat must have been seriously injured by the wind and the hard driving rain. [Petersburg Intell.]

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 20.—VOL. IV.]

WASHINGTON CITY, JULY 14, 1838.

[VOL. LIV.—WHOLE No. 1,398.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

Both houses of congress adjourned on Monday last, leaving, as usual, a large portion of business unfinished. We have endeavored to crowd into the present sheet all that was done in the last week of the session, but have been reluctantly compelled to postpone a portion until our next. We have, however, published a list of the acts passed, to which our readers are referred.

Most sincerely do we rejoice that the session has closed, and our readers will rejoice with us—for we will now be enabled, instead of the dry details of legislation, to furnish them with useful and agreeable articles, and impart the usual variety to our pages.

BANKS, CURRENCY, &c. The subjoined summary statement of the condition of the Baltimore banks is taken from the authorized monthly statement (for July) prepared in conformity to a law of the last legislature.

Aggregate circulation of the 12 banks in Baltimore, $2,189,747, 68
Specie, 1,140,885 50
Loans and discounts, 12,725,460 21
Deposites, including $971,360 94 by the treasurer of Maryland, 4,314,483 35
Due to other banks, 3,383,962 43
Due from other banks, 3,383,234 59

From the New York Courier, July 11.
The depression which has existed in the stock market for the last few days, continues to increase, and transactions yesterday were generally effected at prices showing a further decline. The cause of the present depression in stocks may be attributed to the fact that a very large amount of stocks on which advances have been made by the United States Bank, may be expected to be thrown into the market, in the event of a general resumption of specie payments taking place at Philadelphia, and the curtailment of money accommodations which would no doubt follow such resumption. No material change in the price of United States Bank stock has taken place.

The Philadelphia U. S. Gazette of Thursday has the following:

Meeting of the banks. At a meeting of the associated banks of the city and county of Philadelphia, held on Wednesday evening, 11th inst., Dr. Dunlap, from the committee appointed to recommend proper measures for the early and general resumption of specie payments, presented a report, which, with the following resolutions, was adopted by the board, viz:

Resolved, That the banks of Boston, Providence, Baltimore and Richmond, and such others as the time admit of, be invited to meet the banks of Philadelphia in convention in this city, on Monday, the 28th instant, to consult upon the measures to be adopted for an early and simultaneous resumption of specie payments.

Resolved, That the committee be instructed to communicate this resolution to the banks in question, and to make the necessary arrangements for the meeting of the convention.

It was also resolved, That it be recommended to the several banks of the city and districts, to appoint one or more delegates to represent them in this convention.

The association then adjourned sine die.

On our last page we have published the proclamation of governor Ritner of Pennsylvania, requiring the banks in that state to resume specie payments in full on the 13th of August next. It has diffused much joy through that community, as will be seen by the following paragraphs:

From the U. S. Gazette, July 13.

Governor's proclamation. In another part of this paper, will be found a proclamation from governor Ritner, on the subject of the banks of this commonwealth's resuming specie payments on the thirteenth of August next. The document is an able and patriotic production; one that will be received with joy by our citizens generally.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer, July 13.

We never gave place to a public document with more pleasure than the following. It will, we venture to predict, be received with a burst of enthusiastic approbation, not only throughout Pennsylvania, but from one section of the country to the other. It is the first executive message of a decided and unequivocal tone, in favor of an early resumption of specie payments, that has been issued since the suspension. Governor Ritner has, in this matter, taken the lead, and the people of Pennsylvania will honor him for it. His proclamation could not have appeared at a more opportune moment.

The Pennsylvanian, commenting on the proclamation, says: "The proclamation is, in fact, a glorious victory to the democracy of Pennsylvania. The forces of irredeemable federalism and anti-masonry are compelled to abandon the ground they have occupied for more than a year. Their rag banner is struck!"

The Philadelphia U. S. Gazette of yesterday has the following paragraph:

Banks. We understand that the banks of the city have agreed to settle all balances between themselves on the first of August; and after that time, no interest will be paid or received by any of them, for balances due by one to the other.

The Pennsylvania United States Bank no longer issues the bills of the old United States Bank, but her own. [Philad. Herald.]

From the N. Y. Express, July 13. Since the adjournment of congress, and the consequent certainty that that body can do no more mischief, the spirit and commercial feeling of business men begin to recover; and were it not for the oppressive hot weather and the general languor attendant on a heat of 90 degrees and upwards, we have no doubt there would be quite a revival. As it is, the three banking institutions that we have alluded to below are rapidly advancing. To these three may be added the branch of the United States bank, making a fourth, and which will probably be in operation quite as soon as the others. The following are the particulars of the various institutions:

First. There is the great establishment which it is intended to increase some 30 or 40 millions. It has two millions already subscribed, and will commence operations with this sum, and then enlarge.

The second is the Mechanics' association. This company will probably be organized first. The directors, twenty-one in number, are already chosen, stock subscribed, and every thing is in a fair way of commencing.

The third is an association of dry goods merchants and grocers, together with large capitalists. The trustees are already chosen.

The fourth is the United States branch, which will, we learn, be under the principal control of Morris Robinson, a gentleman who probably combines a greater degree of confidence and banking experience, than that of any other individual.

This is packet day. The rate of exchange is fixed at 108 1-2 on London. This is a shade lower than by the last packet. No alteration on France. The amount of business done was quite limited.

Statement of the Bank of England up to May 29.
Liabilities.		Assets.
Circulation	£19,018,000	Securities	£22,648,000
Deposite	10,786,000	Bullion	9,806,000
	29,804,000		32,454,000

LATE FROM EUROPE. The packet ship Sully, at New York, brings Paris dates to the 1st, and Havre to the 2d, June, both inclusive.

A line of steam packets between Havre and New York is spoken of in the Havre papers.

Ex-governor Tacon had arrived at Bordeaux from Havana.

It is in contemplation to construct a rail road from Paris to the Belgian frontier.

Haytien commissioners were received with attention at Paris. A dinner was given them on the 29th of May, by M. Dutrone, one of the founders of the french abolition society, at which were present Messrs. Passy, Odillon Barrot, Las Casas, Remusat, and other distinguished politicians. Among the decorations of the room were the national flag of Hayti, and the portraits of Boyer and Petion. The commissioners returned thanks for the honors paid them, in language says the constitutional, equally dignified and patriotic.

The emperor of Russia had arrived at Berlin, and bestowed promotion on Colonel the prince of Orange, raising him to the rank of general in the Russian service.

A fine steamboat is now plying regularly between Havre and St. Petersburg, touching at Copenhagen. She commenced her trips on the 1st June. The passage is made in 5 or 6 days, so that a traveller may leave Paris on Monday, and on the next Monday be in the capital of Russia.

The Paris papers mention considerable movements of troops to the northern frontier, where much dissatisfaction appears to exist in portions of the duchy of Luxembourg—those portions which it is supposed will be assigned to Holland. The tri-colored flag has been raised in several villages, and the Prussian troops are said to have interposed.

The government steamer Pheonon arrived at Havre on the 1st of June, there to await the orders of marshal Soult. It was to convey the marshal and his suite to London to attend the coronation.

CANADA FRONTIER. From the Globe of Friday night. The humane and judicious arrangement made by the government with the chiefs and headmen of the Cherokee nation, and the prudent, prompt, and energetic measures of general Scott having secured the peaceful execution of the treaty, and the quiet removal of the Indians to their new homes in the west, two regiments of artillery have been ordered north, to be stationed on the Canada frontier; which, together with the new regiment now organizing under colonel Worth, who has already passed on to Sackett's Harbor, will, it is hoped, prove sufficient effectually to aid the well-disposed inhabitants of the border to maintain the peace of the country.

The Quebec Gazette of the 6th inst. contains a proclamation issued by lord Durham on the 3d, revoking the proclamation issued by lord Gosford, in which rewards were offered for the apprehension of Messrs. Papineau, Brown and others, their apprehension being no longer requisite for the ends of justice.

His lordship has also organized a court of appeals, the members of which are Mr. Sewell, chief justice, of Quebec, Mr. chief justice Reid, of Montreal, Messrs. justices Panet, Rolland and Vallieres de St. Real, and Mr. Arthur Buller, barrister at law; these gentlemen having been added to the executive council for the purpose.

Lord Durham was to hold a levee at Montreal on Monday. The court of king's bench at Quebec has awarded $100 damages to Dr. O'Callaghan, for a public horse whipping inflicted by the hands of a Mr. Doyle.

GENERAL WOOL, accompanied by major Graham, of the United States army, J. E. Johnson, engineer, and general James Irish, of Gorham, arrived in this city on Friday; and we understand they are to leave to-morrow morning for Moose Head lake, where it is expected one or more sites for military posts will be selected. Thence they will go down the St. Croix, and perhaps the Penobscot, where other sites will be selected for the same purpose, if judged necessary. The posts, we further learn, are to be immediately established.

[Bangor Whig.]

MAINE. The following is the reply of Mr. Fairfield to the letter of the committee appointed by the democratic state convention to inform him of his nomination for the office of governor:

Washington, June 27, 1838.

Gentlemen: By your letter received this day, I am informed that, at a convention of democratic republicans assembled at Augusta, on the 20th instant, I was unanimously nominated as a candidate for the office of governor of Maine. For this mark of the favorable regard of those with whom it has been my honor as well as pleasure to be politically associated, I feel grateful; and whatever may have been my views and wishes upon this subject, heretofore so often expressed to my friends, I do not, under all the circumstances of this nomination, feel at liberty to decline it.

Accept, gentlemen, for yourselves personally, and for those whose organ upon this occasion you are, the profound respect and esteem of

Your obedient servant,

JOHN FAIRFIELD.

Messrs. Albert Smith, Levi J. Ham, Amos Nourse, M. L. Hill, Ed. S. Jarvis, Committee.

LIST OF ACTS,

Passed at the 2d session of the 25th congress, begun on the first Monday in December, 1837, and ended on the 9th day of July, 1838.

To change the times of holding the circuit courts of the United States in the 7th circuit.

To amend an act entitled "An act for the appointment of commissioners to adjust the claims to reservations of land under the 14th article of the treaty of 1830 with the Choctaw Indians."

To prevent the abatement of suits and actions now pending, in which the late Bank of the United States may be a party.

To abolish the circuit court of Huntsville, in the state of Alabama, and for other purposes.

Supplementary to the act entitled "An act concerning the District of Columbia."

To re-organize the district courts of the United States in the state of Mississippi.

To divide the territory of Wisconsin, and to establish the territorial government of Iowa.

To continue the corporate existence of the banks in the District of Columbia.

To authorize the secretary of the treasury to correct a mistake in relation to the payment of money into the treasury awarded to Fortesque Whittle, under the late treaty with France.

To grant a quantity of land to the territory of Wisconsin for the purpose of aiding in opening a canal to connect the waters of Lake Michigan with those of Rock river.

To provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on steamboats.

To remit the duties upon certain goods destroyed by fire at the late conflagration in the city of New York.

Making appropriations for certain roads in the territory of Wisconsin.

To restrain the circulation of small notes as a currency in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Granting half-pay to certain widows.

To establish a criminal court in the District of Columbia.

To confirm certain entries of public lands, permitted to be made by the registers and receivers of land districts, under the belief that the tract had been offered at public sale.

To establish a new collection district in the state of Mississippi.

To refund to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company certain duties paid upon railroad iron.

To refund certain duties upon railroad iron, paid by the New York and Harlem Railroad Company.

To prevent the issuing and circulation of the bills, notes, and other securities of corporations created by acts of congress which have expired.

To remit or refund duties to the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad Company upon certain importations of iron made by them for the use of their railroad.

To refund to the Newcastle and Frenchtown Turnpike and Railroad Company certain duties paid by them upon iron imported for the construction of their railroad.

To encourage the introduction and promote the cultivation of tropical plants in the United States.

To grant to Cherokee county, Ala., the tract of land on which the seat of justice of said county has been located.

To change the time of holding the United States circuit court in the district of Maryland.

To authorize the sale of certain bonds belonging to the United States.

To establish additional land offices in the states of Louisiana and Arkansas.

To authorize vessels bound for the ports of Mexico, and prevented from completing their voyages, in consequence of the existing blockade of those ports, to enter and store their cargoes in the ports of the United States.

To repeal, in part, the act entitled "An act to provide for the safe-keeping of the acts, records, and seal of the United States, and for other purposes."

To extend the charter of the Bank of Alexandria, in the city of Alexandria.

To authorize the issue of patents to the last bona fide transferees of reservations under the treaty between the United States and the Creek tribe of Indians, which was concluded on the 24th of March, 1831.

Exempting from duty the coal which may be on board of steamboats or vessels propelled by steam on their arrival at any port in the United States.

To grant pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands.

To ascertain and designate the boundary line between the state of Michigan and the territory of Wisconsin.

To authorize the president of the United States to cause the public vessels to cruise upon the coast in the winter season, and to relieve distressed navigators.

To create the office of surveyor of public lands in Wisconsin territory.

To establish two additional land offices in that part of Wisconsin territory west of the river Mississippi.

To ratify and confirm certain official acts of John Pope, late governor of Arkansas.

Authorizing the appointment of persons to test the usefulness of inventions to improve and render safe the boilers of steam engines against explosions.

To amend and extend the charter of the Franklin Insurance company.

To authorize the commissioner of the patent office to issue a patent to James Smith.

To authorize the president of the United States to cause the southern boundary line of the territory of Wisconsin to be ascertained and marked.

Making appropriation for the removal of the great raft of Red river.

To continue in force the act for the payment of horses and other property lost in the military service of the United States.

Making appropriations for building light boats, beacon-lights, buoys, and making surveys for the year 1838.

To amend an act authorizing the secretary of war to establish a pension agency in the town of Decatur, in the state of Alabama, and to provide for the payment of certain pensioners in the said town of Decatur.

To modify the last clause of the fifth section of the deposit act of the 23d of June, 1836.

Supplementary to the act entitled "An act to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes;" approved July 5, 1838.

Supplementary to the act entitled "An act authorizing the appointment of persons to test the usefulness of inventions to improve and render safe the boilers of steam engines against explosions;" approved June 28, 1838.

Authorizing the printing of the Madison papers.

Making appropriations for certain fortifications of the United States for the year 1838.

Making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for the fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year 1838.

To provide for certain harbors, and for the removal of obstructions in and at the mouths of certain rivers, and for other purposes, during the year 1838.

To provide for the support of the military academy of the United States for 1838, and for other purposes.

To provide for paying certain pensions at Tuscaloosa, in the state of Alabama.

To confirm the act of the legislative council of Florida, incorporating the Florida Peninsula railroad and steamboat company, and granting the right of way to said company through the public lands, and for other purposes.

To establish a new judicial district in the territory of Florida.

Making appropriation for the compilation of the laws of Florida.

To increase and regulate the terms of the circuit district courts for the northern district of the state of New York.

For the erection of a court-house in Alexandria, in the District of Columbia.

To re-organize the legislative council of Florida, and for other purposes.

Making appropriations for certain roads in the territory of Florida.

To extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the general land office.

To establish certain post routes and to discontinue others.

To provide for the settlement of the claim of the state of New York for the services of her militia.

To authorize the sale of certain public lands of the United States near the Wabash and Erie canal, in Ohio.

To change the time of holding the spring term of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, and of the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia, directed by law to be held in Richmond.

To restore circuit jurisdiction to the district courts of the western district of Virginia.

Making an appropriation for the protection of the northern frontier of the United States.

To require the judge of the district court of East and West Tennessee to hold a court at Jackson, in said state.

To secure the payment of certain commissions on duty bonds to the collectors of the customs.

Making a partial appropriation for the suppression of Indian hostilities for 1836.

Supplementary to an act entitled "An act in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, and to repeal the acts therein mentioned," approved 20th April, 1818.

To direct the transfer of money remaining unclaimed by certain pensioners, and authorizing the payment of the same at the treasury of the United States.

Making appropriations for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities for the year 1836, and for arrearages for the year 1837.

To carry into effect an act approved the 12th day of October last, "To authorize the issuing of treasury notes."

Making an appropriation for completing the public buildings in Wisconsin.

Making an appropriation for the support of the army for 1838.

In relation to the orphans' court of the county of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia.

To extend the charter of the Union Bank of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia.

Resolution in favor of the authorities of the city of Savannah, in Georgia.

Resolution authorizing the commissioner of public buildings to remove the walls of the burnt post office building.

Making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of government for 1838.

Making appropriations for the naval service for 1838.

Making appropriations for revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States for the year 1838.

Making appropriations for the Cumberland road in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois.

To continue in force an act therein mentioned relating to the port of Baltimore.

To provide for the payment of the annuities which will become due and payable to the Great and Little Osages in the year 1838, and for other purposes.

To repeal certain provisions of "An act to alter and amend the several acts imposing duties on imports," approved the 14th July, 1832.

To amend the act for quieting possessions, enrolling conveyances, and securing the estates of purchasers within the District of Columbia, passed May 31, 1832.

For the benefit of Calvert county, Md.

For the relief of the legal representatives of Patrick Gibboney.

For the relief of the heirs of Wm. Cogswell.

Concerning a seminary of learning in the territory of Wisconsin.

Authorizing the commissioner of the patent office to issue patents to Angier March Perkins and to John Howard Kyan.

Directing the postmaster general to settle the claim of Hard & Longstreet.

For the relief of the legal representatives of Henry Fisher, deceased; of Mary A. Patrick.

To authorize Chas. Day, of Macon, and James R. Butts, of Columbus, in the State of Georgia, and W. W. Fry, of Mobile, Alabama, to import free of duties three iron steamboats, suited to the navigation of rivers.

To revive, with amendments, an act to incorporate the medical society of the District of Columbia.

For the relief of Richard Cravat, Hardy Perry, and Beley Cheney.

For the benefit of the widows of certain revolutionary officers and soldiers.

For the relief of Daniel T. Patterson; of M. Gelston, executor of David Gelston; of the children and heirs of lieutenant colonel Henry Irwin, deceased; of the heirs at law of Joshua Fanning, deceased; of the legal representatives of capt. Charles Sneed; of the legal representatives of John B. Ashe; of the heirs of Deborah Gannett, a soldier of the revolution; of John McClellan; of the legal representatives of Sawney York, deceased.

Granting a pension to James M. Edwards.

For the relief of James H. Bradford.

For the benefit of Tandy Walker.

For the relief of Joseph Prescott.

For the settlement of the accounts of Richard Harrison, late consular agent of the United States in Spain.

Granting a pension to Sarah Barney, widow of Samuel Barney, late of Connecticut.

For the relief of James Boyd; of Thomas Frazer.

Granting a pension to John M. Jewell.

For the relief of John Jost, Deitz, of New York; of Lewis Hatch; of Sarah Pemberton; of Joseph Salmonds; of Noah Chittenden; of William Collins; of Nicholas Verplast.

Granting a pension to Phebe Champe, of Franklin county, Ohio.

For the relief of Aaron Tucker; of the heirs of Wm. B. Bunting.

For the relief of the legal representatives of Doctor Wm. Johnson, deceased.

For the relief of the heirs of lieutenant colonel Richard Campbell.

Directing the commissioner of public lands to ascertain the quantity of land covered by grants made to Anthony Shane and Louis Godfrey, in section 16, township 4 south, range 2 east, in Lima land district, Ohio, and its value.

To amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Rapnael Pane and Elias Arnold;" of J. A. Fleming; of James Barrett; of the legal representatives of Timothy Feely, deceased, late a lieutenant in the army of the revolution; of Crawford Johnson; of the legal representatives of Wm. Hooker Smith, deceased; of the children and heirs at law of John Chilton, deceased.

To authorize the payment of the seven years' half pay due on account of the revolutionary services of Thomas H. Boyles, deceased.

For the relief of the administrator of Wharton Quails, deceased; of John A. Peterson, executor of the last will and testament of John A. Peterson, deceased; of A. Quetier & Albert, of New Orleans; of Richard Frisby; of Samuel Potter and James Cassidy, of Wilmington, N. C.

Ceding to the state of Ohio the interest of the United States in a certain road within that state.

For the relief of Gratia Ray; of Benjamin B. Dow; of Benjamin Durfee; of James Sayre; of William A. Whitehead.

To authorize the payment of the seven years' half pay due on account of the revolutionary services of John McClelland, deceased.

For the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Williams, deceased; of the representatives of colonel Anthony Watson White; of Isaac Gale; of Oliver Dorsett.

To authorize the commissioner of pensions to cause the unpaid pension of captain Robert Laird, of the state of Georgia, to be paid to his executor.

For the relief of Letitia Crane.

Granting a pension to Coffin Sanborn; of Moses Eldred.

To authorize William Deleadmier to draw the arrears of pension due the late Lewis F. Deleadmier at the time of his death.

Granting a pension to Daniel H. Crockett.

For the relief of Miller Francis; of Henry Barton; of Henry Chandler; of Charles Vattier.

To amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of James Steele," approved 28th June, 1836.

To extend the time for selling the land granted to the Kentucky Asylum for teaching the deaf and dumb.

For the relief of Joseph Neibert; of Samuel Milligan; of John Hollinsworth; of Wm. James Aarons; of Wm. Walker; of Joel Chandler; of James A. Williams; of Abraham Woodall; of Neil McNeil; of Amos Thompson; of Solomon Ketchum; of Anna West; of Simeon Smith; of Frederick Hill; of Christopher Dennison; of Josiah Clarke; of Thomas West; of Brady True Jipson; of Daniel Rardon; of Charles Coffin; of Seth Whitney; of Catharine Rollins, alias C. Mosely; of Primus Hall, alias Trask; of James McFarland; of Robert Casey; of Leonard Loomis; of Eli Eastman; of Robert Dickey, of New York; of Samuel Sanderson; of Jesse E. Dow; of Edward Burgess; of John McCarty, deceased; of Benjamin H. Mackall; of James J. Pattison; of Daniel Davis; of James Baker; of Joseph Hall; of Jonathan Davis; of Albion T. Crow; of William R. Taylor, administrator of Jonathan Taylor; of the legal representatives of Thos. W. Bacot, of Charleston, S. C.; of Allen R. Moore; of Elias Johns; of James McMahon; of Sarah Murphy; of Abraham Lansing; of Thomas J. Lawler and Smith M. Miles; of John Krepps; of Presley O. Bannon; of Francis Gardiner; of Benjamin Mooers; of Eli Horton; of John M. Oliver; of Christopher Clark; of Philip Marshall, for himself and the heirs of John Marshall; of Curtis Grubb; of John B. Perkins; of William Eadus; of Hannah Buhlong; of Robt Peebles and John Graham; of the adm'r of Edward Duval; of John P. Austin and Edward N. Naylor; of Alexander G. Morgan; of Jonathan Elliot; of John Wilson; of Doct. David H. Maxwell; of Thomas Tyler et al; of Melancthon T. Woolsey; of James L. Kenner; of H. W. Russell; of Freeman Brady; of William Thorp; of James Callan; of Hugh McDonald; of D. W. Haley; of Anna W. Johnson; of Robert Keyworth; of Winthrop Sears; of Moses Merrill, fisherman, of schooner Fortune; of Joseph Deshields; of Thomas Cushing; of Isaac Wellborn, jr. and William Wellborn; of the heirs of Nathan Peter and William Adams, deceased; of James Witherall; of the legal representatives of Henry Morfit, deceased; of the heirs of major Peter Helsenstein.

Granting a pension to David Gilmore; of captain Samuel Warren; of Michael Cassel; of John Spitham; of the heirs of lieutenant Wm. Russwurm, deceased; of Philip Reviere and his legal representatives; of the heirs of Dr. Thomas Carter, deceased; of the legal representatives of Daniel Duval, deceased; of Ann S. Heilman; of Moses Van Campen.

TWENTY-FIFTH CONGRESS. SECOND SESSION—SENATE.

July 4. The Chair communicated to the senate a report from the secretary of the treasury, containing a statement from Mr. Hassler in relation to weights and measures. Read and referred to the committee on commerce.

Mr. Clay rose to present a memorial, which was not very numerous but very respectfully signed by the citizens of Westmoreland county, in Virginia. Mr. C. said it was stated that, if time had been allowed, nine-tenths of the citizens of that county would have signed it. The memorial protests against the adoption of the sub-treasury system, and asks, earnestly asks, that a bank of the United States may be established. The memorial (Mr. C. said) was drawn with more than usual acumen, and showed that the signers had a full knowledge of all the advantages to be derived from such an institution. He could not resist the pleasure of reading a short extract to the senate:

"A national bank we believe to be the only true, proper, certain, safe, efficient, practical, and practicable measure to remedy the distresses of the country, and to supply it with a permanent, uniform, and universal medium of circulation and exchange. Its efficiency has been tried, and why should we doubt it? Experience has proved its utility, and why should we refuse to be governed by its light? And our distresses, when deprived of it, have been felt from one extremity of the union to the other. Should we not be admonished by these facts? Should we obstinately resist the influence of these overwhelming truths?"

It will be recollected (said Mr. C.) that Westmoreland gave birth to the father of his country, which he thought entitled it to more than ordinary respect. The memorial was signed by persons chiefly agricultural, and, no doubt, would have been sent to one of the two senators from that state, for whom the signers entertained great respect; but as they were known to entertain sentiments not very friendly to such an institution, they thought it best to transmit it through a different organ. He would move that it be laid on the table and printed, which motion was concurred in.

Mr. Rives, from the committee on naval affairs, reported house bill for the relief of captain John Downs, without amendment.

Mr. Clay, of Alabama, from the committee on public lands, reported "the bill confirming certain entries of public lands, permitted to be made by registers and receivers of land districts, under the belief that the tract had been offered at public sale," which had been received from the house with amendments, and recommended a concurrence therein; which was agreed to.

Mr. Wall from the committee on the library, to whom had been referred a resolution in relation to the Madison papers, reported the same, with an amendment, which was adopted, and the resolution ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. White, from the committee on Indian affairs, reported the bill from the house "to repeal a part of the second section of an act entitled an act to provide for the organization of the department of Indian affairs," with an amendment. On this bill and amendment a debate ensued, in which Messrs. White, Lyon, Tipton, and others, took part, when the bill and amendment were ordered to a third reading.

Mr. Benton, from the committee on military affairs, to whom were referred the amendments of the house to the bill to increase the present military establishment of the United States and for other purposes, reported the same, and recommended a concurrence therein.

Mr. Pierce, though friendly to an increase of the army, was decidedly opposed to some of the provisions of the bill, and addressed the senate at some length denouncing them as invidious, unequal, and unjust to officers in the line, and partial to those of the staff.

Mr. Crittenden also spoke against the provisions, and said that the only way to arrest these abuses was to reject the bill itself, which had better be altogether lost than that such injustice should be done. He enumerated at length those abuses which appeared to him most glaring in their effects.

Mr. Benton explained the merits of the bill, and contended that while it bore on its face a great apparent increase of expenditure, it would in fact be a means of saving to the government.

The question having been taken on concurring in the amendment of the house of representatives, it was carried in the affirmative; when

Mr. Benton obtained leave, by unanimous consent, to bring in a supplemental bill; which was read, and ordered to a second reading, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the act to which this is a supplement shall be, and the same hereby is, explained, limited, and modified as follows:

First. Nothing contained in said act shall be so construed as to allow to any officer additional rations for time past, commonly called back rations.

Second. The posts at which chaplains shall be allowed shall be limited to the number of twenty, and shall be first approved by the secretary of war, and shall be confined to places most destitute of instruction.

Third. That so much of said act as requires assistant quartermasters to be separated from the line, shall be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Fourth. That the number of lieutenants authorized by said act to be added and transferred to the ordnance department shall be limited to twelve.

Fifth. That the monthly pay of a private soldier, raised by said act to eight dollars, shall be limited and fixed at seven dollars a month; one dollar thereof shall be retained, as provided for in said act.

Sixth. That no compensation shall be allowed to officers of the engineer department for disbursements of public money, while superintending public works.

Seventh. That the three commissaries of subsistence, authorized by said act, shall not be separated from the line of the army.

Eighth. That so much of said act as allows one hundred and sixty acres of land to soldiers who shall have served ten consecutive years, be, and the same is hereby repealed.

Mr. Wright, then moved that the senate proceed to consider the amendment of the house to the bill to modify the last clause of the fifth section of the deposit act of the 23d June, 1836, when

Mr. Webster said he should concur most readily in this amendment of the house. It gave him the truest pleasure to learn that the house had rejected the second section of the bill, and that it had done so by so decisive a majority. The house had thus arrested the surrender of all control over the public treasure to the executive. It had interposed its own high authority in a most constitutional and salutary manner; a manner highly becoming the representatives of a free people. For all this (said Mr. W.) I feel highly grateful; and at this result, I think, the whole country may be justly congratulated.

We hold on yet to the true doctrine, and the important republican principle of legislative control and superintendence of the public money; and I hope, sir, we shall continue to hold on. And now, sir, as to what remains in this bill, I think it is of no great importance. It will do no harm, and some good. It relieves the incapacity of being received at the treasury from bills of banks which have issued small bills, provided such banks shall issue no such small bills after the first day of October next. This time is much too short, even if it were judicious to fix any definite time, which I do not think it is. The banks generally will not be able to discontinue the use of small bills within that period; nor will they have sufficient inducement to do it. The inconvenience will fall, not principally on them, but on the people; as no man will be able, if the law is regarded, to pay his postage account, or any other debt due to government, by any bank notes within his reach or command.

This bill, therefore, does little, very little indeed, to remove the evils and inconveniences which are felt, and which must continue to be felt.

Then again, sir, remember that the new treasury circular is still in force; and that no bank note of any bank, if it be less than twenty dollars, can be received at all. This greatly impairs the privilege secured by the resolution of 1816. At the post office and at the land offices, no paper less than twenty dollars can be received. I have already, again and again, laid this before the view of gentlemen. I have asked them if they are contented with this state of things, and if they think the people will be contented. Will the small purchasers at the land offices be satisfied with this? Is it right to expect it? Certainly, sir, this is not what I proposed for them, nor what I thought their interest required.

If we mean to maintain the principle of the resolution of 1816—if we mean to make bank notes receivable at all, why should we embarrass and thwart its operation by rejecting all notes under so high a sum as twenty dollars? Why not stop at five dollars, the point at which the state banks have arrived.

However, I have addressed the senate repeatedly on this part of the subject before; and the people, I trust, every where, will understand that I, and those who usually act with me, have done all in our power to give to them, in every part of the country, the just benefits of the resolution of 1816, without unreasonable embarrassment.

One word, sir, on another part of the subject. This bill leaves the deposit system in full operation in some places and some states, and it leaves it impossible to be adopted in other states. Our actual system, therefore, will be wholly unequal; it will be one thing in one part of the country, and another thing in another part.

These evils, sir, and these inequalities cannot long exist. The country will demand their removal.

We break up then, sir, with no sub-treasury bill.

We break up with no special deposit bill.

We break up without having surrendered to the Executive the just control of congress over the public moneys.

We break up, having abolished the specie circular.

But we break up, nevertheless, leaving such provisions of law in existence, and such a treasury circular in existence, as must, in my opinion, very seriously embarrass the operations of business, especially in particular parts of the country.

And we break up, moreover, without having done any thing—any thing at all—towards establishing a paper currency, equivalent to specie, of universal credit, and of the same value in every part of the country. Till we establish such a currency as this, we shall not have performed a high and important duty, which, in my opinion, is solemnly binding upon us. Till we do this, that is not done which will effectually satisfy the country. Other things may be palliatives, but that thing alone can constitute effectual remedy and relief.

I will only add, sir, because I believe it is true, that if a measure calculated to carry into full effect the abolition of the specie circular—such a measure as I had the honor to propose to the senate—could have been presented in a manner to be acted on, without delay or embarrassment to the popular branch of congress, it would have succeeded, in that branch, by a very decided majority. The published proceedings of that body sufficiently show this.

Mr. Norvell rose to express his dissent to the motion to concur with the house of representatives in striking out the second section of the bill. He could not consent to give a vote which implied the opinion that the local banks, over which this government had no control, ought to be the depositories of its moneys, and of the revenues of the nation, and on that question he asked the yeas and nays. Mr. N. afterwards withdrew the call.

Mr. Preston renewed the call for the yeas and nays. He desired to record his own vote at least on so important a measure.

Mr. Clay said, though he had not obtained all that was desired, he should vote most cordially and heartily for the amendment. Without it, or at least in the shape the bill was sent from the senate, it left all to executive discretion; but, as it then was, it gave some semblance of legal control over the subject.

The yeas and nays having been taken, there appeared, for concurring 29, against it 17—as follows: YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, of Ken., Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, Knight, McKean, Merrick, Mouton, Nicholas, Preston, Rives, Roane, Robbins, Robinson, Rugles, Sevier, Smith, of Ind., Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, White, Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Clay, of Ala., King, Linn, Lumpkin, Lyon, Niles, Norvell, Pierce, Smith, of Connecticut, Strange, Trotter, Wall, Williams, Young—17.

The bill regulating the pay and emoluments of brevet officers was read a third time; and on the question, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. Buchanan said that he had as high an opinion of the merits of gen. Jones as any man could have, and that if the senator from South Carolina, who had the bill under his charge, would consent that the bill should be so amended that gen. Jones should receive brevet pay from and after the passage of the act, it should receive his support; but he had no idea of giving it a retrospective hearing.

Mr. Sevier said they had defeated a bill in the senate the other day in relation to the same matter—giving brevet pay to gen. Macomb. He thought both bills should share the same fate; and he therefore moved its indefinite postponement. Some explanations having been given by Mr. Preston, the motion for indefinite postponement was withdrawn.

Mr. P. went into a long explanation of the services of gen. Jones, and the claims his gallantry had upon his country. He said, however, that he would not object to the suggestion of the senator from Pennsylvania, on the old principle that half a loaf was better than no bread.

Mr. Lyon renewed the motion for indefinite postponement; and the question was taken by yeas and nays, and lost; 14 voting for it, and 21 against it.

The bill was then passed by a vote of 21 yeas, to 16 nays.

On motion of Mr. Clay, of Ala., the title of the bill was so amended as to read "An act to regulate the pay of the adjutant general when a brevet officer."

The bills mentioned in our last as ordered to be engrossed, were severally read a third time, and passed.

The resolution for the printing of the Madison papers was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Buchanan, from the committee on foreign relations, presented a report from that committee of considerable length, in which they unanimously recommended to the senate the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That, after a careful examination and deliberate consideration of the whole controversy between the United States and Great Britain relative to the northeastern boundary of the former, the senate does not entertain a doubt of the entire practicability of running and marking that boundary in strict conformity with the stipulations of the definitive treaty of peace of seventeen hundred and eighty three; and entertain a perfect conviction of the justice and validity of the title of the United States to the full extent of all the territory in dispute between the two powers.

Resolved, further, That, considering that more than half a century has elapsed since the conclusion of that treaty; considering the extraordinary delay which has hitherto marked the negotiations and proceedings of the government of the two countries, in their endeavor amicably to settle the controversy; and considering the danger of mutual irritation and collisions upon the border of kindred and friendly nations from further procrastination, the senate cannot forbear to express an earnest desire that the pending negotiation should be brought to a close, and the final decision of the dispute be made as early as practicable.

Resolved, That, as it would be inexpedient for the United States to proceed, upon their separate authority, to survey and mark the northeastern boundary, until all reasonable means of effecting that object by the consent and concurrence of both parties shall have been exhausted, the "bill to provide for surveying the northeastern boundary line of the United States according to the treaty of seventeen hundred and eighty-three" ought not to pass; and it is therefore ordered that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, rose to say that he had been very anxious that the report should be read and weighed, with all the attention and consideration belonging to so grave and important a subject; that he would take the opportunity to say, while he was up, that the question had been most deliberately and carefully examined in the committee; that the report, which was the work of the chairman, was prepared with very great ability; that much labor had been devoted to it, in the short space that had been allowed, and which was the more creditable to its author, amid his other various and pressing duties; and that it was well calculated to advance his high character before the country.

He was anxious, he said, to take the sense of the senate upon the subject of the resolutions which were recommended, with as little delay as was possible.

Mr. Tallmadge followed, and observed that, as a member of the committee on foreign relations, he had carefully and attentively examined the subject of the report, and that he concurred entirely with the senator from Kentucky as to the talent and ability with which it was drawn up, and the manner in which it presented the great question. If, unhappily, (said Mr. T.) at any time hereafter, any collision should arise between the two countries, which he hoped most sincerely would be avoided, it was very important, in his view, that the people of the country should understand the merits of the controversy. They were set forth in that report in a condensed, and, at the same time, sufficiently complete and ample manner to enable them fully to comprehend and understand it. The report ought, therefore, to be widely and extensively circulated. It was calculated to unite and concentrate the sentiment of the country, if that occasion, which he earnestly deprecated, should ever arise. He should, therefore, move for the printing of an extra number of copies, the largest that should be thought proper; and he therefore moved for the printing of 10,000 extra copies; which, afterwards, at the suggestion of Mr. Williams, supported by other gentlemen, he increased to 20,000.

Mr. Rives also expressed his cordial and entire concurrence in the remarks which had been made by his colleagues on the committee. The report was drawn with distinguished ability, clearness, and force. The argument on both sides was fairly represented, and the paper would compare, to great advantage, with whatever had been written, that he had seen, upon the subject. It was very important that the merits of the question should be made familiar to the American mind; and no document, he conceived, was better calculated to enlighten and conduct it to sound conclusions. He should vote, therefore, with the greatest pleasure for the number of copies proposed by the gentleman from New-York, and for the highest number, in deed, any senator might deem it expedient to have published.

Mr. Williams said, the great importance of the question, and the able manner in which it was treated, and our right maintained in the report now made, induce me to desire that a larger number than that proposed by the senator from New-York should be printed. Every one must see that important results may grow out of the report and resolutions now adopted; and it is very desirable that as many of our citizens as can be induced to look at the question should have the means at hand of understanding it, and of being convinced that we are claiming our right, and nothing more. This report, coming from the committee on foreign relations, and from senators possessing the confidence of the nation, must carry conviction to the mind of every man who will read it, and, therefore, I would ask that twenty thousand copies may be ordered to be printed.

Mr. Allen said: I shall vote for the printing of the largest number of this report. It cannot be disguised that this controversy has already assumed a very imposing aspect; so much so, indeed, as to render it more than possible that the united energies of this people may be required in its future adjustment; and yet so exclusively local has the question been hitherto considered, that its discussion has excited public attention in no other quarter of the union than that more immediately interested in it. It has not, therefore, as yet, penetrated the interior of the country, or caught the attention of the great body of the American people. This state of things can no longer exist. The controversy has now taken a form that must interest, in its settlement, every citizen of the republic. I have heard, with deep attention, the discussion in the senate, and I can sincerely declare, that, in my judgment, no proposition was ever more free from embarrassment, or title better established, than is that of the state of Maine to every inch of the territory she claims. Inasmuch, therefore, as this controversy with Great Britain has assumed an aspect by no means auspicious to the future harmony of the two nations, I am for placing before our countrymen this report as evidence of the justice of our claims, and of the position which our government has taken, in order that the public judgment, and with it the public energies of the nation, may be concentrated in support of that claim, in any emergency to which its adjustment may give rise. With this view, I shall vote for the printing of the largest number.

Mr. Clay said that, among other considerations which operated with him, he confessed that he wished the subject to be acted on this day. (Mr. C. was understood to allude to its being 4th of July.) As he advanced in life, he acknowledged the influence of feelings and sentiments which might be regarded as bordering on superstition. There was, at all events, it appeared to him, peculiar fitness in resolving, on the 4th of July, 1838, to maintaining the integrity and inviolability of the old thirteen United States, whose independence was proclaimed on that memorable day.

The question was then put on the adoption of the resolutions reported by the committee, and they were agreed to nem. con.; and, on motion, twenty thousand additional copies of the report and resolutions were ordered to be printed.

The senate then adjourned.

July 5. Mr. Webster presented a memorial very numerous signed on the subject of the explosion of steamboat boilers.

On motion of Mr. Roane, the senate concurred in the amendment of the house to the bill to establish a criminal court in the District of Columbia.

Mr. Tipton, from the committee on conference of the two houses on their disagreeing votes in relation to certain amendments of the house to the senate bill making appropriations for certain roads in Wisconsin, made a report from that committee, advising the senate to concur in all the amendments of the house except the fifth, and in that also when modified as proposed by the committee.

The senate accordingly concurred in this report of the joint committee.

The senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the house to the bill to provide for the better security of the lives and property of persons on board vessels propelled wholly or in part by steam.

Mr. Grundy stated that the special committee who framed this bill had examined these amendments with great care, and regarded them, with the exception of the last, as an evident improvement of the bill, and taking them all together, they deemed it best for the senate to concur in them all.

Mr. Clayton, objected to the last amendment of the house, that, after the owners of the boats had complied with all the provisions of the bill, they were still made responsible for the acts of others, over which they had no immediate control. This involved a principle which Mr. C. could not approve.

Mr. Webster was understood to argue that the great and numerous disasters on board steamboats were not owing to any necessary danger attending the use of steam. Any one, he said, might be satisfied of this who would look at the steam engine as used for other purposes, in mines, on railroads, and in manufactories. How did it happen that in all these cases the use of steam was so much more innocent than on board steamboats? If such explosions should take place in the manufactories of England, what would be the consequences? Thousands of lives almost would be lost at a single explosion. The causes of steamboat disasters were to be found in the nature of the service in which steam was employed, which had led to mad competition and criminal negligence. A preventive law, therefore, must apply itself to these proximate causes, which were to be found either in the insufficiency of the boat itself, the insufficient thickness of the metal of the boilers, which were a great deal thinner than in England, in the criminal desire of competition, or in the criminal negligence which now often occurred, and which was, in effect, so disastrous that it would render useless all possible inventions beforehand to prevent explosions.

What was the remedy for such negligence? It must be looked for to the owners of steamboats, and no doubt they were individually responsible, in a civil point of view, for every loss by such disasters. It would fall on the owners of the boats by the principles of the common law; and had Mr. W. been present when the bill was at the proper stage, he would have proposed to modify it accordingly. It was the English rule, and Mr. W. thought it the true one, that is, civilly, that whenever, by a steamboat explosion, persons or property were injured, the losers or injured persons were entitled to recover of the owners, and the fact of an explosion was taken as prima facie evidence of carelessness. If congress did not come to this, they would have done nothing. If there had now been time, Mr. W. would have proposed that the fact of an explosion should make the owners responsible for damage and loss. But it was better to retain the last amendment of the house than nothing; and if the senator from Delaware would let that now pass, Mr. W. would at the next session be ready to unite with him in making further provisions.

Mr. Clayton said the senator seemed not to be aware that the bill, as it was, was pretty much as Mr. W. proposed, holding the owners civilly responsible. Mr. Webster said he knew it; but there was no adequate provision for obtaining proof. Mr. Smith, of Indiana, said congress never could do any thing on this subject till they had touched the question of proof; and he had before expressed his opinion to that effect. Mr. S. then and now was in favor of making an explosion prima facie evidence of negligence, throwing it on the opposite side to show that it had not occurred by negligence. He hoped this bill would pass, as it might have some effect in terrorem, though he doubted whether it would have any adequate effect.

Again, Mr. S. had before argued, and he still insisted, that there ought to be some penalty provided for the incipient stages of steamboat disasters, such as excess of speed of steamboat racing. But he would at present concur in the amendments, hoping the bill would have some small effect ad terrorem.

Mr. Roane expressed a doubt whether congress had a right to all the jurisdiction claimed by the bill. Their power, he argued, extended only to cases of intercourse with foreign nations, and between the several states. He therefore moved to add to the amendments of the house a provision that this bill should take effect in no case of steamboats navigating wholly within the limits of a single state. This motion was negatived without a division.

Mr. Webster now moved to strike out the last amendment of the house, and insert a provision making an explosion or other disaster full prima facie evidence of negligence, sufficient for conviction unless disproved. After a few remarks by Messrs. Grundy and Webster, this amendment was agreed to, the senate concurred in the amendments of the house so amended, and the bill was sent back to the house.

Several bills from the house were read twice and referred.

Mr. Davis from the committee on commerce, reported a bill to regulate the sale of wrecked property within the collection district of Key West. Mr. D. said he did not expect this bill to pass at the present session; but he asked that it might be read, laid on the table, and printed, for consideration at the ensuing session, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill to repeal the second section of the act to provide for the organization of the department of Indian affairs, &c. was read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Merrick, the bill authorizing a test of the steam engine of an individual, made without a boiler, was taken up, amended, on motion of Mr. Ruzgles, so as to extend to any engine without a boiler, and, so amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. Rives, the bill to establish and regulate navy rations and for other purposes was taken up, (Ayes 17, noes 11,) discussed at much length by Messrs. Southard, Crittenden, Buchanan, Benton, Bayard, and Niles, (chiefly on the question of the compensation of pursers,) and, on motion of Mr. Niles, finally laid on the table: Ayes 18, noes 14.

The bill in regard to the patent office was taken up, discussed at much length on various points by Messrs. Ruggles, Clay, of Kentucky, Davis, Clay, of Alabama, and Sevier, and, on motion of Mr. Sevier, finally laid on the table.

The following bills were considered, ordered to a third reading, and, by consent, subsequently read a third time, and passed:

The bill to regulate the pay of masters in the navy.

The bill directing the investment of certain funds belonging to Indian tribes in state stocks, &c.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of John Branan, late of Huntsville.

The bill exempting from duty the coal which may be on board steamboats or vessels propelled by steam, on their arrival at any port of the United States.

Mr. Hubbard offered a resolution that, at the second session of each congress, the senate should proceed with their calendar of private bills (originating in the senate) of the preceding session, in the same manner as if there had been no recess. Laid on the table, after a brief debate.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of Baron de Kalb was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and subsequently read a third time, and passed.

The bill for the relief of the heirs or representative of Joseph Morris, (understood to be a claim for seven years' half pay to a child of the widow of Mr. Morris, by another and subsequent husband,) was much discussed, and laid over to the next session, on motion of Mr. Clay, of Kentucky.

The bills for the relief of Jacob Hanks and of Alfred Westall.

And the bill supplementary to the late bill to increase the army of the United States, were severally considered, ordered to a third reading, and, by consent, read a third time, and passed.

The senate adjourned, after an executive session.

July 6. After the reading of the journal,

Mr. Davis rose and said that he was necessarily absent for a very short time, and, while out of the chamber, the vote was taken upon several resolutions then reported by the committee on foreign affairs respecting the north-eastern boundary line of the United States. Mr. D. said he supposed the report would be made in the course of the day; but he had no anticipation that they would be called up at that time. In the journal of the senate it was stated that the vote in favor of the resolution was unanimous. Though the yeas and nays had not been taken, it was called a unanimous vote on the journal, from which it could not be known whether Mr. D. was in favor of the resolution or not.

The course which Mr. D. had pursued on this subject was well known to the senate and the country. He had advocated the introduction of the bill for the survey of the boundary, moved by the senator from Maine, and urged its passage, though the committee had come to a different conclusion. Mr.

D. would now observe, that he had heard the report of the committee on this subject read, and on the great question of the national right he fully concurred with it, and considered it a very able and conclusive argument, honorable to the gentlemen who drew it up. Mr. D. also concurred in the first and second resolutions, but not in the last deciding against the passage of the bill. Mr. D. now wished to put himself right, by appearing consistent with himself while his opinions remained unchanged, and let his constituents understand that he was not included in the vote in favor of the last resolution, postponing the bill, and called unanimous.

Mr. Davis, from the committee on commerce, reported a joint resolution directing the secretary of the treasury to cause to be made, under the superintendence of Mr. Hassler, one standard balance for each of the several states, and to cause them to be delivered to the respective governors, for the use of the respective states.

Mr. D. stated that congress directed, by a joint resolution in 1836, that a set of weights and measures should be made, as a standard for each of the states; and they had mostly been prepared, and were nearly ready for distribution; and what Mr. D. now desired was, that a sufficient number of standard-balances should go with the weights, so that each state should have a standard balance.

The resolution, by consent, was carried through its primary stages, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The Chair presented a communication from the treasury department, in pursuance of a senate resolution of 7th February last, showing what money had been lost by the failure to pay duty bonds, from March, 1835, to January, 1838. Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hubbard, Mr. Pierce, and Mr. Wall, reported a variety of private bills from committees referred to them.

On motion of Mr. Southard, the committee on naval affairs were discharged from the further consideration of a number of private memorials.

Mr. Hubbard asked the unanimous consent of the senate to introduce a joint resolution providing that the banks of the District of Columbia should not be required to redeem their five dollar notes before the 1st of December next, any law to the contrary notwithstanding, unless the banks in the adjoining states should resume before that time.

Mr. Allen objecting, the resolution could not be received.

Mr. Davis, from the committee on commerce, reported the bill from the house referred to them, making provision for the improvement of harbors and the removal of obstructions at the mouths of certain rivers, for 1838, with amendments, the chief of which were the striking out of the $70,000 for Red river, and inserting an appropriation for the benefit of Buffalo, New York.

Mr. D. asked that the amendments might forthwith be considered, but this being objected to for the want of a certain document, the bill was for the present laid on the table.

A conversation of considerable length, by a large number of senators, here occurred on the question whether this day was to be regarded as one of the three last days of the session, in which, by the 16th joint rule, bills, &c. could not pass between the two houses. It appeared to be the almost unanimous opinion of those who spoke, and it was also the decision of the chair, that Sunday is not to be regarded as one of the legislative days, except on extraordinary occasions, such as did not now exist, and, therefore, this was to be deemed one of the three last days of the session.

Mr. Norvell, in conclusion, moved to suspend for this day the 16th joint rule in question. Negatived: yeas 18, noes 23. On motion of Mr. Smith, of Ia., (before made and laid on the table,) the vote rejecting the bill to establish a new judicial district in Florida was reconsidered, and the bill passed without debate.

The following bills from the house were considered and rejected: The bill for the relief of the owners of the schooner Three Brothers. The bill for the relief of Squier Stearns. The bill to provide for the construction of the Cumberland road through Salem and Lewisburg, Ohio. Laid on the table. The following bills from the house were considered and ordered to a third reading: The bill for the relief of Samuel Potter and James Cassidy. For the relief of Richard Frisby. For the relief of A. Quarter and Albert, of New Orleans. The senate took up the bill from the house for the relief of the legal representatives of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris.

This bill was founded on a contract by the government with the original claimants, to erect a fort on Dauphin island, the erection of which was discontinued on the purchase of Florida; and the contractors applying for damages, the case was referred to three special commissioners, Messrs. Gratiot, Thornton, and another, who reported in favor of paying the claimants $131,000. This bill proposed to allow them only $33,000, and an amendment from the senate committee further stipulated that payments from this sum should first be made to the various sub-contractors. The question, therefore, was, whether the government should adjudicate between the principal and sub-contractors, or whether this was not the more appropriate business of the judicial tribunals.

This question was discussed at much length by Messrs. Rives, Young, Clay, of Kentucky, Hubbard, Roane, Sevier, Crittenden, and Tallmadge, and, on motion of Mr. Sevier, the bill was laid on the table by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, of Ala., Clayton, Cuthbert, Fulton, Hubbard, King, Lumpkin, Nicholas, Niles, Robinson, Smith, of Connecticut, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Wall, Williams, Young—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, of Kentucky, Crittenden, Merrick, Mouton, Preston, Rives, Roane, Southard, Trotter, Webster, White—12.

The senate proceeded to consider the bill from the house to establish certain post routes, and discontinue others.

Various amendments from the senate committee were considered, and agreed to.

Mr. Clay, of Alabama, moved to strike out the second section of the bill, which provided for a speedy suppression of the express mail; and in support of this motion, in addition to his own remarks, gave a summary of a paper which he had received from the department, in favor of continuing the express mail.

Mr. Crittenden having briefly opposed the motion, it was carried in the affirmative (that is, to continue the express mail) by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Clay, of Ala., Fulton, Hubbard, King, Lumpkin, Lyon, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Preston, Robinson, Sevier, Smith, of Connecticut, Strange, Wright—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Merrick, Pierce, Roane, Ruggles, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Wall, White, Williams, Young—13.

On motion of Mr. Hubbard, the senate resolved to take a recess to-day and to-morrow, from half past two o'clock till half past four.

The senate now took a recess accordingly.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. Davis moved to take up the harbor bill reported by him this morning from the committee on commerce, with several amendments. This motion, being opposed, was carried in the affirmative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Lyon, Merrick, Niles, Norvell, Robbins, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, Williams, Wright—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clay, of Ala., Fulton, King, Lumpkin, Nicholas, Pierce, Preston, Trotter, Wall, White—11.

Mr. Davis gave a brief and chiefly general explanation of the bill, stating that it was founded on recommendations and estimates from the departments; that the works contemplated had all been begun, the bill merely aiming to prevent damage and loss; and that $1,400,000, were appropriated in all, $922,000 for western, and $536,000 for Atlantic works.

The appropriation for Red river having been reduced, on motion of Mr. Sevier, from $70,000 to $5,000, and then stricken out wholly, by yeas 19, noes not counted, Mr. Preston spoke earnestly against the whole bill, as inexpedient and extravagant under the depressed circumstances of the country, and moved that it be indefinitely postponed. Mr. Clay, of Alabama, also opposed the bill at length, chiefly on grounds of economy under existing circumstances.

Mr. Davis replied, and spoke earnestly in favor of the bill. Mr. Norvell also spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Preston again spoke at length against the bill. Mr. Buchanan urged action on the bill without further debate, and said he should at first vote against its indefinite postponement, and then, if the friends of the bill should protract the debate, he should, on a second trial, vote for its indefinite postponement.

Mr. Wright also urged action on the bill without delay. Mr. Preston spoke further in opposition to the bill.

The question was now put on the indefinite postponement of the bill, and decided in the negative, as follows.

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Clay, of Alabama, Crittenden, King, Lumpkin, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Pierce, Preston, Rives, Smith, of Connecticut, Strange, Trotter, Wall, White—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Buchanan, Clay, of Kentucky, Davis, Fulton, Hubbard, Merrick, Norvell, Robbins, Ruggles, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, Williams, Wright, Young—21.

The next amendment from the committee was an appropriation of $48,000 for a sea-wall to Buffalo harbor.

Mr. Benton opposed the whole bill. Mr. Tallmadge, Mr. Davis, and Mr. Webster, described the circumstances which made a pressing demand for this appropriation, and advocated its adoption.

This amendment was then rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Davis, Lyon, Merrick, Norvell, Robbins, Ruggles, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, Tipton, Wall, Webster, Wright—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, of Ala., Crittenden, Hubbard, King, Lumpkin, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Pierce, Preston, Rives, Roane, Strange, Trotter, White, Williams, Young—21.

Mr. Wright, having offered several minor amendments, which were agreed to, moved to strike out the $20,000 for the improvement of the Cumberland, above Nashville.

This motion was strongly opposed by Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, and Mr. Crittenden; but it was carried in the affirmative by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, of Alabama, Hubbard, King, Lyon, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Pierce, Rives, Roane, Strange, Trotter, Wall, White, Williams, Wright—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Fulton, Merrick, Preston, Robbins, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tipton, Webster, Young—15.

Mr. Wright then offered an additional section, as a proviso to the bill, precisely in the following words:

And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the officers charged with the execution of this act, and with the making of contracts for the expenditures authorized by it, to have particular regard to the state of the treasury, and its ability to meet the current ordinary expenses of the government, as well as the calls which may be made under the said contracts; and, under the direction of the president of the United States, so arrange the said expenditures, and the times and amount of payment, so far as the means of the treasury can be anticipated, as that the advances or payments under this act shall not interfere with, or delay the payments under the appropriations for the regular, ordinary, annual expenses of the government.

This amendment was advocated by Mr. Wright, Mr. Benton, and Mr. Niles, and earnestly opposed by Mr. Preston, Mr. Webster, Mr. Crittenden, Mr. Davis, and Mr. Norvell, as vesting an absolute and unconstitutional power of appropriation in the hands and at the discretion of the executive.

This amendment was agreed to by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, of Alabama, Fulton, Hubbard, King, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Pierce, Roane, Sevier, Strange, Trotter, Wall, Wright, Young—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Merrick, Norvell, Rives, Robbins, Ruggles, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, White—16.

Mr. Clay, of Alabama, moved to amend the bill by adding an appropriation of $56,000 and add, for the improvement of the Tennessee river, in Alabama, (the canal around the Muscle Shoals,) and, in addition to some remarks, read a document in favor of the object. Rejected without a division. Mr. Merrick also offered an amendment, which was rejected. The question recurring on ordering the bill to a third reading, Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, spoke with great earnestness against the additional section to the bill, offered as above by Mr. Wright, as altogether unparalleled in legislation, and expressed his regret that it would compel him to vote against the whole bill. Mr. Merrick also expressed his views to the same effect. Mr. Webster also spoke in the deepest reprobation of the obnoxious section, but said he could not persuade himself on account of it to appear in any way to abandon a system which he had supported for twelve years.

The question was now put on ordering the bill to a third reading, and the vote resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Buchanan, Clayton, Davis, Fulton, Hubbard, Lyon, Niles, Norvell, Robbins, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Tallmadge, Tipton, Wall, Webster, Wright, Young—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Clay, of Ala., Clay, of Kentucky, Crittenden, King, Merrick, Mouton, Nicholas, Pierce, Preston, Rives, Roane, Ruggles, Strange, Trotter, White, Williams—18.

So the harbor bill was declared by the Chair to be rejected.

On motion of Mr. Benton, the president of the United States was requested to communicate to the senate a report of the last campaign in Florida under general Jesup. Also, at the next session, a statement of all works in the improvement of harbors and rivers which have been upwards of three years in progress, with estimates of the probable amounts severally necessary to their completion. The senate took up the senate bill to remove the surveyor general's office of the public lands from Cincinnati to St. Joseph's, in Michigan, with an amendment by the house, striking out the "St. Joseph's" and inserting "Michigan City" in Indiana. Mr. Tipton moved that the senate concur in this amendment.

Mr. Lyon moved to lay the bill on the table; which motion was done accordingly by yeas 23, noes 8. Mr. Ruggles asked the unanimous consent of the senate to introduce a joint resolution to authorize the employment of additional clerks in the patent office. Objected to by Mr. Clay, of Alabama, and laid on the table.

Mr. Strange made a report from the committee on the memorial of Francis P. Blair. Laid on the table.

The senate concurred in the amendments of the house to the bill to revive the act to incorporate the medical society of the District of Columbia.

Also, in the amendments of the house to the bill to change the time of holding the U. S. circuit court for the district of East Tennessee; (the amendments changing the time in Maryland.)

A message was received from the house, asking the senate to suspend the 16th joint rule so far as to allow the senate to receive their joint resolution, making an appropriation ($48,000) for the purchase of certain hooks for the members of that house, and also to receive their bill to increase and regulate the term of the U. S. circuit and district courts for the western district of New York.

After an earnest conversation by Messrs. Hubbard, Bayard, Benton, and Clay, of Alabama, against the request, and by Messrs. Tallmadge, Sevier, Merrick, and Southard, in favor of granting it, the message was indefinitely postponed by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benton, Brown, Clay, of Alabama, Clayton, Hubbard, King, Lyon, Mouton, Niles, Pierce, Strange, White, Williams, Young—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Merrick, Norvell, Preston, Rives, Roane, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Smith, of Ind., Southard, Tallmadge, Tipton, Wall, Webster—15.

The bills ordered to a third reading in the morning were now severally read a third time and passed. The senate then adjourned.

July 7. Mr. Davis presented a communication from the chamber of commerce of the city of New York, with the proceedings of a meeting of the members of that body, held on the 5th instant, to take into consideration the late report of the committee on commerce, (drawn up by Mr. Davis,) on the subject of light-houses; in considering which they passed several resolutions, accompanying the communication, in which resolutions they highly approved of that report. Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Crittenden presented a petition. (Unheard.)

On motion of Mr. Wright, the clerk authorized to be employed in the service of the senate by the resolution of October, 1838, were continued till otherwise ordered by the senate. Various bills, &c. referred to committees were reported by Messrs. Roane, Tipton, Fulton and Clay, of Ala.

Mr. Wright, from the committee on finance, reported the bill from the house referred to them, making appropriations for the annual expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Indian tribes for the year 1838, with minor amendments, which were explained by Mr. W. and agreed to. Mr. White moved further to amend the bill by adding an appropriation of $260,000 for the support of such Indians removed west of the Mississippi as are unable to subvert themselves, to be distributed under the direction of the secretary of war. This amendment was earnestly advocated by Messrs. White and Sevier, and opposed by Messrs. Niles, Clay, of Ala., Norvell, and Allen, and agreed to by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Benton, Buchanan, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Fulton, King, Linn, Mouton, Nicholas, Preston, Rives, Roane, Robinson, Sevier, Smith, of Ind., Southard, Tallmadge, Webster, White—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Brown, Clay, of Ala., Clay, of Ken., Hubbard, Lyon, Niles, Norvell, Pierce, Robbins, Ruggles, Smith of Connecticut, Strange, Wall—14.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and, by consent, read a third time and passed.

The Chair presented from the treasury department, in pursuance of a senate resolution of 5th June last, statements of the annual expenditures in collecting the customs on imports for the last twenty years, discriminating between the different kinds. Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

A message was received from the house, requesting the senate to suspend the 16th joint rule so far as to receive from the house the bill to increase and regulate the term for holding the United States circuit and district courts for the northern district of New York. In this request the senate concurred, the bill was received, and, by consent, carried through and passed.

Mr. Merrick, in compliance with a desire of some of the friends of the harbor bill, moved that the vote rejecting it should be reconsidered, and expressed the hope that it would be so modified that he could vote for it. The vote was accordingly reconsidered, and the bill was taken up by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Buchanan, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Fulton, Hubbard, Linn, Lyon, Merrick, Niles, Norvell, Robbins, Ruggles, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, Williams, Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Clay, of Alabama, Cuthbert, King, Nicholas, Pierce, Preston, Rives, Roane, Smith, of Conn., Strange, Wall, White—14.

Mr. Bayard moved to reconsider the vote on the additional section to the bill offered by Mr. Wright. The Chair decided that this was out of order, as Mr. B. was in the minority on that vote. Mr. Bayard then moved to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out all that part of Mr. Wright's amendment including and following the words "and under the direction of the president;" that is, all which had any direct reference to the president of the United States. Mr. Norvell expressed the hope that the friends of that amendment would agree thus to modify it. Mr. Preston said he supposed this would be the test question, and he therefore demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered. Mr. Wright gave his assent to the motion, as the part of his amendment remaining would, he thought, comprehend all that he intended by the whole. Mr. Merrick, not being satisfied with the extent of the motion of Mr. Bayard, said he should not feel committed to vote for the bill unless the whole amendment should be stricken out. Mr. Ruggles said, if all that Mr. Wright intended would be included in the remaining part of the amendment, then nothing would have been gained. He, therefore, moved to strike out the whole amendment. Negated: Ayes 10, noes not counted. Mr. Niles then moved to amend the instructions, by requiring that the whole of Mr. Wright's amendment should be stricken out, and a substitute inserted, providing that on all single appropriations over $12,000, fifty per cent. only should be expended in 1838, and the remainder in 1839. (So modified, on suggestions from several senators.)

On motion of Mr. Allen, the instructions were further amended, by requiring that the $48,000 for Buffalo, rejected last night, should be inserted, (Mr. A. having obtained new light on the subject from a document which was read at his request, and the contents of which Mr. Davis said he had stated yesterday three times over.)

Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, moved to include the $20,000, rejected last night, for the Tennessee, above Nashville. Negated: Ayes 12, noes 19.

The question was then put on Mr. Bayard's motion, modified as above, to recommit the bill with instructions, as above, and it was decided in the affirmative as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Buchanan, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Fulton, Hubbard, King, Linn, Lyon, Merrick, Mouton, Niles, Norvell, Robbins, Sevier, Smith, of Conn., Smith, of Ind., Southard, Tallmadge, Tipton, Webster, Williams, Wright, Young—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clay, of Ala., Cuthbert, Nicholas, Pierce, Preston, Rives, Roane, Strange, Trotter, Wall, White—12.

So the bill was recommitted, and, on motion of Mr. Davis, the committee had leave to sit while the senate were in session.

Mr. Davis subsequently reported the bill modified by the committee on commerce according to their instructions.

On motion of Mr. Rives, the senate proceeded to consider the bill to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants.

The question being on an amendment from the committee, increasing the amount of land from 200,000, acres to 300,000—

The bill and amendment were discussed passim by Messrs. Clay, of Alabama, Allen, Rives, Hubbard, Buchanan, Benton, Preston, and Clay, of Kentucky.

The amendment was rejected: Yeas 17, nays 21; and the bill was then ordered to a third reading.

The senate then took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

On motion of Mr. Pierce, all the pension bills from the house which had been favorably reported on by the senate committees were taken up, considered, and ordered to a third reading.

A bill, unfavorably reported on, in behalf of the heirs of a captain Hunter, was taken up, and Mr. Crittenden, in advocating the bill, stated that, in the revolutionary war, being asked by his men the meaning of sine qua non, captain Hunter told them that it meant the three principal islands in Passamaquoddy bay, which were never to be given up. The bill notwithstanding, was given up, or rejected, on ordering it to a third reading: Yeas 16, nays 19.

On motion of Mr. Davis, the senate took up the bill for the improvement of harbors and rivers, with the amendments as reported from committee, according to their instructions, striking out the section ordered by Mr. Wright, to give discretion over the appropriations to the executive, and inserting in lieu thereof a provision that, if the public service should require it, only fifty per cent. of each appropriation above $12,000 should be expended in 1838, and the remaining half in 1839; also inserting $43,000 for a sea-wall at Buffalo, New York.

These amendments were agreed to, and the bill, in this form, was ordered to a third reading, by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Buchanan, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Davis, Fulton, Hubbard, Lyon, Merrick, Niles, Norvell, Robbins, Ruggles, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, Tipton, Wall, Webster, Williams, Wright, Young—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Clay, of Alabama, Crittenden, King, Mouton, Nicholas, Pierce, Preston, Roane, Strange, White—11.

The bill was subsequently read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Roane, the senate took up the bill (yeas 16, nays 12) appropriating not more than $15,000 for the erection of a United States court house in Alexandria, D. C. Mr. Clay moved to reduce the appropriation to $5,000 (rejected), and then to $10,000. (also rejected:) Ayes 13, noes 17. The bill was then ordered to a third reading.

Mr. Merrick moved to take up the bill from the house for the relief of the heirs of Robert Fulton. Negated.

On motion of Mr. Hubbard, the senate took up the bill from the house making appropriations for fortifications for the year 1838. The amendments to the bill offered by the senate committee were agreed to. Mr. Wall offered a proposition to follow the appropriation of $40,000 for Fort Delaware, on Pea Patch island, in the Delaware river, authorizing the executive to quiet and secure the title of the United States to the soil, by purchase or inquest, as to him should appear best. A long and earnest discussion followed on the amendment, and on the subject generally, in which Messrs. Wall, Hubbard, Clay, of Kentucky, Bayard, Buchanan, Clayton, Southard, and Webster participated. Mr. Wall's amendment was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Buchanan, Clay, of Kentucky, Crittenden, Fulton, Merrick, Mouton, Rives, Robinson, Southard, Trotter, Wall, Williams—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Clay, of Alabama, Clayton, Davis, Hubbard, King, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Pierce, Robbins, Ruggles, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Strange, Tipton, White, Wright, Young—19.

Mr. Clay, of Alabama, moved to strike out the appropriation, $40,000, for this object. Advocated by Mr. Southard, opposed by Messrs. Wall, Buchanan, and Webster, and carried in the affirmative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Clay, of Alabama, Crittenden, Hubbard, King, Lyon, Nicholas, Norvell, Pierce, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Trotter, White, Williams—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benton, Buchanan, Clayton, Davis, Fulton, Mouton, Niles, Rives, Robbins, Wall, Webster, Wright—14.

After some further debate, in which several senators declared their determination to vote against the bill on account of the rejection of the $40,000 for Fort Delaware; the bill was reported to the senate.

On the question of agreeing in the senate to the striking out, in committee of the whole, the $40,000 for Fort Delaware, it was decided in the negative by yeas 15, nays 19, so that the $40,000 was reinserted. Mr. Wall again offered his amendment as above, and, after a long debate, it was again rejected: Yeas 8, nays 23; as was also a substitute for it, offered by Mr. Bayard.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading.

Mr. Benton, from the committee on military affairs, reported the bill referred to them making appropriations for the Military Academy at West Point for 1838, with various amendments, which were read and agreed to. On motion of Mr. Williams, the bill was amended by an appropriation to indemnify Mr. Baker and others, confined by the British authorities on account of the northeastern boundary. On motion of Mr. Davis, it was amended by adding a section provided to supply the several states each with a standard balance. On motion of Mr. Rives, it was further amended by an appropriation of $20,000 for new machinery for — armory.

On motion of Mr. Robbins, $1400 was inserted for a complete catalogue of the congress library. Various other amendments were offered and rejected. The bill was then ordered to a third reading. The senate concurred in the amendments of the house to the bill to establish certain post routes and discontinue others.

Also, in the amendments of the house to the bill to readmit the duties on certain goods destroyed by fire in New York.

The amendments of the house to the senate bill to authorize Charles Day and others to import iron steamboats free of duty, were amended by the senate, then concurred in as amended, and the bill sent back to the house.

The Chair presented a message from the president of the United States, with a report from the secretary of war, in relation to the Florida war, and a letter from general Jesup. Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The various bills ordered to a third reading today were, by consent, severally read a third time, and passed.

The bill from the house to provide for the settlement of the claims of New York for the services of her militia on the northern frontier, was ordered to a third reading, and, by consent, read a third time, and passed.

Various additional private bills were ordered to a third reading, and, by consent, read a third time, and passed.

The bill making appropriations for certain roads in Florida,

And the bill to reorganize the legislative council of Florida, were severally considered, ordered to a third reading, and read a third time, and passed.

The senate concurred in the amendments of the house to the bill making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, beacons, buoys, surveys, &c. for 1838.

Also, in the amendments of the house to the bill making appropriations for the West Point Military Academy for 1838. And in their amendments to the bill to establish additional land offices in Louisiana and Arkansas.

On motion of Mr. White, the amendments of the house to the bill for the settlement of claims under the 14th article of the Choctaw treaty of 1830, were, with the bill, laid on the table.

Also, the amendments and the bill to invest certain Indian funds in state stocks.

The senate, after four o'clock in the morning, and having held a long executive session, adjourned till nine o'clock on Monday morning.

July 9. On motion of Mr. Benton, the president of the United States was requested to communicate to the senate, at its next stated session, detailed statements of the per centage allowed to the various disbursing officers of the government for 1837, and of the other compensation allowed to the same persons for the same year.

On motion of Mr. Pierce, leave was given to withdraw, for the purpose of presenting at the departments, all the petitions and papers relating to the claims of the widows of revolutionary soldiers, who were married prior to 1794, and provided for in a general law passed at the present session of congress.

The senate then held an executive session.

On motion of Mr. Wright, two members of a joint committee were authorized to be appointed by the chair, on the part of the senate, to wait on the president of the United States, and inform him that, unless he had other communications to make, congress had now closed the business before them, and were ready to conclude the present session by an adjournment.

Mr. Wright and Mr. Cuthbert were appointed by the chair on this committee.

On motion of Mr. Sevier the following rule, reported by Mr. Bayard, from the select committee appointed on the subject, was taken up, and agreed to:

RULE 47. The following persons, and none others, shall be admitted on the floor of the senate: members of the house of representatives, and their clerks; the secretary of state, the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of war, the secretary of the navy, the attorney general, and the postmaster general; the private secretary of the president, chaplains to congress, judges of the United States, foreign ministers, and their secretaries; officers who, by name, have received, or shall hereafter receive, the thanks of congress for their gallantry and good conduct in the service of their country, or who have received medals by a vote of congress; the governor for the time being of any state or territory of the union; the ex-governors of the several states; such gentlemen as have been heads of departments, or members of either branch of congress; persons who, for the time being, belong to the respective state and territorial legislatures, and persons belonging to such legislatures of foreign governments as are in amity with the United States; two reporters, for each of the daily papers, and one reporter for each tri-weekly paper published in the city of Washington, whose names shall be communicated in writing, by the editors of those papers, to the secretary of the senate, and who shall confine themselves to the seats now provided for them.

On motion of Mr. Webster, the thanks of the senate were unanimously awarded to hon. William R. King for the fidelity and ability with which he had performed the duties of his office as president pro tem. of the senate.

A request was received from the house that the 16th joint rule be so far suspended as to authorize the action of the senate on the joint resolution to print the Madison papers. The request was complied with, the joint resolution was received as amended by the house, and the senate concurred in the amendment.

Mr. Nicholas presented the proceedings of the banks in New Orleans; which were laid on the table; and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Wright, from the joint committee appointed to wait on the president of the United States, and inform him that, if he had no further communication to make, congress were now ready to adjourn, reported that they had performed the duty assigned them, and that the president had requested them to say to the senate that he had no further communication to make, except to express respectfully to the senate his wish for the safe return of the members to their respective homes.

The senate having been notified by the house that they were now ready to adjourn, Mr. Norvell, moved that the senate do now adjourn sine die: whereupon, the president pro tem. Mr. King, made a brief, appropriate, and feeling farewell address; and then

The senate adjourned sine die.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, June 30. Mr. Adams, who was entitled to the floor, yielded it to Mr. Cushman, who made an effort to get a report considered from the committee on commerce, but without success.

Mr. Potter wished to make a statement connected with the subject before the house. Mr. Adams consenting, he stated that, from letters received from friends of his in the Pennsylvania legislature, he learned that a joint resolution, offered in that body, instructing their senators and requesting their representatives to oppose the annexation of Texas to the union, was agreed to in the senate by a vote of 22 to 6; but in the house was indefinitely postponed, 41 to 88; the 41 being friends of the administration.

Mr. Adams then proceeded; first noticed this statement, (as an evidence of an overwhelming majority of the people of Pennsylvania being against the annexation, and the expression of their will only checked by a strict party vote,) and then resumed and concluded his remarks on the right of women to petition congress. He next commented on the resolution he had offered, and took up the constitutional question of the right of congress to admit a foreign state into the union. Some pretty brisk explanations passed between him and Mr. Campbell, of S. C., on the innocence and influence of slavery.

Before Mr. A. had concluded his argument, the morning hour expired.

The Speaker proclaimed the orders of the day. A struggle, as usual, commenced as to getting different subjects taken up.

Mr. Noyes asked leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That to the end of the present session, no member shall be allowed to speak more than fifteen minutes at one time, and not more than once to the same question, without leave of the house; and it shall be the duty of the speaker of the house and the chairman of the committee to call the member to order who violates this rule.

Objection being made, he moved the suspension of the rules.

On this motion Mr. Garland, of La., demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered. But, before they were called, the resolution, on motion of Mr. Elmore, was laid on the table.

Mr. Kilgore made an effort to have one hour of this day assigned for the consideration of his resolution repealing the section of the law of 1816, containing a restriction in reference to banks issuing small notes. He modified his resolution so as to limit its operation to the 1st of March next; and then demanded the yeas and nays on a motion to suspend the rules. They were ordered and taken, and resulted as follows: Yeas 105, nays 86. As it requires two-thirds of the house to suspend the rules, the rules were not suspended. Mr. Cushman moved to suspend the rules to receive the reports of committees. Lost. The Speaker laid before the house a letter from the secretary of the treasury, in answer to a resolution of the house of the 25th instant, in relation to the kind of funds which were furnished pension agents in the state of Arkansas with which to pay the claims of pensioners, distinguishing between the amounts furnished in specie and bank notes, and, where bank notes were furnished, stating the different banks, as far as practicable, which issued the notes so furnished, and the amount on each bank.

Several bills from the senate were read and referred.

On motion of Mr. Johnson, of Louisiana, a bill permitting vessels turned away from the blockaded ports of Mexico to land, under certain restrictions, their cargoes in ports of the United States free of duty, in case of re-exportation, received its third reading, and was passed.

The engrossed bill, "to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes," was read a third time; when

Mr. Carter, of Tennessee, moved that it be re-committed, with instructions to strike out all the clauses of the bill proposing any increase in the number of officers, or increase of pay, and also the section for the raising of an additional regiment of infantry.

This motion gave rise to a desultory debate, the particulars of which may be given hereafter.

Mr. Naylor rose and said that he had voted for the engrossment and third reading of the bill, last night, with great reluctance. He was then very much dissatisfied with it. He had voted for many amendments which had been rejected; and when, at last, he was compelled to vote under the force of the previous question, before it could be so amended as to be satisfactory to him and the house, nothing but the deepest conviction that the situation of the country required more troops at present could have induced him to cast the vote in its favor. However, he then had voted under a misapprehension, and was mistaken as to the meaning of the 15th section. He now considered the interpretation put upon that section by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Whittlesey) as correct, and could not vote for the final passage of the bill unless the meaning of that section was made to conform to the obvious intention of the house. He had objections to many of the details of the bill. And he believed that he hazarded nothing in saying that the bill was not entirely satisfactory to any member of the house. Such being the case, he thought that the application of the previous question was but an unwise mode of forcing legislation. He would therefore move that the vote of last night, by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, be reconsidered. He thought this the best method of getting at the question, so as to put the bill in a shape that would be more satisfactory to all. He concluded by moving to reconsider.

Pending the motion for reconsideration the hour of recess arrived, and the house took the usual recess till the afternoon.

[The subject was not resumed in the afternoon, in consequence of the intervention of special orders.]

EVENING SESSION.

The house went into committee of the whole, in pursuance of the special order, (Mr. Owens in the chair,) and took up senate bills 175, 147, 237, and 233, and house bills 832 and 854, being bills remitting duties on iron imported for the construction of steamboats by certain corporations and individuals. They were all reported to the house without amendment, excepting 854, to remit certain duties upon iron imported for the construction of iron steamboats.

The senate bill 147, to authorize Day & Butts to import iron steamboats, being taken up, as reported, Mr. Cushman moved to lay the same on the table.

Mr. Lyon, of Alabama, begged that the motion might be withdrawn for one moment, as he wished to make an explanation in regard to an amendment offered at his instance by the chairman of the committee on commerce. The motion being withdrawn, Mr. Lyon expressed a hope that the bill would not be opposed. He said that captain Fry, of Mobile, a most enterprising and useful man, and one who had had much experience in steam navigation, proposed to attempt the navigation of the rivers in Alabama with an iron steamboat. He was disposed to make the experiment at his own risk and expense, and had only asked the government to remit the duties on its importation. The attempt was one in which the country was much interested. He believed the object of captain Fry was to test the utility of iron steamboats for summer navigation in the southern waters. It was well known to every gentleman acquainted with the southern rivers that, in the summer, they were generally low, and difficult of navigation by ordinary steamboats. Accidents had often occurred, during low stages of the water, from snags and other impediments, to which iron steamboats would not be liable. Iron steamboats were understood to be of less draught of water than such as we now had in use; and, if they could be successfully used, he had no doubt their introduction would be of very great benefit to the country. The speedy transportation of the mail might be ensured if such boats were employed as could safely navigate the southern rivers at low stages of the water. He said congress had remitted the duties on rail road iron, and he was surprised that an objection should be raised to remitting the duties on an iron steamboat. He recollected to have noticed that the British government had promised much more ample aid to the company formed to navigate the Atlantic by steam-ships than was asked by captain Fry and others, who proposed to import each an iron steamboat. The Atlantic Steam Navigation Company had, he believed, a guaranty from their government that their experiment should not involve them in expense or loss. In the cases before the house, no aid or guaranty as to loss is asked of the government, although the experiment is one which, if successful, will be of much benefit to the country, and perhaps save the loss of much property. It was simply asked that the duties on the importation of the boats, and such implements as might be necessary to keep them in repair, should be remitted; and he repeated the hope that all opposition to the bill might be withdrawn.

Mr. L. then renewed the motion to lay on the table, and the yeas and nays being ordered, this motion prevailed by the following vote: Yeas 82, nays 68.

The hour for which this subject had been made the special order being expired, and another special order having been called for,

Mr. Adams moved to suspend the rules for another hour; which motion was lost; and the house then, according to appointment, went into committee of the whole on the bill to amend an act entitled "an act to authorize the state of Tennessee to issue grants and perfect titles to certain lands therein described, and to settle the claims to the vacant and unappropriated lands within the same," passed the 18th April, 1806. Mr. Shields moved that the bill be reported to the house. Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, hoped not, without discussion. Mr. Shields said that the bill had been a good while before the house. Several committees had reported in favor of it; and he believed the house had become perfectly well acquainted with its merits. Still, if necessary, he would be perfectly free to meet any objections which might be brought against it. Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, objected, at some length, to the bill, as conveying a mere naked gift to Tennessee, there being no obligation upon the government to make the required cession.

Mr. Bell made some statements to show that the United States were indebted to the state of Tennessee more than a million of dollars for satisfying land warrants of North Carolina, &c. Mr. Williams said that there were no such claims in the compact between Tennessee and the United States.

Mr. Bell said "Not in the bond?" Mr. Williams went on: He did not mean to use the argument of Shylock. He was opposed, in principle, to the bill, and should oppose it, as being unjust and inexpedient.

Mr. Connor said a few words on the same side with his colleague, and in reply to the argument of Mr. Bell, as to the indebtedness of the United States to Tennessee. He offered an amendment to the bill, of which the reporter regrets he has not been able to obtain any idea of either the letter or the substance.

Mr. Shields went into a general defence of the bill, against the objections of Mr. Williams. Mr. C. H. Williams followed on the same side. Mr. Montgomery was opposed to the bill, and Mr. Crockett supported it.

And the debate was continued by Messrs. Carter, Williams, of N. C., Tillinghast, (who was of opinion that the land in question, if ceded at all, ought to be returned back again as of no value, but as a gift,) and Mr. Rencher. Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, then moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. Lost. Mr. McKenna moved that the committee rise, and report the bill; which motion prevailed.

The bill having been reported to the house, and the question recurring upon its engrossment, Mr. C. Shepard, of North Carolina, made some remarks against the bill. Mr. C. H. Williams demanded the previous question; but withdrew it, by request of several members. Mr. Stanly moved to lay the bill on the table. Lost. Mr. Robertson moved a call of the house. Lost. Mr. Campbell, of Tennessee, made some remarks in support of the bill, and in reply to Mr. Shepard. Mr. Yell moved the previous question. Mr. Dawson moved that the house adjourn: Ayes 58, noes 79.

So the house refused to adjourn.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

On ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, demanded the yeas and nays: which were ordered; and the motion for the engrossment and third reading was rejected by a vote of 51 yeas to 91 nays.

Mr. Martin, of Alabama, gave notice that, on Monday next, he should move a reconsideration of that vote.

On motion of Mr. Griffin, the house adjourned. Monday, July 2. Mr. Martin, of Alabama, rose to make the motion he had intimated on Saturday, to reconsider the bill rejected on Saturday entitled "An act to authorize the state of Tennessee to issue grants and perfect titles to certain lands therein described, and to settle the claims to the vacant and unappropriated lands within the same," passed the 18th April, 1806.

Mr. Adams hoped the reconsideration would not be granted. The bill had been rejected by a large vote—about two to one. Mr. Shields explained that it was not the intention of the friends of the bill to press the motion at this session. The motion to reconsider was entered, and the conversation dropped.

The Chair being about to call the states for the purpose of receiving petitions, Mr. Whittlesey suggested that the call should be omitted, and that each member who has petitions in his possession may lay them on the table to take their place on the journal.

Objection being made, the rules were suspended, on motion of Mr. Boon, and the order suggested was adopted.

Mr. Cambreleng moved that the committee be called for reports. The Speaker announced that the regular order would be, if this motion prevailed, to take up the report of the committee on foreign affairs, now under consideration. Mr. Adams, who was entitled to the floor, under this order, expressed his willingness to yield it for the purpose suggested by Mr. Cambreleng.

Reports were then read of committees, among which were the following:

Mr. Cambreleng, from the committee of ways and means, reported a bill to provide for the investment of money received under the will of the late James Smithson, of London.

Mr. Cushman, from the committee on commerce, reported a bill making appropriations for building light-houses, light-boats, beacon-lights, buoys, and making surveys for the year 1838.

Mr. Bouldin, from the committee for the District of Columbia, made a report upon the subject of removing the market east of the capitol grounds, in the city of Washington, and concluded with a resolution that the said market ought to be removed, and at the proper cost and charge of the city of Washington; which resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Petrikin,

Resolved, That the committee of the whole house be discharged from the further consideration of senate bill No. 33, entitled "A bill relating to the restraining the circulation of small notes as a currency in the District of Columbia."

Mr. Underwood, from the committee on revolutionary claims, reported against the cases of the descendants of the Wyoming sufferers in the revolutionary war. Mr. Potter, from the same committee reported against the petition of Philip Crapo. Mr.

Everett, from the committee on Indian affairs, reported a bill to repeal, in part, the second section of an act entitled "An act to provide for the organization of the department of Indian affairs;" which bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-day.

Mr. Harlan, from the committee on private land claims, reported senate bill No. 68 to settle contested claims that have arisen under the pre-emption laws. Also, senate bill No. 299 for the relief of Gurdon S. Hubbard, assignee of Jacques and Louis Veaux, with a recommendation that they do not pass. Committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Garland, of Louisiana, from the same committee, reported, without amendment, the senate bill for the relief of Juan Belgar, and the senate bill to transfer to the citizens of the parish of Louisiana the interest of the United States to a certain tract of land, with amendments. Also, against the case of James Nevils and Luther Gleason and others.

Mr. Everett, from the committee on Indian affairs, reported a bill in relation to moneys received for the use of Indians or Indian tribes.

Mr. McKuy, from the committee on military affairs, reported against the petition of the magistrates of Duval county, in Florida, for damages to the court-house by United States troops.

Mr. Ewing moved the following:

Resolved, That bills granting pensions to the brave men who reclaimed our western posts and protected our frontier under St. Clair, Wayne, and other commanders, up to the treaty of Greenville, in 1794—'5; allowing pensions for three months' service in the war of the revolution, and allowing pensions to widows of revolutionary soldiers in certain cases, be made the order of the day after the hour of twelve o'clock on Thursday, 5th instant.

This motion was negatived by the house.

On motion of Mr. Lincoln,

Resolved, That in the new arrangement of the hall, ordered by the house, the members of the house shall be entitled, as far as may be, during the present congress, to the same relative positions to the chair which they now occupy, and that the clerk assign the seats accordingly.

Mr. Southgate, from the select committee on the case of the heirs of Daniel Boone, reported a bill for the benefit of the heirs of Col. Daniel Boone, deceased.

The select committee on the memorials referred to them against the importation of foreign paupers, had leave to report by bill, and reported a bill to prevent the deportation of paupers from foreign countries into the United States.

The bill having been twice read, Mr. Beatty said that he was in a minority on that committee, and disagreed, with the majority in the principles contained in the bill. He hoped the bill and report would not be printed until the minority had an opportunity to express their views. Mr. Rhett said that he was also in the minority. He thought the bill ought to be called a bill to prevent immigration entirely. He hoped that the bill might lie on the table till next session, that the minority might have time to express their views. Mr. Hamer thought the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Beatty) could bring in a counter report in a few days, and in the mean time the bill ought to lie. Mr. Reed had never heard such a request as this made before on that floor. He hoped it would not be granted. It was entirely irregular and unprecedented. Mr. Garland, of Louisiana, reminded the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the proposition was not to print extra, but only the usual number. Mr. Lincoln made a few remarks in reply to the argument of Mr. Rhett that the bill went to prevent immigration entirely. Mr. Hoffman expressed the interest his immediate constituents had in this question, and hoped the bill would be referred as moved, and that the report and bill might be printed. After a few remarks in favor of the pending motion to refer and to print, from Mr. Russell, Mr. Cushman demanded the previous question; which being ordered.

The motion to refer the bill to the committee of the whole on the state of the union, and that the bill, with the report, be printed, prevailed.

Mr. Naylor asked leave to offer the following resolution; which was read for the information of the house:

Resolved, That three thousand extra copies of the report of the secretary of the navy, transmitting information in compliance with the resolution of this house of the 25th of May last, relative to the construction of the steam frigate Fulton, be printed.

Mr. Crary objected to the reception of the resolution.

Mr. Naylor said he hoped the gentleman would withdraw his objection. This report was an important one. The nation had made an experiment, by introducing into her navy steam vessels of war, steam batteries. The question would soon be, whether they should be introduced generally or not. Many supposed that steam vessels would prove to be, in no short time, the best batteries for the protection of the coast. The country wanted information upon the subject. Builders, and others interested, were anxious to know whether the Fulton was a failure or not; and desired to be informed of the manner of her construction, and of her merits and defects. He (Mr. N.) had received letters from gentlemen in all parts of the country, desiring him to transmit them these reports. But he had none to forward. He hoped, as this was a matter of national importance, and as there was a necessity that public attention should be drawn to it, the objection would be withdrawn. Mr. Crary persisted in his objection. Mr. Russell, from the select committee appointed on the subject, reported a bill to amend the several acts establishing a uniform rule of naturalization. Mr. Thucy, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Abiel Wood.

Mr. Boon asked leave to move that the rules of the house, appropriating an hour each day for the reception of the reports and resolutions, be suspended for the rest of the session. Mr. Potts objecting, Mr. Boon moved that the rules be suspended to enable him to offer this motion. Lost, 101 to 54; not two-thirds.

The army bill was again taken up; pending the motions,

1st. To reconsider the vote on engrossment.

2d. To recommit the bill, with instructions.

Mr. Thompson expressed himself opposed to so much of the bill as went to add the topographical corps. But, as to the pay of officers, he thought some increase was necessary. It was shamefully inadequate as at present provided. He was in favor of the proposed extra rations for every five years. He passed an eulogy on the branch of the service intended to be aided by this provision. He was in hopes that the bill might be re-committed, or reconsidered, and made as perfect as possible, and then passed (he was willing to say, without debate) by the house. Mr. Mercer made a few remarks, the tenor of which was entirely lost, by reason of the position assumed by that gentleman, his back being turned to the reporter. Mr. Johnson, of Louisiana, was in favor of the proposed increase of the engineer corps, and made some statements tending to show its necessity. Mr. Mason, of Ohio, was in favor of recommitment. He hoped the bill would undergo a thorough revision before it should be finally acted on. Mr. McKay defended the bill as reported, at some length. Mr. Grant moved the previous question, (on reconsidering).—Ayes 101, noes gave it up. So there was a second: and the main question (will the house reconsider?) was ordered to be put. Mr. Garland, of Louisiana, asked for the yeas and nays on the main question. Ordered. And the house refused to reconsider by the following vote:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Alexander, Atherton, Ayerrigg, Birne, Bell, Bond, Borden, Briggs, Buchanan, Bynum, Wm. B. Calhoun, Wm. B. Campbell, Carter, Chambers, Cheatham, Coles, Connor, Crary, Cushman, Darlington, Davies, Dennis, Dunn, Elmore, Everett, Fillmore, Rice, Garland, Google, J. Graham, Wm. Graham, Griffin, Hauer, Harlan, Hastings, Hawes, Hawkins, Henry, Herod, Ingham, T. B. Jackson, J. W. Jones, Kennedy, Klingensmith, Leadbetter, Logan, Lyon, Marvin, Samson, Mason, Maury, Maxwell, McKenna, Mercer, Milligan, Montgomery, Naylor, Ogle, Patterson, Peck, Petrikin, Pope, Potts, S. S. Prentiss, Rariden, Randolph, Reilly, Rencher, Ridgway, Robertson, Rumsey, Russell, Sawyer, Sheffer, C. Shepard, Shields, Slade, Southgate, Stanley, Stone, Stratton, Taliaferro, Thomas, Thompson, Tillinghast, Underwood, Vanderveer, Wagener, J. White, E. Whittlesey, L. Williams, S. Williams, J. W. Williams, C. H. Williams, Word—94.

NAYS.—Messrs. J. W. Allen, Anderson, Banks, Beatty, Bicknell, Birdsall, Boon, Broadhead, Bronson, Cambreleng, Casey, Chaney, Clark, Cleveland, Crockett, Cushing, Davee, Deberry, DeGraft, Dromgoole, Edwards, Evans, Farrington, Fairfield, Richard Fletcher, Isaac Fletcher, Foster, Fry, Gallup, James Garland, Glasecock, Grantland, Grant, Gray, Grennell, Haley, Hammond, Harrison, Haynes, Holsey, Holt, Hubley, William H. Hunter, H. Johnson, J. Johnson, Nathaniel Jones, Keim, Kemble, Kilgore, Legare, Lincoln, Mallory, J. M. Mason, Martin, McKay, R. McClellan, A. McClellan, McClure, Miller, Moore, C. Morris, Murray, Noble, Noyes, Owens, Palmer, Parker, Parmenter, Parris, Paynter, Pennybacker, Phelps, Pickens, Plumer, Potter, Pratt, J. H. Prentiss, Richardson, Rives, Robinson, Sergeant, Snyder, Spencer, Stuart, Taylor, Titus, Toland, Towns, Turney, Vail, Webster, Weeks, A. S. White, T. T. Whittlesey, Yell—95.

The question recurring on the motion to reconsider, with instructions, as moved by Mr. Carter, of Tennessee, Mr. Brown moved the previous question, (shall the bill pass?)

On seconding this motion the vote stood, Ayes 83, nays 51. So there was a second.

On the question (shall the main question be now put?)

Mr. Rencher demanded the yeas and nays. Ordered; and the house decided that the main question be now put, as follows: Yeas 101, nays 76.

And on the final passage of the bill, the vote was as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. J. W. Allen, Anderson, Andrews, Banks, Batty, Beirne, Bicknell, Biddle, Birdsall, Borden, Brodhead, Bronson, John Calhoun, Cambreleng, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Coles, Craig, Cushing, Dawson, Davis, Deberry, DeGraff, Dromgoole, Edwards, Elmore, Evans, Farrington, Fairfield, R. Fletcher, Foster, Fry, Gallup, J. Garland, Glascock, Grantland, Grant, Gray, Grennell, Haley, Hammond, Hainer, Harrison, Hayns, Holsey, Holt, Hudley, W. H. Hunter, T. B. Jackson, H. Johnson, J. Johnson, N. Jones, Keim, Kemble, Kennedy, Kilgore, Legare, Lincoln, Logan, Lyon, Mallory, J. M. Mason, Martin, McKay, R. McClellan, A. McClellan, McClure, Miller, Moore, S. W. Morris, Noble, Noyes, Owens, Palmer, Parker, Parmenter, Parris, Paynter, Phelps, Phillips, Plumer, John D. Prentiss, S. S. Prentiss, Rhett, Richardson, Rives, Robinson, Shields, Sneylor, Sibley, Snyder, Southgate, Spencer, Stuart, Taylor, Titus, Toland, Towns, Turney, Vail, Webster, Weeks, Albert S. White, J. White, T. F. Whittlesey, Jared W. Williams, Joseph L. Williams, Yell—112.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Alexander, Heman Allen, Atterton, Ayer, Bell, Bond, Briggs, Buchanan, William B. Calhoun, W. B. Campbell, J. Campbell, Carter, Chambers, Chatham, Connor, Crockett, Cushman, Darlington, Dennis, Dunn, Everett, Ewing, Isaac Fletcher, Fillmore, R. Garland, Goode, J. Graham, W. Graham, Griffin, Harlan, Hastings, Hawes, Hawkins, Henry, Herod, J. W. Jones, Marvin, S. Mason, Maury, Maxwell, McKennan, Mercer, Milligan, Montgomery, Calvary Morris, Murray, Naylor, Ogle, Patterson, Peck, Petrakin, Pope, Potts, Rariden, Randolph, Reily, Rencher, Ridgway, Robertson, Rumsey, Sawyer, Sergeant, Shetter, C. Shepard, Slade, Stanley, Stone, Stratton, Thomas, Thomson, Tillinghast, Underwood, Vanderveer, Elisha Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, C. H. Williams, Word, York—80.

So the bill was passed, and returned to the senate for concurrence in the amendments.

Mr. Rice Garland moved to amend the title, which originally read as follows: "An act to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes," by inserting after the word "states," the following, "the pay of officers and privates, and the patronage of the executive." And on this he asked the yeas and nays. Ordered. Mr. Glascock demanded the previous question. Seconded, ordered, and carried. So the title was adopted, as originally reported; and the bill went to the senate.

Several bills from the senate were read twice, and appropriately referred.

On motion of Mr. Sergeant, the house went into committee of the whole on the state of the union. Mr. Dixon, of Virginia, was called to the chair. Mr. Sergeant moved to take up bill 394, being the bill to provide for certain harbors, &c., which motion prevailed; and the bill was about to be read, when Mr. Goode asked if it would be in order to move, at that time, that the new harbor bill be taken up and considered at the same time with the bill already taken up. The Chairman responded in the negative; and the bill was read. Mr. Sergeant said that there were sundry amendments from the committee of ways and means, which he hoped members would permit him to offer first, so as to complete the bill as intended to be presented by the committee of ways and means. Mr. Mercer said that this was a new proposition. The bill should be read clause by clause, and the amendments offered afterwards. Mr. Sergeant withdrew his proposition, and the bill was read clause by clause.

The first clause upon which any debate arose, was making an appropriation of $69,733 59 for the carrying on of certain works in the harbor of Michigan city, Ia. Mr. White offered an amendment, the object of which was to modify somewhat the plan prescribed by a former act of congress for the carrying on of this work. Mr. Cambreleng (after Mr. W. had stated the necessity of the proposed amendment) conceded that the object of the gentleman was a good one, but that it was not then competent to make the motion he had done. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. Underwood observed that the act of the last congress appropriated $30,000, and made some inquiries (which Mr. White answered) as to the necessity of this additional $60,000, and then the clause was adopted by the committee.

The next clause which was taken into consideration was, "for the continuing of the works at the harbor near the mouth of the river Raisin, Michigan, $15,000."

Mr. Cray moved to amend this clause by striking out "$15,000," and inserting "$31,462 37." Pending this motion, the hour arrived for the house to take its usual recess.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. Lyon offered an amendment appropriating fifty thousand dollars for the continuation of the improvements commenced at Dog river bar and Chahlaw pass, in the bay of Mobile.

Mr. Lyon addressed the committee at some length in favor of the amendment, and said he felt much regret that the committee of ways and means had omitted to recommend an appropriation for the continuance of the work referred to in his amendment. Congress had, at the last session, determined to make an improvement in the navigation of the bay of mobile, by deepening the channel across Dog river bar and at Chahlaw pass, and had appropriated $50,000 towards the completion of the work. The engineer, upon whose report the appropriation was made, had estimated the entire cost of the work at $150,000. The sum heretofore appropriated would, as he had been informed by a letter from an intelligent friend, have been exhausted by the first of August, and he was not willing the work should be arrested for want of funds. He desired that the clerk might read the report of the engineer, captain Chase, upon which the improvement was commenced; a memorial from the chamber of commerce of Mobile; and also, a report from captain Chase to the engineer department, recommending an appropriation for the present year. These papers having been read, Mr. Lyon said he could imagine no possible ground upon which the appropriation could be refused. The work had been commenced by authority of congress, and, if not prosecuted to a successful termination, the amount already expended would have been thrown away. If prosecution of the work was delayed for want of funds, injury and loss would result to the government and to those interested in its completion. It would be seen that captain Chase, whose character for intelligence and for skill and experience in his profession was well known, had expressed the opinion that the improvement, when completed, would be permanent. It is stated in his report that the depth of water on Dog river bar does not exceed 9 1-2 feet; that the bar is composed of river alluvium, and has not changed its character for the last twenty years. The improvement recommended, and which has been commenced under the appropriation of the last session, is to deepen the channel across the bar so as to secure 12 feet of water. Mr. L. said it was not necessary for him to say that the government and its constituents were deeply interested in this improvement. Vessels drawing from 17 to 20 feet of water could enter the bay of Mobile, but, owing to the obstructions described in the report from the engineer department, vessels drawing over 9 1-2 feet water could not conveniently approach the city of Mobile. They were compelled to remain at anchor at from ten to twenty-five miles below the city, and discharge their cargoes, and reload with the aid of lighters, at much expense and inconvenience. This expense and inconvenience was a matter of some consequence to persons interested and concerned in the trade and commerce of Mobile. The amount of money asked of the government to defray the expense of improving the navigation of the bay of Mobile was small when compared with the benefits expected from the work. Upwards of 300,000 bales of cotton had been shipped from Mobile during the past winter and spring. With this large exportation of cotton, and a corresponding import trade, the city and the country interested in its trade and commerce had a right to expect some countenance from the government.

Mr. L. trusted that the mere omission of the committee of ways and means to recommend the appropriation would not be considered a sufficient cause for its rejection. That committee had not decided against it. They had omitted, from some cause, to act upon the question at all; and if the law already passed, authorizing the improvement, was to be carried into effect, no argument could be urged against his amendment which would not apply with equal force to every other appropriation proposed by the bill. No one denied the importance and necessity of the work; all knew it had been commenced under the authority of law; and he hoped the evidence he had adduced, that the last appropriation would be exhausted by the next month, would induce the house to act upon the question of making a further appropriation now. The report to the engineer department, a copy of which had been read, would show that the amount proposed by his amendment was necessary for the present year.

Mr. L. said he had brought the subject of this appropriation with the facts connected with it, to the notice of a member of the committee of ways and means, (Mr. McKim,) who had charge of the bill, and whose unfortunate death had no doubt been the cause of the case being overlooked by the committee in their report. He appealed to the chairman of the committee to say whether the case had not as much merit as any other improvement embraced in the bill. He repeated that his amendment did not propose a new work of improvement, but simply provided an appropriation for one already authorized by law and in progress. He said he would also appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, (Mr. Sergeant,) who reported the bill, and had charge of it as a member of the committee of ways and means; to say whether any objection could be urged against his amendment which did not apply to every other case provided for in the bill. All the appropriations embraced in the bill applied to works already commenced. The improvement in Mobile bay had been commenced, and had as much merit and as strong claims to attention this session as any other case. He hoped he would not be told that the amount necessary to continue the improvement at Mobile could not be obtained now, because the claim was not sanctioned and recommended by the committee of ways and means. He regretted he had not the aid of their recommendation, but the failure of the committee to provide for the continuation of the work referred to had not been his fault. He said his constituents had, within the last three or four years, paid into the public treasury a very large amount of revenue. They had asked a small amount to be expended in a work which the government was interested in constructing, and which was of much importance to all persons engaged in commerce. He did not suppose for a moment that the appropriation would be refused.

Mr. Cambreleng warmly opposed the amendment, and went into a general course of remarks on the boundless extravagance of congress in voting money for works of internal improvement. If gentlemen proceeded as they were now going on, one hundred millions of dollars would not be enough for completing the works proposed. He adverted to the rise of this policy in the latter part of Mr. Adams' administration, and lectured gentlemen on both sides of the house for their importunities to the chief of the topographical bureau for more surveys, and for the extension of those already begun. Gentlemen might go on offering amendments in committee; but when this bill should come into the house he should call for the yeas and nays on every individual item, and the bill should be made a test of principle. He severely reproached those friends of the administration who, at a time like this, when the treasury was represented as bankrupt, and the government was daily taunted on its extravagant expenditures, were demanding appropriations on appropriations for works of internal improvement. He was very indignant that in this one bill there should be a million and a half of dollars devoted to the improvement of rivers and harbors on the lakes. If the committee of ways and means had had the requisite time to examine the various items, this never would have happened, but, being obliged to report these bills within thirty days from the opening of the session, it had been impracticable.

Mr. Palmer, of New York, spoke for some time, but his back being to the reporters, what he said was not heard, nor can they tell on which side of the question he spoke. Mr. Adams said he had been exceedingly edified by the lecture delivered by the chairman of the committee of ways and means, and the castigation he had administered to gentlemen of both parties for being willing to vote money for works of internal improvement for the good of the nation. The gentleman had reminded the house that at the beginning of Mr. A.'s administration there had been no such appropriations. Mr. A. was sorry for it. Mr. Cambreleng here explained. His object had not been to criminate the gentleman from Massachusetts. Neither his nor any other administration was answerable for this system of expenditure. It had had its birth in the house of representatives, and they alone were answerable for it.

Mr. Adams did not thank the gentleman for so excusing him; the more of this blame he laid at the door, the better. Not a dollar of the whole amount which had ever been voted for works of this description would Mr. A. wish back in the treasury. And as for the gentleman's castigation, Mr. A. had endured before now perhaps even greater calamities than that. But there was one question which, whether by right or by courtesy he could not tell, (for it seemed that members now had no right to put questions to the heads of committees, he desired to put to the honorable chairman. There was a rumor current about the house that that gentleman was likely to favor the house, before its adjournment, with another treasury note bill; he wished to know if such was or was not the case.

Mr. Cambreleng replied, that if the honorable gentleman expected another treasury note bill, it must be from those who voted in favor of the bill now before the house; he would certainly get none from the committee of ways and means.

Mr. Adams was happy to hear that no such bill was to be reported from that committee; he felt very sure that the friends of the harbor bill would bring none forward. Mr. A. then went into some remarks in support of the bill; which he maintained as an economical, and not an extravagant measure. The empire state, he believed, was pretty liberally treated in the bill. True, there was nothing for the gentleman's own city; but there were provisions for the harbors on the lakes. Perhaps the wrath manifested by the honorable chairman might originate from some resentment against the good people of the state of New York for certain recent manifestations of opinion, and this might induce him so vehemently to oppose the bill. But while the gentleman was so zealous, this afternoon, in behalf of economy, when this harbor bill was up, where had been his economy this morning, when he voted to impose a permanent tax of a million and a half of dollars for the increase of the standing army?

Mr. A. here went at considerable length into a statement of his objections to that bill, until he was reminded by Mr. Chambers that the army bill had passed, and that it was the harbor bill which was now before the house.

Mr. Cambreleng vindicated his own course in voting for the army bill as being a measure of economy on the widest scale. Had that bill not passed, the defence of the frontiers would have cost, instead of one and a half millions, four or five millions. The bill would save the country three millions annually, now and forever. The services of militia cost the government five times as much as those of regulars. Mr. Adams replied, and warmly defended the policy of employing militia, rather than mercenaries, even at ten times the expense; especially where the object was to keep down our own people. Mr. A. spoke with much feeling against pointing bayonets at the breasts of our own people, and hinted that if paid soldiers were so employed on our northern frontier it was doubtful whether the purpose would be accomplished.

He went on at great length into the subject, until Mr. Grennell appealed to the chair to say whether the remarks of his colleague were strictly in order. The Chair said they had been permitted, thus far, as a reply to Mr. Cambreleng, but were not strictly in order.

After some further remarks of Mr. Adams, in which he closed with expressing a hope that the threats of the chairman of the committee of ways and means would deter no member from the independent exercise of his rights.

Mr. Foster signified his surprise at the attack of the chairman on the bill his committee had reported to the house. It was, however, a subject of congratulation that a majority of that committee did not agree in sentiment with their chairman.

Mr. Cambreleng said his colleague was entirely mistaken. A majority of the committee did agree with him fully. Mr. Foster said, this made the matter still more extraordinary. Whence came the bill? How did it get into the house? Was it reported by a committee, the majority of whom thought it extravagant and dangerous, and calculated to injure the government, and bankrupt the treasury? No report from a minority expressed dissent; not a word had been said that would lead to such an idea. The bill had been regularly reported, months ago; and now, on its passage, came the declaration that a majority of the committee were opposed to it! If so, why did they report it? He hoped the yeas and nays would be called. He was ready to meet them, and to go to the common sense of the people of his own state. Mr. F. made some strong remarks on the fact that the opposition to works for the protection of commerce should come from the representative of the commercial emporium of the state and of the union. He wished his colleague would look, for once, beyond the overlaugh, and remember the weighty interests embarked on the western waters and rivers of his own state. He was willing his own vote for, and his colleague's against, the bill should be laid before the people of New York.

Mr. Lyons made some further remarks on the amendment he had offered, which he feared was likely to be forgotten in a general contest on the policy of the bill. Mr. Sergeant, though approving the object of the amendment, observed that no report from the department had been received, nor estimate submitted. Mr. S. exonerated himself, as a member of the committee of ways and means, from all share in the fact of its having been reported, while a majority of the committee were against the bill and the policy on which it was founded. He had not been present at the time; and, had he entertained the remotest idea that such was the fact, he never would have consented to take charge of the bill; which, at any rate, he had only done in consequence of the death of Mr. McKim, who had had it in charge originally. Mr. S. spoke with warmth against the assumption of authority by the committee of ways and means to tell the house that works of improvement ordered by both houses, and ordained by law, should not be carried on. That was not its province. It was to report on the means of fulfilling the law, not condemning the law as ruinous, and extravagant, and profligate. They had no authority to say that an act of congress should be repealed, or should become a dead letter. The chairman might be ever so much opposed to measures of this kind, but congress had made them law in spite of his opposition; and now, as enjoying the high honor of being chairman of so important a committee, it was his place not to furnish the house with reasons against a law, but with the means of executing the law. All the works in this bill had already received the sanction of congress, and laws had passed for their completion.

Mr. Cambreleng said that, though, as members of a committee, gentlemen might feel bound to report a bill, yet, as members of the house, they might oppose and vote against it. Mr. Sergeant proceeded to comment on the constitutional objections to works of internal improvement, made by gentlemen who voted freely for fortifications and for a navy. But if it was constitutional to protect our commerce from enemies approaching our harbors and rivers, how could it be unconstitutional to protect it against a natural enemy within the harbor itself; and which was often more fatal to commerce, and even to human life, than the guns of the enemy? Mr. Cushman advocated the bill. The system had now been established for thirty years. Congress had appropriated for works in some parts of the country, and justice demanded they should do the same for others. Mr. Phillips said he had examined the papers in relation to the proposed work in Mobile bay, and was satisfied of its utility and great importance. He explained why it had not been included in the bill, owing to the reports coming too late, &c. Mr. Sibley went, at length, into a speech (to be reported hereafter) in defence of the bill, and in very severe reprobation of the position taken by his colleague (Mr. Cambreleng) in opposition to works upon the streams and harbors of his own state, and for the protection of that very internal commerce by which the wealth and prosperity of his own city had been so largely augmented. It was most strange that every work for the improvement of the interior of New York should be opposed by a certain political clique in the city of New York. But it had ever been so, from the first proposal of the Erie canal down to this hour.

The question being now put on the amendment proposed by Mr. Lyons, to remove an obstruction in the harbor of Mobile, it was agreed to. Another amendment, offered and urged by Mr. Sherrod Williams, for an appropriation of $20,000 for the improvement of the navigation of the Cumberland river above Nashville, was agreed to: Ayes 66, noes 62.

Mr. J. L. Williams offered the following amendment:

"To improve that portion of the Tennessee and Holston rivers which was surveyed by col. S. H. Long, of the U. S. topographical corps, in the year 1832, and for the completion of the improvements already begun, under said survey, $50,000."

This motion was negatived.

Besides which a great variety of amendments were proposed in committee, for form sake, and rejected: when the committee rose, and reported the bill and amendments, and

The house, at half past ten o'clock, adjourned.

Tuesday, July 3. Mr. Adams, who had the floor, yielded to accommodate Mr. Slade, who offered a resolution, which was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the committee on so much of the president's message as relates to a national foundry be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing such foundry at the city of Vergennes, in the state of Vermont.

Mr. Naylor wished to make a motion that 3,000 extra copies of the report respecting the construction of the frigate Fulton be printed. Leave refused. Mr. Keim inquired whether the select committee on a national foundry expected to report this session? To which inquiry Mr. Parker replied in the negative. Mr. Garland, of Louisiana, had a correction made in the journal.

Mr. Goode made an effort to get the committee of the whole discharged from the house bill No. 592, to enable the United States to bring into market the alternate sections of land granted for aiding the Erie and Wabash canal.

But objection was made, and longer time was refused, at the suggestion of Mr. Howard, that Mr. Adams be permitted to proceed, else there might be no time or opportunity for a reply to his argument.

Mr. Adams then resumed the floor, and proceeded in his constitutional argument against the admission of Texas into the Union. He continued to speak until after the expiration of the morning hour, without concluding.

Several senate bills were read and referred.

A bill to establish a pension agency at Decatur, Alabama, was read a third time and passed.

The bill from the senate to repeal the deposit act of 1836 having been read, Mr. Cambreleng delivered a speech in its favor, contending that the law of 1836 was in its operation a nullity, and that the true issue was between this bill and a bank of the United States. Mr. Menefee, Mr. Legare, and Mr. Wise spoke earnestly against the bill, and in reply to Mr. Cambreleng.

Mr. Legare moved that the bill be referred to the committee of ways and means, and printed for information. Mr. Cushman inquired of the chair, if the previous question should be carried, what the main question would be? The Chair replied it would be on the engrossment of the bill. Mr. Cushman then moved the previous question. Mr. Curtis moved a call of the house; which motion prevailing, the house was called. After which, absentees were called. The doors were then closed, and excuses received. Next, the officers of the house were directed, informally, to wait on absent members and invite their attendance. Mr. Harlan moved to suspend further proceedings in the call; but the house refused to do so.

The motion was renewed; the yeas and nays were ordered; when the motion was withdrawn. After some time, it was renewed again; and the yeas and nays were ordered and taken, and resulted as follows: Yeas 164, nays 45. So the call was suspended; and the doors were thrown open.

The question was then taken on seconding the call for the previous question; when the yeas were 97, the noes 105; so the call was not seconded by the requisite majority; the house thereby refusing to order the bill to its engrossment at this time.

Mr. Duncan then addressed the house till the expiration of the morning sitting, without concluding his remarks.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. Duncan resumed, and continued his remarks in favor of the bill from the senate, to repeal the deposit act of 1836, pending the motion to refer, which was under consideration before the recess. Mr. Duncan had made some progress in his remarks, when Mr. Rencher rose to order and asked the chair if, under the motion to refer, it was competent to go into the discussion of the merits.

The Chair said certainly not; and that, if the point were insisted on, he should be obliged to restrain the debate to the particular question. The motion was to refer and print, and within a few days the chair had found it difficult, on a similar motion, to restrict the debate within proper limits.

Mr. Duncan proceeded to discuss the bill at large and having proceeded nearly an hour longer, was commenting upon the course pursued by the Bank of the United States of Pennsylvania in financial affairs, when the Chair called him to order, as straying widely from the question under consideration. Mr. Duncan again proceeded. After about half an hour he was called to order by Mr. Harlan, for commenting upon the contents of a speech of Mr. Bell, delivered some time since in Tennessee. Mr. Duncan again resumed, and was proceeding to illustrate one of his arguments by an allusion to the earth's rotation, and that of the sun, when the Chair said he was entirely unable to see the relevancy of the gentleman's remarks to the question under discussion. Mr. Duncan said he would show its relevancy; and proceeded with his astronomical illustrations, and soon closed his remarks. Mr. Legare withdrew his motion to refer and print, and moved to strike out the second section.

Mr. Robertson, said, understanding the motion before the house to be that made by the gentleman from S. Carolina, (Mr. Legare), he should move to add specific instructions; and Mr. R. then read the instructions, in substance, requiring the committee to report a bill providing for special deposits, and repealing all existing laws prohibiting the receipt of the notes of banks issuing notes of less denomination than five dollars, or forbidding such banks to be used as depositories of the public money.

Mr. R. said he would prefer to have the question taken on Mr. Legare's proposition first; but it was his intention, after that, to move these instructions. He then proceeded to support the pending proposition and his own. He had desired before this late period of the session to give the grounds of his preference for the measure indicated in his motion over either of the other measures, which had their friends and supporters in this house. The sub-treasury scheme had failed. The national bank was unattainable. The state deposit system had not answered its purpose. And he thought that the present was a good opportunity to establish the special deposit plan.

He argued to show the inconsistency of the administration party's opposing this scheme, after the recommendation it had received at the hands of the executive, and expressed his surprise that any member of that party should be willing to go home to his constituents, without doing something for the keeping and disbursement of the revenue. Mr. R. said he should, at a proper time, urge the house to vote on his proposition.

Mr. Tillinghast thought it impossible that the house should decide to separate without restoring the public money to the protection of the laws, in some form or other. He intimated his intention of offering an amendment, after a vote shall have been taken on those of Messrs. Robertson and Legare. If the house did not engraft their action as to the keeping of the finances in this bill, it would be too late to do any thing hereafter, this session, this being a senate bill.

He hoped the previous question would not be moved upon so important a measure as this, until a vote could be taken on these propositions to amend.

Mr. Tillinghast's proposed amendment was then read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following, viz:

"That so much of the act of June twenty-third, one thousand eight hundred and thirty six, entitled 'An act to regulate the deposits of the public money,' as prohibits the receipt of the notes or bills of specie-paying banks which have issued, since the fourth of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, notes or bills of a less denomination than five dollars; be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

"Sec. 2 And be it further enacted, That, until other provision shall be made by law, it shall be lawful for the secretary of the treasury to select and employ, as depositories of the public money, according to the provisions of said act, any legally established bank which shall redeem its notes and bills on demand in specie, notwithstanding it may, since the fourth of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, have issued or paid out bills of a less denomination than five dollars.

"S-c. 3. And be it further enacted, That the operation of the second section of the act of April fourteen, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the payment of revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States for the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six,' be, and the same is hereby, suspended until further order of congress."

Mr. Grant said he was sorry he could not accommodate the gentleman from Rhode Island; but he thought all would agree that debate would not be of avail at this stage of the session. He should, therefore, move the previous question. Mr. Potts demanded a call of the house; which was ordered; and the roll having been called twice, and once for excuses, there were found to be thirty members absent. Mr. Whittlesey suggested that the officers notify members of the call, and request their attendance, and that they be admitted when they arrive. During the intermission that succeeded, Mr. Boon moved to suspend further proceedings under the call. Mr. Gray called for the yeas and nays. Ordered. Mr. Boon withdrew his motion. Mr. Garland, of Louisiana, suggested that this would be a good time for any member who intends to offer a speech to the house to speak. [A laugh.] The Chair said that that would not be regular. Mr. Garland said that the rules might be suspended, perhaps, to accommodate gentlemen so inclined. The Chair remarked that the previous question could not be suspended. Mr. Garland said it might be done by general consent. Mr. Cambreleng said he should object. Nobody wanted to hear any more speaking, he presumed.

All the absentees (not excused) having returned, excepting twenty,

Mr. Fillmore moved to suspend the further proceedings under the call; the yeas and nays having been ordered, he withdrew the motion; which was immediately renewed by Mr. Cambreleng, who said there could not be any doubt how this question would be decided, and he therefore moved to suspend all further proceedings under the call; and on this he asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered. And the house decided to suspend the proceedings under the call as follows: Yeas 186, nays 63. Mr. Garland, of Virginia, made an appeal to Mr. Grant to withdraw the motion for the previous question, in order that the question be taken on the amendments without debate. Mr. Grant withdrew the motion. Messrs. Gray and Davee simultaneously rose, and renewed the same. On seconding the demand for the previous question, the division was: Ayes 96, noes 102.

So there was no second. The question recurring on the proposition of Mr. Legare to strike out the second section of the bill, Mr. Menefee demanded the yeas and nays, which, being ordered, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Alexander, H. Allen, John W. Allen, Ayerigg, Bell, Biddle, Bond, Borden, Briggs, W. B. Calhoun, J. Calhoun, J. Campbell, Carter, Casey, Chambers, Chaney, Chestnut, Chilis, Clark, Corwin, Cranston, Crockett, Curtis, Cushing, Darlington, Dawson, Davies, Deberry, Dennis, Dunn, Edwards, Evans, Everett, Ewing, R. Fletcher, Fillmore, James Garland, Rice Garland, Goode, James Graham, Win. Graham, Grantland, Graves, Grennell, Griffin, Hall, Hamer, Harlan, Harper, Hastings, Hawes, Henry, Herod, Hoffman, Hopkins, R. M. T. Hunter, Jenifer, Kennedy, Kilgore, Legare, Lincoln, Lyon, Mallory, Marvin, J. M. Mason, S. Mason, Maury, Maxwell, McKennan, Menefee, Mercer, Milligan, Mitchell, C. Morris, Naylor, Noyes, Ogle, Patterson, Pearce, Peck, Phillips, Pope, Potts, S. S. Prentiss, Rariden, Randolph, Reed, Rencher, Ridgway, Robertson, Robinson, Rumsey, Russell, Sergeant, A. H. Shepperd, Charles Shepard, Shields, Sibley, Slade, Southgate, Stanly, Stuart, Stratton, Taliaferro, Thompson, Tillinghast, Toland, Underwood, A. S. White, J. White, E. Whittlesey, L. Williams, S. Williams, Jos. L. Williams, Chris. H. Williams, Wise, Word, Yorke—119.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Andrews, Atherton, Banks, Beatty, Beirne, Bicknell, Birdsall, Boone, Bouldin, Brodhead, Bronson, Buchanan, Bynum, Cambreleng, Chapman, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Craig, Crary, Cushman, Davee, DeGraff, Dromgoole, Duncan, Elmore, Farrington, Fairfield, J. Fletcher, Foster, Fry, Gallup, Glascock, Grant, Gray, Haley, Hammonnd, Harrison, Hawkins, Haynes, Holt, Howard, Hubley, W. H. Hunter, Ingham, T. B. Jackson, J. Johnson, N. Jones, J. W. Jones, Krim, Kemble, Klingensmith, Leadbetter, Lewis, Logan, Loomis, Martin, McKay, R. McClellan, A. McClellan, McClure, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, S. W. Morris, Noble, Owens, Palmer, Parker, Parmenter, Paris, Paynter, Pennybacker, Petrikon, Phelps, Plumer, Potter, J. H. Prentiss, Reily, Rhett, Richardson, Rives, Sawyer, Sheiler, Snyder, Spencer, Taylor, Thomas, Titus, Toucy, Towns, Turney, Vail, Wagener, Webster, Weeks, T. T. Whittlesey, J. W. Williams, Worthington, Yell—101.

So the amendment of Mr. Legare was adopted. Mr. Curtis moved to amend the bill as follows: "And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the secretary of the treasury, hereafter, to select and employ as depositories of the public money, according to the provisions of the act of June 23, 1836, entitled 'An act to regulate the deposits of the public money,' any bank which shall redeem its notes and bills, on demand, in specie, notwithstanding it may have, since the 4th of July, 1836, issued or paid out bills of a less denomination than five dollars. That the operation of the second section of the act of April 14, 1836, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the payment of revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States for the year 1836, be, and the same is hereby, suspended until further order of congress.'"

Mr. Connor then moved the previous question, the main question being on the passage of the bill as amended.

The division on seconding was ayes 94, noes 104. So there was no second. [Cries of question! from every part of the house.]

Mr. Underwood was sorry to detain the house, but he thought he could modify the amendment of Mr. Curtis, so as to answer his purposes better, and to meet the general wishes of the house. He reminded the house that the bill as it stood only took off the obnoxious interdiction upon the deposit banks until October, after which it would go on again. Now his object was to have that interdiction taken on along ther. He would therefore propose the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

"That the fifth section of an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the deposits of the public money,' approved 23d of June, 1836, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, however, That no bank shall be selected or continued as a place of deposit of the public money, which shall not redeem its notes and bills on demand in specie.

Be it further enacted, &c., That so much of the second section of an act entitled 'an act making appropriations for the payment of the revolutionary and other pensioners of the United States for the year 1836, approved April 14, 1836, as prohibits the offering, in payment to the creditors of the United States, bank notes of less denomination than ten and twenty dollars, be, and the same is hereby repealed."

The Chair. The amendment of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Curtis) has precedence. Mr. Clark would send to the chair an amendment, which, he trusted, would prove acceptable, as a modification, to his colleague, viz:

"Insert in Mr. Curtis' amendment, after the words 'five dollars' the following: Provided, however, That this provision shall not extend to any bank which shall issue or pay out any note or bill of less denomination than five dollars after the 4th of July, 1839." Mr. Curtis preferred his own, but would agree to the modification proposed. Mr. Bronson moved to amend the amendment by striking out the words "until the further order of congress," and inserting "for two years." Mr. Rives moved to commit the bill with instructions so to amend the same as to dispense with the agency or instrumentality of banks in the fiscal operations of the government. After some conversation between Messrs. Rives and Robertson, cries of question were most vociferously reiterated; and the yeas and nays being ordered, the motion of Mr. Rives was rejected by the following vote: Yeas 97, Nays 113. The question then recurred on Mr. Bronson's amendment, which he withdrew.

The question then recurred on Mr. Curtis' amendment, which Mr. Craig moved to amend so as to provide that no bank should be employed, as contemplated by the amendment, which does not keep on hand one dollar in specie for every three of its liabilities. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. Boon said that this day had been spent in talking and voting upon a matter dead, buried, signed, sealed, and delivered. Nothing but the respect he had for the house prevented him from speaking two or three hours, as others had done before, on matters and things in general. If members would vote and not talk, he would forego that purpose.

[Cries of go on! go on! agreed! agreed! question! &c.]

Mr. Boon. Sir, I will not impose upon the house. [Loud laughter.]

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. Craig, which was rejected by the following vote: Yeas 86, nays 114.

Mr. Parris offered an amendment, providing that no bank be chosen as a depository of public money, which has not one dollar in specie to every three of its circulation. Mr. Campbell, of South Carolina, moved to commit the bill to the committee of ways and means, with instructions to report an amendment, providing that the public deposits be not used for banking purposes. The yeas and nays were ordered on this motion.

Mr. Stuart called for a division; and the first question was put upon the recommitment, and decided in the negative as follows: Yeas 97, nays 111.

And the second branch of the proposition fell of course. And the question recurred on the motion of Mr. Parris, who so modified his motion as to provide that every deposit bank should have one dollar in specie for every five of its liabilities. Pending this,

Mr. Foster moved to commit the bill to the committee of ways and means, with instructions to report a bill for the collection, safe-keeping, and disbursement of the public revenue, so as to dispense with the use of banks as depositories thereof. Some conversation arising as to the identity of this proposition and that already acted on, on motion of Mr. Campbell, (the chair inclining to the opinion that they were not identical,) Mr. Hopkins demanded the previous question. On seconding, ayes 66, noes gave it up. The Chair then decided that the last proposition was identical with the one already decided, and the question recurred upon the motion of Mr. Parris. Mr. Bell said that it was very apparent that the sense of the house was in favor of removing the disabilities incurred by the banks under the act of 1836. He deprecated such equivalent motions to amend and to commit as tend only to defeat the bill. In this view, however proper, many of these amendments doubtless might be, and how much soever inclined to vote for them members might be, if time were given to digest a complete system, he hoped that, under the circumstances, all such motions would continue to be voted down, members not committing themselves thereby against the principles thereof.

Mr. Parris' amendment being then under consideration, Mr. Campbell, of South Carolina, proposed an amendment thereto, (which the mover accepted as a modification,) providing that the public money be not used for banking purposes. Mr. Utterton called for a division of the question. And yeas and nays having been ordered, the question was taken on the first clause of the amendment, and was decided in the negative by the following vote: Yeas 91, nays 101.

The question recurring on the second clause of the amendment, it was decided in the affirmative by the following vote: Yeas 101, nays 101.

The Chair voted in the affirmative; so the proviso was adopted.

Mr. R. Garland moved to amend the amendment by adding the following proviso:

"Provided no bank shall be selected as a depository which shall not keep in its vaults an amount of specie which, together with the balance of all its accounts with specie paying banks, shall be equal to one-fifth of the amount of its notes and bills in circulation and its public and private deposits."

Mr. G. asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered. Mr. Wise sustained this amendment, as being the true one to be adopted. Mr. Bell thought unimportant whether this amendment were adopted or not, inasmuch as by the vote just taken the bill had been made a special deposit bill. With a full house, this measure, as it now stands, he thought, could not be carried through. Mr. Unwin said that the casting vote of the speaker had placed the house in a dilemma, which would render the further session of the house this night more than useless. He moved that the house do now adjourn. [A quarter before 10 o'clock.] Mr. Grant demanded the yeas and nays; not ordered. Mr. Bronson demanded tellers; ordered; and by a vote of 102 yeas, noes not counted, the house then adjourned.

Wednesday, July 4. Mr. Cambreleng, from the committee of ways and means, reported against senate bills for the relief of Francis Newman, late collector of internal revenues and direct taxes in Maryland; and an act supplementary to the act entitled "An act to establish branches of the mint of the United States," approved March 3, 1835. Mr. C. also reported without amendment senate bill to authorize the sale of certain lands belonging to the United States.

The Speaker laid before the house a letter from the secretary of the treasury, transmitting a report of F. R. Hassler, esq. superintendent of the work on the fabrication of standard weights and measures.

Also, a letter from the secretary of war, transmitting copies of the correspondence between the department and major general Scott, in relation to the removal of the Cherokee Indians, as required by a resolution of the house of representatives of the 25th ult.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the committee of ways and means had leave to sit during the sessions of the house. Mr. Cambreleng reminded the house that to-morrow was the last day on which bills originating there could be sent to the senate. He hoped the house would act on the appropriation bills, before that body, before that time.

Mr. Prentiss, of Mississippi, rose to make a privileged motion, and said he claimed, as an act of mere justice to those concerned, that the reports and evidence of the duel committee be printed before the adjournment. He was authorized to ask this at the hands of the house by the parties concerned.

The Chair said that debate could not be had without a motion made. Mr. Prentiss repeated that, in the name of the parties concerned, he challenged action on this report and resolution. Mr. Cushman rose to order. No question was before the house. Mr. Prentiss then moved that the house take up and consider the report and resolution of the duel committee. Mr. Gray moved to lay the motion on the table. Mr. Wise inquired if this could not be, at any time, a privileged motion? He wanted action, so far as he was concerned, upon this question. And he would give the house warning that he had waited patiently. The Chair. Debate under the motion to lay on the table, is not in order. Mr. Wise. I know that, but I hope the leniency of my situation will be my apology with the house for saying that—Mr. Gray rose to order. Mr. Wise said he never expected justice at the hands of this house in connexion with this subject. [Great cries of order!] The yeas and nays on the motion of Mr. Prentiss were asked, but not ordered. Mr. Gray's motion to lay Mr. P's motion on the table prevailed. Mr. Adams was then about to proceed in continuation of the Texas discussion, when Mr. Wise asked the house at least to do him the justice to print the reports and evidence before they should finally separate.

Mr. Adams occupied the remainder of the morning hour in the continuation of his remarks upon the annexation of Texas.

Mr. Biddle moved a suspension of the rules, to take up the senate bill relating to steamboat boilers. He asked the yeas and nays, but the house did not order them. The motion to suspend the rules did not prevail.

Mr. Thompson asked leave to propound a question to the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Adams.) Objection being made. Mr. Thompson said his object was to ask that gentleman if it was his intention to occupy the morning hour for the remainder of the session on the Texas question, thus precluding all chance of a reply. Several bills were taken up and acted on from the table.

Mr. Grennell rose and asked permission of the house, at this time, to move that the committee of the whole be discharged from the consideration of the senate bill against duelling, and that the bill be brought into the house for its action thereon. Objection being made, Mr. G. said that he acted from a strong sense of duty in making this request, having been instructed by the legislature of his state to bring this subject before the house for distinct action. He moved to suspend the rules, for the purpose of enabling him to make the motion he had intimated a wish to offer. Mr. Phillips demanded the yeas and nays. Not ordered. The motion to suspend the rules for the purpose stated was negatived without a division.

Mr. Harlan asked leave to make a report from the committee on private land claims. Refused.

The unfinished business was then taken up, pending a motion of Mr. Rice Garland to amend the amendment offered by Mr. Curtis, proposing to add a second section to the bill, (the second section as it came from the senate having been stricken out last evening.) and Mr. Grant moved the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as thus amended. Mr. Petrikin called for tellers on the second. Ordered. The division was yeas 119, noes 39. So there was a second. Shall the main question be now put? Mr. Robertson asked the yeas and nays. Refused. The main question was ordered to be put, shall the bill be read a third time? Mr. Dringdale asked for the yeas and nays. Ordered. And the house decided the question in the affirmative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Alexander, H. Allen, J. W. Allen, Anderson, Andrews, Averigg, Banks, Beirne, B-H, Bicknell, Biddle, Birdsall, Bond, Boon, Borden, Briggs, Brodhead, W. B. Calhoun, J. Calhoun, Cambreleng, W. B. Campbell, J. Campbell, Carter, Casey, Chambers, Chaney, Chapman, Cheatham, Childs, Clark, Cleveland, Coles, Connor, Corwin, Crary, Cranston, Crockett, Curtis, Cushing, Darlington, Dawson, Davee, Davies, Deberry, D-Graff, Dennis, Dunn, Edwards, Evans, Everett, Ewing, Farrington, Fairfield, R. Fletcher, I. Fletcher, Fillmore, Foster, Gallup, J. Garland, R. Garland, Glascock, Goode, J. Graham, William Graham, Grantland, Grant, Graves, Gray, Grennell, Haley, Hall, Hammond, Hamer, Harlan, Harper, Hastings, Hawes, Haynes, Henry, Herod, Hoffman, Holsey, Hopkins, Howard, R. M. T. Hunter, Ingham, T. B. Jackson, Jenifer, H. Johnson, Joseph Johnson, N. Jones, J. W. Jones, Kemble, Kennedy, Kilgore, Legare, Leadbetter, Lewis, Lincoln, Loomis, Lyon, Mallory, Marvin, J. M. Mason, S. Mason, Martin, Maury, Maxwell, R. McClellan, A. McClellan, McClure, McKennan, Menefee, Mercer, Milligan, Miller, Mitchell, Montgomery, C. Morris, Naylor, Noyes, Ogle, Palmer, Parker, Parmenter, Parris, Patterson, Pearce, Peck, Pennybacker, Phelps, Pope, Potts, J. H. Prentiss, S. S. Prentiss, Rariden, Randolph, Reed, Rencher, Ridgway, Robertson, Robinson, Rumsey, Sergeant, A. H. Shepperd, C. Shepard, Shields, Sibley, Slade, Southgate, Spencer, Stanley, Stuart, Stone, Stratton, Taliaferro, Taylor, Thompson, Tillinghast, Titus, Toland, Underwood, Vail, Vanderveer, Weeks, A. S. White, J. White, E. Whittlesey, T. T. Whittlesey, L. Williams, S. Williams, J. L. Williams, C. H. Williams, Wise, Word, Worthington, York—179.

NAYS—Messrs. Atherton, Beatty, Buchanan, Bynum, Cushman, Dromgole, Elmore, Fry, Griffin, Hawkins, Hubley, Wm. H. Hunter, Keim, Klingensmith, Logan, McKay, Moore, Noble, Paynter, Petrikin, Plumer, Potter, Reily, Richardson, Rives, Shetler, Snyder, Thomas, Turney, Wagener, Webster, J. W. Williams, Yell—83.

So the bill was ordered to be read a third time. The bill was then read a third time, and the question recurred, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. Campbell of South Carolina moved to commit the bill to the committee of ways and means, with certain instructions. Mr. C. sustained his proposition in a few remarks, and asked the yeas and nays thereon. Mr. Grant moved the previous question, which was seconded, (yeas 104, noes given up;) and the question recurred, Shall the main question be now put? Mr. Martin demanded the yeas and nays. Lost.

The main question was ordered, being, Shall the bill pass? Mr. Murray asked the yeas and nays. Ordered. The question was decided in the affirmative by the following vote: Yeas 178, nays 31.

So the bill, as amended, was passed, and was then returned to the senate for concurrence in the amendment of the house: [the second section stricken out.]

Mr. Robertson asked leave to offer the following resolutions of inquiry:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to communicate to this house, on the first day of the next session, all the information not heretofore communicated, now in possession of the executive, or which may be procured before that time, touching undue attempts or practices, if any, since the 29th May, 1830, to keep down the price of the public lands, or prevent purchases or entries thereof, at public or private sale, by force, threats, or fraud, and the measures taken since the date aforesaid to prevent, defeat, or punish such fraudulent practices, and illegal entries upon the public lands.

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury prepare and lay before this house, on the first day of the next session, a statement of all grants and donations of public lands, or of the proceeds of sales thereof, to the states, by the United States distinguishing the amount made to each, and the purposes and considerations upon which made; and accompanying the said statement with an estimate of the amount to which each state would be entitled of similar grants and donations, according to the proportions specified in the several deeds of cession from the several states to the United States.

Secondly. A statement of the whole quantity of public lands now surveyed, and an estimate of the quantity unsurveyed—distinguishing each, and where situated; and accompanying the same with separate plans for dividing the said lands, and the proceeds of sales thereof, among the states, in the proportions aforesaid, on such conditions as to the time and manner of division and sale, graduation, reduction of price, and reservation of title in the United States, and final disposition, as may be best calculated to effect the objects of this resolution, in conformity with the original compacts entered into between the several states and the United States relating to the said lands.

Thirdly. A plan for reorganizing the land system on such principles as will best secure the public against loss from illegal entries, frauds, &c. pointing out the defects or advantages of the present system, more particularly in reference to pre-emption and sales at public auction; and in general suggesting such alterations as experience may have shown to be necessary.

Objection being made, Mr. Robertson moved that the rules be suspended, and he asked for the yeas and nays; which were not ordered. The motion to suspend was lost.

The house then took up the harbor bill, as reported by the committee of the whole with certain amendments.

Sundry amendments of the committee of the whole were taken up and read, and the question was about to be taken on the same, when

Mr. Cambreleng rose and laid before the house a statement of the sums of money already appropriated for the current year, in order that the house might judge of the expediency of making any more appropriations. The sum of these he made out to be $26,000,000, which will be increased to $34,000,000 by other bills yet to be passed: of these, $13,000,000 were for extraordinary purposes. Mr. Elmore asked what resources there were to meet that expenditure? Mr. Cambreleng stated he had no doubt that the income of the year 1838 would be about that sum. It depended upon some contingencies, however; among which were the uncertainty of the proceeds of the sales of public lands; and the purchase, by the bank of the United States of Pennsylvania of the new issue of treasury notes, for the purpose of embarrassing the government. Mr. Sergeant rose, but yielded the floor to his colleague, Mr. Petrikin, who moved the previous question. Mr. Sergeant asked him to withdraw this motion, as he had yielded the floor only for an explanation. Mr. Pettkin refused. The call for the previous question was not sustained by the house. Mr. Sergeant commented upon the fact that (however proper it might be to bring up a statement of the financial situation of the country at proper times) it was always against the harbor bill. Mr. Cambreleg did not mean to oppose that statement to the amendments to the particular bill under consideration, actually pending. Mr. Sergeant made some remarks by way of showing the importance of the provisions of the bill under consideration. He also replied to Mr. Cambreleg's allusion to the bank of the United States of Pennsylvania. He denied that that institution had acted with such motives as had been imputed to it by the gentlemen from New York. (Mr. Cambreleg.) By the purchase of the treasury notes no injury, but, on the contrary, benefit, was done to the government.

Mr. Cambreleg was responding, in allusion to the affairs of the Bank of the United States, when Messrs. Sibley and Grant rose, nearly simultaneously, to order, and asked what relevancy there was in this discussion to the actual question before the house? Mr. Cambreleg made some further remarks, in the same strain, and was followed by

Mr. Thompson, who had a word to say about these treasury notes. He never would allow any opportunity to pass without giving a blow to that flagrant and dangerous violation of the constitution. We were told, (said Mr. T.) when that measure was under discussion, that it was better than a loan, because it would be more speedily paid; and now the chairman of the committee of ways and means deprecates as an evil that they will be so soon presented for payment, and regards it as almost a crime in the United States Bank to collect them for the purpose of being presented for payment. How long, sir, will the American people submit to such inconsistency, trickery, and humbug? I am informed that brokers are employed by the secretary of the treasury to sell these treasury notes to the banks, with an express understanding that, as they bear bank interest, the banks are to keep them, and not throw them into circulation; and I do not doubt that they are paid by the banks, in whole or in part, in what the government call bank rags; yes, sir, your notes drawing six per cent. interest, paid for in bank rags which bear none; and this is your hard-money government! If not, and they are paid for in specie, the government is conniving at and abetting that which they so much denounce—the banks paying out their specie, whilst they refuse to redeem their notes. If the government pays specie to its northern creditors, it does not to its southern creditors. I know the fact that the supplies and expenses of the army in the Cherokee country are paid in bank notes. There are nearly as many brokers and bank agents in that country as there are soldiers. They go to your contractors and agents and say to them, you have no money; every body will receive our bank notes; we will advance to you; pay us interest, and give us a draft on the government at Washington. It is done. The money bears interest until it is paid by treasury notes. The broker deposits these notes in New York, and sells drafts to the merchants at from 8 to 20 per cent. Who pays this? Why, the customers of these merchants. Princely fortunes are now making by this process; and this is your hard-money government; and this is the policy by which the southern people are to be deluded and humbugged into the belief that the south is to be benefited. Would you dare to commit such gross and wanton extravagance if you had to go before the people and tax them for the money? No, sir, you would not. An appropriation of thirty-four millions, with not a dollar in the treasury, and no hopes of getting any! A fit commentary on your treasury note system.

Several amendments adopted in committee of the whole, to which there was no objection, were then adopted by the house.

The amendment, striking out an appropriation of $8,000 for the continuation of the pier at Kenne-bunk, in Maine, came up in order, and

Mr. Fairfield made some statements, going to show that this was an important and necessary appropriation. He hoped the amendment would not prevail. Mr. Evans stated that it had been on his motion that this clause had been stricken out in committee. He had done so because his attention had been drawn to it by a correspondent from the neighbourhood, a respectable and intelligent man. He had received other letters to the same effect. The work had been delayed, and little or nothing had been done about it. He had thought it proper, therefore, that the appropriations should be withheld until some examination should be had. Appropriations, he was informed, had already been made sufficient to finish the work. He made several other statements, corroborating those already given. He showed, too, that the appropriations already made by congress for this purpose had not been expended as directed by the law. Mr. Fairfield made a brief rejoinder, principally going to deprecate the evidence upon which his colleague had based his opposition to this appropriation. Mr. Grant passed some strictures upon the course pursued against this bill by his colleague, (Mr. Cambreleg.) and moved the previous question—(engrossing the bill.)

On the question of seconding, the division, by tellers, was: Ayes 82, noes 48. So there was a second. Mr. Robertson moved that the bill do lie on the table. Mr. E. Whittlesey asked for the yeas and nays. Ordered. Pending this motion, Mr. Mallory moved that the house do now adjourn. (It was now two minutes before two, the hour for recess; and the effect of this motion was to adjourn till to-morrow.) Mr. Sherrod Williams rose to a point of order? The Speaker. The gentleman rises probably to occupy the two minutes before the hour fixed for recess. [A general laugh.] Mr. Sherrod Williams. Is it not a standing rule of the house to take a recess at two o'clock? The Speaker answered in the affirmative; and then declared that there was no question of order before the house. Mr. Williams resumed his seat, and the question on adjournment was then taken by yeas and nays, and decided in the negative by the following vote: Yeas 35, nays 123. So the house refused to adjourn.

The hour (fixed by the order) having passed, the house took the usual recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The house met after recess, when a motion was made to adjourn. The house refused, yeas 15, noes, 79; no quorum voting. But a large quorum soon appearing, the house proceeded to take up the harbor bill. On this bill the motion pending was a call for the previous question. A motion was made to lay the bill on the table, but negatived by yeas and nays: Yeas 58, nays 96. The previous question was then put and carried; and the question being on ordering the bill to its engrossment for a third reading, Mr. Martin asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and, being taken, resulted as follows: Yeas 104, nays 74. So the bill was ordered to its third reading. It was immediately read a third time; when Mr. Martin, of Alabama, moved to recommit it to the committee of ways and means, with instructions to examine each item, and to strike out such as they should disapprove.

In support of this motion, Mr. M. urged that the committee of ways and means had reported the bill in the routine of business, although a majority of the committee were opposed to it, and though the committee had never gone through an examination of the items of appropriation contained in it. In illustration of this, he referred to an item for a pier in the harbor of Kenne-bunk, concerning which the two gentlemen from Maine (Messrs. Fairfield and Evans) had differed so widely as to the facts.

(Here a by debate of much earnestness, and occasionally productive of not a little amusement to the house, took place between those gentlemen about the disputed piers, old and new, in Kenne-bunk harbor, and to which of them the public money had been applied.)

Mr. Martin, who had yielded the floor for this colloquy, resumed it, and completed his remarks in support of his motion. Mr. Grant, in vindication of the committee of ways and means, stated that several members of that committee had examined the bill, and every item in it. He then moved the previous question, which was seconded: Ayes 89, noes 45. Mr. Williams, of Tennessee, moved a call of the house; which was refused: Ayes 43, noes not counted. Mr. Stuart, of Virginia, moved to adjourn. Negatived. The previous question was then put and carried; and the main question being on the passage of the bill, it was carried by the yeas and nays: Yeas 108, nays 81. So the harbor bill was passed.

Mr. Williams, of Ten. moved a reconsideration of the vote. Mr. Robinson moved to lay this motion on the table: Lost. Mr. Foster thereupon moved the previous question, which was seconded, put, and carried; and the main question being on re-considering, it was negatived without a count. So the house refused to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill.

A message, accompanied with numerous documents, was received from the president of the United States, in reference to our relations with Mexico, communicated in answer to a call of Mr. Everett some months ago.

Mr. Howard, referring to the great bulk of the bundles of documents, and expressing the opinion that very few of them were of any consequence, moved that they be referred to a committee, to select from among them such as it would be proper to print. Mr. Adams opposed this motion, and hoped that the whole would be printed. The communications were of the utmost importance; for on these documents would probably turn the question of peace or war with Mexico. He moved that the message and documents be laid on the table and printed. He hoped they would not be referred to the committee on foreign affairs, because it appeared that the chairman of that committee knew so much about these documents that he did not want to have them printed. For that very reason Mr. A. was anxious for the printing. Mr. Yell called for the reading of the documents; but did not press his motion. On motion of Mr. Dromgoole, the motion of Mr. Adams was divided, and the question first taken on laying on the table; which was agreed to.

The question then recurring on the printing, Mr. Dromgoole said the committee had acted on the subject of our relations with Mexico, and that the chairman had been instructed to make a report, which he would doubtless do on the first opportunity. Mr. Howard demanded the yeas and nays; but withdrew his motion; which was immediately renewed by Mr. Adams. Mr. Everett supported the motion to print. Mr. Robertson, of Va., moved to lay the motion to print upon the table. On this Mr. Reed demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and being taken, resulted: Yeas 103, nays 80. So the motion to print was laid on the table.

The bill to guard against explosions on board of steamboats was then taken up, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. Sibley made an effort, but without success, to get up the bill respecting district courts in the state of New York. Mr. Curtis moved to go into committee of the whole on the state of the union, with a view to take up a bill he named; but the house refused the motion.

A bill to employ boys in the merchant service was laid on the table.

As was also a bill to revive an act enabling certain settlers in Louisiana to enter back lands. Mr. Mercer moved to adjourn. Negatived.

A bill respecting the tenure of office by subordinate officers of the government, was laid on the table.

A joint resolution, authorizing the commissioner to lease certain lands of the government, for the culture of the mulberry and the sugar beet, was slightly amended by Mr. Lincoln; and then read a third time and passed.

The post office bill was then taken up; the amendments reported from the committee of the whole were concurred in; and the question being on ordering the bill to its third reading, Mr. Underwood moved to amend one of the post routes, which was agreed to.

Mr. Hopkins moved to reconsider the vote of concurrence in the amendments from the committee of the whole, with a view to move an amendment reinstating the express mail.

A letter from Amos Kendall was read, when Mr. Harlan moved the previous question, which was seconded, put, and carried; and the main question being on the reconsideration, it was decided in the negative: Yeas 27, nays 105.

So the house refused to reconsider.

Mr. Harlan now moved the previous question (the main question being on ordering the bill to its engrossment.) It was seconded, put, and carried, and the bill was ordered to its third reading, and read a third time.

The question being on its passage, Mr. Turn earnestly advocated the restoration of the express mail, and on that subject called for the reading of another letter from the postmaster general, strongly recommending the continuance of that arrangement, which he said was a source of annual revenue to the department of $25,000. Mr. Harlan opposed the measure, and moved the previous question. Mr. Rhett (promising to renew the motion) advocated, with earnestness, the continuance of the express mail, which he represented as a great benefit to the cotton-growers of the south. The previous question was then seconded, put, and carried, 81 to 42; and the post office bill was then passed.

Mr. Robertson gave notice of moving a reconsideration (as was understood) respecting the printing of the Texas documents.

And then the house at about 7 o'clock adjourned. Thursday, July 5. Mr. Johnson, of Louisiana, on leave from the committee on public lands, reported a bill to provide for erecting fire-proof offices for each surveying district of the public lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. J. asked leave to report some other bills: Mr. Harrison and Mr. Lincoln objected, unless Mr. Adams would give way for all the committees to report.

Mr. Adams then again occupied the whole time devoted to morning business, in his speech on Texas, at the end of which, he asked to be permitted to proceed.

Mr. Elmore moved a suspension of the rules for the purpose; for it must be manifest that great injustice would be done if this speech went out without some reply.

Mr. Draygoole, coincided that the grossest injustice had been done the committee on foreign affairs.

The motion was not agreed to, and Mr. Adams has the floor again for to-morrow.

The joint resolution authorizing the president of the United States to lease lands for the cultivation of the mulberry and sugar beet, was read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house went into committee of the whole on the state of the union. Mr. Connor in the chair, and, on motion of the same gentleman, took up the Indian annuity bill; being the annual bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Indian tribes for the year 1838.

The bill was read through at length, and some amendments moved by Messrs. Cambreleng, Eve, Bell, and Bell, being agreed to, the bill was laid aside to be reported.

The committee then took up the bill making appropriations for certain fortifications of the United States, for the year 1838.

An amendment of Mr. Legare, to increase the item for Charleston from $100,000 to $175,000, after some remarks from him and Mr. Elmore, was agreed to.

Mr. Bronson moved an additional item of $3,000 for Fort Niagara; which was agreed to—78 to 48.

Mr. Johnson, of Louisiana, moved an amendment for New Orleans; which was rejected.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the "bill to provide for the support of the military academy for the year 1833," was next taken up.

Mr. Haynes explained its provisions.

Mr. C. H. Williams submitted as a substitute the following:

"Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill No. 412, and insert the following: That all acts now in force, authorizing the enlistment or appointment of cadets in the military academy of the United States at West Point, in the state of New York, be, and hereby are, repealed, from and after the thirtieth day of June next; and all such cadets, now in the service or under the instruction of the United States shall be disbanded and dismissed, from and after the thirtieth day of June next.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the secretary of war, under the direction of the president of the United States, shall, as soon as may be after the thirtieth day of June next, organize a military school of application and practice at West Point, for the improvement of the officers of the army of the United States in the application and practice, for military purposes, of the several branches of elementary, and theoretic sciences involved in the art of war; and the secretary of war shall appoint an officer as superintendent of said school, possessing competent theoretical and practical qualifications to command on parade; to instruct the officers constituting said school in all the tactics appertaining to every branch of military service; to lecture upon the theory and principles thereof; and to illustrate the practical application of the science of mathematics, topographical drawing, and engineering, to the purposes of both offensive and defensive war, including a regular course of practical illustrations of artillery service, the uses of mortars and howitzers, and the principles of gunnery generally; together with instructions, by lectures and practice, in military police, and other duties of camp and garrison service; all which instructions it shall be the duty of said superintendent to impart to said school, aided by such number of assistant and subordinate officers, who shall also be instructors of competent qualifications, as the secretary of war shall deem it expedient to appoint.

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That, for the purposes of the practical instruction contemplated in the second section of this act, the officers of the army of the United States shall repair to West Point, in rotation, under such regulations, and in such numbers, as the secretary of war shall direct, with the approbation of the president of the United States, not exceeding, at any one time, one-third of the company of officers in service; and to remain at said school for such time as the secretary of war shall determine, not exceeding one year in three successive years, &c. &c. [There are several other sections of details.]

Mr. Williams addressed the house in explanation and support of the amendment; but, owing to the late stage of the session, submitted only a brief summary of what he wished to have said, reserving the right of writing out his speech at large for publication.

Mr. Haynes replied that, though he thought the whole plan of the academy ought to be revised and remodelled, yet it was now too late in the session.

The amendment was rejected, a few members rising in its favor.

Mr. Kenble moved an appropriation of $20,000 to rebuild the structure destroyed by fire in February last, agreed to.

Mr. Cushman moved to strike out sundry appropriations, but ineffectually.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported, and, on motion of Mr. Briggs, the house took up the members' books bill.

The title of which is as follows: "A bill authorizing the purchase of certain books for distribution among the members of the house of representatives."

Mr. Cushman moved to strike out the enacting clause;

The bill was ordered to be reported.

On motion of Mr. Fillmore, the committee considered the bill to increase and regulate the terms of the circuit and district courts of New York.

The committee then rose and reported the bills acted on to the house; and, the time having arrived, The house took its recess.

EVENING SESSION.

At the meeting of the house, at 3 o'clock, several senate bills were read twice, and referred to their appropriate standing committees.

The house went into committee of the whole on the state of the union. Mr. Casey in the chair.

The question pending was the motion of Mr. Mercer to take up the new harbor bill.

Mr. Cambreleng moved that the committee rise, and report the bills already acted on.

Mr. Mercer insisted upon his motion being put, and also that a motion to rise was debatable; but the chair [Mr. Casey] deciding otherwise, Mr. M. took an appeal, which was debated for some time, when the chair was sustained.

The committee then rose—73 to 49.

The Indian annuity bill was taken up, all the amendments concurred in, and the bill ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

The fortification bill coming up,

Mr. Petrikin moved to lay the bill on the table, and asked for the yeas and nays, but they were refused; and, the motion being disagreed to, the amendments were concurred in, and the bill ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

The West Point academy bill being next in order, and the amendment of the committee of the whole having been concurred in,

Mr. C. H. Williams renewed his substitute, and asked for the yeas and nays thereon; which were ordered, and were—yeas 33, nays 106.

So the amendment was rejected,

Mr. W. then moved to lay the bill on the table; lost.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

The bill to authorize the purchase of certain books for members of the house of representatives, was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. Rencher then moved to lay the bill on the table, and asked for the yeas and nays; which, being ordered, were—yeas 57, nays 99.

So the house refused to lay the bill on the table, and the bill was passed.

The bill to increase and regulate the terms of the northern district court of New York was ordered to a third reading, and then passed.

Mr. Mercer, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the Wisconsin road bill, made a report of their agreement; which was concurred in, and the bill passed.

Mr. Downing moved to recommit the bill authorizing the people of Florida to form a state constitution, to the committee on territories; which was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Cushing, the bill in relation to the northeastern boundary was recommitted to the committee on foreign affairs.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, Mr. Casey in the chair.

After several motions for priority of business, the committee divided for taking up the new harbor bill; the vote being yeas 76, nays 74.

The bill was then read by the clerk.

Mr. Mercer submitted an amendment making appropriations for sundry works therein mentioned.

Mr. Dawson asked if they were going into a new harbor bill, at that period of the session, when only 187 members were present, and involving the country in an expenditure, in the end, of at least one hundred millions of dollars. To test the sense of the house, he moved to strike out the enacting clause. He went on to demonstrate that the whole scheme was the result of a combination of interests and sections, for the purpose of plundering the people.

The debate was continued by Messrs. Dawson, Cushman, Cambreleng, Robertson, Hall, Mallory, Rhett, and Thompson, in opposition, and advocated by Messrs. Mercer, Biddle, Marvin, Allen, of Ohio, Goode, Reed, Evans, and Sergeant.

Mr. Hall opposed the bill. He wanted to see the old works completed, or put in a state of probable completion, before new ones were authorized to be commenced. His own opinion was that few of them, if any, ever would be completed, so long as the government continued to appropriate money for them, since it was not only for the interest of the localities that money should be expended there, but also of those who had charge of its disbursement.

Mr. Allen, of Ohio, remarked that he had not risen to inflict a speech on the committee at this time of the evening, and after a ten hours' sitting, all must be anxious to breathe a different atmosphere than the one by which they were surrounded, especially when there was such a mass of business yet to be acted upon, and but two days in which to do it. But he felt compelled to say, in reply to the gentleman from Vermont, who had just taken his seat, (Mr. Hall,) that he was greatly mistaken, in Mr. A's opinion, in the declaration that the harbors now progressing would not be finished, so long as money was supplied to keep them in a forward movement. The reason assigned is, that the superintendents were interested in delaying their completion, as they received a salary for their services, or a commission on the money expended, and hence it was for their advantage to protract the time, and to enlarge the expense. Mr. A. said he was acquainted with the history of several of the harbors on Lake Erie, and he fully believed money had never been more judiciously, beneficially, and economically applied. The works were all under the general control of skillful officers of the United States; and the immediate superintendents, who made the contracts and disbursements, he thought, in no instance, received any thing like a fair equivalent for their services, and, who must, therefore, be actuated by other considerations than a mere pecuniary one, so far at least as it regarded that paid by the government. He had never known or heard of a case of speculation or fraud, and but few of bad management. Their employment saved the expense of keeping comparatively high paid officers to perform the same duties, and, he believed, they were much more interested in urging their works to a speedy termination rather than the reverse. It was true these harbors continued to make demands on the treasury, but it was because the original plans were not yet executed in some cases, while in others experience suggested deviations from them, for they were all matters of experiment when commenced. He could assure the opponents of the system that its friends would halt where they were, if they supposed the cost was to be unreasonable, compared with the advantages to be derived from it; but they believed it warranted by the constitution, and that the necessities of the country, general and local, demanded its continuance, though its benefits could only be duly appreciated by those who had witnessed its effects.

In the year 1825, there was but a single steamboat above the Falls of Niagara, she making, "solitary and alone," an unprofitable and hazardous voyage once in ten days from Buffalo to Detroit and back. Then, too, there were but twenty or thirty small shallops, dignified, it is true, by the name of schooners; now, instead of one steamboat, there are nearly sixty, some of them of 800 tons burthen, costing an hundred thousand dollars and more, and, as a class, inferior to none afloat; instead of the twenty or thirty shallops, there are now two hundred ships, brigs, and schooners, honestly such. But this fleet never could have had existence but for the facilities for receiving and discharging cargoes furnished by artificial harbors, constituting, also, places of refuge to which to flee in time of need. There are few natural harbors on any of the lakes, and till the construction of those by the government on Lake Erie, vessels were often driven by storms from one end of it to the other, unless sooner driven on shore, or to the bottom. Such was still the case on Lakes Huron and Michigan, and would long continue to be, if the policy so happily begun and so advantageously prosecuted, was now to be arrested.

But the business on the lakes had but just commenced; Ohio had now 400 miles of canal in operation, and was constructing as much more; Indiana was expending ten millions on canals and railroads; Illinois and the infant state of Michigan; each half as much. These all tended to the lakes, and would soon very greatly increase the business upon them.

Mr. A. in light there were equitable considerations pertaining to this matter, so far as the west was concerned. The people of what was once the north-west territory, had paid as large an amount of money into the treasury for duties on imported goods as any equal number of people elsewhere; for whatever might be the doctrine south of the Potomac, his own was, that it was not cotton, but consumers, who paid the duties. In addition, they had paid sixty two millions for public lands, being six-tenths of all the receipts from that source. Ohio, alone, had paid twenty-two millions, more than one-fifth of all the receipts, but she had got but about one-sixth of the land, for much of her land was bought under the old system, when the minimum price was two dollars the acre. Hence it had cost about one dollar and seventy-six cents, while the average in the other states had been but one dollar and thirty-one cents, making an excess of more than five millions paid by Ohio. He did not propose to ask its return in the present exhausted situation of the treasury, and had only alluded to it as a reason why he thought we ought not to be especially astute in seeking to discover how we might withhold or curtail appropriations for the north-western states in general, and Ohio in particular. The interest on the excess referred to, for a single year, would equal all the money ever expended by the general government in Ohio, for her exclusive benefit, without taking the appropriations for the national road into account, which were based upon a totally different footing.

In conclusion, he would say he thought the opponents of the new harbors ought to find better reasons for their opposition than merely that some of the old harbors were yet unfinished.

Mr. Pope said he had voted for all these measures of internal improvement, and was ready to do so, when they were proper, without any questions about state rights, consolidation, constitutionality, and such cries, which he was sorry to see had come to be so common in that house. But he did think that, with an empty treasury, such appropriations as those asked for by the bill under consideration ought not to be pressed. He said he was worn down with remaining in the house from nine o'clock at morning till nine o'clock at night, and he would therefore move that the committee rise. The committee rose accordingly.

The amendments to the bill to authorize a commission to test the usefulness of inventions, were concurred in, and the bill passed.

Sundry bills from the senate were read twice, and referred.

On motion at half past nine o'clock, p. m.
The house adjourned.

POSTSCRIPT.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

PENNSYLVANIA, &c.—In the name and by the authority of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, by Joseph Ritner, governor of the said commonwealth—A proclamation.

The period has arrived when the series and misfortunes produced by the injurious interference of the national government with the currency of the country is about to terminate. Congress having risen without sanctioning the attempt to give to the federal executive the entire control of the national wealth, and of the whole amount of specie in the country, and the consequent power to affect and wield to its own purposes all the capital and credit of the union; and having also imposed certain salutary restrictions on so much of this power as had been already arrogated, it is incumbent on the commonwealth of Pennsylvania to put forth her strength to quicken her dormant energies, and to take that stand in the trade and commerce of the union which her unbought resources, her vast natural and artificial facilities for their development, and the solid and energetic character of her citizens demand: to deprive her of which stand, all the measures of the national government have recently tended.

For the production of this most desirable result, the measure first requisite is, that an end be put to certain open infractions of the spirit of the laws, which have been forced upon us by the overbearing necessities of the times; and to restore credit and the currency to the firm basis on which they stood before their late derangement was unnecessarily brought on the people.

I, therefore, by virtue of that enjoyment of the constitution which requires the governor of the state to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and for the purposes aforesaid, do hereby require all banks in this commonwealth, on or before the thirteenth day of August next ensuing the date hereof, to resume and continue the redemption of their respective notes, bills and other obligations, in gold and silver coin according to the true intent and meaning of their charters. And, for the purpose of aiding those institutions in the accomplishment of this laudable object, I deem it proper to state, from the information I have obtained, that their solvency and general condition is such as to entitle them to the confidence of all who hold their notes, their amount of specie on hand being largely increased, and of notes in circulation much diminished, since the suspension of specie payments in May, 1837.

While it is thus cheerfully announced that the means of the banks are ample, and that their conduct has been, throughout the late trying crisis, generally such as to sustain our already high character for punctuality, honesty, and solvency, maintain and even increase our trade, keep up the value of property, and prevent the state from becoming the theatre of panic and distress, yet I shall feel bound, in duty to the public, to take all the means in my power to compel a return to that agency and responsibility to their creditors for which they were created. If, however, a return be promptly and faithfully made to that line of duty to the laws and to the public from which they have been compelled to depart, the occurrences of the past year will only be recorded in our history as another instance of the perfect adaptation of republican institutions to the demands of every crisis, and will show that common and overruling necessity being bowed to by general consent becomes for the time the law of the land. But to justify such rule of necessity, and to prevent future evil, from its unnecessary recurrence or unjust continuance, it is indispensably requisite that the instant the pressure of circumstances which produced it ceases, the empire of the express and ordinary law of the land should be restored. Accordingly, if on the other hand a return to general and real redemption in specie, and a withdrawal of all illegal paper money, from circulation, do not now take place, when all admit that it may, with safety and public benefit, I shall hold it my duty, forthwith, to take all the measures to compel it, which the constitution and laws have placed in my power; and at the opening of the next session of the legislature, to recommend the passage of such laws as may more effectually guard the future from the evils of the past.

And further for the purposes and by virtue of the injunction aforesaid, I do also hereby require all persons or bodies corporate, who may have violated the laws of this state, by the emission and circulation of notes of any denomination under that of five dollars, commonly called "shin plasters," to take instant measures for the full and honest redemption of the same in gold and silver coin, or such other ample equivalent as shall be satisfactory to the holders thereof, under pain of the penalties, if this notice be not complied with in a reasonable time, it will be the duty of all good citizens to enforce.

Should this requirement be fully and promptly complied with, the commonwealth will be restored to that sound currency which she possessed before the suspension, viz: One composed of gold and silver for all sums under, and of notes instantly convertible into specie for all sums of and over, five dollars. The result of the attempt to improve the currency will then obviously be, that the only paper issues in circulation and not convertible into specie at the place whence issued, will be those of the national government.

In communicating thus publicly with my fellow citizens on this important and interesting matter, I would respectfully and earnestly say to all, be firm and cool in the emergency. Trust in the laws, have confidence in the institutions, and sustain the high credit and character of your glorious commonwealth. You have borne yourselves through the crisis nobly and honorably. You have come almost uninjured out of the trial. Make one more calm and steady effort and all will be well. The forbearance and determination heretofore exhibited have been such as to reflect credit upon the state, while it has strengthened the hands and cheered the hearts of your public agents in the performance of duties of no ordinary difficulty. Contrasting, as is naturally done, the feelings and hopes connected with this attempt to aid the resumption, with those which animated me when I addressed my fellow-citizens on the subject of the suspension of specie payment, I cannot but rejoice at the difference. We were then entering upon a new and untried course of action whose happy termination was only matter of hope. We are now at the conclusion of our doubts and fears, and with the blessings of providence on the exertion of our own moderation and industry, about to return to our usual confidence and prosperity.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the state, at Harrisburgh, this tenth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight and of the commonwealth the sixty-third.

By the Governor: THO. H. BURROWS,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Expenditures. The following statement from the secretary of the treasury, in answer to a resolution of the house of representatives, shows the amounts of expenditure, exclusive of the public debt, for each year, from 1824 to 1838.

For the year 1824	-	$15,330,144 71
Ditto 1825	-	11,490,359 94
Ditto 1826	-	13,062,316 27
Ditto 1827	-	12,653,095 65
Ditto 1828	-	13,236,041 45
Ditto 1829	-	12,660,460 62
Ditto 1830	-	13,229,533 33
Ditto 1831	-	13,864,067 90
Ditto 1832	-	16,516,386 77
Ditto 1833	-	22,713,755 11
Ditto 1834	-	18,425,417 25
Ditto 1835	-	17,514,950 28
Ditto 1836	-	30,868,164 04
Ditto 1837	-	*39,164,745 37

*This sum is subject to small variation on the settlement of the accounts of the treasurer.

Note.—The above sums include payments for trust funds and indemnities, which in 1837, were, $5,610,404 36.

The army—official regulation. 1. No officer, whose duty it may be to examine the accounts of the disbursing officers of that branch of the service under his immediate supervision, shall hold or disburse funds.

2. Whenever it is practicable, all disbursements shall be made by checks on a bank or a person, as the case may be, and not in money.

3. A monthly statement shall be made and transmitted to the department by each disbursing officer, of the moneys received, paid, and remaining in his hands.

This regulation will supersede the one on this subject issued a few months since.

J. R. POINSETT.

War department, July, 11, 1838.

Appointments by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate.

Robert Lucas, of Ohio, to be governor of the territory of Iowa, in the place of H. Atkinson, resigned.

Elisha A. Rhodes, of New Orleans, to be consul for the port of Galveston, in Texas.

Thompson F. Mason, of Alexandria, to be judge of the criminal court for the District of Columbia.

Dillon Jordan, jr. of North Carolina, to be judge for the district of West Florida, in the place of J. A. Cameron, deceased.

Richard C. Allen to be judge, W. H. Brockenbrough to be attorney, Peter W. Gautier, jr., to be marshal, for the Apalachicola district in Florida.

George Willis to be marshal for the western district of Florida.

Florida war. A letter from Tallahassee, dated June 28d, says:

We have little hopes of inducing the Indians yet out to surrender. Their movement are most hostile. We learn that every post abandoned by our troops has been destroyed. Fort Clinch, on the Withlacoochee, Forts King and Mellon, have been burnt, and most of the bridges in the nation destroyed. Scarcely had our troops passed the bridge near Fort King, ere it was burned by the Indians, who were following close in the rear of the army.

Texas. We learn from the Houston National Banner of the 8th ult. that col. Hockley has been appointed secretary of war, of the republic of Texas, in the place of col. Bee, resigned. The Banner speaks in highly favorable terms of the qualifications and character of both these gentlemen. With regard to the presidency of Texas, that paper appears to entertain no doubt of the election of general Lamar, and that, too, with little or no opposition. The new "money bill," or act authorizing a new issue of treasury shinplasters by that republic, had been vetoed by the executive, and abandoned by the Texian congress. There remains therefore but the original issue of $650,000 Texian notes in circulation. From the same paper we learn that the counterfeiter is abroad, in Texas; several well executed specimens, purporting to be of this issue, have been recently presented at the treasury department, and proved to be counterfeit.

[Boston Post.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 21.—VOL. IV.]

WASHINGTON CITY, JULY 21, 1838.

[VOL. LIV.—WHOLE No. 1,399.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

✂ The president of the United States will leave this city on Monday for the Virginia Springs, passing on his route through the city of Richmond. Mr. Poinsett, who is still in delicate health, will visit the springs in Greenbrier county, Va.

✂ A manifesto of the administration party in congress has been published. The constitutionality of a national bank is opposed. The hon. John M. Niles, of Connecticut, and hon. Charles E. Haynes, of Georgia, presided over the meeting; whence the manifesto was issued.

✂ The president has issued a proclamation concerning the ratification of a convention between the United States and Texas, entered into by their accredited agents, in relation to the indemnity for the capture of the brigs Pocket and Durango. The amount to be paid is $11,750. See page 324.

✂ It will be remembered that a month or two ago, the Bank of Metropolis in this city, was robbed, in a daring manner, of a large amount of jewelry deposited in the bank for safe keeping. The robber has been apprehended in New Orleans.

✂ The United States sloop of war Levant, was, at the latest dates, at Matanzas—the crew in excellent health.

✂ In Louisiana, the result of the last election is as follows, as correctly as we have been able to collect: The whigs have 10 certain, and probably 11 in the senate out of 17, of which it is composed, and 11 in the house of delegates to 17 administration, and 2 neutrals. The whig governor elected.

✂ The board of visitors to the military academy at West Point, report favorably of its present condition. In the body of their report we find the following: "Admittance to it is opened to every condition of fortune and of birth."

✂ Commodore David Porter, charge de affaires at the Turkish court, and his two sons, have arrived at Boston in the ship Niger, from Constantinople.

✂ It is stated in the northern papers that Mr. Webster will, at the Boston dinner, give his views of the presidency, and take that occasion to withdraw from the field as a candidate.

✂ Mr. Prentiss, of Mississippi, is to attend the Webster dinner at Boston.

✂ Thom, the Scotch sculptor, has made, it is said, a remarkable statue of Washington. The statue is colossal and cut from a block, taken from the Patterson quarry, New Jersey.

✂ Mr. David Treadwell of Little river, Brunswick county, N. C., states that several trunks belonging to the Pulaski, have come ashore in that vicinity.

✂ A railroad has been established between Bristol and London, for the purpose of transporting passengers to the steam packets, that leave the former place for the United States.

✂ Madison, in Dane county, is hereafter to be the seat of government of Wisconsin territory.

✂ A meeting of twelve hundred Whig delegates assembled on the 11th of July at Utica, New York.

✂ The honorable John Branch is to run on the administration ticket against governor Dudley, for the gubernatorial chair of the state of North Carolina.

✂ The Athens, Tennessee Journal of the 4th inst. says, "several detachments of Cherokees have passed through this place within the last two or three weeks on their way from North Carolina to the agency, and on last Friday twelve hundred passed through conducted by two companies of artillery, under the command of capt. Washington. This last detachment nearly completes the emigration for North Carolina."

VOL. LIV.—SIC. 21.

✂ The exploring expedition, fully equipped, will leave the United States in the first week of August, on her voyage of discovery to the southern regions: lieutenant Wilkes commanding.

✂ A public meeting was held in Montgomery county, Maryland, on the 26th June, to remonstrate against the appointment made by the governor of Maryland, by virtue of a resolution of the general assembly, of colonel Abert, of the District of Columbia, as the engineer to make certain surveys for the design of ascertaining the propriety of constructing a canal from the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to the city of Baltimore.

✂ The citizens of North Carolina are awakening to the immense impulse felt throughout the country on the subject of internal improvements. A large meeting was held at Greensborough, a short time since, and governor Dudley addressed the assemblage, in an earnest and eloquent manner, upon this interesting subject.

✂ Within a year we shall have twenty steam ships from Great Britain, France, and Holland. The speed with which these vessels pass to and fro between the two hemispheres, will create an epoch in civilization and the arts, at which philanthropy and learning should rejoice.

✂ It is estimated, that from the five southern states, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina, fifty thousand persons travel northward every summer. The travelling and incidental expenses of this army of travellers, is put down at five hundred dollars a head.

✂ It is announced in the Charleston papers that the Southwestern Rail Road Bank will be put into operation next November. This bank is connected with the Louisville, Cincinnati and Charleston rail road company, and was incorporated by the states of South Carolina, North Carolina, and Tennessee, for the express purpose of promoting that great work.

✂ The Ohio convention met at Columbus on the 31st ultimo, and was most numerous attended. Sixty-five counties were represented, and between three and four thousand delegates are said to have been present. Ex-governor Allen Trimble was appointed to the chair, and John N. Taylor, secretary. The following resolution passed with but one dissenting voice:

Resolved, That this convention have undiminished confidence in the patriotism and talents of our distinguished fellow citizen, Wm. Henry Harrison; and concur with the convention of July last, in presenting his name to the national convention as a candidate for the presidency; but at the same time pledge their cordial support to the nomination of that convention, should it fall on either of the other distinguished statesmen, Henry Clay or Daniel Webster, whose names are prominent as whig candidates for that important office.

The convention was addressed by general W. S. Murphy of Ross, R. W. Thompson of Indiana, hon. Jacob Burnet, gov. Vance and Charles Anderson of Dayton.

GEORGIA. The whigs of this state have nominated the following ticket for congress: William C. Dawson, R. W. Habersham, J. C. Alford, W. T. Colquitt, E. A. Nisbit, Mark A. Cooper, Thomas Butler King, Edward J. Black, Lott Warren.

FRANCE AND TEXAS. We clip the following important paragraph from the New York Star of Saturday:

"We have it from an undoubted source, that the French cabinet will shortly conclude a treaty of amity and commerce with this young republic.—General Henderson had been in Paris two or three weeks only, when he had nearly completed this arrangement with the government. It seems that governor Cass declined to introduce general H. formerly as the minister of Texas; but lord Granville, the English ambassador, nothing daunted, and, doubtless with the authority of the English ministry, offered his services to forward an interview, and actually did introduce general Henderson to count Mole and the other members of the ministry.

MURDER. On the night of the 16th, a man named George Collins, living on Magoth river, in Anne Arundel county, while under the influence, as is supposed, of ardent spirits, shot his son Richard, aged 18 years, and killed him on the spot; and had another of his sons named Joshua fastened up in one of the rooms of his house with the intention of shooting him also, but he succeeded in effecting his escape by breaking through the window, and while in the act of running from the house was fired at by his father, and severely wounded in one of his arms. [Ealt. Chronicle.

DUEL. The St. Louis Republican says that a duel took place on the 4th, between a Mr. Le Lange of New Orleans, and Mr. R. C. Bates of New York, on account of some difficulty which occurred in St. Louis. The parties met by moonlight, near Alton, Illinois. On the first fire, eight yards distance, Mr. Le Lange was wounded in the arm; a proper apology was made, and here the matter terminated.

SILK CULTURE IN NEW JERSEY. John M. Brown, esq. of Salem, has a cocoonery of 25,000 worms, which he feeds on the common mulberry. They have spun eight bushels of cocoons. In a few days he will have 100,000 worms feeding on the morus multicaulis, which he set out in the spring. The cocoons of this year will yield $200. Mr. Brown will also have a large profit from his young trees. Messrs. Reeves of Allowaystown, have also entered into this business.

ESTIMATED EXPENDITURES OF THE GOVERNMENT FOR 1838. In the debate on the harbor bill, Mr. Cambreleng presented the following estimate of the public expenditures for the ensuing year.

Appropriations for 1838 already made:
Army	$4,200,000
Civil and diplomatic	3,200,000
Revolutionary and other pensions	3,050,000
Navy, including former appropriations	5,750,000
Cumberland road	500,000
Preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities	7,740,000
Protection of northern frontier	625,000
Appropriations under permanent laws	2,260,000
	27,325,000

Appropriations which will probably be made:
Indian annuities, &c.	1,520,000
Fortifications,	850,000
West Point	150,000
Harbors, &c.	1,450,000
Additional appropriations for Public service	200,000
New army bill	723,000
New Indian treaties	1,700,000
	6,593,000

Miscellaneous appropriations not enumerated	1,000,000
	$34,918,000

Of the above appropriations, about thirteen millions are for extraordinary purposes, ten million of which belong to the Indian service alone.

This will make the aggregate charge upon the year including the appropriations of former years unexpended, on the 1st January last, 47,000,000.

NEW HAMPSHIRE. The legislature of New Hampshire adjourned on Thursday the 5th inst. to the last Wednesday in May. On the 4th, the house held three sessions, in the morning, afternoon and evening. A set of resolutions relative to slavery, after general discussions, were indefinitely postponed, yeas 109, nays 82. A resolution passed, instructing the senators, and requesting the representatives of the state in congress to use their efforts to effect an equitable adjustment of the claims of our citizens for spoiliations by France prior to 1800.

BANKS, CURRENCY, &c. The Philadelphia commercial list of Saturday has the following paragraphs:

The banks in this city have determined to resume on the 1st of August, notwithstanding all that has appeared to the contrary in the newspapers. This determination has given very general satisfaction to the business portion of the community, who now believe that in a short time business will again resume its wonted activity.

The governor as will be seen in a subsequent column, has issued a proclamation calling on the banks throughout the state, to resume by the 13th August next, so that had no previous arrangements been entered into for this purpose, they would soon have been compelled to adopt this course.

Respecting governor Ritner's proclamation, requiring the banks of Pennsylvania to resume on the 13th August, the Philadelphia National Gazette of Friday evening says:

The proclamation is clearly, and nervously written; it acknowledges the force of necessity in causing the banks to suspend specie payments, but insists on the fact that the time is near at hand when arguments derived from such necessity need no longer be advanced. In this opinion the writer is warmly sustained by our citizens. The banks of our own section (and we do not doubt of other parts of the state, too,) are perfectly well pleased with the proclamation, its temper and doctrine.

The Philadelphia Inquirer of Saturday, says of the proclamation:

It is looked upon as settling the question with regard to a resumption of specie payments, and hence is warmly commended and approved, by all who are in favor of such a resumption—embracing, as we have reason to believe, nineteen-twentieths of the community.

The Philadelphia Herald of Saturday says:

We have heard but one opinion expressed of the proclamation of governor Ritner, requiring the banks to resume specie payments, &c. and that has been one of decided approbation. This act will raise him still higher in the admiration of his fellow-citizens, and shows that they can at all times rely upon his independence, firmness, and intelligence, in sustaining the honor and the interests of the commonwealth.

The banks in this city have felt the obligation they were under to resume specie payments, and had already made arrangements for meeting in convention those of Boston, Baltimore, Richmond, &c. with the view of fixing an early day, probably the first of August, for a general resumption. Courtesy to the banks of other cities dictated this course, while it would not by any means procrastinate the period of resumption. The convention of banks will be held in this city on the 23d inst., and we have no doubt that the first day of August will be fixed upon by the banks for a general resumption. We rejoice, however, that the governor has taken the wise precaution of fixing a day beyond which the present state of things shall not be permitted to continue. It will, at all events, be a strong persuader to any bank, if any such there were in this state, that felt a reluctance to comply with the demand of the public to resume, to yield to that demand.

The ship Columbiana, at New Orleans from Liverpool, has brought 20,000 sovereigns for the Commercial bank of that city.

From the New York Gazette, July 11.

We are gratified to learn that the large bank of fifty millions of dollars, which has long been under advisement among our financial men, has at length assumed a palpable form. Joseph D. Beers, esq., a gentleman of extensive experience in the business of exchange and banking, has, we are informed, accepted the office of president, and Myndert Van Schaick, esq., so favorably known as a man of fortune and high character, will officiate as vice president.

The direction comprise a portion of our most able and wealthy citizens, and the first subscription of two millions of dollars is already filled. Extensive arrangements, we are told, are already in progress to secure important advantages to this institution, and every thing betokens the most decided success.

The bank is termed the "NORTH AMERICAN TRUST AND BANKING COMPANY," and books for further subscriptions will be opened as soon as the articles of association are entered according to law. That this enterprise will materially aid New York in all its business relations, does not admit of a doubt.

The U. S. bank bonds authorized to be sold by the recent act of congress, amount to about six millions of dollars. The proceeds will go into the treasury, to aid in defraying the expenses of government.

Banks of Alabama. We learn by the Tuscaloosa Intelligencer that there has very recently been held, in that town, a bank convention to consider on the proper measures to be adopted, preparatory to a resumption of specie payments. The proceedings of the convention had not transpired, but it was rumored that a resolution was adopted to resume 4th of July, 1839. No doubt the convention was greatly enlightened and assisted in its deliberations by the valuable details and profound speculations of the bank commissioners, who have so recently made a tour of the state in their official capacity. We trust the proceedings of the convention will be made public, and not kept bottled up for the sole use of his excellency, until the meeting of the legislature.

We are gratified to learn, from other sources, that the June instalment of the deferred debt to the bank and the branches has generally been met or satisfactorily adjusted; and we look with some anxiety for the next monthly reports of the banks.

Banks and bank notes. The act on this subject received the approval of the president on the 5th instant. It is as follows:

An act to modify the last clause of the fifth section of the deposit act of the twenty-third of June, eighteen hundred and thirty-six.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That the last clause of the fifth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the deposits of the public money," approved on the twenty-third day of June, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, declaring that the notes or bills of no bank shall be received in payment of any debt due to the United States, which shall alter the fourth day of July, in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-six, issue any note or bill of a less denomination than five dollars, shall be, and the same is hereby, so far modified as that the interdiction as to the reception of the bills and notes shall not continue against any bank which has, since the said fourth day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, issued bills or notes of a less denomination than five dollars, or which shall issue any such bills or notes prior to the first day of October, in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, but that from and after the said last mentioned day, the bills or notes of no bank shall be received in payment of any debt due to the United States, which bank shall, after that date issue, re-issue, or pay out any bill or note of a denomination less than five dollars.

WM. R. KING,

President of the senate pro tem.

JAMES K. POLK,

Speaker of the house of representatives.

Approved, July 5th, 1838.

M. VAN BUREN.

The New York Commercial publishes the following list of the notes received as current by the banks of that city on Saturday:

New York state. Brooklyn banks; Westchester county; bank of Newburg; Highland; bank of Poughkeepsie; Dutchess county do.; Farmers and Manufacturers' do.; Ulster county; Kingston; Catskill; Farmers', Catskill; Hudson River; Mech. and Farmers', Albany; Commercial, do.; Canal, Albany; Farmers', Troy; city, do.; Lansingburgh, fifties, fifties and one hundred; Bank of Albany, fifties and one hundred; State bank, Albany, one hundred and upwards; Albany city, tens and upwards; Bank of Troy, fifties; Saratoga.

New Jersey. Fives and upwards, the Newark banks; State bank, Elizabeth; State bank New Brunswick; Morris Canal; tens and upwards, Farmers and Merchants', Railway; Farmers and Merchants', Middletown, Pt.; Belvidere bank; Sussex county; Commercial, Perth Amboy; State Bank at Morris; Morris county bank.

Connecticut. Twenties and upwards, Stamford bank; fifties and upwards, Fairfield county.

Vermont. Bank of Manchester, fives and upwards.

Tennessee. Union bank, when made payable.

Louisiana. City bank, New Orleans, when made payable.

The following estimate of the amount of American stocks held in England, is given in Mr. Garland's late speech in congress against the sub-treasury bill.

Estimate of American stocks held abroad, principally in England.

Louisiana bank stock in bonds of the State	$22,000,000
Pennsylvania state stocks	16,000,000
Do United States bank	20,000,000
New York state	4,500,000
Do city	1,500,000
Alabama State	4,500,000
Mississippi do	2,000,000
Ohio do	3,500,000
Maryland do	3,000,000

Virginia do	2,600,000
Illinois do	2,000,000
Indiana do	4,000,000
Florida Territory	1,500,000
Farmers' Loan and Trust company, 5 per cent. bonds	3,000,000
New York Life Insurance and Trust company, 5 per cent. bonds	1,500,000
American do do do	1,000,000
Mississippi Bank stock	1,000,000
Tennessee do do	800,000
Delaware and Raritan company and Camden and Amboy railroad company bonds	2,000,000
Miscellaneous stock and securities	14,200,000

$110,000,000

Maryland banks. The following is a statement, made up from official sources, of the general condition of the city and country banks of this state up to the 30th of June.

Banks in Baltimore on the 30th June.

Bills discounted,	$12,705,470 23
Circulation,	2,139,747 88
Specie,	1,140,885 40
Deposites,	1,117,338 31
Due to other banks,	3,503,250 71
Due from other banks,	3,491,196 95

Country Banks.

Bills discounted,	$2,564,659 20
Circulation,	950,060 68
Specie,	439,465 88
Deposites,	745,316 24
Due to other banks,	127,290 52
Due from other banks,	428,190 45

That our readers may be able to institute a direct comparison between the present and past condition of the banks, we give the returns for January 1st, 1835. The debts due other banks were not then given.

Banks in Baltimore.

Bills discounted,	$13,120,263 89
Circulation,	2,110,951 95
Specie,	971,390 24
Deposites,	2,476,063 05

Country Banks.

Bills discounted,	$2,580,028 42
Circulation,	902,157 73
Specie,	353,511 03
Deposites,	776,615 93

A comparison of the above will show that the condition of the banks has been steadily improving, and, although then considered good, is now even better than before. The proportion of specie to the circulation is much greater than is usually considered safe as a basis for issues, and is in every point of view favorable to a resumption of specie payments. In addition to the strength of the banks, we believe there is a general feeling of confidence in their stability and the prudence and responsibility of those connected with their management, which will prove all important in case of a resumption. All hope for such a consummation, and that speedily, and few there are we believe will not aid, by all the means in their power, so desirable a movement.

MR. WOODBURY. It will be seen by the following letter of Mr. Woodbury to the secretary of state of New Hampshire, that he has declined the office of chief justice of that state:

Washington, 9th June, 1838.

Ralph Metcalf, esq., secretary of state.

Sir: I herewith submit a final reply to yours of the 21st ult. The official information of my appointment as chief justice of the superior court of New Hampshire, which it communicated, has created some embarrassment.

On the one hand, this renewed evidence of the kindness and confidence, which have long been exhibited towards me by the people of my native state, is highly gratifying, and increases my desire to be useful to them.

The situation offered is, also, agreeable to me personally; and, if consulting only my own predilections, I should without hesitation, proceed to enter on the performance of its honorable duties.

But looking to the difficulties that still surround the important trust I now hold, the opinion of many is that various considerations of a public and paramount character exist, which ought to prevent my voluntary withdrawal from it at this juncture. I venture, therefore, to hope, that in declining the appointment of chief justice as I hereby do, my motive will be duly appreciated, and that it will not be attributed to any inadequate sense of the honor conferred, or, what would be equally erroneous, to any diminution in my solicitude to promote the best interests of the people of that state, to which I am under such strong and numerous obligations.

With grateful acknowledgments to the governor and council for their favorable sentiments, and to yourself for the obliging manner in which they have been conveyed.

I remain, respectfully yours,
LEVI WOODBURY.

MR. POINSETT. The following letter was addressed to Charleston (S. C.) Washington Society, by the secretary of war, in reply to an invitation to attend the anniversary dinner of that society:

Washington, July 2.

To the president of the Washington Society

SIR: When I had the honor of meeting my fellow-citizens and old associates at the festival with which we celebrated the anniversary of our national independence, the last year, I invited you to sustain the administration, in so far forth only, as it was found worthy your support, by maintaining in their rigor and purity, the union, the constitution and the laws of the country—and it has been in the highest degree gratifying to me, to find that you have very generally expressed your approbation of the course pursued by the administration, aware as I am, from my intimate knowledge of the motives and feelings of those with whom I have so long acted, they would withhold their concurrence with measures which do not originate in the strictest principles of democracy.

In conformity with the views which have always animated a society of which I am proud to be a member, I beg leave to offer as a toast, upon this occasion.

The union, the constitution and the laws of our country—we will support those alone, who maintain them pure and inviolate.

Respectfully,

Your companion,

And humble servant,

J. R. POINSETT.

DINNER TO MR. WEBSTER. A committee of citizens was deputed last week from Boston, to bear to Mr. Webster, at that time in this city, an invitation to a public dinner to which Mr. Webster has returned the following answer:

Astor House, New York, July 13, 1838.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your letter, transmitting resolutions adopted at a meeting in Boston on the 10th inst., inviting me to a public dinner. The respect and kindness manifested by these resolutions, demand my warmest acknowledgments of gratitude. My health not a little exhausted by the length of the session, and by the heat of the weather for some time past, admonishes me to get to my farm as soon as practicable, for the purpose of rest and repose. But if it be the desire of those citizens of Boston whom you represent, that I should meet them on such an occasion as is proposed, I shall not feel at liberty to decline their invitation.

With much true regard,

Your obliged friend and fellow citizen,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To George Darracont, esq., Nathaniel Hammond, esq., Uriel Crocker, esq., Geo. W. Gordon, esq.
The dinner is to take place on Tuesday the 23th inst., at Faneuil Hall.

VIRGINIA MANUFACTURES. From the report of a committee appointed at the convention lately held to take into consideration the interests of the southern states, to inquire whether manufacturing establishments cannot be carried on as efficiently and cheaply in Virginia as in the northern states, it appears that, in Wheeling, Petersburg, Richmond, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg, and Kanawha, more than eleven millions of dollars are already invested in the manufactories of these places; that, in Wheeling alone there are one hundred and thirty-six manufacturing establishments, employing more than one thousand seven hundred hands—the chief articles manufactured there being iron castings, bar iron, nails, and glass ware. In Petersburg, there are five flourishing cotton manufactories, an iron foundry, and several flour mills and tobacco manufactories. In Richmond there are also establishments of a similar kind. In Fredericksburg and Falmouth, there are several iron and wollen manufactories, with flour and other mills. The manufacture of pig and bar iron is extensively conducted in the counties of Rockbridge, Alleghany, Botetourt, Wythe, and Washington, in the upper part of the valley; and in Augusta, Shenandoah, Page, and other counties in the lower part of the valley, and in some of the counties bordering on the Ohio, and in the county of Franklin, east of the ridge. The resources of Virginia in iron, coal, and salt are not surpassed in any part of the union. And the committee gave it as their opinion that, when the banking establishments of the state shall be extended, and the facilities of communication shall be improved, as contemplated, no state in the union can carry on manufacturing establishments to greater advantage to its citizens than Virginia. [Nat. Int.]

STATISTICS OF CRIME. It appears, from returns made with the most rigid exactness, that the criminal population of the city of Liverpool amounts to 4200 females, and 4520 males, 2,270 of the latter being professional thieves, and the residue living by a combination of labor and plunder. Examinations made subsequently to the above, not only go to confirm their accuracy but to show that in fact the number of these malefactors is underrated. It has been ascertained by regular returns, about the correctness of which it is said no doubts can be entertained, that in the year 1835, there were 13,506 persons taken into custody of whom 2,138 were committed. In 1836 there were 16,630 taken up, of whom 3,343 were committed, and during eight months of 1837 there were 12,709 taken into custody, of whom 2,849 were committed. From July 1835, to July 1836, 921 juvenile thieves under eighteen years of age, were apprehended, of whom three hundred and seventy-eight were committed. From July 1836, up to the date at which the returns from which the above data are derived were made, there had been taken into custody 2,339 juvenile thieves, of whom 1,096 had been committed, there having been in custody during the same time upwards of 1500 adult thieves. The amount of property stolen annually is estimated at about one million sterling. [Balt. Amer.]

THE FISHERIES. The number of vessels employed in the cod and mackerel fishery, belonging to Gloucester, the last year, was 221; tonnage of the same, 9824; hands employed, 1580; capital invested, $343,000. Quite a number of new vessels have been added to the business this season, increasing the tonnage say to 11,000 tons.

The number of vessels engaged in the fisheries; owned at Marblehead, is 69; tonnage, 5368; hands employed, 483.

Our harbor for the past week has teemed with mackerel—and though mostly small, their taking has contributed much sport, and in some instances, not a little profit to those who have been in successful pursuit.

Last week twenty barrels of mackerel were seized at one haul at Sandy Point, by captain Baker. His seine is five hundred yards long. A few weeks since he enclosed a multitude of fishes, principally maiden shad. It is estimated that their number was 200,000. [Gloucester Telegraph.]

MINISTER OF TEXAS. We learn from the Houston (Texas) National Banner, of the 15th ult. that the president of Texas has appointed Peter W. Grayson, minister plenipotentiary of the republic near the government of the United States, in the place of Memucan Hunt, resigned.

CASE OF B. RATHBUN. From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser of the 7th inst. We yesterday announced, in a postscript, the acquittal of Benjamin Rathbun, on the trial which has occupied the present court for the last ten days. Notwithstanding the former absorbing interest felt in the issue of this important case, yet, owing partly to lapse of time since it first filled the public ear, and partly to the protracted delays and postponements which have from time to time put off the final result, the edge of curiosity had become comparatively dulled, and the once imposing aspect of the case had dwindled down to the common place character of ordinary trials.

Some difficulty was experienced in empanelling a jury for the trial, many having expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.

By resorting to talesmen, however, the necessary number was finally obtained, comprising mostly plain substantial farmers—a class whose sterling integrity and sound judgment may almost invariably be relied on as least liable to err in the decisions of human tribunals.

There were three indictments pending in this county against the accused, for the alleged forged endorsements of three several notes of $2,000 each; which were deposited by Rathbun with Messrs. Joy & Webster of this city in January, 1836, as collateral security against certain advances made by them upon the contract for building their extensive block of stores. One of these notes was endorsed "David E. Evans," another "Bissel Humphry—Noyes Darrow" and the other "Marlin Daley—Sylvester Mathews." It was upon the indictment for the latter that the present trial was had.

The prosecution was conducted by the district attorney general Beardsley. The defence was managed by the former counsel of prisoner, H. K.

Smith, E. Van Buren, and T. T. Sherwood, esqrs. The latter gentleman was sentenced by presiding judge Dayton to two days imprisonment for contempt of court, in the examination of one of the witnesses.

The verdict on the indictment just tried, disposes, we understand, of the two remaining ones in Genesee, which will probably come to trial at Batavia, in September next. Upon these Mr. Rathbun has formerly entered bail, in bonds of $5,000.

REVOLUTIONARY RELICS. The Troy (N. Y.) Mail, in describing the celebration of the late anniversary in that city, says "in the long procession of committees, and societies, and trades, and associations that participated in the scene of joy, the revolutionary fathers attracted particular notice and gave to the occasion an earnest of the event which they were called to celebrate. Venerable and white with years, their presence was an incentive to the love of country. The following is a list of their names, and we rejoice that they are yet with us and hope that they may be spared to meet at the next anniversary.

Names.	Residence.	Age.
William Slater, Sandlake, Rensselaer co.		74
Henry Mirach,	Troy,	84
John Folard,	do	84
Edward Wilson,	do	76
Jacob Wager,	do	75
Gideon Whitmarsh, Northumberland, Saratoga county,		80
Reuben Babcock, Sandlake, Rensselaer co.		80
Moses Sheldon, Bennington, Vt.		86
Mr. Kinney, Greenbush, Rensselaer co.		79
Ephraim Whitaker,	Troy,	84
Cornelius Myers,	do	78
Simon Griswold, Nassau, Rensselaer co.		85
Samuel Gordon,	Troy,	74
Isaac Cushman,	do.	80
Benjamin Pierce,	do.	75
Elijah Reed,	do.	74

TEXAS. The steam packet Cuba, at New Orleans from Texas, brings the Houston Telegraph to the 23d ult. It contains no news, being chiefly occupied with the speech of Mr. Preston, in the senate of the United States, upon the annexation of Texas to this country, and with electioneering matter. General Lamar seems to be the most prominent candidate for the presidency, and judge Burnet for the vice-presidency of the new republic, though some doubts had been raised as to the eligibility of the former. Colonel Lynch has been nominated to represent the county of Galveston in the next congress.

THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN. Mr Fairfield, from the committee on foreign affairs, to which was recommended the bill of the house of representatives of the United States "to provide for surveying the northeastern boundary line of the United States, according to the provision of the treaty of peace of 1783," reported the same without amendment; and it was ordered, on his motion, that the bill do lie on the table.

The same gentleman, from the same committee, further reported the following resolutions:

Resolved, That, after a careful examination and deliberate consideration of the whole controversy between the United States and Great Britain, relative to the northeastern boundary of the former, the house of representatives does not entertain a doubt of the entire practicability of running and marking that boundary in strict conformity with the stipulations of the definitive treaty of peace of 1783; and entertain a perfect conviction of the justice and validity of the title of the United States, to the full extent of all the territory in dispute between the two powers.

Resolved, further, That, considering that more than half a century has elapsed since the conclusion of that treaty; considering the extraordinary delay which has hitherto marked the negotiations and proceedings of the governments of the two countries in their endeavor amicably to settle this controversy; and considering the danger of mutual irritation and collisions upon the border of kindred and friendly nations from further procrastination, this house cannot forbear to express an earnest desire that the pending negotiation should be brought to a close, and the final decision of the dispute be made as early as practicable.

These resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

A CARD. The undersigned, friends of Messrs. Segar and Savage, having, without consultation with their principals, and upon their sole responsibility, agreed to refer the contemplated affair of honor between those gentlemen to the final arbitration of the hon. Mr. Pickens, of South Carolina, and the hon. S. S. Prentiss, of Mississippi, are happy to announce that it has been adjusted in a manner entirely honorable to both parties, upon the basis of a mutual withdrawal of all charges or remarks personally offensive to either.

They cannot forbear at the same time from expressing their high sense of the generous and persevering efforts of the hon Messrs. Wise and Hunter, of Virginia, by whose earnest and intelligent interposition this painful controversy was at length brought to a pacific termination.

FELIX HUSTON,
J. L. MARTIN.

Washington city, June 24, 1838.

SINGULAR CASES OF INSANITY. The New York Journal of Commerce relates the following singular cases of insanity brought on persons in the water from a cannon being fired over them:

At an early hour on the morning of the 4th of July, two young men went into the river at Castle Garden, to swim, and at the very moment they leaped into the water, a salute was fired from some heavy pieces of cannon, which were contiguous. When the two young men leaped in, they remained under the water some seconds, and on rising to the surface, were observed by some bystanders to act in so fantastic and extraordinary a manner, that it was evident something of an unusual nature had occurred to them. A boat was therefore immediately procured, and the two young men taken out of the water and brought to the shore, when it was found that both of them had lost their senses; and so totally and entirely, as to be unable to give any explanation of how they had been affected, or what sensations they felt at the moment. Their insanity was not of a violent kind, but rather what might be termed idiotic; or a total prostration of every intellectual attribute.

In this melancholy condition they were conveyed home to their friends, and remained nearly in the same state for two days, at the end of which, one of them partially recovered his reason, but the other still remains without any symptom of amendment.

This fatal result of cannon being fired over persons in the water, will cease to appear very extraordinary to any person who has, when a boy experienced the almost terrific sensation produced on him when under water in a narrow stream, by a common trick, practised by boys, of taking two large stones and striking them forcibly together on the water's edge, immediately over where the swimmer has dived down. A gentleman who witnessed the present occurrence, told us that on one occasion he himself suffered a sort of electric shock, which almost deprived him momentarily of his reason, from a common musket being fired over him while he was under the water.

FROM THE CREEK NATION.

We have great pleasure in copying the following from the Arkansas Gazette, of June 30th:

To the editors of the Arkansas Gazette.

Creek Nation, June 12, 1838.

Sir: It is with feelings of regret that the undersigned, chiefs of the Creek nation, have had interpreted to them a report, in your paper, of May 30th, stating that the Creek Indians show but little disposition to plant corn; and that, in several instances, they have destroyed their own fences, and that the old women have been heard to declare that, as soon as the green corn is fit to pull, the whites must look out, and that most of them carry the marks of determined vengeance in their countenances; and that this report has come through so respectable a source as to leave no doubt of the fact, as it was given by a gentleman who had been, for several years, assisting in the emigration of the Indians west. That a great portion of the Creeks have been removed at the point of the bayonet, is but too true; and that there is a dissatisfaction among them, is also true; yet they look up to the government for the fulfilment of the promises their agents have made them. When that is done, all will be right with the Muscogee people; and, until that is done, they will not consider themselves fairly dealt with. And, as to any disposition to hostilities among us, we know nothing of it; neither has the first rail of a fence been destroyed, nor have we heard anything of the old women's report, that the white people must look out as soon as the green corn is ripe. The Muscogee nation have, at this time, as good a prospect for a good crop of corn, considering the late spring, and the small quantity of farming tools, as they ever had. The gentleman who was the origin of this report is mistaken, and we should like for you to give his name, as we know of no one who has been recently in the Creek nation, who has been employed, for years, in the emigrating of Indians; and we, the undersigned chiefs, do declare the report of hostilities against the whites to be utterly untrue. They have too much love for their wives and children to cherish such an idea for a moment.

The Creek delegation, on their arrival at Van Buren, in Crawford county, Arkansas, were there told, to their surprise, of the report in circulation about the Creeks, and some attempts were made to stop them, until the facts could be ascertained; yet, through the influence of some friends, they were permitted to continue home; and they take pleasure in announcing to their Arkansas brothers, and the world, that the report is all false, and hope that you will give this as a true statement in your paper.

With respect, we are, your friends and brothers.
[Signed by Roley McIntosh, Fush-hatchy Micco, and twenty-two other chiefs.]

B. MARSHALL, interpreter.

Eli Jacobs, C. C.

THE CHEROKEES.

Head-quarters, eastern division
Cherokee agency, June 17, 1838.

The removal of Indians, for emigration from the middle district, late Cherokee country, being nearly, or quite completed, arrangements will be commenced at once for the honorable discharge and payment of the volunteers and militia in the service of the United States within that district.

For these purposes, brigadier gen. Floyd, will, as fast as the state of the service will permit, cause those troops to be assembled at one or more points as, after consulting with major Payne, the acting inspector general, may be suitable or convenient.

The latter, in mustering out of service, will call to his aid major Fauntleroy, of the United States' army, and give all orders for securing the public property of every description—as well as (after consulting brig. gen. Floyd) the arms and accoutrements belonging to the state of Georgia. Major Payne may also cause to be sold and accounted for, such property in the quartermaster's and commissary's departments as may be advantageous to the United States to sell.

Acting paymasters Bennett and Buck, will immediately repair to the middle district to pay off the troops as fast as they are discharged, in the best money they may be able to command.

The commander of the eastern district will, as soon as he can dispense with their services, order the Georgia companies at Chastain and Fort Newman, to report to brigadier gen. Floyd for discharge with the other Georgia troops.

Captain Cleveland's company at Dahlohnega, will be discharged at the discretion of brigadier gen. Eustis, giving notice to the paymasters above-mentioned; and he will retain captain Derrick's company of Georgians for further orders.

Brigadier gen. Floyd, it is hoped, will remain in service, until the business of his district shall be entirely completed. He, his staff, the officers and men of the Georgia line, will please accept the thanks of the United States, for the promptitude, zeal, and humanity they have almost universally displayed in the discharge of their painful duties. The only exception to this just commendation, is the detachment ordered to Chastains, and in its course the delay and disorders committed, are, no doubt, mainly to be attributed to the misconduct of the lieutenant colonel, who has since resigned. The brigadier general himself has exhibited a degree of intelligence, decision, and method, which would do credit to any service.

By command of major gen. Scott.

(Signed) W. J. WORTH,
Lieut. col. and chief of the staff.

Executive Department,
Milledgeville, June, 23, 1838.

To gen. Charles Floyd:

Sir: Major White arrived here last evening, and delivered to me your communications of the 18th and 20th inst., and the orders of general Scott, directing the discharge of the troops under your command.

The people of the state cannot but be grateful to you and your brigade, for the successful termination of your military operations, in obtaining for Georgia the full possession of her territorial rights, and for the manner in which this important public service had been performed.

In discharging the troops, you are requested to give my thanks to the officers and men for their promptness in organizing and marching to the place of rendezvous, their humanity to the Indians, and the zeal and efficiency with which they have executed their various duties.

Very respectfully yours,
GEORGE R. GILMER.

Head-quarters, eastern division.

Cherokee agency, June 22, 1838.

Sir: I have much pleasure in saying to your excellency, that of the Cherokees who yet remained in the country, on the 24th ult., probably more than three fourths have already been collected for emigration by the troops under my command. The other fourth, it is expected, will be collected in eight or ten days more.

About 8,000 were sent off to the west, between the 1st and 17th inst., when apprehending that the warm season might prove highly injurious to the Indians, I was induced to suspend further emigration until the first of September next.

In the meantime, I propose to hold all the Indians yet to be emigrated, guarded by regular troops, at and around this place, Ross' and Gunter's landing. I have the honor to be, with great respect,

Your excellency's most obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

P. S. I have already commenced the discharge of the Tennessee militia of this army.

W. S.

His excellency, E. Cannon, gov. of Tennessee.

From the Savannah Georgian of the 28th ult.
Middle Military District.

New Echota, July 3d, 1838.

I inclose you major general Scott's order, discharging the Georgia troops. The infantry was immediately discharged, and the cavalry were detained to scour the country for straggling Indians. That duty has been performed, and about forty stragglers have been taken and sent to Ross' landing. Nearly all the cavalry have since been mustered out, and the balance will be discharged so soon as the escort returns.

I enclose you also general Floyd's order for discharging the troops. This order was not extended to the cavalry until recently, from the circumstances above stated.

I have reason to apprehend that numbers of the Indians removed to Ross' landing and now assembled there to the number of upwards 5,000, will desert and get back to Georgia, as soon as all the Georgia troops are discharged. A great many have already returned, some with papers from white men. General Floyd has recaptured several and sent them back.

The inference is reasonable that if they would venture to return while the troops are here, that they will do it in greater numbers when there is no force to oppose them. 5,000 Indians encamped on the borders of the state, have many opportunities of eluding the utmost vigilance and will find their way back. "Soft Shell Turtle," an old chief, has been hid in the mountains with 24 followers, for nearly a month, and through the vigilance of capt. Means of the mounted volunteers, have all been captured. Georgia is, at length, rid of her red population, and this beautiful country will now be prosperous and happy."

Head-quarters, Middle Military District.

New Echota, 21st June, 1838.

ORDERS, No. 4.

The Georgia volunteers, having performed with promptitude, energy and humanity, the duties assigned to them, in the Cherokee country, will be honorably discharged from the service of the United States, by major general Scott. If any Indians, have eluded their vigilance, they are but a few stragglers, when necessity will compel them to follow their tribe to the west, or surrender, or perish. To the high praise bestowed by major gen. Scott on the Georgia troops, the brigadier general commanding them, has the pleasure to add his commendation, and in bidding them farewell, they have his best wishes, for a safe and happy return to their respective homes.

By order of brigadier general Floyd, commanding middle military district, G. M.

THOMAS BOURKE,
Captain and aid-de-camp.

OFFICIAL.

By the president of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, a convention between the government of the United States of America and the government of the republic of Texas, to terminate the reclamations of the former government, for the capture, seizure, and detention of the brigs, Pocket, and Durango, and for injuries suffered by American citizens on board of the Pocket, was concluded and signed at Houston, on the eleventh day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, which convention is word for word, as follows:

Convention between the government of the United States of America and the government of the republic of Texas, to terminate the reclamations of the former government, for the capture, seizure, and detention of the brig, Pocket, and Durango, and for injuries suffered by American citizens on board of the Pocket.

Alces La Branche, charge d'affaires of the United States of America, near the republic of Texas, acting on behalf of the said United States of America, and R. A. Irion, secretary of state of the republic of Texas, acting on behalf of the said republic, have agreed to the following articles.

ART. 1. The government of the republic of Texas, with a view to satisfy the aforesaid reclamation for the capture, seizure, and confiscation of the two vessels aforementioned, as well as for indemnity to American citizens who have suffered injuries from the said government of Texas, or its officers, obliges itself to pay the sum of eleven thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars, ($11,750,) to the government of the United States of America, to be distributed amongst the claimants by the said government of the United States of America.

ART. 2. The sum of eleven thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars, ($11,750,) agreed on in the first article shall be paid in gold or silver, with interest at six per cent. one year after the exchange of the ratifications of this convention. The said payment shall be made at the seat of government of the republic of Texas, into the hands of such person or persons as shall be duly authorized by the government of the United States of America to receive the same.

ART. 3. The present convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged in the city of Washington, in the space of three months from this date, or sooner, if possible.

In faith whereof, the parties above named have respectively subscribed these articles, and thereto affixed their seals.

Done at the city of Houston, on the eleventh day of the month of April, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight.

[L. s.] ALCEZ LA BRANCHE.
[L. s.] R. A. IRION.

And whereas the said convention has been duly ratified on both parts, and the respective ratifications of the same were exchanged at Washington, on the sixth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, by John Forsyth, secretary of state of the United States, and Fairfax, Catlett, charge d'affaires of the republic of Texas accredited to the government of the United States, on the part of their respective governments.

Now, therefore, be it known that I, MARTIN VAN BUREN, president of the United States, have caused the said convention to be made public, to the end that the same and every clause and article thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand [L. s.] and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this sixth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the sixty-third.

M. VAN BUREN.

By the president:

John Forsyth, secretary of state.

NAVAL—OFFICIAL.

Copy of a letter from commodore John B. Nicholson, commanding United States navy naval forces on the coast of Brazil, to the secretary of the navy, dated February 19, 1838.

U. S. ship Independence,
Monte Video, Feb. 19, 1838.

Sir: I take leave to inform the honorable secretary of the navy of the arrival of this ship at this anchorage on the evening of the seventeenth inst. after a passage of fourteen days from Rio de Janeiro.

I am happy to add that the health of the officers and crew of this ship, and the United States brig Dolphin, also at anchor here, continues unimpaired.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. NICOLSON,
Captain commanding U. S. naval forces on the coast of Brazil.

Hon. Mahlon Dickerson,
Secretary of the navy, Washington.

Pennacola, June 30. The U. S. ship Ontario, arrived here on Tuesday last from a cruise in the Gulf, having left Vera Cruz on the 19th May last.

The following is a list of the officers of the Ontario. Samuel L. Breese, esq. commander; lieutenants, S. Barron, N. W. Duke, Henry French, Henry J. Paul; surgeon, A. G. Gambrill; purser, Joseph Bryan; acting master, W. S. Smith; midshipmen, R. Burts, W. H. Maccomb, J. M. B. Clitz, S. C. Throckmorton; capt's. clerks, C. Francis, jr.; purser's clerk, B. T. Ferris; boatswain, R. H. Oneal; gunner, E. Whitten; acting carpenter, John Cohill; acting sail maker, J. T. Tatem.

List of the officers attached to the U. S. frigate Constellation, on her arrival from the coast of Mexico.

Commodore A. J. Dallas, captain Jas. McIntosh; lieutenants Farragut, Mitchell, McKinstry, Wurts; acting lieut. Spotswood; fleet surgeon, Edwards; acting master, Decatur; secretary, Miller; professor, Coffin; passed midshipman, Gardner; ass't. surgeons, Mously, Greer; midshipmen, Murry, Blanton, Barnett, Gibbon, Bryson, Henson, Guest, Brice land, Judson, Eagar, Creighton; masters mate, Hoban; clerk, Palmer; gunner, City; boatswain, Bryan; sailmaker, Burline; carpenter, McRay.

Change since her arrival.

Lt. Mitchell, to naval Hospital, sick; Lt. Chandler from Grampus; Lt. McKinstry, leave of absence; Lt. Walden, of marine corps from Middle Florida; passed midshipmen, Gardner to Grampus, as acting master.

The French brig of war Dunois of 12 guns, arrived here on Thursday last, from Vera Cruz, and exchanged salutes with the flag ship of the squadron; after which the brig saluted the city and her salute was again returned, by the Constellation. We understand the object of her visit, is to procure water and other supplies for the blockading squadron on the Mexican coast.

The U. S. ships Vincennes and Peacock came down from the navy yard very prettily under foretopsails Friday afternoon, and anchored off the naval hospital. These fine looking ships, with the more stately Macedonian, made quite a show from the town. [Norfolk Beacon.

A letter from com. John B. Nicholson, dated on board the U. S. ship Independence at Montevideo, on the 19th February, states that the officers and crew of that vessel, and also of the United States brig Dolphin, continued to enjoy excellent health.

Promotions in the navy. Lieutenant Stephen Champlin, to be commander, from the 22d June, 1838.

Passed midshipman, M. G. L. Claiborne, to be lieutenant, from the 22d June, 1838.

A marine general court martial convened at the navy yard, Philadelphia, on Monday, June 18, 1838, and was composed of captain John Harris, president.

Captains Thomas A. Linton, James McCauley; lieutenants J. G. Williams, A. Edson, G. F. Lindsay, and L. N. Carter, members.

Zalegman Phillips, Esq., judge advocate. Second lieutenant James Broom was tried on sundry charges and specifications, found guilty, and sentenced to be cashiered. Sentence approved July 6, 1838. [Army and Navy Chronicle.

ARMY BILL.

AN ACT, to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That there shall be added to each of the four regiments of artillery, one company, to be organized in the same manner as authorized by existing laws, with the exceptions hereafter mentioned: that there be added to every company of artillery sixteen privates, and to every company of infantry one sergeant and thirty-eight privates, and that the number of second lieutenants of a company of artillery to be reduced to one, and that this reduction be so made, in connection with the appointment of officers to the four additional companies authorized as aforesaid, and the transfer to the ordnance department hereafter directed, that all the present second lieutenants shall be retained in service; and there shall be raised and organized, under the direction of the president of the United States, one regiment of infantry, to be composed of the same number and rank of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, composing the regiments of infantry now in the service of the United States, who shall receive the same pay and allowance, and be subject to the same rules and regulations which now apply to other regiments of infantry, as provided for in this act.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the president of the United States be, and he is hereby authorized to add to the corps of engineers, whenever he may deem it expedient to increase the same, one lieutenant colonel, two majors, six captains, six first and second lieutenants; and that the pay and emoluments of the said corps shall be the same as those allowed to the officers of the regiments of dragoons.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act passed the twenty-eighth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and twelve, entitled "An act making further provision for the corps of engineers," as provides that one paymaster shall be taken from the subalterns of the corps of engineers, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and that the paymaster so authorized and provided be attached to the pay department, and be, in every respect, placed on the footing of other paymasters of the army.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the corps of topographical engineers shall be organized and increased by regular promotions in the same, so that the said corps shall consist of one colonel, one lieutenant colonel, four majors, ten captains, ten first lieutenants, and ten second lieutenants.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That vacancies created by said organization, over and above those which can be filled by the present corps, shall be taken from the army, and from such as it may be deemed advisable of the civil engineers employed under the act of the thirtieth of April, eighteen hundred and thirty-four; that the pay and emoluments to the officers of said corps shall be the same as are allowed to officers of similar rank in the regiments of dragoons.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the authority to employ civil engineers, in the act of the thirtieth April, eighteen hundred and twenty-four, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, after the passage of this act.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the president of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint so many assistant adjutants general, not exceeding two, with the brevet rank, pay, and emoluments of a major, and not exceeding four with the brevet rank, pay, and emoluments of a captain of cavalry, as he may deem necessary; and that they shall be taken from the line of the army, and, in addition to their own, shall perform the duties of assistant inspectors general, when the circumstances of the service may require.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the officers to be taken from the line and transferred to the staff, under the last preceding section, shall receive only the pay and emoluments attached to their rank in the staff; but their transfer shall be without prejudice to their rank and promotion in the line, according to their said rank and seniority; which promotion shall take place according to usage, in the same manner as if they had not been thus transferred.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the president of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to add to the quartermaster's department not exceeding two assistant quartermasters general, with the rank of colonel, two deputy quartermasters general, with the rank of lieutenant colonel, and eight assistant quartermasters, with the rank of captain; that the assistant quartermasters now in service shall have the same rank as is provided by this act for those hereby authorized; and that the pay and emoluments of the officers of the quartermaster's department shall be the same as are allowed to officers of similar rank in the regiments of dragoons: Provided, That all appointments in the quartermaster's department shall be made from the army; and when officers taken for such appointments hold rank in the line, they shall thereupon relinquish said rank, and be separated from the line of the army; and that promotion in said department shall take place as in regiments and corps.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the quartermaster general be, and he is hereby authorized, from time to time, to employ as many forage-masters and wagon-masters as he may deem necessary for the service, not exceeding twenty in the whole, who shall be entitled to receive each forty dollars per month, and three rations per day, and forage for one horse; and neither of whom shall be interested or concerned, directly or indirectly, in any wagon or other means of transport employed by the United States, nor in the purchase or sale of any property procured for or belonging to the United States, except as an agent for the United States.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That there be added to the commissariat of subsistence, one assistant commissary general of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a lieutenant colonel of cavalry; one commissary of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a quartermaster of the army; and three commissaries of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of assistant quartermasters.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That the stewards of hospitals at posts of more than four companies be hereafter allowed the pay, clothing, and rations of a sergeant of ordnance, and, at all other posts, the pay, clothing, and rations of the first sergeant of a company of infantry.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the president of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to add to the ordnance department, whenever he may deem it expedient to increase the same, by and with the advice of the senate, two majors, and that he be further authorized to transfer ten first lieutenants and ten second lieutenants from the artillery to the ordnance department; and that the pay and emoluments of the officers of the said department shall be the same as those allowed to the officers of the regiments of dragoons.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That so much of the fourth section of the act passed fifth of April, eighteen hundred and twenty-two, for the organization of the ordnance department, as authorizes the officers of ordnance to receive the same pay and emoluments now allowed artillery officers, shall be construed to include the ten dollars per month additional pay to every officer in the actual command of a company, as compensation for the duties and responsibilities with respect to clothing, arms, and accoutrements of the company, under the authority of the second section of the act passed second of March, eighteen hundred and twenty-seven, giving further compensation to the captains and subalterns of the army of the United States in certain cases: Provided, That the officers of the ordnance department claiming the compensation for such duties and responsibilities shall have been actually in the command of enlisted men of the ordnance, equal to a company of artillery, and thereby incurred the aforesaid responsibilities.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additional ration per diem for every five years that he may have served, or shall serve, in the army of the United States: Provided, That, in certain cases where officers are entitled to and receive double rations, the additional one allowed in this section shall not be included in the number to be doubled.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, all enlistments in the army of the United States shall be for five years, and that the monthly pay of non-commissioned officers and soldiers shall be as follows: to each sergeant major, quartermaster sergeant, and chief musician, seventeen dollars; to each first sergeant of a company, sixteen dollars; to all other sergeants, thirteen dollars; to each artificer, eleven dollars; to each corporal nine dollars; and to each musician and private soldier, eight dollars: Provided, that two dollars per month of said pay be retained until the expiration of his term of service.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That the allowance of sugar and coffee to the non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, in lieu of the spirit or whiskey component part of the army ration, now directed by regulation, shall be fixed at six pounds of coffee and twelve pounds of sugar to every one hundred rations; to be issued weekly when it can be done with convenience to the public service, and, when not so issued, to be paid for in money.

Sec. 18. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the officers composing the council of administration at any post, from time to time, to employ such person as they may think proper to officiate as chaplain, who shall also perform the duties of schoolmaster at such post; and the person so employed shall, on the certificate of the commanding officer of the post, be paid such sum for his services, not exceeding forty dollars per month, as may be determined by the said council of administration, with the approval of the secretary of war; and, in addition to his pay, the said chaplain shall be allowed four rations per diem, with quarters and fuel.

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That an additional professor be appointed to instruct in the studies of chemistry, mineralogy, and geology, with the pay and emoluments now allowed to the professor of mathematics; and that the secretary of war may assign to the said professor an assistant, to be taken from the officers of the line or cadets; which assistant professor will receive the pay and emoluments allowed to other assistant professors.

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That, whenever suitable non-commissioned officers or privates cannot be procured from the line of the army to serve as paymasters' clerks, paymasters be, and hereby are, authorized and empowered, by and with the approbation of the secretary of war, to employ citizens to perform that duty, at salaries not to exceed five hundred dollars per annum, each.

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That all letters and packages on public business, to and from the commanding general, the colonel of ordnance, the surgeon general, and the head of the topographical corps, shall be free from postage.

Sec. 22. And be it further enacted, That the president shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, whenever he may deem the same expedient, to cause not exceeding two of the regiments of infantry to be armed and equipped, and to serve as a regiment of riflemen, and one other of the regiments of infantry to be armed and equipped, and to serve as a regiment of light infantry.

Sec. 23. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Sec. 24. And be it further enacted, That hereafter the officers of the pay and medical departments of the army shall receive the pay and emoluments of officers of cavalry, of the same grades respectively, according to which they are now paid by existing laws.

Sec. 25. And be it further enacted, That, when volunteers or militia are called into the service of the United States, so that the paymasters authorized by law shall not be deemed sufficient to enable them to pay the troops with proper punctuality, it shall be lawful for the president to appoint as many additional paymasters as he shall deem necessary, who shall perform the same duty, give the same bond, be subject to the same liability, and receive the same pay and emoluments, as are now provided for paymasters of the army: Provided, however, that the number so appointed shall not exceed one for every two regiments of militia or volunteers: And provided, also, That the persons so appointed shall continue in service only so long as their services are required to pay militia and volunteers.

Sec. 26. And be it further enacted, That the compensation hereafter to be allowed to such ordnance storekeepers as shall be designated as paymasters, shall not exceed the pay and emoluments of a captain of ordnance.

Sec. 27. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the engineer superintending the construction of a fortification, or engaged about the execution of any other public work, to disburse the moneys applicable to the same; and, as a compensation therefor, may be allowed by the secretary of war at the rate of two dollars per diem, during the continuance of such disbursements: Provided, That the whole amount of emolument shall not exceed one per cent. on the sum disbursed.

Sec. 28. And be it further enacted, That the term for which cadets hereafter admitted into the military academy at West Point shall engage to serve, be, and the same is hereby, increased to eight years, unless sooner discharged.

Sec. 29. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the bounty now provided by the law for reenlistment, every able-bodied non-commissioned officer, musician, or private soldier, who may reenlist into his company or regiment within two months before, or one month after the expiration of his term of service, shall receive three months' extra pay; and also, any non-commissioned officer or soldier who shall have served ten consecutive years and shall obtain from the commanding officer of his company battalion, or regiment, a certificate that he had faithfully performed his duty whilst in service, shall be allowed one hundred and sixty acres of land, to be designated, surveyed, and laid off at the public expense, in such manner and upon such conditions as may be provided by law; which land shall be patented to the soldier or his heirs, and be not assignable until patented.

Sec. 30. And be it further enacted, That so much of the eleventh section of the act of the sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and two, and so much of the fifth section of the act of the twelfth of April, eighteen hundred and eight, as fix the height of enlisted men at five feet six inches, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That the officers of the army shall not be separated from their regiments and corps for employment on civil works of internal improvement, or be allowed to engage in the service of incorporated companies; and no officer of the line of the army shall hereafter be employed as acting paymaster or disbursing agent for the Indian department, if such extra employment require that he be separated from his regiment or company, or otherwise interfere with the performance of the military duties proper: Provided, That where officers of the army are now employed on civil works or in the Indian and pay departments as contemplated in this section, they may be continued therein not exceeding one year, unless the convenience of the service will admit of their withdrawal sooner.

Sec. 32. And be it further enacted, That the superintendents of the armories at Springfield and Harper's Ferry shall hereafter receive each the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, and rations, fuel, and quarters, as at present authorized; and that the master armorers of the same shall each receive the sum of twelve hundred dollars, and fuel and quarters as at present authorized; and that the aforesaid sums and allowances to the officers aforesaid shall be in full compensation for their services respectively.

Sec. 33. And be it further enacted, That the president be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to appoint seven additional surgeons; and that the officers whose appointment is authorized in this section, shall receive the pay and allowances of officers of the same grades respectively.

ARMY GENERAL ORDER.

GENERAL ORDERS, } War Department,
No. 23. } Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, July 12, 1838.

I. Promotions and appointments in the army, made by the president; and by and with the advice and consent of the senate, in conformity with the existing laws, and the provisions of the act to increase the peace establishment of the United States, approved July 5, 1838.

GENERAL STAFF—ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Assistant adjutants general.

Captain S. Cooper, of the 4th artillery, with the brevet rank of major of cavalry, 7 July, 1838.

Captain L. Thomas, of the 4th infantry, with the brevet rank of major of cavalry, 7 July, 1838.

First lieutenant R. Anderson, of the 3d artillery, with the brevet rank of captain of cavalry, 7 July, 1838.

First lieutenant E. D. Keyes, of the 3d artillery, with the brevet rank of captain of cavalry, 7 July, 1838.

First lieutenant Edmund Schriver, of the 2d artillery, with the brevet rank of captain of cavalry, 7 July, 1838.

First lieutenant G. H. Griffin, of the 6th infantry, with the brevet rank of captain of cavalry, 7 July, 1838.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Major Henry Stanton, quartermaster, lieutenant colonel by brevet, to be assistant quartermaster general, with the rank of colonel, 7 July, 1838.

Major Trueman Cross, quartermaster, to be assistant quartermaster general, with the rank of colonel, 7 July, 1838.

Major Joshua B. Brant, quartermaster, to be deputy assistant quartermaster general, with the rank of lieutenant colonel, 7 July, 1838.

Major Henry Whiting, quartermaster, to be deputy assistant quartermaster general, with the rank of lieutenant colonel, 7 July, 1838.

Quartermasters, with the rank of major.

Brevet major Thomas F. Hunt, of the 5th infantry, 7 July, 1838.

Brevet major Isaac Clark, of the 6th infantry, 7 July, 1838.

Brevet major Aeneas Mackay, of the 3d artillery, 7 July, 1838.

Captain Charles Thomas, of the 7th infantry, 7 July, 1838.

Assistant quartermasters, with the rank of captain.

Captain Samuel McRee, of the 1st infantry, 7 July, 1838.

Captain D. D. Tompkins, of the 1st artillery, 7 July, 1838.

Captain Carlos A. Waite, of the 2d infantry, 7 July, 1838.

Captain Thomas Swords, of the 1st dragoons, 7 July, 1838.

Captain George H. Crosman, of the 6th infantry, 7 July, 1838.

Captain David H. Vinton, of the 3d artillery, 7 July, 1838.

Captain John L'Engle, of the 3d artillery, 7 July, 1838.

Captain E. B. Alexander, of the 3d infantry, 7 July, 1838.

Captain O. Cross, of the 1st infantry, 7 July, 1838.

Captain J. A. Chambers, of the 2d artillery, 7 July, 1838.

Captain M. M. Clark, of the 2d artillery, 7 July, 1838.

Captain J. P. Davis, of the 7th infantry, 7 July, 1838.

First lieutenant F. Searle, of the 4th artillery, 7 July, 1838.

First lieutenant S. P. Heintzelman, of the 2d infantry, 7 July, 1838.

First lieutenant J. R. Irwin, of the 1st artillery, 7 July, 1838.

First lieutenant E. S. Sibley, of the 1st artillery, 7 July, 1838.

First lieutenant E. B. Babbitt, of the 3d infantry, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant B. A. Terrett, of the 1st dragoons, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant R. E. Clary, of the 5th infantry, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant C. O. Collins, of the 4th artillery, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant A. R. Hetzel, of the 2d infantry, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant R. H. Peyton, of the 2d artillery, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant R. S. Dix, of the 7th infantry, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant B. Alvord, of the 4th infantry, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant J. W. McCrabb, of the 4th infantry, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant E. A. Ogden, of the 8th infantry, 7 July, 1833.
 First lieutenant J. M. Hill, of the 8th infantry, 7 July, 1833.

SUSTENANCE DEPARTMENT.

Major J. H. Hook, commissary of subsistence, to be assistant commissary general of subsistence, with the rank of lieutenant colonel of cavalry, 7 July, 1833.

Captain J. P. Taylor, of the 2d artillery, commissary of subsistence, to be commissary of subsistence, with the rank of quartermaster, 7 July, 1833, vice Hook, appointed assistant commissary general of subsistence.

Captain T. W. Lendrum, of the 3d artillery, to be commissary of subsistence, with the rank of quartermaster, 7 July, 1833.

Commissaries of subsistence, with the rank of assistant quartermaster.

Captain R. B. Lee, of the 3d artillery, major by brevet, 7 July, 1833, vice Taylor, promoted.

First lieutenant J. B. Grayson, of the 2d artillery, 7 July, 1833.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Assistant surgeon Benjamin King, to be surgeon, to rank from 13th July, 1832.

Assistant surgeon Charles S. Tripler, to be surgeon, 7 July, 1833.

Assistant surgeon Philip Maxwell, to be surgeon, 7 July, 1833.

Assistant surgeon Henry L. Heiskell, to be surgeon, 7 July, 1833.

Assistant surgeon Charles McDougall, to be surgeon, 7 July, 1833.

Assistant surgeon Burton Randall, to be surgeon, 7 July, 1833.

Assistant surgeon Nathan S. Jarvis, to be surgeon, 7 July, 1833.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

Major Sylvanus Thayer, lieutenant colonel by brevet, to be lieutenant colonel, 7 July, 1833.

Captain John L. Smith, major by brevet, to be major 7 July, 1833, vice Thayer appointed lieutenant colonel.

Captain W. H. Chase, to be major, 7 July, 1833.

Captain Richard Delafield, to be major, 7 July, 1833.

First lieutenant George Dutton, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, vice Smith promoted.

First lieutenant Joseph K. F. Mansfield, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, vice Chase promoted.

First lieutenant Alexander H. Bowman, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, vice Delafield promoted.

First lieutenant Robert E. Lee, to be captain, 7 July, 1833.

First lieutenant Alexander J. Swift, to be captain, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant Frederick A. Smith, to be captain, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant Jonathan G. Barnard, to be captain, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant George W. Cullum, to be captain, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant William Smith, to be captain, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant John Sanders, to be 1st lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Leslie transferred to the pay department.

Second lieutenant Charles H. Bigelow, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Dutton promoted.

Brevet second lieutenant George L. Welcker, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Mansfield promoted.

Brevet second lieutenant James L. Mason, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Bowman promoted.

Brevet second lieutenant Henry W. Benham, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Lee promoted.

Brevet second lieutenant Danville Leadbetter, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Swift promoted.

Brevet second lieutenant Montgomery C. Meigs, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

Brevet second lieutenant Daniel P. Woodbury, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant W. H. Wright, of the first artillery, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant P. G. T. Beauregard, of the first artillery, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant James H. Trapp, of the first artillery, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant Stephen H. Campbell, of the second artillery, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant Jeremiah M. Scarritt, of the sixth infantry, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

CORPS OF TOPOGRAPHICAL ENGINEERS.

Brevet major John J. Abert, topographical engineer, lieutenant colonel by brevet, to be colonel, 7 July, 1833.

Brevet major James Kearney, topographical engineer, lieutenant colonel by brevet, to be lieutenant colonel, 7 July, 1833.

Brevet major Stephen H. Long, topographical engineer, lieutenant colonel by brevet, to be major, to rank from 29th April, 1816.

Brevet major Hartman Bache, topographical engineer, to be major, to rank from 1st August, 1832.

Brevet major James D. Graham, topographical engineer, to be major, to rank from 14th September, 1834.

Brevet major William Turnbull, topographical engineer, to be major, to rank from 23d November, 1837.

Brevet captain Wm. H. Swift, assistant topographical engineer, to be captain, to rank from 1st August, 1832.

Brevet captain Wm. G. Williams, assistant topographical engineer, to be captain, to rank from 28th January, 1834.

Brevet captain Augustus Canfield, assistant topographical engineer, to be captain, to rank from 14th September, 1834.

Brevet captain Campbell Graham, assistant topographical engineer, to be captain, to rank from 23d November, 1837.

First lieutenant John Mackay, of the 2d artillery, to be captain 7 July, 1833.

W. B. Guion, of Mississippi, to be captain 9 July, 1833.

G. W. Hughes, of New York, to be captain 9 July, 1833.

First lieutenant Thomas B. Linnard, of the 2d artillery, to be 1st lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

First lieutenant John N. Macomb, of the 4th artillery, to be first lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

First lieutenant Wm. W. S. Bliss, of the 4th infantry, to be first lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

First lieutenant J. Edmund Blake, of the 6th infantry, to be first lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

First lieutenant Augustus P. Allen, of the 3d artillery, to be first lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

H. Stansbury, of New York, to be 1st lieutenant 9 July, 1833.

J. E. Johnston, late of the army, to be first lieutenant 9 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant William H. Warner, of the 1st artillery, to be second lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant Israel C. Woodruff, of the 3d artillery, to be second lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant John W. Gunnison, of the 2d artillery, to be second lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant Eliakim P. Scammon, of the 4th artillery, to be second lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

Second lieutenant Robert McLane, of the 1st artillery, to be second lieutenant 7 July, 1833.

C. N. Hagner, of the District of Columbia, to be second lieutenant 9 July, 1833.

W. R. Palmer, of New Jersey, to be second lieutenant 9 July, 1833.

C. Frimont, of South Carolina, to be second lieutenant 9 July, 1833.

J. D. Webster, of Massachusetts, to be second lieutenant 9 July, 1833.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Brevet major Rufus L. Baker, captain, to be major, 7 July, 1833, vice Worth, appointed colonel of infantry.

Brevet major Mann Page Lomax, captain of the 3d artillery, to be major, 9 July, 1833.

Captain J. W. Ripley, to be major, 9 July, 1833.

First lieutenant W. Maynattier, of the 1st artillery, to be captain, 9 July, 1833.

First lieutenant W. A. Thornton, of the 4th artillery, to be captain 9 July, 1833.

To be first lieutenants.

First lieutenant J. Williamson, of the 1st artillery, 30th September, 1833.

First lieutenant R. H. K. Whiteley, of the 2d artillery, 28th December, 1833.

First lieutenant R. E. Temple, of the 3d artillery, 22d June, 1836.

First lieutenant G. H. Talcott, of the 3d artillery, 15th September, 1836.

First lieutenant J. F. Lee, of the 1st artillery, 17th December, 1836.

First lieutenant J. M. Morgan, of the 2d artillery, 31st May, 1837.

To be second lieutenants.

Second lieutenant P. V. Hagner, of the 1st artillery, 6 August, 1836.

Second lieutenant R. A. Wainwright, of the 4th artillery, 22 October, 1836.

Second lieutenant A. B. Dyer, of the 3d artillery, 1 July, 1837.

Second lieutenant A. H. Dearborn, of the 2d artillery, 1 July, 1838.

Second lieutenant J. T. Metcalf, of the 3d artillery, 1 July, 1838.

FIRST REGIMENT OF ARTILLERY.

Captain Francis S. Belton, of the 2d artillery, to be major, 7 July, 1833, vice Pierce, appointed lieutenant colonel of infantry.

First lieutenant Francis Taylor, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, (company K.)

Second lieutenant Martin J. Burke, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, (company K.)

Second lieutenant John S. Hatheway, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, (company K.)

Second lieutenant William E. Aisquith, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Taylor, promoted.

Second lieutenant James L. Donaldson, to be first lieutenant, 9 July, 1833, vice Maynattier, appointed captain of ordnance.

Second lieutenant William W. Mackall, to be first lieutenant, 9 July, 1833, vice Williamson, transferred to the ordnance.

Second lieutenant I. Vogdes, to be first lieutenant, 9 July, 1833, vice Lee, transferred to the ordnance.

Second lieutenant H. C. Wayne, of the 4th artillery, to be second lieutenant, 1 July, 1833.

Brevet second lieutenant Irwin McDowell, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

SECOND REGIMENT OF ARTILLERY.

First lieutenant James A. Chambers, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, vice Belton promoted.

First lieutenant Charles F. Smith, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, (company K.)

First lieutenant M. M. Clark, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, vice Taylor, appointed commissary of subsistence.

Second lieutenant John F. Roland, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, (company K.)

Second lieutenant M. L. Shackelford, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, (company K.)

Second lieutenant Robert Allen, to be 1st lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Chambers, promoted.

Second lieutenant Charles B. Daniels, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Smith, promoted.

Second lieutenant Edwin W. Morgan, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Clark, promoted.

Second lieutenant William W. Chapman, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Mackay, appointed captain topographical engineers.

Second lieutenant Lewis G. Arnold, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Linnard, appointed first lieutenant topographical engineers.

Second lieutenant Francis Woodbridge, to be first lieutenant, 9 July, 1833, vice Whitely, transferred to the ordnance.

Second lieutenant Edward D. Townsend, to be first lieutenant, 9 July, 1833, vice J. M. Morgan, transferred to the ordnance.

Brevet second lieutenant W. F. Barry, of the 4th artillery, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

Brevet second lieutenant William A. Nichols, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

Brevet second lieutenant Leslie Chase, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1833.

THIRD REGIMENT OF ARTILLERY.

First lieutenant William B. Davidson, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, (company K.)

First lieutenant David H. Vinton, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, vice Mackay, appointed quartermaster.

First lieutenant John L'Engle, to be captain, 7 July, 1833, vice Lendrum, appointed commissary of subsistence.

First lieutenant Hezekiah Garner, to be captain, 9 July, 1833, vice Lomax appointed major of ordnance.

Second lieutenant Christopher Q. Tompkins, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, (company K.)

Second lieutenant William Frazer, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, (company K.)

Second lieutenant William Mock, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Davidson, promoted.

Second lieutenant B. Bragg, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Vinton, promoted.

Second lieutenant Robert T. Jones, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice L'Engle, promoted.

Second lieutenant John A. Early, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1833, vice Allen, appointed first lieutenant topographical engineers.

Second lieutenant George Taylor, to be first lieutenant, 9 July, 1838, vice Garner, promoted.

Second lieutenant George C. Rodney, to be first lieutenant, 9 July, 1838, vice Temple, transferred to the ordnance.

Second lieutenant Edward J. Steptoe, to be first lieutenant, 9 July, 1838, vice Talcott, transferred to the ordnance.

Brevet second lieutenant Milton A. Haynes, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1838.

Brevet second lieutenant Rowley S. Jennings, to be second lieutenant, 7 July, 1838.

Second lieutenant W. A. Brown, of the second dragoons, to be second lieutenant, 1 July, 1838.

FOURTH REGIMENT OF ARTILLERY.

First lieutenant Samuel B. Dusenbery, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, (company K.)

Second lieutenant William G. Freeman, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company K.)

Second lieutenant Joseph Roberts, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company K.)

Second lieutenant James H. Stokes, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Dusenbery promoted.

Second lieutenant John P. J. O'Brien, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Macomb, appointed first lieutenant topographical engineers.

Second lieutenant John W. Phelps, to be first lieutenant, 9 July, 1838, vice Thornton, appointed captain of ordnance.

FIRST REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

First lieutenant Osborne Cross, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Hitchcock, appointed major of the 8th infantry.

First lieutenant Joseph H. Lamotte, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Gwynne, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant Samuel M. Plummer, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Cross, promoted.

Second lieutenant John M. Scott, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Lamotte, promoted.

Second lieutenant R. Bennett, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Ogden, transferred to the 8th infantry.

SECOND REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

First lieutenant Hannibal Day, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Russell, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant I. R. D. Burnett, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Day, promoted.

Second lieutenant H. W. Wessells, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Hill, transferred to the 5th infantry.

THIRD REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

First lieutenant Edmund B. Alexander, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Wright, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant Henry Swartwout, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Alexander, promoted.

Second lieutenant George P. Field, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Birdsall, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant Joseph L. Coburn, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Bonnell, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant Philip N. Barbour, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Montgomery, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant William S. Henry, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Kello, transferred to the 8th infantry.

FOURTH REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

First lieutenant Richard B. Screven, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice McCall, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant I. V. D. Reeve, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Screven, promoted.

Second lieutenant Henry Prince, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Bliss, appointed first lieutenant topographical engineers.

FIFTH REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

First lieutenant Ephraim K. Smith, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Hunt, appointed quartermaster.

First lieutenant Alexander S. Hooe, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Denny, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant Daniel Ruggles, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Smith, promoted.

Second lieutenant I. Chester Reid, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Hooe, promoted.

Second lieutenant Joseph H. Whipple, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Davies, transferred to the 8th infantry.

SIXTH REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

First lieutenant Albemarle Cady, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Clark appointed quartermaster.

First lieutenant Thomas L. Alexander, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Worth, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant James Monroe, jr., to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Cady, promoted.

Second lieutenant Charles S. Lovell, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Alexander, promoted.

Second lieutenant William D. Berrien, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Blake, appointed first lieutenant topographical engineers.

SEVENTH REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

First lieutenant Stephen W. Moore, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Thomas, appointed quartermaster.

First lieutenant John P. Davis, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, vice Phillips, transferred to the 8th infantry.

Second lieutenant Forbes Briton, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Moore, promoted.

Second lieutenant Alexander Montgomery, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice Davis, promoted.

Second lieutenant Weightman K. Hanson, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, vice McKavett, transferred to the 8th infantry.

EIGHTH REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

Major William J. Worth, of the ordnance, lieutenant colonel by brevet, to be colonel, 7 July, 1838.

Major Benjamin K. Pierce, of the 1st regiment of artillery, lieutenant colonel by brevet, to be lieutenant colonel, 7 July, 1838.

Captain Ethan A. Hitchcock, of the 1st infantry, to be major, 7 July, 1838.

To be captains.

Captain Thomas P. Gwynne, of the first infantry, to rank from the 4th of March, 1838, (company A.)

Captain J. A. Phillips, of the 7th infantry, to rank from the 4th of May, 1836, (company B.)

Captain St. Clair Denny, of the 5th infantry, to rank from the 1st of April, 1836, (company C.)

Captain Samuel L. Russell, of the 2d infantry, to rank from the 28th of June, 1836, (company D.)

Captain George A. McCall, of the 4th infantry, to rank from the 21st of September, 1836, (company E.)

Captain George Wright, of the 3d infantry, to rank from the 30th of October, 1836, (company F.)

Captain Joseph S. Worth, of the 6th infantry, to rank from the 31st of July, 1837, (company G.)

First lieutenant Egbert B. Birdsall, of the 8d infantry, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, (company H.)

First lieutenant Joseph Bonnell, of the 3d infantry, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, (company I.)

First lieutenant Wm. R. Montgomery, of the 3d infantry, to be captain, 7 July, 1838, (company K.)

To be 1st lieutenants.

First lieutenant William O. Kello, of the 3d infantry, to rank from the 15th of November, 1836, (company A.)

First lieutenant Edmund A. Ogden, of the 1st infantry, to rank from the 17th of December, 1836, (company B.)

First lieutenant James M. Hill, of the 2d infantry, to rank from the 31st of December, 1836, (company C.)

First lieutenant Camillus C. Daveiss, of the 5th infantry, to rank from the 31st December, 1836, (company D.)

First lieutenant Henry McKavett, of the 7th infantry, to rank from the 25th of December, 1837, (company E.)

Second lieutenant James V. Bomford, of the 2d infantry, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company F.)

Second lieutenant Thomas Johns, of the 2d infantry, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company G.)

Second lieutenant W. M. D. McKissack, of the 5th infantry, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company H.)

Second lieutenant Collinson R. Gates, of the 4th infantry, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company I.)

Second lieutenant Larkin Smith, of the 3d infantry, to be first lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company K.)

To be 2d lieutenants.

Second lieutenant John M. Harvie, of the 2d infantry, to rank from the 1st of July, 1837, (company A.)

Second lieutenant John T. Sprague, of the 5th infantry, to rank from the 3d of July, 1837, (company B.)

Second lieutenant Lucius O'Brien, of the 3d infantry, to rank from the 3d of September, 1837, (company C.)

Second lieutenant George Lincoln, of the 4th infantry, to rank from the 14th of September, 1837, (company D.)

W. C. Browne, of Pennsylvania, to be 2d lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company E.)

John A. Riel, of New York, to be 2d lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company F.)

A. L. Sheppard, of the District of Columbia, to be 2d lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company G.)

W. B. Heyward, of Maryland, to be 2d lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company H.)

Joseph Selden, of Virginia, to be 2d lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company I.)

T. S. J. Johnson, of Missouri, to be 2d lieutenant, 7 July, 1838, (company K.)

PROMOTIONS BY BREVET.

Major Sylvanus Thayer, of the corps of engineers, lieutenant colonel by brevet, to be colonel by brevet, to rank from 3d March, 1833, having served faithfully a brevet lieutenant colonel, and performed the appropriate duties of that grade for ten years.

Lieutenant colonel William Davenport, of the 1st infantry, to be colonel by brevet, for meritorious services in Florida, 7th July, 1838.

Lieutenant colonel James Bankhead, of the 4th artillery, to be colonel by brevet, for meritorious conduct in the campaigns in Florida, 7th July, 1838.

Captain Thomas Noel, of the 6th infantry, to be major by brevet, for gallant conduct in the battle of Kiamissee, to rank from 25th December, 1837.

TRANSFERS.

Second lieutenant Henry C. Wayne, of the 4th artillery, to the 1st artillery, to take place next below lieutenant Reeves.

Second lieutenant W. A. Brown, of the 2d dragoons, to the 3d artillery, to take place next below lieutenant Jennings.

Second lieutenant W. F. Barry, of the 4th artillery, to the 2d artillery, to take place next below lieutenant Pitkin.

II. Acceptance or non-acceptance of all appointments will be promptly reported to the adjutant general of the army; and the officers, whose stations are changed by promotion or otherwise, will join their proper regiments and companies, without delay, and report for duty accordingly. Officers of the general staff and of engineers will report to the chiefs of their respective departments.

III. Officers of the artillery and infantry, (now serving with the army and on the frontier,) appointed in the general staff and in the ordnance, will continue on duty with the troops until the commanding general under whom they may be serving can dispense with their services, when he will order them to join their respective departments.

IV. The additional company (K) to be raised for each regiment of artillery will be immediately organized and equipped; those for the 1st, 2d, and 4th regiments, in the harbor of New York, and that for the 3d, at Fort Monroe; to which posts the respective captains and lieutenants, not serving on the staff, or at the military academy, will repair without delay, where they will receive the recruits that are to constitute their several companies.

V. The colonel of the 8th infantry will proceed without delay to the northern frontier, and take prompt measures to organize and equip his regiment. The ten companies have already been organized from the recruits now serving on the frontier. Companies A and B are stationed at Detroit; companies C and D on the Niagara; companies E, F, G, and H, at Sackett's Harbor and near the St. Lawrence; company I at Plattsburg; and company K at Swanton, Vermont; to which several stations the respective captains and subalterns of the regiment will repair without delay, and report for duty. The lieutenant colonel of the regiment will repair to the Sackett's Harbor station, and the major to Detroit, until otherwise directed. All officers of the 8th regiment, absent on the recruiting service, or on leave, are ordered to join.

VI. The captains and subalterns temporarily serving on the frontier will be relieved by the company officers of the new regiment, when they will proceed to join their proper stations, and report for duty.

By order: R. JONES, adj. general.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival at New York on Friday the 18th inst. of the packet ships Virginia, Harris, from Liverpool, and Burgundy, Rockett, from Havre, the editors of the Commercial Advertiser have received files of English and French papers to the latest dates, which are from London to the 7th, Liverpool and Paris to the 8th, and Havre to the 9th June.

Great Britain. The most prominent topic of the London papers is the fatal riot near Canterbury. The subject had been brought up in parliament, in consequence of certain serious charges alleged against the magistrates of Kent and the keepers of the lunatic asylum in which Courtney had been confined, for allowing him to go at large. The charge was made in the Chronicle. Courtney's real name, it seems, was John Nicholas Tom.

The affair was investigated by the magistrates on the 4th, at Faversham in Kent, fifteen of the prisoners being before them, four of whom were committed on the charge of wilful murder. Nine of the rioters were killed in the affray.

The papers give portraits of Tom, or Courtenay, in his rich velvet gown covered with gold chains, his long black beard, &c. He appears to have deluded his followers much as Matthias did some in this city, making them believe that he was the Deity, able to work miracles, &c.

Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson left London on the 4th of June, on a short visit to Earl Spencer.

The London Chronicle of June 7 contains a full report of the dinner given to sir Francis Head, on the 6th. When the health of sir Francis was proposed, he rose and commenced a speech in which, he said, he was anxious to explain what had been the conduct of the North American colonies, and that of the United States and their citizens; but before he had entered upon the details of his exposition, "he was so much overcome by his embarrassment that he was utterly unable to go on, and after several unavailing attempts, resumed his seat amidst loud cheers."

The Royal William, steam-packet, it is stated in the Liverpool Mail, was to sail from that port for New York on the 5th July. She is said to be a vessel of great speed, and first rate accommodations.

Martin, the lunatic who set fire to the York Minster some years ago, died in Bedlam on the 3d of June. Although quiet in his deportment, he was obliged to be closely watched, having a strong propensity for mischief. He was between 50 and 60 years of age.

We copy the following rumors from the London Herald. It is not likely that there is much truth in them.

On dils. It is reported in high quarters that the following modifications, additions, and omissions, are contemplated in ministerial arrangements: The duke of Sussex to go as lord lieutenant to Ireland; lord Mulgrave to have the home-office; lord J. Russell to be first lord of the treasury; lord Melbourne to retire; sir F. Lamb, his lordship's brother, now ambassador at Vienna, to be made a peer.

Lady C. Buggin, who manages the duke of Sussex's household, to be made a peeress by the style and title of countess of Enniskillen. On the duke's late fete to the queen, her ladyship did the honors, and presided at the head of the table.

The lady C. Buggin referred to, it is well known is married to the duke of Sussex. It is also rumored that lord Glenelg is to retire to the colonial office, and be succeeded by Mr. Spring Rice.

The Br. steamer sir Lionel Smith which sailed from New York on the 13th May for London, had not arrived on the 7th June.

Her Majesty's coronation robes. During the whole of yesterday vast crowds of respectable people were attracted to the house of Mr. Edward Howe, a silk weaver, in Castle street, not far from Shoreditch church, to view the splendid robes to be worn by her majesty at the approaching coronation, and which were just finished and out from the loom on that morning.

The contract for the manufacture of the robes as well as 660 yards of the most beautiful silk for the hanging and decoration of Westminster Abbey, was taken by Mr. Stilwell, of White Lion street, Norton Folgate, who confided the task to Mr. Edward Howe, and Mr. William Coe, two of the most ingenious operatives in the silk trade.

The robe, which is one of the most superb pieces of manufacture that can be imagined, is 10 yards in length and of the same pattern as that worn by George IV. at his coronation. It appears that a number of different patterns had been submitted to her majesty for inspection, and the one chosen by the queen, as above stated, was that worn by her royal uncle, George IV.

It also appears that Mr. Howe was the artist who had executed the order on that occasion, and having by him many of the cones and patterns then used, he was enabled to accomplish the task much better, and with much greater ease, than any other person could have done. The ground or warp is of the most rich gold colored silk, and the shoot consists of gold and silver twist, and rich silks of various shades.

Some idea may be formed of the variety when no less than twenty different shuttles were obliged to be in work at the same time. The principal surface appears to be massive gold, and the figures which are bold and considerably raised, are of the most magnificent description. Those of the real crown, the rose, the shamrock and the thistle, are truly beautiful.

The eagle, the fleur-de-lis, and other foreign national emblems, are also very prominent and beautifully executed, and do infinite credit to the skill, taste, and judgment of the manufacturer. The hangings are of a less costly description, but are still of a most tasteful kind. The ground is of blue satin, and the shoot of gold colored rich silk.

The fact of the order for these splendid articles having been sent to Spitalfields has given the greatest satisfaction to the whole of the industrious operatives of that district.

The Coronation. The preparations at Westminster Abbey are advancing with much rapidity, the chief portion of the carpenter's work having been completed. The oriel and side galleries are now under the decorative hands of the upholsterers, and report speaks of the silks and stuffs which are to be used as coverings for the seats, canopies, &c., as most costly and elegant. The orchestral gallery is in forwardness, and when it is completed, and the new organ, which is described as an instrument of surpassing power and rich tone, is in its destined place, it is expected that the interior of the abbey will present a coup d'oeil of magnificence and architectural grandeur equal to any thing attempted in Europe on a similar occasion.

The important ceremony is fast approaching; and although the ministry would not have the day made one of rejoicing on the usual scale of splendour, yet it appears that the whole population of the united kingdom will devote the day to festivity.—London perhaps, will not be so crowded with illustrious foreigners as when the continental sovereign visited this country at the general peace; but many individuals of distinguished rank will come over in the capacity of ambassadors extraordinary, and numerous officers of rank will accompany them as aides-de-camp.

It is stated that his imperial highness the grand duke Alexander, son of the emperor of Russia, who was to be present at this august ceremony, attended by prince Lieven and a brilliant suite of Russian nobles, has not declared whether he will visit this country, in consequence of the early day fixed. The report that his royal highness the prince of Orange would come over, accompanied by his sons, turns out to be unfounded.

His royal highness prince Adelbert, nephew of the king of Prussia, it is thought, will accompany his highness prince Putbus. It is said his royal highness is possessed of brilliant talents, and is fond of naval architecture, and that the dock-yards of this country were as great an attraction as the coronation. The landgrave of Hesse Homburg has signified his intention of being present at the coronation, and is expected daily in London.

Of the embassies, many will be of less splendor than at the coronation of George IV, but those of Austria, Prussia, France, and Russia, are expected to be most splendid. His highness prince Swartzenburg, ambassador extraordinary from Austria, is expected in the course of a fortnight, and will have the high honor of presenting her majesty with the insignia of the grand cross of the order of St. Stephen, of Hungary, from the emperor of Austria. The jewels are diamonds, emeralds, and rubies, of enormous magnitude and great value.

In the wealthy nobleman's suite will be the landgrave of Furstemberg, Prince Archer Squarte, count Charles de Grunne, count Alex. Erody, &c. A suit of apartments have been engaged for his highness at one of the principal hotels, where a series of grand banquets will be given to the elite of the nobility, on a scale of princely magnificence. His royal highness, the duke de Nemours will be the bearer of a present from his august father the king of the French.

France. The Paris papers of June 3d announce the arrival at that city of Mr. Muhlenberg, envoy extraordinary, &c. to the court of Austria from the United States. He was presented to the king of France with Mr. Clay, his secretary, on the 2d.

The railroad committee of the chamber of deputies had reported the bill for the Havre and Paris rail-road, without amendment.

The bill for the reduction of the 5 per cent. was to be reported to the chamber of peers on the 9th.

The chamber of deputies was engaged upon a bill granting an extraordinary credit of 18,171,408 francs, for keeping up the French possessions in the north of Africa.

The king was to review the National Guards of Paris on Sunday, the 10th of June.

A Toulon letter dated June 2d states that the brig of war Dupetit Thouars was ordered to sail immediately on a secret mission, supposed to Mexico.

The London papers state that the sloop of war Perle, the brig Voltigeur, and the transport Indienne, had received orders to sail for the coast of Mexico, and that the brig Badine had sailed for the same destination.

There was a rumour current in Paris that the duke of Orleans was about setting out for the Northern frontier. Also that general Bernard was to be appointed commandant general in Africa, and be succeeded in the war department by marshall Soult.

The Journal des Debats announces the death of the duchess d'Abrantes, widow of Junot, on the 7th June.

Belgium and Holland. The Commerce Belge announces that the cabinet of the Hague has made known to the conference in London, that the king of Holland is ready to evacuate forte Lille and Leisikenshoek, which, under the treaty of November 15, are to belong to Belgium. The king of Belgium continued protesting against the arrangement of the conference. Much diplomatic activity existed between Paris, Brussels and London.

It was reported in the Paris journals that Prussia was preparing to enforce the surrender by Belgium of Vanloo and other strong places awarded to Holland; but these reports were not credited at Berlin. It was not doubted, however, that the combined cabinets were disposed to enforce a final settlement of the disputes between Belgium.

There had been several attempts at riot in Brussels—all put down, however, by the military. They originated in political feelings.

Hanover. The Hamburg correspondent affirms that the opposition in the second chamber is strong enough to ensure a vote in favor of the constitution of 1833.

Hamburg, June 1. The Nicholas I. steamboat captain Stahl, bound from Petersburg to Travemunde, with 132 passengers and a crew of 33 men, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 31st of May, between 11 and 12 o'clock, off Gross Klutz, about five English miles from the road of Travemunde. The ladies and children had retired to rest, and the gentlemen were still at supper or at cards when the alarm of fire was given. The captain with great presence of mind, steered towards the coast, and ran the vessel aground about 100 paces from shore.

The confusion was of course very great, but all the passengers and crew were saved, except five persons, viz. two passengers and two of the crew, who are missing. Of eleven carriages on board, two were thrown overboard, and the others burned and most of the passengers' effects are lost. The mail bag and the despatches of three couriers could not be saved. The only money on board was a barrel of gold, which it is hoped may be recovered.

Captain Stahl, employed in saving the passengers, has lost his effects and his papers. Most of the passengers arrived at Travemunde without shoes and bare headed. The vessel is burnt down to the water's edge. Every exertion is making to save as much as possible out of the hull. The vessel was insured in London. The origin of the fire is uncertain. Some think it was caused by the coals being taken on board wet, and mixed with ice, others that it commenced in the machinery.

Spain. Don Carlos left Estell, with his ministers, on the 29th of May. Just before his departure, he caused the bishop of Leon, the auditor general, and the fiscal, to be arrested. The auditor-general, senor Barriacari, it is said, was shot two hours afterward, and it was reported that the same fate awaited the bishop and the fiscal.

Don Carlos arrived at Toulouse on the 31st, and on the next day reviewed his troops. Generals Zarategui and Elio had been condemned to death.—General Guergue was disgraced, and was to be succeeded by gen. Maroto.

Portugal. The London papers affirm that the Portuguese government has refused its assent to the treaty for the suppression of the slave trade.

Austria. Ali Effendi, second secretary of the Turkish embassy at Vienna, drowned himself in the Danube on the 27th of May. Cause unknown, but supposed to be a violent attack of home sickness.

TWENTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION—HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, July 6. Mr. Adams had the floor on the subject of Texas, but yielded it to Mr. Stuart, who moved that the committees be called for reports immediately after the recess; which motion prevailed, and the order was made accordingly. Mr. Adams then proceeded, and occupied the morning hour in discussing the Texas question. When the hour elapsed, he had not concluded his remarks. Mr. Howard asked whether, if the gentleman from Massachusetts should not conclude his remarks at this session, it would be in order, under the rules of the house, to answer him hereafter?—[i. e. as the reporter understood it, at a future session.] The Chair said that that would be for the decision of the house when the case contemplated should arise. Mr. Adams. Mr. Speaker, that gentleman has the time of this house at his command. I have not.

The house then proceeded to the orders of the day.

The steamboat bill came down from the senate with an amendment, to the effect that the collapse of a line, or other injurious escape of steam, shall be prima facie evidence of negligence in the officers of the boat upon which it shall occur. This amendment was to take the place of Mr. Childs' amendment to the bill, which the senate proposed to strike out. Mr. Childs hoped the house would insist upon its own amendment: Mr. Robertson proposed to add, as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the senate, the following proviso:

"Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be held to apply to steamboats employed in plying between a port or place in any state to another port or place in the same state, and not employed in commerce with any foreign nation, or among the several states, or to any persons owning or navigating such steamboat, or employed on board the same."

The amendment to the amendment of the senate was rejected; and the amendment of the senate to the amendment of the house [above stated] was adopted.

Mr. Carter offered a petition from citizens of Tennessee, praying for a national bank. Laid on the table and referred, under the order of Monday last.

The house took up sundry bills from the senate, on the speaker's table, on their engrossment or third reading.

An act for the relief of the representatives of Henry Fisher. Read a third time, and passed.

An act for the relief of Mary A. Patrick. Read a third time, and passed.

An act for the relief of Everarde Meade. Ordered to lie on the table.

An act for the relief of Francis Cazeau. The senate had sent down this bill, with the enacting clause stricken out.

Mr. White said that this had been done for want of time. The claim had been rigidly scrutinized by the proper committees, and was found to be a good one. He hoped the house would non-concur with the senate in striking out the enacting clause. Mr. Thomas made a concise statement of the character of the claim of Cazeau, who was a revolutionary soldier, and devoted his whole property, and pledged his life and fortune, for the benefit of this country. Mr. Petrikin said he was no lawyer, but he would ask any man to examine the papers forming the evidence upon which this claim is based, and then to say if that evidence be sufficient to carry the claim through that house. It was a character, they would find, which would not stand in a court of justice, or before a board of arbitrators. He moved that the bill do lie on the table.

This motion was decided in the affirmative, by a vote of 88 to 56. So the bill lies on the table.

An act for the relief of John Brooks. Ordered to lie on the table.

An act for the relief of Robert White. Ordered to lie on the table.

An act to revive an act to incorporate the medical society of the District of Columbia. A motion was made to lay this bill on the table. Mr. Petrikin hoped that motion would be withdrawn to enable him to present a remonstrance against the bill, which he took from his pocket. [A general laugh.] The Chair said that such a proceeding would not be regular. The amendments proposed being read, Mr. Petrikin asked leave to have the remonstrance he had alluded to read. This was refused. Mr. P. then opposed the bill. He had practised medicine twenty-one years, and he would like the people of the country to know who were for establishing monopolies, and who were not. Mr. P. then proceeded to read the remonstrance he held in his hand, which, so far as the reporter could hear its contents, appeared to be a defence of the Botanic or Thompsonian, against the alleged monopoly of the regular system.

Mr. Reed made a few observations in favor of the bill. It was proper to protect the people of the District against the humbuggery of quack doctors. Mr. Bouldin, chairman of the committee on District affairs, said a few words in favor of the bill. Mr. Taylor made some statements in relation to the danger of unlicensed and uneducated practitioners of medicine, and offered an amendment to the bill, requiring of the practitioner to produce a certificate of having gone through a proper course of medical study. Mr. Boon was opposed to what he called this abominable aristocratic bill. Nine-tenths of the time he had rather trust himself in the hands of an old woman with her herbs, than with those of the regular practitioners. After a few words in support of the bill by Mr. Mallory, the amendments were concurred in. An ineffectual attempt was made to lay the bill on the table. The bill was then ordered to be read a third time, Mr. Petrikin having failed to obtain the yeas and nays. Having been read a third time, the bill was passed.

An act to authorize John E. Metcalf and others to locate certain pre-emption claims to lands in Indiana. Read a third time; and the question being on its passage, Mr. Harlan made some remarks in opposition to it, and moved to lay it on the table, but withdrew the motion at the request of Mr. White, who made some explanation of the justice and propriety of the provisions of the act. The bill was rejected.

The bill of the house granting to the Falmouth and Alexandria rail road company the right of way through the District of Columbia, had come down from the senate with an amendment, proposing to appropriate towards this work the sum of three thousand dollars, upon certain conditions, as carrying the mails free of cost, &c. In this amendment the committee of the whole had non-concurred, and the bill was now brought into the house for final action. Mr. Mercer made an earnest and argumentative speech in defence of this amendment. Mr. Cushman was opposed to the amendment and bill, as was Mr. Mallory. The latter moved to lay the bill on the table, but withdrew the motion at the request of his colleague, Mr. Banks, who was in favor of the bill, and spoke at some length in defence of the amendment, and in reply to the objections adduced by different members against it. Mr. Wise said that this bill would save the government seven thousand dollars a year, if passed, for the carrying of the mails. It was a work of national importance, and he would move the previous question. There was a second; and the main question was ordered to be put, viz. Will the house concur with the senate in the amendment?

Mr. Cushman demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

A motion was made to lay the bill on the table, and the yeas and nays demanded and ordered thereon; and the motion was carried by the following vote: Yeas 88, nays 73. So the bill was ordered to lie on the table.

An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands who are deprived of the benefits of the pre-emption act of the 19th June, 1834. This bill, having come down from the senate, had been amended by the committee of the whole, and the first question was upon that amendment; which was concurred in. Some desultory debate occurred between Messrs. Wise, Chapman, Shields, Fillmore, Harlan, and Lewis. Mr. Wise was in the act of replying to some remarks of Mr. Lewis, when the hour arrived to take the usual morning recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The house met, after recess, when reports of committees being called for, the following reports were received, viz.

Mr. Johnson, of Louisiana, from the committee on public lands, reported, without amendment, senate bills to create a new land office in the state of Mississippi, and for the relief of Jane Waller. Mr. Chapman, from the same committee, reported, with amendment, the senate bill for the relief of William Jones. Mr. Casey, from the same committee, reported, without amendment, senate bill for the relief of Isabella Hill and the minor heirs, &c. of Samuel Hill. Mr. Lincoln, from the same committee, reported, without amendment, senate bills to relinquish to the state of Mississippi the two per cent. land reserved by the act for the admission into the union, to be applied to the making of a road or roads leading to said state. Also, for the relief of Alvarez Fisk and the legal representatives of Thomas P. Eskridge.

Senate bill to change the location of the office of surveyor general of the district composed of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, and for other purposes, was reported from the committee on public lands, with an amendment, changing the location of the office from St. Joseph's in Michigan, to Michigan city.

Mr. Duncan moved to lay the bill on the table. Lost. Mr. Cray opposed the amendment. Mr. Boon demanded the yeas and nays. Mr. Duncan moved to postpone the consideration of the bill to Monday next, and moved a call of the house. The call was refused, and the motion negatived. The amendment was concurred in: Ayes 83, nays 47. Mr. Harlan demanded the previous question. The demand was seconded, and the previous question put and carried. The bill was ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed. On the bill for the relief of John Brahan, late receiver at Huntsville, a discussion of much animation took place. The bill was advocated by Messrs. Martin and Chapman, of Alabama, and warmly opposed by Mr. Wise and Mr. W. Thompson. Mr. E. Whittlesey made a statement of the facts of the case, and the grounds on which the committee of claims had reported against the bill some years ago. Mr. Lincoln made a counter statement as to the facts, and warmly advocated the bill. Mr. Whittlesey moved that it be referred to a committee of the whole, and take the ordinary course. Mr. Lincoln warmly opposed this, as did the Alabama members. Mr. W. Thompson again opposed the bill as one of the fruits of a sub-treasury system, and a sample of a multitude of cases that might be expected. Mr. Howard, though indifferent as to the fate of the bill, was somewhat indignant at an attempt to give it precedence over sixty other bills which stood before it on the calendar. He moved to lay it on the table; which motion prevailed. On motion of Mr. Aikerton, the committee of ways and means were discharged from the petition of Joseph Harris and Wm. Lamphier. Mr. Whittlesey, of Ohio, from the committee of claims, reported against senate bill to provide for the uniform payment for horses lost in the military service of the United States, and bills for the relief of John M. Hernandez, Woodburne Potter, and John L. McCarty. Mr. Stuart, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of James Tongue. Mr. Williams, of New Hampshire, from the same committee, reported against the petition of Thomas D. Morrison. Mr. Phillips, from the committee on commerce, reported, with amendments, senate bill making appropriations for light-houses, beacon-lights, &c. &c.; and against a late bill to divide the state of Delaware into two collection districts. Also, Bills for the relief of the assignees of Jacob Clements, Jacob Valencia, and Smith and Town.

Mr. Boon, from the committee on public lands, reported, with an amendment, senate bill for the benefit of the Mount Carmel and New Albany rail-road company, in Indiana.

Mr. Toland, from the committee on commerce, made a report upon the subject of the erection of a break-water on Crow Shoal, at Cape May roads, in Delaware bay.

Mr. Cushman, from the same committee, reported, without amendment, senate bill to exempt from duty coal on board of steamboats in any part of the United States. The said bill was ordered to a third reading, and read a third time and passed.

Mr. Thomas, from the committee on the judiciary, moved to discharge the committee of the whole from the further consideration of the bill from the senate to prohibit the re-issue of the notes of a corporation whose charter had expired, that it might be brought into the house and acted on.

Mr. Garland, of Louisiana, and Mr. Wise objecting. Mr. Thomas explained. Unless the course which he had proposed was taken; there was a probability that the bill would be overlaid and lost. If a majority of the house wished the bill to pass, they would vote for the motion. Mr. Wise contended that when the judiciary committee had reported this bill, and moved its reference to a committee of the whole on the state of the union, their jurisdiction over the bill ceased, and they had no right, as a committee, to make the present motion. The Speaker pronounced the motion in order. It was controllable to the ordinary usage of the house. Mr. McKennan remonstrated. If this subject was to be taken up, it must necessarily postpone all other business, as it would inevitably lead to much discussion. Mr. Stanley advised Mr. Thomas, according to his own doctrine laid down a few days since, to wait and make his appeal to the people. In the meanwhile, he would move to lay his motion on the table; and on this he demanded the yeas and nays. They were taken and resulted as follows: Yeas 79, nays 93. So the house refused to lay the motion on the table. Mr. Mercer moved to postpone the motion until to-morrow. Lost: Ayes 77, nays 85. Mr. Curtis moved a call of the house. Mr. Mucil demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and resulted: Yeas 84, nays 96. So the house refused to order or the call.

The question was then put on discharging the committee of the whole on the state of the union from the further custody of the bill, and bringing it now into the house for action, and decided in the affirmative by yeas and nays: Yeas 100 nays 93. Mr. Parris, of Maine, instantly rose, and demanded the previous question. Mr. Prentiss, of Miss., made a question of order. Could the previous question be moved before the question pending was stated and put to the house? The Chair replied in the negative, and pronounced the motion of Mr. Parris to be out of order. Mr. Prentiss then took the floor, and with great animation opposed the bill, commenting with severity on its introduction at this late moment, and the preconcerted movement (which, owing to the awkwardness of the instrument, had fortunately failed) to force it through the house without a moment's discussion. He pronounced the bill to be the last struggle of the sub-treasury scheme, the last hair on its hide, the last puppy of the litter, the jump of the sub-treasury-bill. That bill itself had been dead, dead, dead and buried, and the locusts and worms were feeding luxuriously upon it. This bill was of the same family; let it go down, and be gathered to its fathers. He contended that the bill was absurd, inasmuch as it was directed against that which had no longer any existence. The United States Bank was dead; it now had neither soul nor body to be punished. But if the bill was meant to punish the Pennsylvania bank, this government had jurisdiction in the case. He made an earnest appeal, on this point, to the advocates of state rights doctrine, calling them to the rescue. If the government could punish one state corporation, it might punish another, and so no state bank or state institution of any kind was safe. As to the old dead bank, he believed there were many around him who would gladly turn resurrectionists, dig up the dead body, turn that ball into a dissecting room, and never lay down the scalpel till every muscle, tendon, artery, vein and nerve had been laid bare, and neither form or substance left.

Mr. Cushman called Mr. Prentiss to order. Mr. Prentiss demanded that his words, to which exception was taken, should be taken down. The Chair decided that he was not out of order.

Mr. P. then proceeded in a still warmer strain, alluding to the irritability of conscience of gentlemen, which obscured their notions of order, &c. He contended that the bill must be practically in operation. In whom was it to act? on Mr. Biddle? Well, if they seized him for issuing these notes, and brought him before the house to answer, his first plea would be to the jurisdiction, and he would contend that he was amenable to the penal laws of his own state alone. Congress had not chartered his bank, and had no cognizance of it or him. Had the government furnished the people with so good a currency that they wanted to take away these last remnants of what was left them? It had been studying the mysteries of the black art, and trying to make gold plenty as paving stones; but, like the alchemists, had succeeded only in causing what the country did to go off in the times of its alambic.

He here gave some ludicrous illustrations of the scarcity of gold and silver at the south, which produced much merriment in a part of the house. He commented with severity on the plea that the government was opposed to the reissue of the five-dollar good old bank as being immoral; and, still more, on the bill as a measure of economy. The great administration whale had been harpooned to death, and was now in its dying flurry; he was for backing his boats a little, and enjoying the spectacle of its dunces and plunges while it kept the whole sea in foam. This bill was one of the last blows of its ill. As to these five-dollar bills, the people were the best judges whether they were good money or not; if not, they would not take them, and the bank could issue no more of them, and so the bill was needless. If the bills were good money, and the people liked it and wanted it, then the bill made war on the wishes of the people; and as to the sin of the matter, they did not need that the government should act as chancellor, to take care of their conscience. Could the great Virginia state-rights, strict construction gentlemen suffer a bill to pass which made aagrant attack on the rights of the citizens of an independent state? Would the gentlemen from Pennsylvania stand tamely by and witness such an assault to their state sovereignty? This bill forbade one of their banks to issue a certain description of bills. Now, suppose the legislature of Pennsylvania should direct and require the bank to issue that kind of bills; whose will was to be law? Must the state go down? Must she knuckle? Must she see her citizens punished for obeying her laws? Mr. P. was comparing the bill to Satan wading through seas, when he gave way to a motion made by Mr. Jenifer to adjourn.

On this motion Mr. Bronson demanded the yeas and nays, which were ordered. Mr. Adams inquired the chair whether, if the house should refuse to adjourn, the gentleman from Mississippi would lose his right to the floor? The Chair replied that, in strictness, he would; by courtesy, however, it had been unusual to allow a gentleman, in such circumstances, to retain the floor. He had no right to it under the rules.

Mr. Adams made a point of order.

The Chair said this was out of order, pending a motion to adjourn. The yeas and nays were taken on the question of adjournment, and resulted as follows: Yeas 16, nays 142. So the house refused to adjourn.

Mr. Adams now made his point of order. He said it had been decided by the house that this bill was to be rammed down the throats of the minority without any discussion, and now the gentleman from Mississippi was presuming to discuss it. He wanted to know if the gentleman was in order.—laughter.]

The Chair required Mr. Adams to reduce his motion of order to writing.

Mr. A. did so, and offered it in the following manner:

"It having been determined by a majority of the members of this house that this bill, a highly penal bill, subjecting the citizens of the United States to fine and imprisonment, should be passed by the operation of the previous question, without debate or discussion, is the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. Prentiss) in order in obtaining the floor, and consuming the time of the house, against the sense and intention of a majority of said members?"

The Chair decided that Mr. Prentiss was in order. Mr. Adams inquired whether his question and the speaker's decision would be entered on the journal. The Chair replied in the affirmative. Mr. Prentiss obtained the floor, and went on with increased animation, expressing his joy that he had roused the game, and called up the hunters, and that the noble bounds stood on every side straining in their slips, and ready to spring.

Mr. P. spoke a good deal too fast for us to report him. He compared the old currency, before the experiment, to the bread of the people; this the administration had taken away, and given them a stone. But, not satisfied with this, they now envied them their little ginger-cakes of these poor five dollar bills, (that were as good as gold, and better,) and wanted to take this last remnant of the good times away. It was cruel. It was monstrous. He could not but fancy that he heard in the language of this bill the last growls of the old Tennessee lion. How would it make his eyes flash and lighten, to witness this last attack on Biddle and Biddle's bank! It would awaken the "gaudia certaminis," the old long-loved joys of the fight, and be almost equal to a glance at the field of New Orleans.

This administration had tried to wield his armor, but they might as well take David's course, and put it off, for it was too heavy for them. They wanted to play the part of Sampson, but they seized hold on the strong pillars of the state after their locks were shorn. It was vain to strive against the will and wants of the people. The government might as well attempt to enforce an assize of bread as to control the bills of state banks. He appealed to the compassion of gentlemen. He hoped, if they had any thing of the milk of human kindness in them, they would consider the state of the people of Mississippi. When lately travelling through the state, he had discovered that the silver ninepences, that used to be hung round babies' necks by a string, had all been cut off and used up, so that the infants of Tennessee could not get one of them to cut their teeth upon. [Loud laughter.] The administration, by this bill, were passing a tacit compliment on the dead bank; the paper even of the dead bank of the U. S. was better than the paper of this living government. The dead Percy was better than the live Falstaff. It was said that when great julep drinkers died, the mint was seen springing on their graves: it seemed so of this bank of the United States; though it was dead, its money still continued to supply the people with their best currency. Mr. P. continued to speak with great earnestness for some time longer, when he resumed his seat, and was followed by

Mr. Wise, who, after a discursive preamble, in which he glanced at various matters and things connected with the policy and practice of the administration, set himself to work to dissect the bill, going through it's provisions seriatim. On first rising he said that if he could have a clear understanding that the house would now, without further discussion, or calling of the previous question, give a vote on the bill, he would, with that view, move that the bill do lie on the table. Much noise and confusion ensued. Some cried "agreed!" Others "no, no." Others "go on."

Mr. Adams, deeming the bill too important to pass without deliberate discussion, wished to make a motion to strike out the enacting clause. Mr. Wise, however, concluded not to resign the floor, and avowed his resolution to speak till he had destroyed every bill which would otherwise go to the senate, unless the advocates of the bill would give up their purpose of rushing such a measure through the house at this hour of the session.

Some cried "very well—go on and do it."

Mr. Thomas explained about the postponement of his motion to solate a moment. He had been urged to make it earlier, but his reply was; that the house could take this up after it had despatched the senate bills, &c.

Mr. Naylor rose, and with great warmth exclaimed this is no explanation. [Cries of order, order!] I am a Pennsylvanian, [order!] and I will not sit tamely here and see her institutions stabbed to the heart. [The cries of order and the confusion in the house were increasing, when the speaker ordered Mr. N. to take his seat.] Mr. Wise then proceeded, comparing the proceedings of the house to the game of "catch-who-catch-can," and characterized the bill as the last grapple of the administration for the purse strings of the people. He said he should go on and speak till morning, if necessary, or to the end of the session, if his strength would hold out. They should loose this bill before they got another still more needful to them through the house.

Mr. Cambreleng. And who will suffer?

Mr. Wise expressed great indignation at this attempt to force a measure by the threatening the suffering of the nation; but warned Mr. C. that his victim was not within the reach of his spring. There remained a bill behind, a money bill, on which the house had still a hold; and he trusted they would resort to the stronghold of their Saxon ancestors, and withhold the supplies until their tyrants let go their grasp. The administration would yet have to come to the house as suppliants before the session elapsed, or they could not keep their wheels agoing for ninety days. The very measure which the chairman had so earnestly deprecated, and about the evils of which he had uttered such doleful predictions, as throwing the government into the hands of Nick Biddle, &c., that very measure was now his only hope; and the gentlemen would come begging the house to adopt it as a last resort, viz. the sale of the United States Bank stock. He then went into the analysis of the bill, and continued to speak against it with great vehemence till half past 8 o'clock; when he gave way for a motion by Mr. Jenifer to adjourn.

Mr. Prentiss asked for the yeas and nays, but the house refused to order them: Yeas 17, nays 73. No quorum. The question on adjournment was taken by tellers; when the yeas being but 42, the motion was abandoned.

Mr. Wise was about to proceed, when Mr. Taylor Webster insisted on the rule which forbids a member to speak more than once on the same question without leave.

The Chair, said if a gentleman yielded the floor for a motion to adjourn, he could not, in strictness, retain any right to resume it after that question should be decided in the negative; but if he then first addressed the chair, (as Mr. W. had now done,) he was entitled to proceed.

Mr. Wise thanked the speaker for the decision, and commented, with some severity, on such an attempt to violate a practice established by a courtesy of the house for forty-nine years. He was happy to find that he was still among gentlemen. He then proceeded in his dissection of the bill, taking various grounds of exception to it, but the reporter was too much exhausted to be able to secure a minute report of the speech.

Mr. Jenifer next addressed the house, commenting with great severity not only on the bill, but on the course of the administration generally, its influence over the house, the rewards of favorites, especially of such as had been discarded by the people; alluding in terms which could scarcely be misunderstood, and, in some cases, by name, to those not now members of either house, but who held office as a recompense for votes given, &c. (A full report of Mr. J.'s remarks will be given hereafter.) Mr. J. spoke till half past 10; when

Mr. Andrews, of New York, moved the previous question. Mr. Sergeant, of Pennsylvania, appealed to him to withdraw the motion, but in vain. Mr. Martin moved a call of the house, and demanded the yeas and nays, but subsequently withdrew that demand; which was immediately renewed by Mr. Robertson.

Mr. McKennan made an appeal to Mr. Andrews to withdraw his call; but with no better success than Mr. Sergeant. Mr. Duncan called him to order.

Mr. Naylor, amidst the cries of order! order! and much noise, made the same appeal. The Speaker ordered Mr. N. to take his seat.

The motion for a call of the house was negatived by yeas and nays: Yeas 54, nays 115.

The previous question was seconded, put, and carried; and the main question being on the engrossment of the bill, it was decided by yeas and nays as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Andrews, Atherton, Banks, Beatty, Beirne, Bicknell, Birdsall, Brodhead, Cambreleng, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Cleveland, Coles Connor, Crary, Cushman, Davee, D-Graff, Duncan, Edwards, Elmore, Farrington, Fairfield, Fry, Gallup, J. Garland, Grantland, Gray, Griffin, Haley, Hammond, Hawkins, Holt, Hopkins, Howard, Hubley, W. H. Hunter, T. B. Jackson, J. Johnson, N. Jones, J. W. Jones, Keim, Kemble, Klingensmith, Leadbetter, Lewis, Martin, McKay, R. McClellan, A. McClellan, McClure, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, S. W. Morris, Noble, Palmer, Parker, Parmenter, Parris, Paynter, Petrikin, Phelps, Pratt, John H. Prentiss, Reily, Rives, Sheffer, Spencer, Stuart, Taylor, Thomas, Titus, Towns, Turney, Vail, Vanderveer, Wagener, Webster, Weeks, T. T. Whittlesey, J. W. Williams, Worthington, Yell—87

NAYS—Messrs. Alexander, Heman Allen, Ay-crigg, Bell, Bond, Briggs, W. B. Campbell, Chain-bers, Cheatham, Corwin, Cranston, Darlington, Dawson, Davies, Dennis, Dromgoole, Dunn, Evans, Everett, Ewing, Fillmore, R. Garland, Goode, J. Graham, Grennell, Hall, Halsted, Harlan, Harper, Hawes, Henry, Herod, Hoffman, Jenifer, W. C. Johnson, Kennedy, Legare, Lincoln, J. M. Mason, S. Mason, Maury, McKennan, Menefee, Mercer, Milligan, Mitchell, Calvary Morris, Naylor, Noyes, Ogle, Patterson, Pearce, Peck, Phillips, Potts, S. S. Prentiss, Rariden, Randolph, Ridgway, Robert-son, Robinson, Russell, Sergeant, Slade, Southgate, Stanly, Stratton, Taliaferro, Tillinghast, Toland, Albert S. Waite, Elisha Whittlesey, Lewis Wil-iams, Joseph L. Williams, C. H. Williams, Wise, Word, Yorke—79.

So the bill was ordered to its third reading; and having been read a third time by its title, and the question being on its passage—

Mr. Connor moved the previous question. Mr. Wise demanded the yeas and nays on seconding it; but they were again refused. The motion was se-conded: the previous question was then put and carried; and the bill was passed. Mr. Wise gave notice of a motion to reconsider the vote just taken, (he having voted in the affirmative with this in-tent.)

A motion to adjourn was made and negatived: Ayes 70, noes 85.

Mr. Parker now moved a reconsideration, and demanded the previous question, which was se-conded, put, and carried; and the main question being on reconsidering, it was negatived without a count.

The house then, at half past 11 o'clock, ad-journed.

Saturday, July 7. Mr. Adams resumed the floor in support of his amendment on the subject of Texas, and continued to occupy the morning hour till it ex-pired. He was in that part of his argument in which he charges on the last and present administrations a course of duplicity and hostility in regard to Mex-ico, and a covert design from the beginning to wrest from her the province of Texas. In illustration of this position he read several documents, and in par-ticular a letter from president Jackson to Mr. Ful-ton, now of the senate, proving that he was at the time it was written (Dec. 10, 1830) fully apprized of the existence of a secret conspiracy, with gov. Houston at its head, to effect this object, and was utterly hostile to its accomplishment. The reading of this letter was listened to with profound atten-tion. Mr. A. had not finished his remarks when the morning hour expired.

Mr. Howard suggested that the rules be suspend-ed for the reception of reports from committees, which was done by general consent, when several reports were made.

Mr. Dromgoole moved to suspend the rules to enable him to move that, immediately after recess, Mr. Adams be allowed to proceed and conclude his remarks, and that time be allotted for a reply, and on this motion he asked the yeas and nays, but the house refused to order them, and then refused to suspend the rules.

The senate bill supplementary to the army bill was reported by the military committee with cer-tain amendments.

After some debate concerning the amendments between Messrs. Ewing, McKay, and Mercer,

Mr. Garland, of Louisiana, moved the previous question, which was seconded, put, and carried, and the bill was then passed.

Mr. Howard called up the motion made by Mr. Robertson, of Virginia, yesterday, to reconsider the vote laying on the table a motion to print the docu-ments accompanying the president's message in re-lation to the correspondence between this govern-ment and that of Mexico.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. H. disclaimed all wish to suppress any part of this correspondence which was of any import-ance, his object having been merely to avoid the expense of printing a vast mass of what was of no moment to the subject. He had not the remotest desire to prevent the fullest and freest inquiry. He desired not to be on the committee.

After some remarks from Messrs. Robertson and Everett, Mr. Robertson's resolution for referring the papers to a committee of three, to select such as should be printed, prevailed; and Messrs. Robert-son, Everett, and Cray were appointed the com-mittee.

Mr. Robertson moved the consideration of the re-solutions moved by him calling for information on the subject of fraudulent combinations and conspi-racies to keep down the price of public lands.

The rules were suspended, and the resolutions adopted; but the motion was subsequently read-considered, and the resolutions modified by leaving out certain expressions, to which Mr. Cushing strenu-ously objected, and substituting others, when the resolutions, as modified, were agreed to.

The house then took up the senate bills.

The bill under consideration yesterday, suppl-ementary to the act for the appointment of commis-sioners to adjust the claims to reservations under the 14th article of the treaty of 1830 with the Choctaw Indians, was again taken up, and debated at length by Messrs. Wise, Lyon, W. C. Johnson, and Lewis; when, on motion of Mr. Johnson, it was laid on the table.

The bill to confirm certain purchases of the pub-lic lands under the act of the 19th June, 1834, was taken up, debated by Messrs. Prentiss, Johnson, and Lyon, and, having been amended so as to allow time for inquiry, was passed.

The following senate bills were passed with little or no debate, viz.

An act to authorize Charles Day, of Macon, and James R. Potts, of Columbus, Georgia, to import free of duties two iron steamboats, &c.

An act to refund to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company certain duties paid upon railroad iron.

An act to refund certain duties upon railroad iron, paid by the New York and Harlem Railroad Company.

The bill to restrict the circulation of small notes as a currency in the District of Columbia, came up next in order; but, before any action was had upon it, the hour of recess arrived, and

The house took the ordinary recess.

EVENING SESSION.

An act relating to restricting the circulation of small notes as a currency in the District of Colum-bia. This pending question being taken up after the recess,

Mr. Thomas made some remarks in favor of the bill, and moved to strike out "April next," as the time after which small notes are not to be issued, and insert "August next."

Mr. R. Garland was opposed to the occupation of another evening session by the penal bills of the gentleman from Maryland, (Mr. Thomas.) The last evening had been so spent, and that, Mr. G. thought was enough; he moved to lay the bill on the table; and asked the yeas and nays. Ordered. Mr. Mercer requested that the speaker would as-certain if there was a quorum present. The Speaker counted, and ascertained that there were 112 members present. Mr. Mercer asked a call of the house. Refused. A reconsideration of this vote was next asked. Decided in the affirmative: Ayes 51, noes 45. The house again refused the call. The Speaker again counted the house; there was exactly a quorum (122) of members present. The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Gar-land, to lay the bill on the table, and it was de-cided in the negative by the following vote: Yeas 54, nays 74.

Mr. Chapman demanded the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question order-ed to be put, Shall the bill be read a third time? De-cided affirmatively. When? Decided to be read a third time now. The bill was then read, and it was passed as it came from the senate.

This bill came back from the senate, with an amendment, which was referred to the committee of the whole. And, on motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house went into the committee of the whole.

Mr. Cambreleng moved to take up senate bill 321, being an act to authorize the sale of certain bonds belonging to the United States. Mr. Mer-cer, suggested that the harbor bill being under consideration when the committee rose before, that bill had better be taken up. Mr. Cambreleng thought it would not be in order, as that bill was a house bill, and the time had passed for the senate to re-ceive it. The Chair decided that the (new) har-bor bill was in order, if the house chose to act upon it. Mr. Whittlesey suggested that the afternoon ought not to be spent in a fruitless debate upon priority of business. Mr. Cushman moved to lay the (new) harbor bill aside. Mr. Mercer said that an amendment to it was pending. The Chair said that the question was to strike out the enacting clause of the (new) harbor bill. Mr. Duncan rose to support that motion. Mr. Mallory raised a point of order, that a motion to lay a bill aside in commit-tee was equivalent to laying it on the table in the house, and was of course now first in order. Mr. Bond supported this view. Mr. Mercer, Mr. Dun-can, and other gentlemen, were all addressing the chair at the same time, and there was much confu-sion, and loud cries of order!

The Chair decided that the motion to lay a bill aside was in order, and now debateable. An appeal was taken from this decision. Mr. Polk sup-ported the decision of the chair.

The house confirmed that decision: and the (new) harbor bill was laid aside; and the bill moved by Mr. Cambreleng, as above, was taken up.

Mr. Wise asked the chairman of the committee of ways and means, what change had occurred in the affairs of the country, to remove the objections to this measure which that gentleman had himself so recently urged? It had been denounced by him as a measure favorable to the schemes of Nicholas Biddle, &c.; and why had it become so great a fa-vorite so suddenly?

Mr. Cambreleng was opposed, in principle, to this mode of making a loan, and had come into the measure reluctantly, and only as a matter of neces-sity. This necessity arose from the large amount of appropriations which had been made by this congress already, and from the probability that the United States Bank of Pennsylvania would purchase up the treasury notes which are to be re-issued under the law of congress. He hoped mem-bers of both parties would unite, and put it in the power of government to make use of this stock, for the purpose of meeting the appropriations.

Mr. Underwood was glad to see that the chairman of the committee of ways and means was disposed to regard this measure with a better temper than at the extra session, when he had denounced it (order-ed by members of the opposition) as emanating from the mint of Nick Biddle. He had said that the effect of the measure would be to place the gov-ernment in the power of the Bank of the United States.

Mr. Cambreleng said he thought so now; but this bill provides that these bonds may be sold abroad.

Mr. Underwood could not see that the explanation affected the argument at all. He was glad to see that the chairman of the committee of ways and means had shown that he could change his opinions to suit occasions and circumstances, and he (Mr. U.) hoped that by this time that gentleman was convinced that his (Mr. U.'s) course at the extra session was not so outrageous as he had then repre-sented it.

Mr. Bell made some statements as to the absence or indefiniteness of the estimates laid before the house as to the actual state of the treasury, and as to the extent of that necessity which was alleged as the motive for raising money by forcing the sale of this stock. Since the extra session, the question had been whether the wants of the government should be met by issuing treasury notes, or making a loan. The chairman of the committee of ways and means had stated that no loan was necessary; and that the resources of the government were ade-quate without such an expedient. And now it was seriously proposed by him to resort to that very expedient. Mr. Bell then proceeded to examine the evidence of the assertion made by Mr. Cam-breleng, at the extra session, that the resources of the government were adequate to meet its wants, without a loan. He reminded the house that this stock had been alluded to by the chairman of the committee of ways and means as a part of the funds upon which the issue of the new treasury notes was based, and that that stock could not (if there was any thing in that argument,) be withdrawn, in good faith. He read from Mr. Cambreleng's speeches, in order to corroborate this allegation of inconsis-tency.

Mr. Pope said the question was not what this member said, nor what that member said, on this subject last fall; but whether the measure now pro-posed was or was not expedient and proper to be adopted at this time. Is it necessary to sell this stock to meet the current expenses of the govern-ment? That is the true question which was now to be settled. Nor was there any need, in his opin-ion, of so much talk about Biddle and the bank, in connexion with this argument. Biddle's bank had nothing more to do with the treasury notes than Girard's bank, or any other bank. All had the same opportunity to buy them up for their interests, and probably would do so, if they pleased. He was opposed to the sale of this stock, unless the case were clearly made out that it was necessary to do so.

Mr. Wise said that the chairman of the committee of ways and means had charged, as usual, the con-gress of the nation with the bankruptcy of the gov-ernment; and now he (Mr. W.) would ask the gentleman if there was any communication from the executive as to the necessity of selling this stock?

Mr. Cambreleng replied by recapitulating the ap-propiation bills that had been already passed by this congress, some of which were of a novel and unusual character; four and a half millions of such appropriations had been made within ten days, and of course could not have been contemplated in the estimates upon which the communications from the treasury to congress were founded.

Mr. Wise commented upon the course of the administration as to this and kindred measures, and replied at large to the arguments in vindication of bringing forward this proposition, adduced by the chairman of the committee of ways and means.

The bill was then laid aside, and ordered to be reported to the house.

The committee then took up and acted upon the following senate bills:

An act to allow a drawback on imported hemp when manufactured into cordage and exported. On motion, laid aside.

An act to remit the duties upon certain goods destroyed by fire at the late conflagration in the city of New York. On the motion to lay this bill aside, there were ayes 40, noes 52. No quorum.

Another count was called for, and the house being counted again, there were ayes 42, noes 82. So the motion to lay the bill aside was rejected. The bill was then read at large by the clerk. Mr. Hoffman defended this bill with great zeal and earnestness, and stated the circumstances upon which the claims of the sufferers by the New York conflagration for the remission of the duties upon the burnt goods were based. He hoped it would be acted upon at once by the house. Mr. Petrik would not say many words on this subject. He was opposed to the bill, and would move to strike out the enacting clause. Mr. Cushman was opposed to the bill as a proposition that the United States congress should resolve itself into an insurance office.

If this bill were to be passed, the next thing that would be heard would be a similar application for relief from the consequences of the recent conflagration in Charleston, South Carolina. Mr. Cambreleng answered these objections, and showed the distinction between the principle assumed by Mr. Cushman, and that on which this bill was based. He explained that so far from the monstrous sums being remitted, which Mr. Cushman had stated, the whole amount of such bonds was but $911,000, and that the bill proposed a commission to inquire into the title for relief of claimants under the bill. He defended the bill with some particularity, and hoped that the committee would report it to the house. Mr. Underwood opposed the bill; though, if it were modified in some particulars which he suggested, he would go for it. Mr. Chambers would vote against the motion to strike out the enacting clause; he wished the bill to be modified before he could vote for it. Mr. Everett took the same ground, and sent an amendment to the chair, which he should move to the bill, if the pending motion should not prevail. Mr. Curtis stated that the gentleman from New Hampshire had been greatly in error as to the amount the bill would keep out of the treasury. He stated the effects to be attained by this bill. He was in favor of Mr. Everett's amendment. Mr. Phillips hoped that the committee would not strike out the enacting clause, but would pass the bill with the amendment of Mr. Everett. Mr. Atherton could see no principle upon which this bill should be passed. Mr. Reed said that goods had been imported to take the place in the market of those destroyed by fire, and duties had been paid on them. The government did not want to collect the duties twice. He could see no principle upon which this bill should not be passed. Mr. Adams contended that the principle of the bill was one of mere justice. To collect the duties on goods destroyed under these circumstances would be an act of most tyrannical injustice; and it would be a disgrace to the nation to extort these duties from those who have already suffered so much.

The motion to strike out the enacting clause was rejected.

The amendment of Mr. Everett was adopted.

Mr. Chambers moved the addition of an amendment, of which we could not obtain a copy, but which made exceptions in case of goods insured. Mr. Curtis hoped this amendment would not be adopted. The question of insurance had nothing whatever to do with the matter. He was proceeding to explain this, when he yielded to the suggestion of a member, and said he would leave the house to vote upon the amendment, without further discussion. Mr. Pope was understood to be opposed to the bill, as one of dangerous precedent, and as extending to every case of individual loss. Mr. Hoffman said a word by way of explanation, and then the amendment of Mr. Chambers was rejected. Mr. Chambers opposed the whole bill. There was no principle in it which did not apply to the second purchaser equally well with the importer; and it would be an act to put the money of the government into the pockets of individual merchants. A motion was made to lay aside [not to report] this bill. Tellers were ordered—Ayes 53, noes 61. So the motion to lay the bill aside was rejected.

Mr. Chambers offered another amendment, which, after debate, was adopted, and the bill ordered to be reported to the house. Mr. Sergeant moved that the committee rise. The motion prevailed. The bill authorizing the sale of the bonds of the Bank of the United States was passed.

The New York fire bill, as amended, came up in order.

Mr. Cushman moved to lay the bill on the table, and asked for the yeas and nays on his motion. On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, no quorum voted. After a while, the same question was again put, and the yeas and nays on Mr. Cushman's motion (to lay on the table) were ordered. That question was decided in the negative by the following vote: Yeas 53, nays 87. So the bill was not laid on the table. Mr. Harrison demanded the previous question. Ordered; put: Shall this bill pass? Carried in the affirmative without a count. So the bill was passed.

Mr. Sherrod Williams moved to reconsider the vote whereby the house yesterday laid on the table the bill from the senate with regard to the Falmouth and Alexandria Rail Road company.

Mr. Mallory moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table—Ayes 75, noes 64. So the motion to lay on the table to reconsider prevailed.

The harbor bill came back from the senate, amended.

A motion was made to lay it on the table, which did not prevail. On motion, the amendments of the senate were referred to a committee of the whole.

The post route bill came back from the senate, amended.

The amendments as to routes were first acted on, and concurred in.

That making railroads post-roads, and regulating the cost of carrying the mails thereon, came next in order. It was amended, and then this amendment was adopted.

That proposing to strike out the section going to abolish the express mail came next, and, pending the same, Mr. Hopkins moved to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Monday next. Mr. Briggs hoped the amendment would be concurred in, and that the motion to postpone would not prevail. After some further discussion of this amendment, Mr. Chapman moved the previous question. Ordered. Put. And the house concurred with the senate in the amendment, striking out the house section, abolishing the express mail. Ayes 82, noes 53.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house went into committee of the whole, (Mr. McKenna in chair.)

Mr. Rice Garland hoped the committee would proceed in order with the calendar of bills before them. Mr. Cambreleng moved to take up the Indian annuity bill as it came back, amended, from the senate. This motion prevailed, and the amendments of the senate were read.

Mr. Everett moved an amendment to the amendments; which was adopted, and the amendments of the senate were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. White, the harbor bill was next taken up, and the amendments of the senate, referred to the committee, were read. Some of them having been read and concurred in, Mr. Petrik hoped that the amendments would not be concurred in. The amendment of the senate, to strike out $20,000 for the improvement of the Cumberland river, above Nashville, having been read, Mr. Sherrod Williams moved to non concur, and went into a somewhat lengthened opposition to the amendment. Mr. Underwood hoped that the house would insist on the clause proposed to be stricken out. Mr. Duncan was understood to favor the amendment of the senate. He was going into a general reply to Mr. Bond's speech upon retrenchment, delivered some time ago, when Mr. Jenifer and Mr. Sibley called him to order for irrelevancy. He resumed, and had made some more progress in the same strain, when Mr. Reed called him to order for irrelevancy. Mr. Duncan proceeded, insisted on his right to do so, and seemed determined to do so.

A motion was made that the gentleman be permitted to proceed. The committee decided that he be not permitted to proceed, and Mr. Duncan still persisted; at which there were loud and prolonged cries of order from all parts of the house. The Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio will take his seat. Mr. Duncan resumed his seat. Mr. Pope spoke in favor of the clause in the bill proposed to be stricken out by the senate. He was making an allusion to something said by Mr. Duncan, when Mr. Lincoln called him to order for irrelevancy. Mr. Titus objected to Mr. Pope's proceeding further, having been called to order. Mr. Pope would not put the committee to the trouble of saying whether or not he was in order. He resumed his seat. Mr. Petrik and Mr. Sherrod Williams claimed the floor. After some effort, the former proceeded, but was not heard by the reporter. He had proceeded, but a little way, when Mr. Harrison called him to order. The Chair asked him to reduce his point of order to writing. He did so; and called the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Petrik) to order for saying "the price of the Kentucky delegation is $20,000." This the Chair decided out of order, and the committee, by a large vote, refused Mr. Petrik leave to go on. Mr. Luncan rose, but, having been refused permission to proceed, objection was made to his going on. He said he held a book in his hand, [understood to be Mr. Bond's speech,] out of which he wished to make a speech. But, if the committee would permit him to write it out, and call it his speech in committee of the whole, he would desist. Loud cries of agreed! from all quarters of the house ensued, and Mr. Duncan sat down.

Mr. Bond hoped that his colleague would state in such written speech that it was not delivered in the presence of the member to whom it was a reply. The pending amendment of the senate was then adopted.

The next amendment was a proposition to strike out $70,000 for the improvement of Red river.

Mr. Rice Garland opposed this amendment. He was of opinion that it had been adopted from a misapprehension of the senate as to the adequacy of a former appropriation for the same purpose. Mr. Henry Johnson earnestly hoped the committee would non concur in the amendment. The amendment was, however, concurred in.

And the committee, on motion, rose, and reported the bills acted on.

The Indian annuity bill was taken up, the amendments of the committee to the senate's amendments concurred in, and the latter were then adopted.

The harbor bill was next taken up; and Mr. Sherrod Williams proposed an amendment to the amendments of the senate, which was decided to be out of order. Mr. Grant demanded the previous question; which was ordered to be put. Mr. Pope would like the question to be taken on concurrence with the senate in two of the amendments. Ordered. Mr. Robertson moved that the bill do lie on the table. Lost. The amendments proposed by the senate were then concurred in.

The fortification bill came back from the senate amended, by adding a proviso that, for the current year, only 50 per centum of any appropriation over $15,000 should be expended. Mr. McKay moved an amendment. Mr. Crary demanded the previous question. Ordered. Put. Senate amendments concurred in. Some private bills from the senate, whose amendments were then taken up and concurred in.

An act to confirm certain purchases of the public lands under the act of the 19th June, 1834. This bill came back from the senate, where it originated, with a house amendment [proposing delay for inquiry:] non-concurred in.

Mr. Word hoped that the house would recede from its amendment, and that this bill would pass as it came from the senate. He defended the claimants from the aspersions against them, upon which this amendment had been based, with earnestness and zeal. Mr. Prentiss, of Mississippi, moved that the house recede from its amendment. Mr. Harlan moved to lay the bill on the table. Ayes 69, noes 40. Another count was then made by tellers: Ayes 68, noes 54. So the bill was laid on the table.

Some other private bills were then acted on, as amended by the senate; and the speaker declared his table to be clear.

On motion, Mr. McKenna resumed the chair, in committee.

Mr. Bell moved to take up the senate bill 150 being an act granting half-pay and pensions to certain widows. The motion prevailed. Amendments were proposed, considered, and rejected. And the bill was laid aside and ordered to be reported to the house.

On motion of Mr. Henry Johnson, senate bill 330, "to establish an additional land office in Louisiana," was taken up.

Mr. Rice Garland moved to amend so as to alter certain limits mentioned in the bill, which amendment was adopted. Mr. Yell moved an amendment, proposing a new land district, officers, &c. The amendment was adopted; and the bill was laid aside and ordered to be reported.

Mr. Phillips moved to take up the senate bill 380, being an act providing for the erection of certain light houses, &c. &c. Tellers were appointed on this motion: Ayes 64, noes 46; no quorum voting.

[The Speaker took the chair to receive a message (with bills) from the senate; after which the chairman resumed the chair.]

The pending question being on the motion of Mr. Phillips to take up the light-house bill, 79 votes in the affirmative, 40 in the negative no quorum. Tellers were appointed: Ayes 80, noes 44. So the committee decided to take up the bill, and it was read.

Some amendments, proposed by the committee on commerce, proposing sundry additional appropriations, were then stated, and their adoption urged by Mr. Phillips.

Mr. Duncan moved that the bill be laid aside [not to report.] Lost. Mr. White proposed an amendment to the amendments of the committee on commerce; this, he said, involved no appropriation, and only ordered a survey of a particular spot for the location of a light. Lost. The amendments were adopted. Mr. Garland, of Virginia, made an ineffectual attempt to strike out the enacting clause; and then the bill was ordered to be laid aside, and reported to the house.

The military academy bill came down with a large number of senate amendments, embracing a great variety of propositions on multifarious subjects. Several amendments to those of the senate were proposed by different members, upon almost every possible subject. This being disposed of, the committee rose and reported the bills acted on.

An act granting half-pay and pensions to certain widows was passed.

An act to establish an additional land office in Louisiana was also passed. The title of this bill was amended, by adding "and Arkansas."

An act providing the erection of certain light-houses, &c. The amendments of the senate, as amended, being proposed to be concurred in, and to be engrossed.

Mr. Garland, of Va., said, that, considering the hour at night, the paucity of members present, and the large amount proposed by the bill to be expended, he felt impelled to demand the yeas and nays on this motion. They were ordered; and being taken, the bill passed: Yeas 65, nays 56.

Mr. Bell moved that the house go into committee of the whole; which motion prevailed. Mr. Bell moved to take up and consider the bill from the senate to continue the commission for investigating Choctaw land frauds; which motion prevailed. Mr. Word moved an amendment to the amendments. Lost. The committee adopted the amendment of the senate to the bill.

The committee rose, having passed some other bills, and reported them, and a motion to go again into committee of the whole was unsuccessful. Mr. Cushing moved a resolution, making certain additional payments to messengers, &c. Several amendments were offered, so as to include chaplains, officers of library, &c. Mr. Coles moved that the resolution lie on the table, with the amendments: Ayes 34, noes 73. No quorum.

A call of the house was moved. Ordered. And 97 having been found to be present on the first call, Mr. Noyes said that all the bills were in which had passed either house. An adjournment was moved.

Mr. Wise hoped the house would not adjourn without bringing those members out of their beds, who had kept the house in session all night counting for a quorum. The motion to adjourn was lost, and the call proceeded till after sunrise.

There were several efforts made to suspend the call, but in vain. Excuses were offered. Mr. Harlan rose and asked if absence from the house were a political or a civil offence? The Chair referred him to the rule of the house upon the subject. Mr. Wise said it was an uncivil offence.

The officers of the house having been ordered to bring in a member who had not answered and who had not been excused, some of the members who had been absent were brought in and gave their excuses. Mr. Grennell had been for some time in ill-health. He was excused. Mr. Cushman had been here from ten o'clock yesterday till five this morning. Mr. Wise said that, in consideration of the peculiar standing of the gentleman from New Hampshire, he thought he ought to be charged with fees, and he (Mr. W.) moved the previous question. [A laugh.] Mr. Cushman was permitted to take his seat on payment of fees.

Mr. Samson Mason was next in order, and was permitted to take his seat, on payment of fees. Mr. Davies, of Pennsylvania, on being brought in, gave his conscientious conviction of duty not to break the Sabbath, by sitting during that day. The validity of this excuse was discussed, and Mr. Davies was permitted to take his seat without the payment of fees.

Mr. Graham, of North Carolina, had remained till 12 o'clock last night. He had been ill, and apprehended that the impure air of the hall would make him so again. He was one of those who believed that the house ought not to sit after 12 o'clock Saturday night, except in great emergency. He had not retired to break up a quorum, but had gone home for the reasons he had stated, and had come back voluntarily this morning.

Mr. Gray, who had moved the call of the house, urged that the gentleman was not entitled to be excused.

Mr. Stanly saw no reason why his colleague should have an exemption over all others from the operation of the rule requiring members' attendance. He hoped that he might be permitted to take his seat, with payment of fees. Mr. Montgomery moved that he be permitted to take his seat without payment of fees. Some other remarks were made by different members, and then the question was put on Mr. Stanly's motion, and the gentleman permitted to take his seat, upon payment of fees.

Mr. Briggs was next placed at the bar. His excuse was, that he remained here till one or two o'clock, and, finding himself exhausted, and with a headache, he went home to bed. Mr. Wise moved that he be permitted to take his seat, upon payment of fees. Ordered.

Mr. Spencer, had been sick yesterday, and sat here till very late, and was returning when he met the sergeant-at-arms. Mr. Parker moved that his colleague take his seat without fees. Mr. Wise would ask if this sickness was any thing more than that of all the members, who are obliged to sit here till midnight. Mr. Spencer was permitted to take his seat without fees. Mr. Webster, of Ohio, was brought up, and asked for his excuse. He said he had no excuse to offer; he had sat till two in the morning, and had been waiting two hours to be admitted to the hall. Permitted to take his seat, upon payment of fees.

Mr. Mercer rose, and said he had staid in the house all night, and was exhausted. He asked to be excused from further attendance this day. The request was complied with, and Mr. Mercer left the hall.

Mr. Moore made the same request in favor of Mr. Spencer, which was also granted.

Mr. Brodhead was placed at the bar by the sergeant-at-arms, and plead indisposition as the reason why he had left the house after twelve o'clock last night. Permitted to take his seat, on the payment of fees.

Mr. Mitchell was excused, and permitted to take his seat without paying fees.

Mr. Palmer was excused, without fees.

Mr. Parris had retired from exhaustion after a laborious session. Excused, upon payment of fees.

Mr. Cushing inquired whether there be not a quorum present in the house?

Mr. Robinson, being placed at the bar, said that he had answered at the call of the house. No proceeding were had with regard to this case.

Mr. Howard said something in excuse of Mr. Thomas; Mr. Stanly, in favor of Mr. Rencher, and Mr. Grantland, of Mr. Jabez Jackson. But the chair decided that these excuses were out of the regular order.

Mr. Shields, of Tennessee, being placed at the bar, stated that he had sat till one o'clock, and had gone home completely exhausted, and on his way to the house had been so unwell as to be obliged to sit down frequently.

The Speaker stated that sixteen gentlemen, notified by the sergeant-at-arms of the house, left the city in the morning cars, this morning, a list of whose names the sergeant-at-arms handed to the chair as follows:

Messrs. Anderson, Birdsell, Chambers, Chany, Hamer, Harper, Kennedy, Murray, Petrikin, Plummer, Southgate, Turney, White, of Ky., Yell, and Grant. On motion of Mr. Lincoln, that report was entered on the journal.

Mr. Jones, of N. Y. pleaded sudden illness as the result of this long night's session, and was excused, without fees.

Mr. Wise asked whether or not the sixteen above alluded to were liable to be fined for contempt of the rules of the house? The Speaker was not understood to give any decision on this point. Messrs. Rencher and Thomas, who were absent, were excused on motion. Mr. Vandever was placed at the bar. He said he had been indisposed; and had left the house at 11 or 12 o'clock. Excused, without fees. Mr. C. Shepard plead, on being arranged, that he was broken down with his long attendance to his duty in the house. He had never been absent before; and had left the house on this occasion from indisposition. Excused, with fees.

Mr. Carter. This gentleman said he had been in attendance till after 12 o'clock, and, not feeling very well, he had left the house from that cause. Excused, with fees.

Mr. Beatty then offered an order, by which the sixteen gentlemen who had been reported as having left the city, were held to answer for their absence. The order was adopted. Mr. Bouldin understood there was no quorum; and he suggested that the proceedings under the call be suspended. Mr. Lewis was of opinion that all absent members ought to be punished, as well as those brought in by the sergeant-at-arms. Mr. Menfee did not propose to dispense with the call; he hoped it would be postponed, and that it would be ascertained whether or not there was a quorum. Mr. Cray moved that the house (half past 7, Sunday morning) do now adjourn. Lost. Mr. Fillmore was placed at the bar, and being called on for his excuse, said that he had staid here till between 3 and 4 in the morning, and had then left from a sense of duty to his health, to obtain some rest. Excused, with fees.

Mr. Shields, upon motion of a colleague, was permitted to retire from the hall from extreme indisposition.

Mr. Wise offered the following resolution: "Resolved, That all members now absent, except such as have been excused, and the sixteen members who have been reported by the sergeant-at-arms as having defied the execution of the order of the house, be required, upon the re-assembling of congress, to give excuses for their absence at this time, and it shall be the duty of the clerk to enter their names on the journal for that purpose, and the speaker shall bring the same to the notice of the house."

Mr. Howard moved to amend, so as to resume the call for excuses to-morrow (Monday) morning. This was immediately after withdrawn, however. Mr. J. L. Williams was excused, with fees. Reason, unwillingness to sit on the Sabbath. Mr. Jones, of Virginia, moved that Mr. Pennybacker be excused. Reason, illness in his family. Excused.

Mr. Prentiss, of Mississippi, then spoke to the resolution of Mr. Wise. The sixteen who had disobeyed the mandate of the house, and left the city in contempt of it, were in a different position from those who were absent, not knowing of such order of the house. Mr. Wise said a resolution had already been adopted touching that point, upon the motion of Mr. Beatty, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Miller, of Missouri, gave severe indisposition as his excuse. Excused, without fees. Mr. Mallory, having left the house at three o'clock in the morning, and gone to bed, was excused, with fees; as was Mr. Jas. Mason.

Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, moved the previous question on Mr. Wise's resolution. Seconded. Ordered. Put. Carried. So the proceedings under the call were discontinued, and the doors of the hall were opened. Mr. Bronson moved an adjournment. Mr. Graham, of North Carolina, demanded the yeas and nays. Not ordered. The house decided the motion in the affirmative. Ayes 74, noes 51. And so the house, at nearly 8 o'clock Sunday morning, adjourned till nine o'clock to-morrow.

Monday, July 9. On motion of Mr. McKim, the reading of the journal was dispensed with.

Mr. Bell moved that the following resolution of Mr. Wise, which was adopted yesterday morning, be rescinded:

"Resolved, That all members now absent, except such as have been excused, and the sixteen members who have been reported by the sergeant-at-arms, as having defied the execution of the order of the house, be required, upon the re-assembling of congress, to give excuses for their absence at this time, and it shall be the duty of the clerk to enter their names on the journal for that purpose, and the speaker shall bring the same to the notice of the house."

Mr. Bell said that this was a censure in his own case, and in that of many others, who had waited till all the public business had been transacted, and had not gone to their lodgings till after the speaker had declared his table cleared, and till it seemed likely that an immediate adjournment might take place.

At the suggestion of Mr. Whittlesey, this motion was so modified by Mr. Bell as to permit all who were then absent, but are now present, to offer excuses, or, not being present, to have excuses rendered for them.

Mr. Underwood, was understood to express some doubt as to whether that could be done.

Mr. Bell then presented his resolution in this shape:

"Resolved, That so much of the resolution of the 7th instant, adopted upon the motion of Mr. Wise, as requires certain members of the house to give excuses for their absence at the next session, be rescinded, and that excuses be now heard in behalf of such absentees."

Mr. Potts moved to strike out all but the declaration merely that Mr. Wise's resolution be rescinded.

Mr. Adams moved to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "resolved," and in-setting a provision that all resolutions of censure and orders for payment of fees by the members of this house, for absence on the call of the house on the morning of the Sabbath day, be, and are hereby, rescinded.

Mr. Fillmore thought the effect of this proceeding would not be such a one as would subvert justice. The publication of the names of those members who were absent on Sunday morning would be a partial proceeding, inasmuch as many members whose names had not been given in the papers as absent, had left the city several days or weeks before.

Mr. Potts withdrew his amendment. Mr. Adams offered his. Mr. Cushman was making some statements as to the circumstances attending his own absence on yesterday morning, when he was called to order on all sides, the chair deciding that an individual case could not now be considered. Mr. Wise said that if the gentlemen from Tennessee and Massachusetts would withdraw their propositions, he would move to reconsider the vote whereby his (Mr. W.'s) resolution had been adopted by the house. Mr. Bell withdrew his resolution. The chair decided that the amendment of Mr. Adams fell at once. Mr. Wise then moved to reconsider the resolution in question, and moved the previous question. Seconded. Ordered to be put. Mr. Brodhead moved a call of the house. The chair. Not in order, the previous question having been seconded. Mr. Keim demanded the yeas and nays on reconsideration. Ordered. The motion to reconsider prevailed by the following vote: yeas 109, nays 35.

Mr. Wise moved the previous question, (on agreeing to the resolution of Mr. Wise.) In reply to a question of Mr. Sergeant, the chair said that if this resolution were now rejected, the journal would only present the usual case of a call of the house. The previous question was then ordered and put, and the resolution was rejected without a count.

Mr. Wise moved a reconsideration of the resolution offered by Mr. Beatty yesterday, by which the sixteen gentlemen who had been reported as having left the city were held to answer for their absence. Mr. W. moved the previous question. Mr. Mercer said that no member had a right to combine two motions in one. The chair decided that that was not the case in this instance. The motions were distinct, and perfectly in order. Mr. Mercer took an appeal from this decision; saying we must have some rules of order in this house. Many of the most valuable are always destroyed. After some conversation, the question was taken on the appeal by tellers: Ayes 83, noes 45. So the decision of the chair was sustained as the judgment of the house. The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question. It was seconded, and ordered to be put.

The question then recurred on the reconsideration of Mr. Beatty's [yesterday's] resolution.

Mr. Brodhead called for the yeas and nays. Not ordered. The house refused to reconsider. Mr. Adams then offered his resolution as above. Mr. Adams demanded the previous question. Seconded.

Mr. Mercer and Mr. Lincoln said that they had objected to the offering of the resolution at the time it was read. The chair had not heard these objections made. Mr. Howard said that it was a question of privilege, and the offering it was in order. The chair confirmed that opinion. The main question was ordered to be put. Mr. Adams and Mr. Foster demanded the yeas and nays on the resolution of Mr. Adams. They were ordered, and the resolution was rejected by the following vote: Yeas 47, nays 90.

A message was received from the president of the United States, by the hands of his private secretary, containing a list of the acts to which he had affixed his signature.

Mr. Howard asked if the unfinished business of the morning hours was not now in order? The chair decided that it was not. It had been the usage of the house to suspend the rules as to reports, resolutions, &c. on the day of adjournment. The resolution under consideration on Sunday morning, when the call of the house began, for allowing extra pay to messengers, &c. was resumed, on motion of Mr. McKennan. Mr. McKennan demanded the previous question. Seconded. Ordered. On the adoption of the resolution, Mr. Tolson asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and the resolution was adopted by the following vote: Yeas 97, nays 32.

Mr. Bronson asked for leave to offer a resolution giving two months' extra pay to the sergeant-at-arms, clerks, and postmaster of the house, for services rendered during this session. This had been done by the senate with regard to their officers this session, and a similar one had just been passed with regard to the messengers, chaplain, &c.

Mr. Gray made some remarks in opposition to the resolution as starting a new principle. He had been in favor of the resolution just passed, because extra work had been done by the subjects of it. This was not the case with the subjects of the resolution under consideration. He moved that the resolution do lie on the table.

Which motion prevailed?

On motion of Mr. Pope, the house went into committee of the whole, (Mr. DeGraff in the chair,) and took up the joint resolution from the senate authorizing the library committee (at an expense of $5,000) to cause the Madison papers to be printed.

Mr. Adams hoped the joint resolution would be changed into a bill. Mr. Pope agreed to this. The amendment prevailed. The committee then rose, and reported the joint resolution as amended. The amendment was concurred in, and the bill ordered to a third reading. It was read, and passed.

The chair suggested that the 16th and 17th joint rules must be suspended before this bill could be returned to the senate. On motion of Mr. McKennan, this was done, and the bill sent to the senate for concurrence.

Mr. Bynum offered a resolution making it the duty of the clerk of the house to provide for the safety of the public stables attached to the house. Adopted.

Mr. Carter, (by leave,) presented the memorial of sundry citizens of Cocke county, Tennessee, protesting against the sub-treasury project, and praying the establishment of a national bank.

The usual joint resolutions were received from the senate, declaring that, having finished the business before them, the two houses were ready to adjourn.

Mr. Garland, of La., hoped the resolution would declare the fact. This house had not "finished the business" before them; and it would be improper to say so. He moved to strike out that part of the resolution. On the suggestion of Mr. McKennan, (as the senate had before them an amendment of the house,) this subject was suspended for a moment. A message was then received from the senate, concurring with the house, in suspending the 16th and 17th joint rules so far as regards the resolution as to the Madison papers, and adopting the amendment of the house thereto, (changing the joint resolution into a bill.)

Mr. Adams moved a resolution remitting the fees for absence, without leave, to absentees yesterday. This had been usually done in similar cases; and he hoped that it would be done now, in a generous spirit, at parting. Mr. McKennan supported this proposition; as did Mr. Pope. Mr. Reed said that the good effects of the proceedings of yesterday, as to absentees, had appeared in the attendance of a quorum to day. He hoped that now the fees might be remitted.

The joint resolution on adjournment was again taken up. Mr. Garland's motion to amend was next in order. Mr. Cushing said, in support of this amendment, that had a quorum been present on Saturday night, some portion of the scores of bills, &c. now lying untouched upon the calendar might have been attended to.

The amendment of Mr. Garland was rejected and the order passed.

Mr. Thomas, from the joint committee appointed to wait upon the president, to apprise him of the readiness of the senate and house to adjourn, returned an answer from the president, that he had no further communications to make to congress and that he wished each and every member thereof a safe return to their several homes.

On motion of Mr. Cushman, the house then (at 12 o'clock) adjourned until the first Monday of December next.

We are enabled now to lay before our readers some particulars of proceedings in the house of representatives during the two last days of the session, which we have not published before, from not being able to get access to the journal of the house. The following is the residuum, taken from the journal, of the proceedings of Saturday and Monday last.

[Nat. Int.] Mr. Mercer, from the committee on roads and canals, reported at length upon senate bill making appropriations for the completion of certain roads in the state of Michigan, concluding that the said bill ought not to pass; and the bill was thereupon ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. Whittlesey, of Ohio, from the committee of claims, reported against bills from the senate for the relief of Alfred Westfall, for the relief of Jacob Hanks, and for the relief of George I. Knight.

Mr. Robertson from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill "for the relief of the heirs of Peyton Randolph, deceased," and a bill "to amend the acts for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies, maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies." These reports of course lie over.

Mr. Mercer, from the committee on roads and canals, upon the subject of survey or improvement of roads and canals, and the navigation of rivers, according to the terms of a standing rule of the house instituting said committee, and prescribing their duties, made a report at length, recommending the adoption of the following amendment of the 80th standing rule of the house, viz.

Resolved, That the standing rule of the house, instituting a committee on roads and canals, be amended so as to read as follows:

"1st. That the denomination of that committee shall hereafter be, 'The committee of public improvements.'

"2d. That the duties of that committee shall be to take into consideration all such petitions, resolutions, bills, and reports, or other matters or things relative to surveys and estimates for roads, canals, or for the construction or improvement of harbors and brackwaters; the improvement of the navigation of rivers, or the construction, improvement, or continued prosecution of any such public works, whether by the appropriation thereto of lands or money."

The consideration of this report, made on Saturday, was postponed until Monday, but was not then acted upon.

Mr. Hull, from the committee on the post office and post roads, reported against the cases of Silas Hale and the surety of John McClellan, late postmaster at Abingdon, Virginia.

Mr. Harlan, from the committee on private land claims, reported against the case of Elihu Hull Bay. The same committee was then discharged from the consideration of the several cases before that committee not reported on.

Mr. Everett laid before the house an estimate from the war department of the sums necessary to be appropriated for the service of the year 1838, for carrying into effect the treaties with various Indian tribes, ratified during the present session of congress, and at the extra session of 1837.

Mr. Halsted, from the committee on military affairs, reported against the case of John Caylerd.

Mr. Bronson, from the committee on the territories, reported a bill to authorize the people of Florida to form a constitution, and to provide for the admission of said state into the union. The bill was not acted upon.

Mr. Mercer, from the committee on roads and canals, made a report on the memorial of citizens of Indianapolis, in the state of Indiana, in relation to the Cumberland road, and the propriety of confining the attention of the chief superintendent of the same to the work required in one state; and the report was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. Johnson, of Maryland,

Resolved, That the select committee on the subject of a national foundry have leave to adjourn at the close of the present session, and resume their investigation and report at the next session of congress.

Mr. Lincoln, from the committee on the public buildings and grounds, reported a joint resolution authorizing an examination and payment of the claims of the workmen upon the public buildings; but it was not acted upon.

On motion of Mr. McKay,

Resolved, That the select committee to which was referred the memorial of F. P. Blair, on the subject of the printing done for congress, have leave to adjourn at the close of the present session of congress, and resume the investigation and report at the next session of congress.

Mr. Durlington from the committee of claims, made a report upon the case of Gamaliel E. Smith, concluding with the following resolution, which was read, and agreed to, viz.

"Resolved, That the solicitor of the treasury ascertain the value of the labor performed by the said Gamaliel E. Smith, under a contract made with the United States to build a light-house and dwelling-house on Mount Desert Rock, in the state of Maine, and the value of the materials furnished by him for said buildings, and used by him for that purpose, or, being prepared by him, used by his successor, under a contract for constructing said buildings. In making an estimate of the value of the labor performed, or the materials used, as aforesaid, regard is to be had to the price fixed by the parties in the contract for constructing said buildings, and the price for the labor done, and the materials delivered, to be in proportion to the labor and materials for completing the entire buildings."

Mr. Graham, of North Carolina, from the committee on Indian affairs, made an unfavorable report upon the petition of Samuel Douthet and Polly Douthet.

The house considered the resolutions of Mr. Robertson, of Virginia, of the 25th June ultimo; and the said resolutions, being modified, on motion of Mr. Cushing, were agreed to, and are as follows:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to communicate to this house, on the first day of the next session, all the information, not heretofore communicated, now in the possession of the executive, or which may be procured before that time, touching undue attempts or practices, if any, since May 29, 1830, to keep down the price of the public lands, or prevent purchases or entries thereof, at public or private sale, by force, threats, or fraud, and the measures taken, since the date aforesaid, to prevent, defeat, or punish such fraudulent practices and illegal entries upon the public lands.

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury prepare, and lay before this house, on the first day of the next session, a statement of all grants and donations of public lands, or of the proceeds of sales thereof, to the states by the United States, distinguishing the amount made to each, and the purposes and considerations upon which made.

Secondly. A statement of the whole quantity of public land now surveyed, and an estimate of the quantity unsurveyed, distinguishing each, and where situated; and accompanying the same with separate plans for dividing said lands, and the proceeds of sales thereof, among the states, according to their respective rights, and on such conditions as to time and manner of division and sale, graduation, reduction of price, and reservation of title in the United States, and final disposition, as may be best calculated to effect the objects of this resolution, in conformity with the rights of the several states and the United States relating to said land.

Thirdly. A plan for reorganizing the land system on such principles as will best secure the public against loss from illegal entries, frauds, &c., pointing out the defects or advantages of the present system, more particularly in reference to pre-emption and sales at public auction, and in general, suggesting such alterations as experience may have shown to be necessary.

The Speaker laid before the house a letter from the secretary of the treasury, transmitting the annual statements of the transactions and operations of the mint establishment of the United States for 1836, prepared in accordance with the act of 2d April, 1792.

Mr. Robertson, from the select committee appointed to select portions of the correspondence between the United States and Mexico, such as they should consider material to be printed, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerk of the house deliver to the public printer, to be printed for the use of the house, all the papers transmitted with the message of the president of the 4th instant, except evidences of private claims, papers of a character merely formal, and papers in the Spanish language, of which there are English translations.

On motion of Mr. Calhoun, of Massachusetts,

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before this house, during the first week of the next session of congress, all such communications, papers, documents, &c. now in the possession of the executive, or which can be obtained, as shall elucidate the origin and object of the Smithsonian bequest, and the origin, progress, and consummation of the process by which that bequest has been recovered, and whatever may be connected with the subject.

On motion of Mr. Howard,

Resolved, That the secretaries of state, the treasury, war, navy, and the postmaster general, be directed to report to this house, at an early period of the next session, what number of clerks have been employed, and how long they have been so employed, in their respective departments, in replying to the various calls for information which have been made by this house at the present session, and, if any extra clerks have been employed under such calls, how many, and at what expense.

The Speaker laid before the house a communication from the postmaster general, in compliance with the post office law of 1836, stating the expenses of that department for the year ending 30th June, 1837, as follows, viz.

Compensation to postmasters, -	$891,352 54
Transportation of the mail, -	1,996,727 43
Ship, steamboat, and way letters, -	28,188 16
Wrapping paper, -	20,172 14
Office furniture, -	5,472 77
Advertising, -	35,897 12
Mail bags, -	51,600 97
Blanks, -	29,679 29
Mail locks, keys, and stamps, -	8,798 28

Depredations and special agents, -	10,998 97
Clerks for offices, -	175,742 09
Miscellaneous, -	58,858 26
	$3,803,428 03

The Speaker laid before the house a communication from the secretary of the treasury, in obedience to a resolution of the house of the 11th instant, directing him to report a statement of the amount of money received and expended by the United States in each state in the years 1833, 1834, 1835, 1836, and 1837.

AFFAIRS OF MEXICO.

A slip from the office of the New Orleans Bulletin, dated July the 6th, furnishes some additional intelligence brought by the schr. Creole, at New Orleans. Capt. Page, of the U. S. sloop of war Natchez, writes, that before he left Tampico, (which was the 21st of June,) a letter had arrived from Mexico, stating that the French had presented another ultimatum to the Mexican government, declaring that if their claims were not met in twenty days counting from the 13th of June, (i. e. by the third of July,) they would, after that, make an attack on Vera Cruz and Tampico—how soon after was not known. He learned, further, from captain Tourme, commander of the French brig La Perouse, then blockading Tampico, that an order had come out from the French government, (a copy of which he produced) directing that all vessels, excepting men-of-war and British packets, should be made prizes of, immediately on their appearance on the Mexican coast. On hearing this, (a fact of which the people of Tampico were uninformed) "I despatched," he says, "several letters to the American consul and others at that place; and immediately got under weigh, intending to keep the track of vessels for Mexico, and give them warning, if not already informed, that the terms of the blockade were changed." This object I have kept constantly in view; designing to run on in the track till we strike the mouth of the Mississippi.

American citizens are treated with respect and attention in Mexico. We have carried five passengers this trip—making in all twenty that have been transported to and from Mexico in this ship, since the 10th May last.

Another letter says:—"I believe that the blockade will continue for three or four months longer, and if the affair is not regulated by the French ministers in Paris, referring it to the arbitration of other powers, the injury to foreigners in this country will be immense. The war, as I understand the Mexican character, will not be concluded by the taking of Vera Cruz, Tampico, Metamoros nor Jalapa. These people seem indifferent to consequences, so long as they support the resolution laid down upon the receipt of admiral Bazoches declaration.

Whether this internal revolution can so far alter the course of the government as to bring about a reconciliation, founded upon contrary principles, appears to me, to say the least, improbable, as the insurrections in Sonora and Aguas Calientes have been completely subdued by the government. In the mean time, the nation is without resources from its custom houses, its only revenue, and the people are beginning to feel the scarcity of foreign produce.

The French blockade of Mexico excites jealousy in England. The London Courier says:

England and the United States are equally interested in looking at this affair with some jealousy. The trickery by which the duke of Wellington was imposed on, when a French fleet was sent to Algiers to demand satisfaction for an affront offered to a consul, ought not to be forgotten. If the French obtain possession of a strong hold on the Mexican coast, it will be no easy matter to induce them to relinquish it; and with the half civilized Mexicans for their neighbors, there will never be a difficulty in finding pretexts for new demands of satisfaction. Mexico might then become as completely a French possession as Algiers is now, for there would be immediately a strong colonization party in the chambers.

From the New Orleans Bee of July 6.

The Mexican papers to the 8th June, received by us, contain, as usual, a large infusion of coarse diatribes against the French minister, whose departure for France we announced on the 12th of June. The passports of the consul, at Vera Cruz, had been abruptly sent to him, with orders to quit the country, for having, as it is said, greatly offended the Mexican authorities; it would, perhaps, be justice to say, for having defended his government against the ignoble attacks of the Mexican press. However this may be, the expulsion of M. Gloux, without previous explanation, can only be considered in the light of a new insult to a nation which only exacts what is right, and only claims satisfaction for past injuries.

The Mexican papers laud the condescension of the president of the United States to the skies, for having consented to submit to the arbitration of a third power, the differences between the two countries, and profit by this circumstance to draw insulting comparisons between this country and France. But they entirely forget that the president, by admitting the arbitration, signifies positively that he cannot suspend the action upon the decrees of congress until after a definite arrangement, whence it results that with regard to the United States, affairs continue in precisely the same state.

Different statements are given in the journals of the capital, concerning the insurrection at Sinaloa, at the head of which is Urrea, who has assumed the title of protector; the revolt at St. Louis de Potosi seems to have been of greater importance than was anticipated, and at Aguas Calientes a pronouncement appeared to have excited the more alarm, as the rebels were marching towards Zacatlan, where they hoped to stir up the populace, who were already disposed to take part with them.

From these demonstrations we conclude that but little tranquillity prevails in the country; but that at the same time nothing very decisive has yet occurred. If, however, the news from Yucatan, which came to us by the north, be confirmed; and if the government troops have been compelled to abandon Merida, we may with justice infer the ultimate triumph of the federal party. The report which had gone forth, that Santa Anna had been appointed to the government of Vera Cruz, was without foundation.

General Risco still commands at that port, and unless president Bustamante has abandoned all prudence, he will not recall to political eminence a man like Santa Anna, whose perfidy and faithlessness have injured this country as much as Bustamante himself. From time alone can any improvements in the civil and military policy of Mexico be expected. The departure of baron Defaudis evinces a determination to prolong the blockade. The large number of vessels at the isle of Sacrificios proves that the severity of the blockade is increasing; but we do not anticipate a speedy bombardment. It is the ultima ratio, and will only be employed when all other means have proven unavailing.

CHRONICLE.

Governor Wolf is on a visit to Bedford springs.

On the 27th June the mercury stood at 103 in the shade at New Orleans.

Dr. Ruschenberger, the American traveller, has left New York for England.

The patriots of Canada, were by the latest accounts collecting in numerous parties on the borders of Michigan, preparatory to another demonstration upon the royalists.

The new ship Sea, Fisher, from Baltimore, has arrived at City Point, to take a cargo of cotton and tobacco for Liverpool. It is believed the Sea is the largest merchant vessel (above 830 tons) that ever floated in the upper waters of James river.

The whigs of Washington county (Pa.) have nominated Joseph Lawrence, for congress, in place of Mr. McKennan, who declines a re-election.

Large collections. During the late anniversary of the Wesleyan missionary society, held in London, upwards of thirty thousand dollars were collected. A sum unprecedented at any charitable festival. The amount was in the following sums, in sterling money:

April 25—Public meeting at Great Queen street -	£51.5.3
27—Annual sermons in the London chapel -	714.8.0
30—Collection at Exeter hall -	260.1.6
Donations and new subscriptions, do -	1,898.4.3
An aged friend, do -	3,000.0.0
Francis Riggall, esq., do -	1,000.0.0
	£6,933.19.0

Moral effects of marriage. The statistics of the eastern penitentiary of Pennsylvania, are curious in the great inequality, which they exhibit between married and unmarried convicts. Of the one hundred and sixty prisoners received the last year, one hundred and ten were unmarried. Six were widowers, and forty-five only were married. I have never seen a stronger illustration of the moral influence of marriage. It is too late to eulogize the marriage institution, after the world's experience of its ameliorating influence upon the human condition for six thousand years. But we may take the instance as an evidence of its effects, in promoting good habits, morality and virtue amongst the lowest classes of society.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 22.—VOL. IV.]

WASHINGTON CITY, JULY 28, 1838.

[VOL. LIV.—WHOLE No. 1,400.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

¶ The steam-ship Royal William, arrived at New York on Tuesday evening last, in about eighteen and a half days from Liverpool. She brought advices from London to the 4th, and Liverpool to the 5th of July, including an account of the coronation of queen Victoria, which took place on the 28th of June. See page 350.

¶ A public dinner was given to Mr. Webster by the citizens of Boston on Tuesday last, on which occasion he delivered an address in his usual eloquent manner. Among the guests were Messrs. Premias, of Miss., and Menefee, of Ky., both of whom addressed the company in reply to complimentary toasts. We will give some account of the proceedings in our next.

¶ The hon. William Allen, of Ohio, at the earnest invitation of his political friends, attended a meeting at the "Third street House" in Philadelphia on Monday evening last, and addressed the assembly which filled the large saloon. The Pennsylvanian says—"He rapidly reviewed the political contest that has been raging in the republic for the last six years, exposing the enemies of popular liberty in all the various disguises which they have assumed, and which they now wear, and pointed out the struggles yet to come, expressing his firm reliance in the virtue of the people, for the continued defeat of their indefatigable and insidious foes. The effect of this address was such as we have rarely seen equalled. The speaker was frequently interrupted by bursts of prolonged and enthusiastic applause; and the cheering, when he concluded, forcibly told the impression he had made."

BANKS, CURRENCY, &c. It will be seen by the proceedings of the bank convention, inserted below, that the banks of the states of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri have resolved to resume specie payments on the 13th of next month. Their example will, no doubt, be imitated by all the solvent banks in the country, and thus the people will be relieved of the evils of an irredeemable paper currency. Sincerely do we congratulate our friends upon the prospects which are now opened to industry and enterprise; for we feel assured that the recuperative energies of the country will speedily efface all traces of the ruin and desolation with which it has been visited, and that the general prosperity will be placed on such a basis that none will hereafter dare to disturb it.

Bank convention. The following is the official report of the proceedings of the bank convention held in Philadelphia on Monday last:

Philadelphia, July 23d, 1838.

At a convention of delegates from the banks of Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and Missouri, held this day at the bank of Pennsylvania, in the city of Philadelphia, John B. Morris, esq., of Baltimore, was appointed president, and Elihu Chauncey, of Philadelphia, secretary.

The following communication from the committee of banks in the city and county of Philadelphia, was read:

"The undersigned, a committee authorized by the associated banks of the city and county of Philadelphia, to invite the banks of Boston, Providence, Baltimore, and Richmond, and such others as the time admits of, to meet the banks of Philadelphia, in convention in this city, on Monday the 3d July instant, to consult upon the measures to be adopted for an early and simultaneous resumption of specie payments,

Report, That in compliance with the foregoing instructions, a copy of the resolutions, and an invitation to meet this convention were immediately transmitted to the cities enumerated above, to all the banks of Pennsylvania, to Connecticut, to Delaware, to Charleston, and to several of the western states, from whom communications had been received on a former occasion. Answers having been received from Boston, Providence, Norwich, Baltimore, Winchester, Richmond, Lexington, Ky., Pittsburgh, and other parts of Pennsylvania, are hereto annexed. From this correspondence will be seen, that all the banks consulted, have concurred in the opinion that their respective institutions, whether actually represented in this convention or not, will cordially co-operate with the banks of Philadelphia, and assent to such period as shall be selected by the convention for the resumption of specie payments.

VOL. LIV.—No. 22.

(Signed)

THOMAS DUNLAP,
WM. D. LEWIS,
H. F. HOLLINGSHEAD,
CHARLES S. BOKER,
ELIHU CHAUNCEY,

Committee.

The communications from banks in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Virginia, and Kentucky, referred to in the above report, were read; and the convention decided that the letters from the banks of those states to the chairman of the above committee, are sufficient to authorize him to vote in their behalf on the questions which shall come before this convention.

On motion made and seconded, it was decided that the vote on all questions in this convention shall be taken by states, each state having one vote.

The following resolution was offered by Joseph Baily, esq., president of the Bank of Delaware, and seconded by Mr. Chauncey of Philadelphia:

Resolved, That the banks represented in this convention, will resume specie payments on the 13th day of August next, and recommend that day for the resumption by the banks generally.

This resolution being under consideration, Mr. Evans, of Baltimore, moved that the word "thirteenth" be stricken out, and the word "ninth" inserted in its place. The motion being seconded by J. Smith, esq., president of the State Bank of Missouri, the vote was taken on striking out, and decided in the negative. Those voting for the motion were Maryland and Missouri, 2; and those voting against it were Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Kentucky, 7.

The question being then taken on the resolution, as offered by Mr. Baily, it was unanimously adopted.

On motion it was ordered, that the proceedings of this convention be published, and communicated to the banks generally throughout the United States.

Attest, JOHN B. MORRIS, President.

ELIHU CHAUNCEY, Secretary.

ELISHA WHITTLESEY, OF OHIO. It is stated in the Cincinnati (O.) Evening Post, that Mr. Whittlesey has not only refused to be a candidate for re-election, but has resigned his seat in the present congress. This announcement will, no doubt, be received with pain and regret throughout the whole country; for all acquainted with the proceedings of congress, know that Mr. W. was one of the most industrious and indefatigable members of that body, and that, as chairman of the committee of claims, he has conferred lasting benefits upon the country in preventing the payment of unjust demands upon the government, and cheered many a drooping heart by the zeal and vigour with which he pressed the payment of those which were just. Notwithstanding the vast labor he bestowed upon the various and intricate duties which devolved upon him in the committee room, he was always punctual in the discharge of his duties in the house, and fully merited the confidence that was reposed in him by men of all parties by his fair and honorable conduct; and we hazard nothing in saying, that there is not another member of that body whose loss will be so severely felt or so much regretted. Nothing, we are satisfied, but the most imperious obligations of private duty have impelled Mr. W. to this step; and while we regret the circumstances which have rendered it necessary, we will heartily rejoice if he finds in the quiet pursuits of private life, that happiness and prosperity which his public services so richly merit.

RECEPTION OF THE PRESIDENT. The Norfolk Herald of Wednesday has the following notice of president Van Buren's reception at Old Point Comfort and Norfolk:

The president of the United States landed at Old Point Comfort yesterday morning from the steamboat Columbia, accompanied by the hon. J. R. Poinsett, secretary of war; the hon. J. K. Paulding, secretary of the navy; and his sons major Van Buren and Mr. Smith Van Buren. On landing, the president and suite were conducted to the quarters of captain Huger, where accommodations had been prepared for them, and where, after examining the fortifications, the president received the visits of the numerous visitors to the Point until one o'clock. At that hour he was waited on by a joint committee of the court and common council of Norfolk, deputed to invite him to visit the borough and tender him its hospitality. The invitation was accepted, and the president with his suite, attended by the committee came up in the evening, in the steamboat Old Dominion. The president and his cortege landed, about sunset, at the foot of Market square, where the volunteer companies of the borough were drawn up in line to receive them, and on their landing escorted them to French's hotel, where apartments had been prepared for them by the direction of the committee.

The president departed himself most gracefully, and received all who were introduced to him, with a winning ease and affability which could not but inspire them with admiration of his character as the high dignitary and the accomplished gentleman. He will only remain here to-day, as he has made arrangements to leave to-morrow morning in the steamboat Thomas Jefferson for Richmond, whence he will proceed to the White Sulphur Springs. He will be "at home," to those who may call on him from half past eight till ten o'clock, this forenoon, at which latter hour he will visit the navy yard, dry dock, &c. until one, when he will receive the attentions of the citizens of Portsmouth; after which he will return to French's to dinner.

BRAZILIAN MINISTER. St. Deremborgador E. F. Franca, minister from Brazil, has arrived at Washington and been presented to the president.

The Globe says: "It gives us pleasure to state that M. Cavalcanti d'Albuquerque, late chargé d'affaires of the empire of Brazil in the United States, who has discharged his official duties in this country satisfactorily to our government, has received a new proof of the confidence of his own, in his appointment as chargé d'affaires of Brazil to her majesty the queen of Spain.

Mr. C. paid on Tuesday his farewell visit to the secretary of state, having the evening before Mr. Franca's presentation, taken leave of the president of the United States."

FROM BRAZIL. Letters from Rio Janeiro to the 1st of June, with the sight of which we have been favored, mention the receipt of advices from Rio Grande to May 22d, confirming the total defeat of the government troops by the insurgents of that province, with a loss of 2,000 men. Only a few cavalry and three generals escaped. The rebels were marching towards Rio Grande, and there was no hope of the government being able to withstand them. The province (Rio Grande) was considered as lost to Brazil. It is the southernmost province of Brazil, and borders on the Oriental republic, of which Montevideo is the capital.

[N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

MURDER OF A JUDGE. The Louisville Herald states on the authority of a gentleman direct from St. Louis, that judge Dougherty, of the city and county court of St. Louis, was murdered on Saturday, 14th instant, about a mile below that city, by some person unknown. The judge was on his way from a bridge, in the building of which he was concerned. He was killed by a discharge of buck-shot, which lodged in the side of his head, penetrating the brain. The greatest excitement prevailed in that city in consequence of it, and a circular had been issued calling on the citizens to aid in the search for the murderer. A great many accordingly turned out and were scouring the country in every direction. One individual had been arrested and lodged in jail on suspicion.

MAINE. The conservatives of this state have nominated Mr. F. O. J. Smith, the present member of congress from the Cumberland district, now in Europe, for governor. There are now three candidates in the field.

NORTH CAROLINA ELECTION. The election in North Carolina for governor and members of the state legislature commenced on Thursday last, when ten counties voted.

TRADE ON THE CANALS. From the Pittsburg Gazette. The trade of the Ohio state canal continues steadily to increase. During the month of June just past there arrived at Cleveland, by way of the canal, 34,218,616 lbs. of produce, of which the following articles constituted the principal part:

190,134 bushels	Wheat,
22,462 do	Corn,
2,489 do	Oats,
71,464 barrels	Flour,
9,506 do	Pork,
2,314 do	Whiskey,
23,731 pounds	Butter,
409,716 do	Lard,
772,483 do	Bacon,
69 hhds.	Tobacco.

Of property on which toll is charged by weight, there were cleared from Cleveland, by way of the canal, during the past month, 4,012,162 lbs. During the corresponding month last year, there were cleared 3,455,983 lbs.

The Pennsylvania canal commissioners are making extraordinary efforts to repair the damages sustained by the public works on the Juniata. A thousand laborers will be engaged in the course of the present week.

The amount of tolls received on the state works from the 1st November to the 2d instant, was $656,331.76.

New York Canals. We learn from the Albany Argus that the tolls collected on the New York state canals for the 4th week in June, amount to the sum of $47,123.90—exceeding the receipts for the corresponding week in 1837, by the sum of $15,034.99. The tolls for the whole month of June exceed the collections in the same month in 1837, by about 37 per cent.

From the opening of navigation to the close of June, there has been received for canal tolls the sum of $516,081.02. This exceeds the collections up to the same time in 1837, by the sum of $119,966.87, and is only about $2,000 less than the collections to that time in 1836.

The quantity of merchandise cleared from Albany and Troy from the opening of navigation to the close of June for the present and the two preceding years, has been as follows, viz:

	1836.	1837.	1838.
Mer. cleared	37,636 tons.	32,169 tons.	37,392 tons.
This shows an increase, comparing this year with last, of 5,223 tons of merchandise, equal to 16 per cent. Besides the merchandise cleared on the canals, they have passed over the rail road this season 1,526 tons.

The quantity of flour and wheat arriving at tide water up to June 30, for three years, is as follows, viz:

	1836.	1837.	1838.
Barrels flour,	271,070	168,660	276,936
Do wheat	143,358	89,477	194,228

The increase of flour and wheat this year over last, equal to 139,216 barrels of flour, or about 79 per cent.

PRODUCE TRADE OF CLEVELAND IN ELEVEN WEEKS. The Herald states that the earliest receipts of produce this season, at that port, by the Ohio canal, were on the 18th of April, and the quantities received from that date until the 30th of June, embracing a period of less than eleven weeks, were as follows:

Wheat,	457,460 bush. val. at $1.25	$571,825
Corn,	34,145 do do	65
Oats,	7,194 do do	40
Flour,	144,124 bbls. do	6.75
Pork,	26,146 do do	14.00
Whiskey,	5,292 do do	13.00
Bacon,	1,288,162 lbs. do	09
Lard,	890,473 do do	08
Butter,	73,346 do do	12½

$2,201,537

It will be seen that we have affixed an average valuation to each of the descriptions of produce, and that the aggregate value is two millions, two hundred and one thousand, five hundred and thirty-seven dollars!

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH. Miss Mary Clark, daughter of captain Dyer Clark, of Medway, and one of the school teachers in that town, was passing through a pasture containing a number of young cattle, on her way from her school. She was suddenly pursued and attacked with great fury, by a three year old heifer, which soon overtook, and struck her to the ground with her horns. Her screams brought no one to her relief, and the enraged animal stood as in triumph over its prostrate victim endeavoring to gore her. The horns of the furious creature caught in her dress, and she was alternately thrown into the air, and dashed upon the earth with the greatest violence. Her clothes were literally torn in fragments from her body—and her books, maps, and other articles which she was carrying home, were shivered and scattered to the winds. The wild and fiery eye-balls of the infuriated beast were staring full in her face, preparatory to a more dreadful attack, but still none heard her cry, none came to her rescue, and to use her own significant language, she "thought her hour had come and she commended her soul to God, and believed she must die there alone."

But actuated by that spirit of true female heroism, which the hour of imminent peril will often develop, she resolved to make one effort more, and suddenly springing to her feet, she seized her deadly foe by the horns. The animal immediately plunged at her with all its might, but she held her firm grasp upon the horns, and making what defence she could with her feet, ran backwards till she came to a stone wall, and here in the unequal strife, a kind Providence, she hardly knows how, enabled her to clear the wall and escape—covered with wounds, and blood, and dust—to the nearest house. A physician was called, every attention was paid to her by the kind neighbors, and that evening she was removed to her father's dwelling, and is in a fair way to recover.

The young lady had on a red dress and a red shawl. It is well known that some cattle of peculiar temperament, are attracted and enraged by appearances of this kind, and this sad accident should be a warning to others.

[Boston Advertiser.]

STATUE OF WASHINGTON. The following, from the Cooperstown Freeman's Journal, gives the only definite information we recollect to have seen of the progress making by Greenough, the sculptor, with the statue of Washington, ordered by congress. It will be seen that the figure has been modelled, but that the delay has been mainly owing to the difficulty of procuring, in an entire block, the marble which is to perpetuate the artist's design—weighing as it does in the rough, some sixty tons.

[Albany Argus.]

"Mr. Fennimore Cooper has a letter from Mr. Greenough the sculptor, of a date as late as May 6th, 1838, in which that gentleman, speaking of the statue for the rotunda of the capitol, says—"The statue of Washington, after cruel delays, from cholera, quarantines and the state of the roads, is now in full progress. The marble promises well, and we are near the surface. The block weighed 130,000 lbs. when we commenced on it. It is fast losing its chips." In another part of the same letter the artist says, 'I have just finished Venus Victrix, and am now preparing a statue from the Paradise Lost; Abdiel as described at the close of the Fifth Book.'

"As the art of the statuary is so little understood in this country, it may be well to explain why a statue that was ordered four years since, should now be just commenced in the marble. The figure is first modelled in clay, by the artist himself. In this state it receives its general form with all that is intellectual, or its attitude and expression. A good artist frequently consumes years on a single work, while in the clay. When modelled as it is called, the whole is covered with plaster of Paris, the clay is dug out, and a firm mould is left, with the concave impression of the figure. Fresh plaster is introduced after oiling the inner surface, when the concave mould is broken, a regular statue in plaster remains. This is done to produce a statue in a firm substance like plaster, instead of leaving it in the clay, which requires to be constantly moistened to prevent its falling to pieces. The work in the marble now commences with measurements taken from the plaster cast. When ordinary workmen have wrought the stone down to what Mr. Greenough calls "the surface," the artist takes it in hand again, and gives those finishing touches with the chisel, that produce the appearance of flesh, muscles and bones. This finishing forms the merit of the detail, as the ideal, or the expression constitutes the intellectual character of a work of this sort."

LETTER FROM MR. DUNCAN OF OHIO.

Washington, May 30, 1838.

To the editor of the Western Courier:

Sir: A friend of mine has just furnished me with a number of your useful and patriotic paper by which I find that some of the federal bank editors, in your portion of the state, have made some use of my name for exercising my franking privilege, to aid the distribution of political documents, in districts other than that which I immediately represent.

Now, be it known, that the notice thus taken of the aforesaid, is for the purpose of inciting all good democrats in the state of Ohio, in whatever congressional district they may reside, to forward me their names, county of residence, and post office, and I will furnish them, and each of them, with sound whole-hog Jackson-Van Buren anti-bank democratic documents, by virtue of my franking privilege, while I enjoy it, and so far as documents come to my hand—holding myself responsible for all consequences resulting from the whinnings and snarlings of bank spaniels, and federal tools of the whole editorial corps.

Respectfully,

A. DUNCAN.

MISSISSIPPI ELECTION—OFFICIAL.

Counties.	Whig. Prentiss.	Word.	Claiborne.	Ad. Davis.
Adams,	698	665	299	281
Amite,	835	823	265	266
Atala,	145	142	172	170
Bolivar,	40	40	8	8
Carroll,	500	488	368	362
Copiah,	280	286	312	293
Covington,	48	82	192	181
Claiborne,	410	378	350	320
Choctaw,	154	143	277	261
Chickasaw,	45	43	82	81
Coahoma,	34	32	58	56
Clarke,	53	29	114	98
De Soto,	141	138	118	115
Franklin,	109	118	147	140
Green,	71	63	84	28
Hinds,	1107	1060	403	409
Holmes,	357	345	235	230
Hancock,	129	127	22	21
Itawamba,	27	22	194	197
Jackson,	10	8	71	59
Jefferson,	425	417	121	120
Jasper,	159	121	177	148
Jones,	22	17	114	111
Kenner,	209	184	370	363
Lauderdale,	36	28	228	220
Leake,	150	148	162	155
Lowndes,	604	569	532	494
Lawrence,	81	76	432	426
Lafayette,	247	242	277	273
Marion,	63	61	139	136
Monroe,	327	280	410	403
Madison,	621	603	270	257
Marshall,	571	554	720	707
Noxubee,	351	336	406	396
Newton,	65	53	137	135
Neshoba,	32	19	121	113
Ottobeha,	111	104	155	151
Perry,	60	60	30	31
Pike,	138	127	226	220
Ponola,	188	180	140	129
Pontotoc,	178	173	149	137
Rankin,	277	265	228	222
Smith,	39	24	109	96
Scott,	41	39	104	100
Simpson,	72	64	155	148
Tunica,	11	9	34	34
Tallahatchie,	135	126	99	97
Tishomingo,	67	61	272	262
Tippah,	204	213	327	317
Wayne,	32	16	45	37
Washington,	87	86	29	28
Wilkinson,	518	511	123	128
Winston,	126	121	273	271
Warren,	778	760	264	267
Yalobusha,	506	483	466	447
Yazoo,	522	509	202	210
	12,772	12,077	11,776	11,346

MUNIFICENT BEQUESTS. The Register of wills has published a list of the charitable bequests of the late Mr. Kohne, formerly of Charleston, S. C. but at the time of his death and many years previous a resident of the city and county. The amount bequeathed is about seven hundred and thirty thousand dollars. The Protestant Episcopal church, of which Mr. Kohne was a member, is the principal object of his bounty, in bequests of at least $163,000, to be variously applied. There are various bequests, of which the principal are, $60,000 to the orphan asylum, $100,000 to the house of refuge, $20,000 to the deaf and dumb institution, $10,000 to the dispensary at Philadelphia, and several large sums to benevolent societies in Charleston. The remainder, estimated at $300,000, he devises to "such charitable institutions in Pennsylvania and South Carolina, as his executors, or the survivor of them, shall deem most beneficial to mankind, and so that part of the colored population in each of the said states of Pennsylvania and South Carolina shall partake of the benefits thereof. Well may the pious Episcopalian repeat the oft-repeated declaration of good old Job: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." [Phila. National Gazette.]

SOUTH CAROLINA. The following resolutions were passed by the legislature of South Carolina at its recent session:

At a general assembly begun and holden at Columbia, on Monday the twenty-eighth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, and from thence continued by divers adjournments, to the first day of June, in the same year, and in the sixty-second year of the sovereignty and independence of the United States of America.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this legislature, the resolutions adopted at the last session, recommending the separation of the government from banks, and the eventual collection and disbursement of the public moneys of the United States in the constitutional currency, have received the approbation of the people of this state.

2. Resolved, That in the opinion of this legislature, the policy indicated by those resolutions is essential to the best interests of the country; and that any public servant who refuses to promote the same, pursues a course injurious to the welfare and prosperity of the state.

3. Resolved, That the presiding officers of this legislature, be requested to transmit copies of these resolutions to the senators and representatives of this state, in congress of the United States.

In the house of representatives, 31st May, 1838.

Resolved, That the house do agree to the resolutions. Ordered, That they be sent to the senate for concurrence.

By order: T. W. GLOVER, C. H. R.

In senate, 31st May, 1838.

Resolved, That the senate do concur in the resolutions. Ordered, That they be returned to the house of representatives.

By order: JACOB WARLEY, C. S.

THE FOOTSTEPS OF THE PILGRIMS. Among the earliest New England religious observances, were the thanksgiving festivals, and the annual days of fasting. It will be seen by the annexed proclamation, issued in March last by governor Matthias, at Bassa Cove, that the example of the infant colonies of New England has been copied by the infant colonies of western Africa. May the land of the latter be blessed as the former has been:

Proclamation for thanksgiving. The following is a copy of the proclamation issued by the governor of Bassa Cove and Edina, for thanksgiving on the 8th day of March last. We have copied it from the colonial journal kept by the governor—the Colonization Herald.

"The past year has been distinguished for mercies of no ordinary character. The public health has been good. Harmony and peace have prevailed among us. We have been preserved from famine and war. The chiefs of the neighboring tribes respect us, and court our alliance. The seasons have been fruitful.

At no period of the existence of the colonies has the prospect of independence by means of agricultural pursuits been more flattering. Schools are in successful operation, knowledge is increasing, the rights of conscience and the protection of the laws have been enjoyed by all. In a word the colonies, through the divine blessing, are fast rising from infancy to the strength, firmness, independence and self-government of manhood.

In view of these and other blessings, it is our duty to acknowledge the hand of God, whence we derive them, and to return him thanks, and to beg of him a continuation of his blessings. I do therefore, with the advice of the council, appoint Thursday, the 8th of March, as a day of public thanksgiving, and respectfully recommend the good people in this commonwealth to observe it as usual.

Given under my hand, at my office in Bassa Cove, this 26th day of February, 1838.

JOHN J. MATTHIAS."

MORE AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES—ASIATIC ORIGIN OF THE NORTHERN INDIANS. At Sagadahoc, on the Kennebec (Maine,) eleven Indian graves have been found—some of the skeletons 7 feet high—others sitting. On the head of one is a copper kettle; also in the graves, stone arrow heads, and beads, nearly all indicating an existence subsequent to the inroads of the whites upon this continent. In the tribes of the extreme of our north we thus see the Asiatic extraction marked by the grave relics carried with the dead on the voyage to that other world "from whose bourne no traveller returns." The thought is pleasing to the dying leaving this existence, and it is clearly traceable in all that pageantry of ceremony which the Egyptians observed—for they were a nation whose costly mauls, and cemeteries, and embalmments, and sarcophagi, and catacombs, seemed to indicate that their thoughts were more with the dead than the living—more immortal than earthly—resting in fixed and steadfast faith on the future, and noting time only by its funeral monuments as the true landmarks; as even in the midst of their feasts the corpse and its ceremonies were there to speed the revelry of the banquet, and every act of life, public or private, seemed ever tinged with the dominant idea that soothed and shaded the warm ambition of that heated clime with a subdued philosophy that could look on the inevitable destiny of all with composure, and even welcome it with joy. The spirits of the dead are beautifully painted on the papyrus found in the coffins, under the character of reapers, harvesting with the sickle of eternity the fruits of the good actions in this life; an allegory full of poetry and sublimity. [N. Y. Star.

"HAIL COLUMBIA." We present our readers with an American anecdote, from the pen of a valued correspondent, respecting the composition of 'Hail Columbia,' by judge Hopkinson, which will be new to most of our subscribers. [Waldie's Journal of Belles Lettres.

Mr. Editor: Though you are aware that the honorable judge Hopkinson is the author of 'Hail Columbia,' you may not know the circumstances under which it was written. I have heard the history of the song more than once, and hope it may find a place of record in some corner of your journal, and be rescued from oblivion.

In the year 1798 when patriotic feeling pervaded the country, and when there were several parties in the field, Mr. Fox, a young player, who was more admired for his vocal than histrionic powers, called one morning upon his friend Mr. H., and, after stating that the following evening had been appointed for his benefit, and expressing great fear for the result, as not a single box had been taken, begged his friend to do something in his behalf.

"If," said Fox "you will write me some patriotic verses to the tune of the President's March, I feel sure of a full house. Several of the people about the theatre have attempted it; but they have come to the conclusion that it cannot be done, yet I think you may succeed." Mr. H. consented to make a trial, and requested Fox to call in the evening to judge of the result.

Mr. Hopkinson retired to his study, and in a short time wrote the first verse and chorus, which were submitted to Mrs. Hopkinson, who sung them to a piano accompaniment, and proved the measure and music to be compatible and in keeping. In this way the second and other verses were written, and when Fox returned in the evening, he received with delight the song as it now stands. The following morning small handbills and placards announced that Mr. Fox would sing a new patriotic song, &c.

The theatre was crowded; the song was sung, and received with rapture; it was repeated eight times and again encored, and when sung the ninth time, the whole audience stood up and joined in the chorus. Night after night 'Hail Columbia' cheered the visitors of the theatre, and in a very few days it was the universal song of the boys in the streets from one end of the city to the other. Nor was the distinguished author of this truly national song—a song which met the entire approbation of all parties of the day—forgotten. The street in which he resided was on the occasion crowded, and 'Hail Columbia' broke on the stillness of midnight from five hundred patriotic voices.

IOWA AND WISCONSIN. It appears by a recent census that the new territory of Iowa has a population of 29,839. Wisconsin territory, since the dismemberment of Iowa, contains 18,149 inhabitants, or did a month or two ago. Even by this time, the population of both these territories has increased considerably, and before the next general census is taken, both will be entitled to admission into the union.

The Racine Argus gives an enthusiastic description of the country composing the present territory of Wisconsin, and especially that in the neighborhood of Racine, bordering Lake Michigan.

The whole of Racine county, (it says,) excepting a tract upon the lake, is undulating prairie and timber, having a soil from one to two feet deep, with a clay sub-stratum. In Walworth and Rock the prairie is more level, having about the same depth of soil with a sandy sub-stratum. There is but a very little stone except upon the rivers, and that is lime-stone. The timber is composed principally of burr oak, white oak, black walnut, hickory, and sugar maple.

All kinds of crops which may be raised in a northern latitude may be cultivated with success. There was a great deal of wheat sown last fall, and it is doing remarkably well. Indeed, as fine pieces of wheat and corn can be shown here as in any country in the world. Oats, rye, barley, buckwheat, peas and beans, have been very productive. But the root cultivation, owing to the depth and newness of the soil, has been most astonishing. Mr. Pettibone, of Prairie Village, a man of credibility, said that he raised a turnip last year, which was larger than a peck measure. Cows give a great quantity of rich milk, and cattle of all kinds, owing to the great range of pasturage on the prairie, soon become very fat, and furnish the most tender and delicious beef. We hesitate not to say, that as a stock country it is unrivalled. The greatest portion of this tract is supplied with timber, and is well watered, and I do not believe there is a section in the whole which is waste land, and which will not be ultimately inhabited.

Our climate, as to heat and cold, is a little milder than that of the same latitude at the east, we being in about 42 degrees. Our atmosphere is much purer, having fewer rainy or cloudy days, and being always much clearer. Consequently our horizon appears more distant, the sky more lofty, and the heavenly bodies larger and more brilliant. An object the size of an ox-team can be seen eight miles with the naked eye. No case of fever and ague, bilious fever, or of any epidemic, has ever originated in this country since its first settlement. No country can be more healthy.

Gilbert Knapp was the first white settler in this section of the country. He settled in this place in November, 1834. A few came in the following winter, and many more the next spring. The first crops that were raised in this country, were raised in 1835. There are several farmers now who have over 150 acres, and more than twenty who have over 100 acres under cultivation. The choicest breeds of sheep, hogs, horses, and cattle, have been imported here from the state of New York, and other places. The best seeds and kinds of grain have been introduced. Fruit trees of all kinds have been brought in and transplanted, and it is confidently believed to be a good fruit country. We have now over 3,500 inhabitants.

LAW CASES.

Court of Common Pleas. Thursday.—Before judge Ingraham.

Mordecai Meyers, vs. Thomas Powell et al.—This was an action brought against the defendants, owners of the steamboat Highlander, to recover the value of a trunk and contents worth $127, the property of the plaintiff's son, a minor.

It appeared from the evidence, that in the early part of November last, the plaintiff's son came down from Newburg to this city in the Highlander, and arrived here at 10 o'clock in the evening. Having his trunk on board and not wishing to stay himself he inquired of the captain if it would be safe until morning, and he received an affirmative reply—the captain stating that a watch was kept on board every night for the protection of the property on board the boat. Satisfied with this assurance, the trunk was left on board till the next morning, and the plaintiff's son left the boat. In the morning when he called for his trunk, he was informed that it had been delivered to a black man, who brought an order for it, signed by one Mr. Myers, which order however turned out to be a forgery. The captain and the owner of the trunk then started in search of the negro who had taken the trunk, and they succeeded in finding him in the course of a few hours. He was taken to the police office, but it being clearly proved that he had been made the tool of some rogue, he was discharged, but nothing has ever since been heard of the trunk or contents, and the present action was instituted against the defendants to recover the value.

The above facts were fully proved by the plaintiff's son, as was the value of the contents of the trunk, and the fact of the delivery to the negro was admitted by the defendants.

On the part of the defendants, it was contended that they could not in the present instance be sued as common carriers, inasmuch as common carriers were only liable for the safe delivery of the goods at the place of destination. This it was contended had been done in the present case, as they had only contracted to bring the trunk to this city, and no compensation had been paid to the captain for keeping it one night in safety. The only evidence adduced by the defendants, was that of the negro who had taken the trunk, and he stated that he received the order from a person unknown to him, to whom he took the trunk. He was met in Murray street and paid for carrying it, and the person who had given the order, had shouldered it himself and went off.

The court charged that in the present case the main question to be considered was as to the delivery of the trunk here, and if they believed that it had been delivered, the defendants were entitled to a verdict. Proprietors of steamboats, &c., were liable as common carriers for any thing entrusted to their charge, and they were bound to deliver it safely. In this case the captain remained in possession of the trunk, and the rule is that a carrier is bound to retain goods in safety and to protect them even in case of the inability or refusal of the owner to call for them immediately. Applying this rule to the present case, there had been no delivery, for the captain assumed the charge of the goods until called for by the plaintiff's son. If the jury thought that the goods had been delivered to the right owner, their verdict would be for the defendants, and if not, they would find a verdict for the plaintiff, and estimate the value of the trunk and contents, according to the testimony. Verdict for plaintiff, $100 and costs. [N. Y. Cour. & Eng.

Supreme judicial court. Adjourned law term, June. W. J. Loring vs. The Neptune Insurance company.

This was an action on a policy of insurance on the cargo on board the bark Stag, from Cuba to Hamburg. The plaintiff was part owner of the vessel with J. A. Cunningham, and each had a separate invoice of 350 boxes sugar. The vessel met with bad weather, was obliged to cut away some of her equipments and throw overboard a part of her cargo, and she put into Bermuda. It was found at Bermuda that 88 boxes of plaintiff's sugars were damaged more than 50 per cent. of their value. A general average adjustment was made at Hamburg, by Mr. Oldermann, the despatcheur, who is alone authorized by the law of that place to execute this duty. Among the contributory interests brought into the adjustment, were the 140 boxes of sugars above mentioned, at full invoice cost. The consignee of the vessel, and of the plaintiff's part of the cargo, settled the general average on this basis. The defendants paid plaintiff the value of the sugars which were totally lost, and sixty per cent. of the value of the decayed parcel. The plaintiff claimed to recover the amount assessed on him as owner of the said 140 boxes which the defendants resisted.

This case was argued by C. G. and F. C. Loring for the plaintiff, who contended that a general average adjustment, made in the port of destination, fairly and according to the law of that place, was conclusive on all parties interested in the ship, cargo and freight; and that this adjustment was made in that manner. To prove which they produced the depositions of the despatcheur, the consignee, and Mr. Gossler, an eminent lawyer of Harrisburg; and they contended further, that the plaintiff was entitled by law to recover from the defendants the sum he had lost by such assessment and they cited numerous authorities, both English and American in support of their principles.

C. P. Curtis, esq. on behalf of the defendants, argued, that the assessment on the plaintiff for property which was not saved by the sacrifice, was against common justice—and that the clearest evidence ought to be produced that it was made pursuant to the law of the place; he contrasted the testimony of Dr. Gossler, who had no interest in the case, with that of the despatcheur who made up the adjustment, and the consignee who paid the money, and might be called upon to repay it, if the plaintiff did not recover it here. But admitting the general principle, that parties are bound by a general average adjustment, made at the port of destination, conformably to the established laws of that place, and admitting (for the purpose of argument) that this adjustment was so made, the learned counsel argued, that the law was founded in a mistake or disregard of the common principles of justice, and ought not to be recognised as binding in our courts. General average contribution was based on the principle of benefit received by the contributor from the jettison or expenditure or other sacrifice made for the common good, and that property which was finally lost never ought and did not contribute to the payment of general average, except that which was the subject of jettison or sacrifice;—thus it was paid for by the other contributory interests, and was itself brought into the adjustment as one of those interests. If it were not, it would be better for the owner to have his goods thrown overboard in case of storm, than to have them arrive in good safety. If this Hamburg regulation was to prevail, the condition of an owner who lost half his invoice by jettison would be far better off than another owner who should lose an equal quantity by the storm. While the owner of the first was paid for his goods because they were sacrificed, the owner of the others would not only have no claim for payment for his, but would be held to contribute as owner of the very goods which he had lost, to the reimbursement of his fortunate co-shipper, whose goods happened to be more convenient to be thrown overboard.

Chief justice Shaw delivered the opinion of the court. They considered the transaction at Hamburg in the nature of judicial proceedings, and although the rule adopted at that port certainly appeared to be a singular one, yet they felt bound to acquiesce in it, believing as they did, that it was the law of that place. It was difficult to see how the plaintiff could have got rid of paying what he did, and it was but just and reasonable that he should recover in the present action. The adjustment at Hamburg was binding on both parties, and there must be judgment on the verdict.

[Boston Daily Times.

SETTLEMENT OF KENTUCKY.

At the first meeting of the Kentucky historical society, the following anecdote of Indian generosity and magnanimity was related by a gentleman distinguished in the annals of Kentucky, with whose permission we give it to the public through our paper:

About the year 1784 or 1785, Mr. Andrew Rowan* embarked in a barge at the Falls of the Ohio, (where Louisville now stands,) with a party, to descend the river. The boat having stopped at the Yellow Banks, on the Indian side, some distance below, Mr. Rowan, borrowing a rifle of one of the company, stepped on shore and strolled into the bottom, probably rather in pursuit of amusement than game: for, from having always been of a feeble constitution and adverse to action, he knew not how to use a rifle, and besides had with him but the single charge of ammunition which was in the gun. He unconsciously protracted his stay beyond what he intended; and returning to the spot where he had landed, saw nothing of the boat nor the company he had left. It being a time of hostility with the Indians, and suspicions of their approach having alarmed the party, they had put off, and made down the stream with all possible haste, not daring to linger for their companion on shore.

Mr. R. now found himself alone on the banks of the Ohio, a vast and trackless forest stretching around him, with but one charge of powder, and himself too unskilled in the use of the rifle to profit even by that, and liable at any moment to fall into the hands of the savages. The nearest settlement of the whites was Vincennes, (now in Indiana,) distant probably about one hundred miles. Shaping his course as nearly as he could calculate for this, he commenced his perilous and hopeless journey. Unaccustomed to travelling in the forest he soon lost all reckoning of his way, and wandered about at venture. Impelled by the gnawings of hunger, he discharged his rifle at a deer that happened to pass near him, but missed it. The third day found him still wandering, whether towards Vincennes or from it, he knew not,—exhausted, famished and despairing. Several times had he laid down as he thought to die. Roused by the sound of a gun not far distant, betokening, as he well knew the presence of the Indians, he proceeded towards the spot whence the report had proceeded, resolved as a last hope of life, to surrender himself to those whose tender mercies he knew to be cruel. Advancing a short distance he saw an Indian approaching who, on discovering him—as the first impulse was on any alarm with both the whites and Indians on the frontiers in time of hostilities—drew up his rifle to his shoulder, in readiness to fire. Mr. R. turned the butt of his, and the Indian, with French politeness, turned the butt of his also.—They approached each other. The Indian seeing his pale and emaciated appearance, and understanding the cause, took him to his wigwam, a few miles distant, where he cooked for him for several days and treated him with the greatest hospitality. Then learning from him by signs that he wished to go to Vincennes, the Indian immediately left his hunting took his rifle and a small stock of provisions, and conducted him in safety to that settlement, a distance from his cabin of about eighty miles.

Having arrived there, and wishing to reward well the generous Indian to whom he owed his life. Mr. R. made arrangements with a merchant of the settlement, to whom he made himself known, to give him three hundred dollars. But the Indian would not receive a farthing. When made to understand by Mr. R. through an interpreter, that he could not be happy unless he would accept something, he replied, pointing to a new blanket near him, that he would take that; and added, wrapping his own blanket around his shoulders, "when I wrap myself in it I will think of you."

Where was there ever a white man, that even in a time of peace, would have so befriended an Indian?

L. B.

*Uncle of the present hon. John Rowan, of Louisville.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

House of Representatives, July 7, 1838. Mr. Howard, from the committee on foreign affairs, made the following report:

The committee on foreign affairs, to which have been referred, during the course of the session, several messages from the president of the United States, and other documents, showing the state of our relations with Mexico, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully offer the following report:

That causes of complaint appear to have existed for many years, on the part of the United States, against the government of Mexico, both on account of insults offered to our flag and national vessels, and injuries committed upon the persons and property of our citizens. Representations were accordingly made of these grievances, attended by demands for redress, by the accredited functionaries of the United States, residing in Mexico; but as that government entirely neglected to repair these outrages, and the ill feeling of their people, or remissness in the execution of their laws, continued to produce fresh causes of dissatisfaction, the list of grievances became enlarged from time to time by the addition of constantly occurring injuries, the remonstrances against which were treated with equal inattention. It is not the design of the committee to enter upon a historical review of our earlier relations with Mexico, although the examination would show an increasing earnestness on the part of the government of the United States, in its calls upon that of Mexico for redress, and a resort to more and more decisive steps to express its dissatisfaction at the delay, until the strong measure of withdrawing the minister of the United States from Mexico, upon the declared ground that his further residence there would be useless, roused the attention of that government for a short time from its apathy, into which, however, it soon again sank.

On the 8th of February, 1837, the president of the United States transmitted to both houses of congress a special message on the subject of Mexico, in which he manifested a strong and proper feeling at the indifference which Mexico had exhibited to the repeated and vigorous remonstrances against insult and injury by the representatives of the United States, and recommended

"The passage of an act authorizing reprisals, and the use of the naval force of the United States by the executive against Mexico to enforce them, in the event of a refusal by the Mexican government to come to an amicable adjustment of the matters in controversy between us, upon another demand thereof, made from on board one of our vessels of war on the coast of Mexico."

This message was referred to the committee on foreign affairs, whose opinion appears to have coincided fully with the president on the aggravated nature of our complaints, and the abstract justice, under the laws of nations, of the step proposed.

The president said, in his message, that—
"The length of time since some of the injuries have been committed; the repeated and unavailing applications for redress; the warlike character of some of the outrages upon the property and persons of our citizens; upon the officers and flag of the United States, independent of recent insults to this government and people, by the late extraordinary Mexican minister, would justify, in the eyes of all nations, immediate war."

The committee on foreign affairs embodied their opinion in the two following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the indignities offered to the American flag and injuries committed upon the persons and property of American citizens by officers of the Mexican government, and the refusal or neglect of that government to make suitable amends, would justify the congress of the United States in taking measures to obtain immediate redress, by the exercise of its own power.

"Resolved, That, as an evidence of the desire of the American government to preserve peaceful relations with the government of Mexico, as long as the same may be compatible with that dignity which it is due to the people of the United States to preserve unimpaired, the president be, and is hereby, respectfully requested to make another solemn demand, in the most impressive form, upon the government of Mexico, for redress of the grievances which have heretofore been ineffectually presented to its notice."

This report was made on the 24th of February, and does not appear to have been acted on by the house of representatives, whose constitutional period of service expired on the ensuing 4th of March.

But, as a strong indication of the opinion of both branches of congress as to the two points presented to the notice of the house in the above resolutions, a clause was inserted in the appropriation bill providing for the outfit and salary of a minister to Mexico, "whenever, in the opinion of the executive, circumstances would permit a renewal of diplomatic intercourse honorably with that power," which act was approved by the president on the 3d of March, 1837. Language cannot be selected to express more clearly than this the desire of congress that amicable relations should be restored between the United States and Mexico, and its opinion not only that they did not then exist, but could not be renewed, by sending a minister to Mexico, without forfeiting the honor of the United States.

The adjournment of the last congress, whose power had been invoked by the president as the only means of obtaining redress, left the political relations between the United States and Mexico in the following delicate condition. The United States had withdrawn its minister; the executive branch of the government had declared it useless to negotiate further, and called for the interference of the legislative power; and that power, speaking through both branches of congress, had declared its concurrence with the president, by pronouncing it dishonorable for the United States to renew the mission of its minister to Mexico; at the same time clearly indicating a wish for the restoration of friendly intercourse, even in the very act of expressing the above opinion. It is the purpose of the committee to review, briefly, what has since occurred; in which investigation they trust that the house will perceive the reasons why this report has been delayed until this late period of the session.

It appears from the report of the secretary of state to the president, transmitted by him to congress with his annual message, that a formal demand was made upon the government of Mexico, the account of which is as follows:

"Soon after the adjournment of congress, a careful examination was made of the various existing causes of complaint against Mexico, as well those of an individual as of a public character. The archives of the legation of the United States at Mexico having been brought to Washington by Mr. Ellis, the late charge d'affaires to that government, the department was enabled to exclude from the list of claims various, some of them of a doubtful character, and others which, after having been presented to the government for its aid in procuring a settlement, had been adjusted through the efforts of the persons interested in them. A fair and full statement of the remaining causes of complaint, chronologically arranged, was then carefully prepared, (a copy of it is annexed to this report, marked A.) and forwarded, with all the evidence within reach of the department in support of each claim that had arisen since the treaty, to the government of Mexico, by a special messenger, who was the bearer of a solemn demand from this government for redress, (copy annexed, marked B.) This demand, with the accompanying evidence of its justice, was delivered to the Mexican government on the 20th July last."

The president, in his message of the 8th February, had recommended that the solemn demand should be made from on board one of our vessels of war; and the committee now think that such a demand would have suited better than any other with the dignity of the American government, and been more likely to have been listened to by Mexico. But the president had also recommended that the high functionary who should hear this last demand should have large discretionary powers, to be exercised under the direction of the president, in the alternative of failing to rouse the languid sense of justice so often and fruitlessly appealed to before; and these powers could only be granted by congress. The plan of the president was consistent with itself, but the lingering reliance of congress upon the proper feeling of Mexico induced it to withhold the grant of the power to make reprisals.

To have sent an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary with a squadron, and instructed him to make so formal a demand, remaining for that purpose under the protection of the flag and guns of the American navy, without having the power to proceed further in case of the remonstrance being treated with neglect or contempt, might have been to expose the honor of the nation to severe and perhaps merited imputations by all those who might hear of such lofty pretensions and impotent conclusions.

The pacific spirit of congress, therefore, by abstaining from the passage of an act authorizing reprisals, marred the unity of the plan recommended by the president, and no alternative was left to the executive but to make the demand by a special messenger, in the mode which was actually pursued. The messenger was instructed to remain in the city of Mexico one week; and as this brief stay has been the subject of some criticism, it may be proper to remark, that it would have been perfectly justifiable to have ordered his immediate return after the delivery of his despatch. The Mexican government might, with entire propriety, have been left to the selection and expense of its own agent to bear its answer; and the delay of a week ought to be considered as a courtesy extended, rather than slight offered, to that government. The committee are not aware that Mexico has ever complained of this; and those who have found fault with it did not perhaps attach sufficient consequence to the reflection, that Mexico had then, and has had ever since, the same facilities of communication with the government of the United States which the latter possessed of communicating with Mexico.—There have always been in this country agents through whom despatches might be sent to the secretary of state, or, if Mexico had preferred it, a special messenger might have been employed to bear the answer.

It is of more importance, however, to inquire what that answer was, than how it might have been, or actually was, transmitted.

The minister of foreign relations of the Mexican republic said on the 29th July—

"The president, notwithstanding it is his most anxious wish not to delay the moment of that final and equitable adjustment which is to terminate the existing difficulties between the two governments, has, however, already ordered that the voluminous series of documents accompanying the said note from the honorable John Forsyth, and by which the claims in question are supported, should be translated and examined in this department. His excellency has also directed that, as this goes on, the results should be compared with those derived from evidence already existing in this department, with regard to all matters connected with each case, and that, where differences should be observed, the local authorities should be called on for new and more distinct information. Finally, it is the desire of his excellency that nothing should be left undone which may contribute to the most speedy and equitable determination of the subjects which have so seriously engaged the attention of the American government. The minister of Mexico in Washington will then have the honor to communicate successively to Mr. Forsyth the opinion of the president upon each case, and the resolution adopted by him in consequence."

After these fair promises in July, it might have been supposed that, in the course of two or three months, some answer would have been given by the Mexican government, anxious as it professed itself to be "not to delay the moment of that final and equitable adjustment which was to terminate the existing difficulties between the two governments;" but August, September, and October came and passed away without a single note. At length, in November, when congress was about to meet, and the silence of the Mexican government would have attracted the earnest attention of that body, presented to their view as it must have been by the president, the Mexican minister informed the secretary of state that "of the fifty-seven subjects of complaint, presented obviously for the last time," his government had only looked into four. It will strikingly illustrate the inattentive, if not contemptuous manner in which the demand made by the United States was treated, that the list transmitted by the secretary of state does not appear to have been examined at all, although it is difficult to imagine what state paper could have been of more solemn import, or entitled to a more prompt and anxious inspection. The third section of the thirty-fourth article of the treaty concluded between the United States and Mexico on the 5th of April, 1831, is as follows:

"If (what indeed cannot be expected) any of the articles contained in the present treaty shall be violated or infringed, in any manner whatever, it is stipulated that neither of the contracting parties will order or authorize any acts of reprisal, nor declare war against the other, in complaints of injuries or damages, until the said party considering itself offended shall first have presented to the other a statement of such injuries or damages, verified by competent proofs, and demanded justice and satisfaction, and the same shall have been either refused or unreasonably delayed."

In conformity with this article of the treaty, the secretary of state of the United States addressed a letter directly to the proper functionary of the Mexican government, "presenting a statement of such injuries, verified by competent proofs," after the appropriate committees of both houses of the American congress had recommended this formal demand to be made, as preparatory to a resort to the exercise of its own power; and yet the circumstances of the case satisfy the committee that this last effort of the American government has never been properly considered. Of the nine cases stated by the Mexican minister, five were not mentioned in the grievances, and the government of Mexico must have arrived at the knowledge of their existence from some other document than that to which reference is now made; others which are contained in it are numbered erroneously; and finally reference is expressly made by the Mexican minister "to the index of the printed pamphlet sent by Mr. Forsyth to the minister of foreign relations of the Mexican republic," when no printed pamphlet whatever was sent. The message of the president of the United States to the house of representatives of the 8th of February, 1837, covered a list of the claims of American citizens upon Mexico, which was printed for the use of the house; and this list must have, by some indirect means, been communicated to the Mexican minister, and been by him transmitted to his government, because the coincidence is perfect between his references and that list. And the secretary of foreign affairs says in his report to congress on the 30th January last, that "some of the claims, unaccompanied by any proof, are limited to a simple indication of the printed list in which they are presented." But that document was merely explanatory of the nature of the claims, to enable congress to judge of their character. The secretary of state, in revising the list, and fortifying each case with proofs, as required by the treaty, when he made a formal demand upon Mexico, left out several cases, and added others; and it must have been an inexcusable liberty or contemptuous neglect for the Mexican minister to use in his correspondence with the executive of the United States, upon so grave a matter as that which furnished the subject of their negotiation, a document which must have been irregularly obtained from the records of the house of representatives.

The committee have already remarked that it was not until the 18th of November last that any notice was taken, by the Mexican government, of the demand made upon it in July, and then but four of the cases mentioned by the secretary of state were commented upon, some superfluous industry having been expended by that government in rejecting five which had not been brought before it. It may be proper to examine what these four cases are, the decisions upon which are the results "of the desire of his excellency (the president of Mexico) that nothing should be left undone that might contribute to the most speedy and equitable determination of the subjects which had so seriously engaged the attention of the American government."

The four cases are—1st. The ship Louisa; 2d. The Cossack; 3d. The cases of Chouteau and De Mun; 4th. The Gorostiza pamphlet.

The cargo of the Louisa, consisting of arms, cordage, and flour, with other provisions, was taken at the port of Acapulco in the year 1821 by orders of Don Augustin de Iturbide, and appropriated to the use of the Mexican government. On the 1st of February, 1822, that government acknowledged the debt, and decreed the payment of the sum of $48,363, to the owners. A part of this amount ($14,418) was subsequently paid, but the balance is still due. In August, 1823, the congress of Mexico suspended the payment of this balance, but these proceedings were reversed by the subsequent congress.

Nothing could possibly be more simple than this case. The property of an American citizen was violently seized and converted to the use of the government, which acknowledged the entire debt and paid a part. The result of four months' deliberation is announced by the Mexican minister thus:

"From the records of this department, it appears that after various proceedings, and the payment of a part of the debt to the claimants, the subject had been referred to the general congress for its determination with regard to the remainder. His excellency the president, being desirous that these affairs should be brought to a speedy termination, has been pleased to direct that endeavors should be made to have this matter decided at the next ordinary session of that great august body, for which purpose this department will use every exertion; in the present extraordinary session it could not be discussed, as no subject can be taken up except those specially provided for by the laws.

"I communicate this to your excellency for the information of the honorable secretary of state, and, through him, of the claimants.

"And I, sir, comply with the last direction, by transcribing for you the said note, praying you at the same time to accept my sincere respects.

"FRANCISCO PIZARRO MARTINEZ.

"To the hon. John Forsyth,
Secretary of state of the United States."

At the "next ordinary session of that august body" the secretary for foreign affairs made a report, from which the following is an extract:

"This republic to show that she has been aggrieved, would require nothing else than the gene-relation existing in Europe and America, that the United States have not conducted themselves as good neighbors. If all the journals and reviews that have been published within the last two years be examined, it will be seen that, notwithstanding the difference of opinion professed by their editors, all agree in qualifying as hostile the conduct maintained by the American cabinet towards Mexico. The official journals themselves of the United States prove this truth, and it is equally proved by the debates in their congress, as well as in the British parliament."

This is the "exertion" which the executive department used, in conformity with its promise, to induce the congress of Mexico to pay a debt to an American citizen which it had itself admitted to be due. Between the promise in November, 1837, that "endeavors should be made to have the matter decided," and that the "department would use every exertion for that purpose," and its fulfilment in the manner contained in the above extract, in January, 1838, no event had transpired, within the knowledge of the committee, to change the political relations between the United States and Mexico, unless the message of the president to congress, in December, 1837, be considered by Mexico as such an occurrence. The insufficiency of this reason need not be examined minutely by the committee, nor the right as well as duty of the president of the United States to communicate freely with congress defended. This principle has been too recently a leading topic in our foreign affairs to need any illustration now; nor does the government of Mexico complain of it. There is, then, no reason why that justice, which had been too long delayed to the American owners of the ship Louisa, should have been further, and, apparently, indefinitely postponed.

The committee will not enter upon any detailed examination of the cases of the "Cossack," and of "Chouteau and Du Mun," two of the four responded to by the Mexican government in November last. The official answer in the case of the Cossack says:

"In order to present, in a clear light, this affair, which is now, for the first time, brought forward, to have search made respecting the circumstances, to have the exactness and the justness of the claims determined, and to obtain a declaration whether the treasury of this republic is bound to make good a restitution which is said to have been decreed by an agent of the Spanish government, it was indispensable that the claimants themselves, either in their own persons, or through their attorney, should present the documents required, and should appear in this republic."

The proofs which are presented to the Mexican government, in an authentic form, by the secretary of state, in July, 1837, contain a "copy of a decree of the supreme tribunal of Mexico, dated 22d December, 1821," which orders that the money deposited in the national treasury on account of the sale of the Cossack and her cargo should be paid over to the master, and yet the case is said to be brought forward, for the first time, in 1837; and those proofs also show that Mr. Taylor, the American consul at Vera Cruz, was the agent to prosecute the claim, whilst it is gravely asserted, by the Mexican secretary for foreign affairs, that the claimants, or their attorney should appear in the republic.

With respect to the case of Chouteau and Du Mun, it is sufficient to remark that if the argument of Mexico be correct, it would become the duty of every nation, whose citizens might be seized and aggrieved whilst in Mexico, to hasten and redress the injury before the government of the country underwent one of those changes to which it is prone.

The fourth and last of the case to which a response is given by Mexico is that of her former minister, Mr. Gorostiza, who, whilst enjoying the privileges attached by the laws of nations to his official station at Washington, circulated secretly amongst the diplomatic corps a pamphlet, written by himself, abusive and slanderous both of the government and people of the United States.

For a particular narrative of this affair, the committee refer to the report of the secretary of state, one of the documents accompanying the message of the president to congress at the commencement of the present session. When the first notice was taken of this transaction, it was merely brought before the Mexican government, unattended by any demand for satisfaction or redress, upon the supposition that so much of it as has given offence to the government of the United States would be voluntarily disavowed as soon as the fact of its having given offence was known.

The committee are of opinion that such a disavowal might have been easily made, without any abatement of the dignity of the government of Mexico, and view the course of that government, in defending points which might have been easily waived, as indicating a want of respect or an unfriendly feeling to the United States.

The committee concur with the secretary of state in the opinions expressed in his report and think that the president would have been justified, in refusing to receive another minister from the Mexican republic until the conduct of Mr. Gorostiza was disavowed by his government. That he did receive, and continues to accredit him, is another proof of the disposition of the American government to persevere in every effort to restore that harmony between the two nations which their substantial interests require.

At the commencement of the present session of congress, the president of the United States expressed his regret at the unfriendly condition of our relations with Mexico, and concluded as follows:

"Not perceiving in what manner any of the powers given to the executive alone could be further usefully employed in bringing this unfortunate controversy to a satisfactory termination, the subject was by my predecessor referred to congress, as one calling for its interposition. In accordance with the clearly understood wishes of the legislature, another and formal demand for satisfaction has been made upon the Mexican government; with what success, the documents now communicated will show. On a careful and deliberate examination of their contents, and considering the spirit manifested by the Mexican government, it has become my painful duty to return the subject, as it now stands, to congress, to whom it belongs to decide upon the time, the mode, and the measures of redress. Whatever may be your decision, it shall be faithfully executed, confident that it will be characterized by that moderation and justice which will, I trust, under all circumstances, govern the councils of the country."

This part of the message was referred by the house to the committee on foreign affairs, whose early attention was attracted to it. In the latter part of December, the Mexican minister wrote to the secretary of state, and enclosed to him a copy of the following decree:

Department of Foreign Relations.

His excellency the president of the Mexican republic has been pleased to address to me the following decree:

The president of the Mexican republic to the inhabitants. Be it known that the general congress has decreed as follows:

ART. 1. The government is authorized to arrange (or compromise, transigir) with regard to the claims preferred, or which may be preferred, by that of the United States of the north, and to commit to the judgment of a friendly power the decision of those upon which they cannot come to a determination, provided the United States themselves agree to this.

ART. 2. The government is also authorized, in case the United States should deny the satisfaction which we should ask on our part, or delay it beyond the time which shall be fixed conformably with the treaty, or should continue the open aggressions already committed, to close the ports to the trade of that nation, to prohibit the introduction and use of its manufactures, to establish a period for the consumption or exportation of those already on hand, and to take all measures required for the purpose, and for the safety of the republic.

MIGUEL VALENTIN, president.

Terso Viejo, }
Rafael de Montalvo, } Secretaries.

Therefore, I order it to be printed, published, circulated, and carried into due fulfilment. Palace of the national government in Mexico, May 20, 1837.

ANASTASIO BUSTAMANTE.

Louis Gonzaga Cuevas.

And I communicate it to you, that you may be informed of it, and act accordingly. God and liberty. CUEVAS.

May 20, 1837.

Why this decree was communicated, it is difficult to comprehend. It was passed in Mexico two months before Mr. Forsyth made his demand, as above recited, and in the reply of the Mexican secretary not the slightest allusion is made to its existence. On the contrary, it is said that the "president wishes that a reply to all (of the fifty-seven cases of grievances) should be regularly made, in order that a competent judgment may be formed with regard to each in its turn;" and during the slow process by which four cases were examined in four months, it does not appear to have occurred to the Mexican government that the decree in question was any other than a municipal regulation, with which the United States had nothing to do. Even in the despatch, communicating the decree to Mr. Forsyth, not the slightest intimation is given of any willingness to refer the decision of the claims to a friendly power: and the secretary of state might, with equal propriety, have sent to the Mexican minister a copy of the acts of congress as bearing upon the subject of their correspondence. Still, there must have been some object in view in transmitting it; and when the committee on foreign affairs remembers the positive assurances of the Mexican government in July, that "nothing should be left undone which might contribute to the most speedy and equitable determination of the subjects which had so seriously engaged the attention of the American government," and the assertion of the Mexican minister, in November, that his government then "began to make known, through his agency, the results of its minute examination," they entertained a hope that, in the course of the winter, responses would be given to more of the claims, especially as many of them are of easy solution. The extraordinary omission or forgetfulness of the secretary for foreign affairs, in his report to the Mexican congress of the 30th January, to inform that "august body" that he had pledged his faith to the United States that every exertion should be used to induce them to pay the claim of the owners of the ship Louisa, has been before remarked, in a preceding part of this report.

Two other passages of this Mexican document require a brief notice, in order that the course pursued and feelings entertained by that government towards the United States may be fully understood. The following is one:

"The circumstances, then, of which the department of war and marine has already informed congress, obliged the government to ask for a suitable explanation, and Mr. F. Pizarro Martinez was, to this effect appointed minister plenipotentiary in Washington, after having been furnished with all the instructions necessary for the fulfilment of his mission. It is very painful to be obliged to state to congress that, up to the present moment, this department has not received a single proof of the disposition of the United States to adjust our differences."

The extraordinary difference between the sentiments professed to the United States and those promulgated to the Mexican congress cannot fail to arrest the attention of the house of representatives. In July the United States are "assured that, in its successive answers to the claims now preferred, its (the Mexican government's) conduct will be regulated by a sincere desire to preserve harmony and good understanding with a friendly power;" and November, when it had accomplished the arduous task of examining, however imperfectly, four out of the fifty-seven cases presented to it, the promise is renewed that the investigation of the claims will be continued, and "the result of the researches communicated as soon as possible." But, with fifty-three of the cases undisposed of, the Mexican congress is told that not a single proof of the disposition of the United States to adjust the differences has been received. Perhaps this using of the affair is considered in Mexico as uniting every effort in its power by a department to induce that "august body," the congress, to pay the debt which the records of Mexico itself show to be due, and which the department of state could not avoid admitting.

Another passage of the report is as follows: "We shall soon have officially the result of the mission of Mr. F. P. Martinez, and he will either re-establish our relations, or authorize the government to put into effect the law of May 20th of the last year, and to take the attitude which justice and the fair character of the nation demand. Till now, it has thought proper to exert every effort in favor of peace between two nations whose union and prosperity excite the liveliest interest in both hemispheres."

Mr. Martinez arrived in Washington on the 14th of October, 1837, and was immediately accredited as minister plenipotentiary. In November and December he presented the notes which have been commented upon in this report, and up to the 30th January he had presented no more. His effort, therefore, to re-establish friendly relations consisted in giving negative answers to four out of fifty-seven cases, and in communicating to the government of the United States the Mexican decree of the 20th May. What result of the mission the Mexican secretary expected "soon to have officially," the committee cannot conjecture. As little can they imagine what the minister could have to say which would justify the Mexican government "in closing its ports to the trade of the United States, in prohibiting the introduction and use of its manufactures, and in establishing a period for the consumption or exportation of those already on hand," unless it was that the government of Mexico must be fatigued with the examination of four cases, and would go no further with the list.

The committee are fully aware that in every free government the right of unreserved communication must exist between its several departments, and this right they do not mean to contest for a moment. But they cannot explain to the house of representatives their views of the present and prospects of the future relations between the United States and Mexico, without bringing into notice all the circumstances which may affect those relations; and it is one of so small importance that the actual posture of affairs is not fully explained to the congress of Mexico. As long as that legislative body is taught to consider Mexico as the only aggrieved party, the difficulty of effecting a restoration of friendly feeling is clearly augmented, and it is only for the purpose that the house of representatives may have in its possession the materials of forming an opinion upon this point, that the committee will now refer to a despatch from the Mexican minister to the secretary of state, dated March 2, 1838. After acknowledging the receipt of some more proofs in some of the fifty-seven cases which he had transmitted to the secretary of Mexico, he says:

"The said secretary states in his answer, which I received yesterday, that he was about to enter upon the examination of these claims, and that he would, as speedily as possible, transmit to me the determination of the president upon each in succession, as well as upon the others still pending. I have the honor to communicate this for your information, and to express to you, at the same time, the regret of the Mexican government, that it has, as yet, been able to reply on so few of the claims of the United States. We, however, trust that you will bear in mind the difficulties of procuring all the information necessary for such determinations, as the events to which the greater part of the claims refer happened so long since; and we are also persuaded that you will admit, as circumstances in excuse for the delay, the change which took place in October last in the ministry, which the said Senor Cuevas formed a part."

With the tone and temper of this communication no fault can be found, whatever may be thought of the validity of the excuses for delay. If the information necessary for the determination of the cases was so difficult to be obtained, and the cases themselves happened so long since, it must be remembered that they have been pressed upon the attention of the Mexican government for several years past, and the difficulty which that government now experiences is owing entirely to its own supineness. In many cases sufficient and authenticated proofs were sent by the secretary of state with his demand in July; and even if this view of the matter be unsatisfactory, still it is inexplicable why the department of foreign relations did not recommend to congress the payment of the debt to the owners of the Louisa, which it had promised to use every effort to have paid, instead of presenting a report which was calculated to inflame the minds of that congress against the government of the United States.

The committee have now brought their review down to March, 1838, up to which time the Mexican government was supposed to be occupied in examining the proofs transmitted by Mr. Forsyth in the fifty four neglected cases, and those which had been presented subsequently to May, 1837.

But in April, 1838, some sudden impulse seems to have seized upon the Mexican government and to have led them to this belief: that although the papers in the cases were so scattered in the various ports and towns of Mexico that it was impossible to collect them to be examined at home, yet it would be easy to bring them together, transcribe, and submit them to the inspection of some third power. Accordingly, on the 7th of April, Mr. Martinez addressed to Mr. Forsyth a note, from which the following is an extract:

"His excellency the president, being convinced that this (an arbitration) is the most effectual means of terminating at once the evils to which Mexico and the United States are now subjected, and of re-establishing upon solid basis the relations of friendship and good neighborhood between the two countries, has ordered me to propose it."

On the 21st of April Mr. Forsyth accepted the proposition, and declared his readiness to enter into the negotiation of a convention for the purpose of arranging the particulars of the arbitration, adding that the posture of the relations between the two countries made it proper that this should be done immediately, as the president would not feel himself authorized to recommend any suspension of the action of congress, to whom the whole subject had been referred, before a convention of arbitration had been concluded between the two governments.

On the 30th of April Mr. Martinez, who was then at New Orleans, informed Mr. Forsyth that he had applied to his government for the necessary powers to conclude a convention, but was, in the mean time, authorized to propose Prussia as the friendly power to which the reference should be made.

On the 10th of May Mr. Forsyth replied that the president agreed to the nomination of Prussia.

On the 17th of May the Mexican minister replied in the following note, which is the last upon either side, up to the day of presenting this report to the house of representatives:

"Mexican Legation,
"New Orleans, May 17, 1838.

"Sir: By the note which you did me the honor to address to me on the 10th instant, I had the satisfaction to learn that his excellency the president admits with the utmost pleasure the proposition made by me on the 30th ultimo, in compliance with an order from my government, to refer to Prussia the decision of the claims and complaints of the United States against the Mexican republic, and that you are only waiting for my arrival at Washington to enter into the negotiation of the convention to be concluded to that effect.

"At the moment when I received on the said 30th ultimo, the note which you had done me the honor to address me on the 21st of the same month, informing me of the president's acceptance of the arbitration proposed by Mexico, I communicated it to my government by way of Havana, and by another channel which also appeared to be safe. I would have sent a vessel expressly for the purpose of carrying information of such importance, if the blockade by the French had not prevented it. As it was impossible for me to do that, I was obliged to have recourse to the circuitous route above mentioned. I have, however, availed myself of the opportunity afforded on the 10th instant, by the departure of the sloop of war Natchez for Tampico, to repeat my communications, and to solicit new powers—the want of which, alone, detains me at present, to my great regret, being, as I have previously assured you, sir, firmly convinced of the necessity of concluding the convention in question as speedily as possible.

"As soon as I receive the indispensable documents above mentioned, I will set off for Washington. In the mean time I have the honor to renew, &c.

"FRANCISCO PIZARRO MARTINEZ.

"To the hon. John Forsyth.

"Secretary of state."

Having brought this narrative to a close, it remains for the committee to submit to the house a few reflections which spring from it. The president has given formal notice, through the secretary of state, that he will not recommend any suspension of the action of congress before a convention of arbitration has been concluded between the two governments. Congress is about to adjourn, and no convention has been concluded. The subject of anxious inquiry with the committee is, therefore, whether any, and what legislative measures they will recommend to the house of representatives.

It appears somewhat extraordinary that this proposition of an arbitration was not made sooner. The decree upon which it is founded was passed by the Mexican congress in May, 1837, and was not communicated to the government of the United States until December, 1837, and then only upon the ground, as it is asserted by the Mexican minister, that, "in some of the newspapers in these states, notice was taken of the decree." What "newspapers" these were, or what this "notice" was, it is useless to inquire. The decree itself is considered by the committee to be unfriendly, and almost hostile in its character. This will be apparent, they think, when the question is asked and answered, "why the decree was passed at all?" The intention could not have been to clothe the president of Mexico with the power of agreeing to an arbitration, because, under the constitution of that country, he had that power already. But it must have been to vest him with a power which he had not, which is fully accomplished by the second article of the decree. By this he is not only authorized to close the ports of Mexico against our commerce, and prohibit the introduction and use of our manufactures, but also to establish a period for the consumption or exportation of those already on hand. The only precedent for the last sweeping power in modern history is that exercised by the emperor Napoleon in his continental system when he forfeited and burnt all British manufactures which he could find within his grasp. And yet this same power is conferred by the congress of a republic upon its president, to be used against a nation whose congress had been discussing the propriety of vesting in their president a power strictly recognized by the laws of the nations, that of ordering reprisals, and had declined to do so. The congress of the United States preferred that another sole appeal should be made under the treaty, whilst that of Mexico rushed heedlessly on in its career of unfriendliness by clothing their president with the tremendous power of seizing and confiscating all American manufactures, in the hands of whomsoever they might happen to be. The committee refer to the passage of this decree, and the nearly simultaneous refusal by the American congress to vest in the president the power to order reprisals merely for the purpose of contrasting the proceedings of the two governments, and showing the unwillingness of the United States to augment the difficulties existing between them.

It is now proposed, however, by Mexico, to put into activity the friendly spirit of the first part of the decree by resorting to an arbitration. At what time that government adopted this determination it does not appear. The letter of its minister is dated on the 7th of April, 1838. It is extraordinary that, when the authority was given to the minister to make this proposition to the United States, and the further authority to "name the power to the judgment of which Mexico was ready to submit the decision of the differences now unfortunately subsisting," it was not deemed proper to give him also the necessary instructions and authority for the execution of a convention of reference. There was every inducement to do this. The president had, early in December, referred the whole subject to the congress of the United States, upon the declared ground that "the powers of the executive alone could not be further usefully employed in bringing the unfortunate controversy to a satisfactory termination;" and this must have been known to the president of Mexico, because the Mexican minister, on the 11th of December, addressed a note to the secretary of State, from which the following is an extract:

"Aware that, after so decided an expression of the feelings of the executive, my presence can be of no practical utility in Washington, I beg leave to inform you that I am about to return to the bosom of my family in New Orleans, where any communications can reach me with very little delay."

The reference to congress must, therefore, have been known to the president of Mexico. He must have known, also, (for the friends of Mexico are not inattentive observers of what passes in the American congress,) the opinions expressed by the senate, and reported to the house of representatives towards the close of the last session; and in these circumstances the committee see abundant reason why the proposition for an arbitration should have been accompanied by ample powers for the immediate execution of a convention. It appears, also, that, on the 30th of April, Mr. Martinez, then at New Orleans, received the note of Mr. Forsyth of the 21st, informing him of the acceptance of the proposed arbitration; and that he communicated it to his government by way of Havana, and by another channel which appeared to be safe. On the 10th of May, a duplicate was forwarded by the United States sloop of war Natchez, which sailed for Tampico. All these efforts certainly indicate great earnestness on the part of the Mexican minister, and the committee, with great pleasure, express their belief in his zeal and sincerity. But the whole months of May and June appear to have afforded time enough for letters to have gone from New Orleans to Mexico, and to have returned from Mexico to Washington. The consequence of the original omission of the Mexican government to furnish its minister with the proper powers, and of its failure to supply this defect up to the time of presenting this report, is to place the committee on foreign affairs in some uncertainty whether or not to recommend any legislative measure to the house of representatives. Reasons may perhaps be found in the present peculiar condition of Mexico why the attention of its government is too much engrossed with a controversy with another power, to have fortified its minister here with the requisite powers, since his application for them; and the committee are willing to yield to the force of those reasons, by forbearing to present any distinct recommendation to the house. They feel themselves constrained to express their dissatisfaction with the existing and unsettled condition of this negotiation.

It is not probable that the arrangement of the contemplated convention will be free from difficulties. On the contrary, there are two circumstances which, upon the basis proposed by Mexico, threaten to be of no easy adjustment. It is not their duty, or perhaps their right, to anticipate the discussion of this matter; and they would have been gratified if an opportunity had been afforded for reviewing the whole ground, after the negotiation should have been closed, either successfully or otherwise. But the time; and when congress will adjourn; and this can no longer be withheld. They will, therefore, only express a hope that the government of Mexico is, at last, influenced by a more friendly spirit towards the United States than that which has characterized its deportment for many years past; and that it will approach the negotiation of the proposed convention with such a temper, and upon such terms, that the president of the United States can resume, permanently, the exercise of those powers which he had heretofore found insufficient to protect the honor of the government and rights of the people of the United States.

MEXICAN RELATIONS—MINORITY REPORT.

The undersigned, a member of the committee on foreign affairs, dissenting from the majority of the committee, in some respects, asks leave to submit to the house a summary statement of his views relative to the actual posture of the controversy between the United States and the Mexican republic.

Without deeming it necessary to enter into a particular examination of the subject of controversy between the two nations, he concurs in the opinion that the Mexican government, by a series of acts, part aggressive on the rights of individual citizens of the United States, and part immediately affecting the national dignity and honor, and by delay to make reparation in the premises, has given to the United States cause of resort to measures of public remedy, if other circumstances did not render such a course, at present, impolitic and unjust on the part of this government.

He perceives, in the prolonged war of independence waged against the Mexican republic by the mother country, and in the civil anarchy which has accompanied and followed that war, much palliation, but by no means any adequate justification, of the irregularities which have marked the foreign relations and the diplomatic intercourse of that republic. Claiming the rank and prerogatives of an independent nation, the government of the Mexican states should observe the obligations which that station imposes.

He perceives a further palliation of the conduct of the Mexican government in events connected with the establishment of the independence of Texas. But neither in this can he find any sufficient answer to the causes of complaint alleged by the United States; because some of the injuries sustained by us date back anterior to the commencement of the civil war in Texas, and others of later date are wholly independent of that fact; and because, whatever reason the Mexican republic may have to take umbrage at the conduct of the citizens or the government of the United States, in reference to that or any other matter, it surely behooves her to seek redress through negotiation, or other direct ways sanctioned in the usage of nations, rather than by occasional acts of public or private resentment.

At the same time, the undersigned considers the errors of the Mexican republic to be in so great a degree consequential to the disorders and revolutionary changes induced by her struggle for independence—a struggle undertaken in emulous imitation of the great example of these United States—that he thinks it becoming the honor of the United States, as the leading power of this hemisphere, whilst manifesting a due sensibility to wrong from whatever quarter, yet to hold itself ready to receive indulgently any overture of reconciliation and peace from a sister republic of the new world.

He is the more strongly impelled to this view of the subject, inasmuch as peace, where consistent with honor, is the truest and best policy of the United States at all times, and, therefore, pacific means of redressing public injuries are, other things being equal, to be encouraged and preferred by us. All the maxims of religion and morals, not less than political expediency, and the enlightened spirit of civilization which characterizes the age, plead in behalf of the cause of peace.

Add to which, that, independently of the considerations of profit and loss involved in the general question of war, many of the grounds of complaint in this case are for injury to the property of individual citizens of the United States, whose interests would be sacrificed, rather than promoted, by any hostile proceedings against the Mexican republic.

Entertaining these views, therefore, of the general subject, the undersigned cordially approves of the proposition, made by the Mexican government, and accepted by ours, to refer the controversy between the two countries to the friendly arbitrament of one of the most trustworthy European powers—a mode of ending national disputes, and of introducing into such disputes the law of reason in lieu of the law of force, which this government has nobly distinguished itself by adopting in other cases. In which condition of the affair, he thinks nothing should now be said or done to augment on either side the existing irritation; and he abstains, therefore, from all comment on the details of the late negotiations of the two governments.

He conceives that, until the contrary shall distinctly appear, the amicable proposition of the Mexican republic should be entertained and treated, by all departments of the government of the United States and more especially by congress, as having been proffered in perfect good faith, and as being an honest advance on the part of Mexico towards a full reconciliation with the United States.

The undersigned at the same time declares, that if, however, the reverse shall hereafter appear, and it shall prove (contrary to his expectations) that the Mexican government, not satisfied with having persisted in so many acts injurious to the United States, has added thereto the aggravation of procrustinating redress by insincere and perfidious pretences of accommodation, he shall consider it the right of the federal government to pursue, in that event, the most prompt and decided measures for amply vindicating the interests and the honor of the United States.

CALEB CUSHING.

NORTH CAROLINA.

It will be seen by the following that the hon. John Branch has consented to run as the democratic republican candidate for governor of North Carolina, at the election in August next:

Wake County, July 4th, 1838.

Sir: We have been designated a committee to make known to you your nomination as a candidate for the office of governor of the state, by a respectable portion of our fellow citizens at a public meeting in this county.

In discharge of this duty, we deem it not improper to add, the nomination has been made by those who concur with the views of the president of the United States, in regard to our national currency, and who flatter themselves, should you acquiesce in their wishes in becoming a candidate, you will be generally supported by the friends of the administration. We take it for granted, from what has been said, and from the manner of his nomination, by those who are themselves in favor of a United States bank and Henry Clay as president, that gov. Dudley unites in all these views. We think it therefore but candid to the people of the state and to those whose organ we are in making this communication, to know whether or not you are in favor of such a bank with its fifty millions, and of that individual as president, upon whose election its friends alone seem to calculate for its success.

We have the honor to be,

With great personal respect,

Your obedient servants,

WILLIS WHITAKER,
WM. W. WHITE,
WILLIE POPE.

To the hon. John Branch.

Steamboat Chesapeake, July 7, 1838.

Gentlemen: I was honored by the receipt of yours of the 4th instant, after I took my seat in the cars, at Halifax, and avail myself of the earliest moment to respond to the enquiries you have made, as to my opinions, on certain political matters, of high import. Having for more than the third of a century contended for a strict construction of the federal constitution, and believing, as I do, that the existence of our southern institutions vitally depends on a rigid adherence thereto, I have no hesitation in frankly avowing to you, and through you to my fellow citizens of North Carolina, that my opinions have undergone no change; but on the contrary, have been confirmed by time. It follows, therefore, as a matter of course, that I am now, as I have ever been, opposed to incorporating a United States bank. For which opinion I will assign but one reason. It is this, that the power to grant incorporations was expressly withheld, or denied by the convention which made the constitution. All of which will more fully appear by reference to the journals. I will go further; I am equally opposed to the exploded deposit bank system—nay, more so. Hence, you will perceive, that I must be in favor of a constitutional treasury. Could I believe that the banks were calculated to make men more honest, I might be induced to think more favorably of their agency, or could the ingenuity of their friends satisfy me that they possessed less patronage, or influence, than individuals, I might pause and re-examine the subject. But it seems to me that no candid and intelligent man will affirm either proposition. Thus much for my political sentiments. As to men, I feel that "the price of liberty is eternal vigilance," and I wish to be explicitly understood, that I commit myself, in advance, for or against no man, further than he can be made useful, in perpetuating the great principles to which I trust

I have ever been sincerely attached, and which I am now (overlooking all personal considerations) assisting to re-establish. For governor Dudley, I entertain personally the highest respect and esteem, and nothing could induce me to oppose his reelection, but the paramount considerations above alluded to.

I am with much respect,
Your's, &c.

JOHN BRANCH.

To Messrs. W. Whitaker, Wm. W. White, and Willie Pope.

BONDS BELONGING TO THE U. STATES.

Treasury Department, }

July 18, 1838. }

In pursuance of the authority given in an act of congress passed on the 7th of July, 1838, a copy of which is herewith annexed, the undersigned will receive proposals for the purchase of one or both of the bonds of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States therein described.

LEVI WOODBURY,
Secretary of the treasury.

[PUBLIC.—No. 68.

An Act to authorize the sale of certain bonds belonging to the United States.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That the secretary of the treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell upon the best terms he can command for money in hand, in the markets of this or of any foreign country, as upon inquiry he shall find most for the interest of the United States, the two bonds held by the United States against "the president, directors, and company of the Bank of the United States," chartered by the state of Pennsylvania, which will fall due in the month of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine, and one thousand eight hundred and forty, being the two last of four several bonds, dated on the tenth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, given to secure the payment of the sum of one million nine hundred and eighty-six thousand five hundred and eighty-nine dollars and four cents each, with interest upon each bond, at the rate of six per centum per annum, from the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six until paid, the said four bonds having been received by the United States as security for the final payment of the stock held by the United States, in the late Bank of the United States, chartered by congress, and to execute under his hands and the seal of his office, to the purchaser or purchasers of the said bonds, suitable and proper assignments to transfer to the said purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their representatives, or assigns, all the right, title and interest of the United States, of, in, and to the money due and to become due upon the bonds sold and assigned in pursuance of this act: Provided, That no sale of either of the said bonds shall be made upon terms less favorable to the United States than the par value of the bond sold, at the time of sale, calculated according to the rules for estimating the par value of securities upon which interest has run for a time, but which securities have not reached maturity.

Sec 2. And be it further enacted, That all money received upon the sale of the said bonds, shall be immediately paid into the treasury of the United States, or placed to the credit of the treasurer thereof in some proper depository, in the same manner that other moneys, received for dues to the government, are by law, directed to be paid into the treasury.

Approved, July 7th, 1838.

From the National Intelligencer.

LETTER FROM MR. CALHOUN.

Messrs. Gales & Seaton: I will thank you to give the enclosed an early insertion in your journal.

With respect, I am, &c.

J. C. CALHOUN.

Washington, July 1838.

[ENCLOSED IN THE ABOVE.]

A friend has put into my hands a speech of the honorable Mr. Dawson, on the bill making appropriations for the suppression of Indian hostilities, and to carry into effect the treaty with the Cherokee Indians, and to provide for their removal, delivered on the 31st May last.

The following extract from the speech, referring to the treaty of 1819, requires some notice on my part:

"This is not mere assertion: I will demonstrate it. In 1817, a treaty was negotiated by Andrew Jackson, (late president,) Joseph McMinn, (formerly governor of Tennessee,) and general David Meriwether, as commissioners on the part of the United States; and the chiefs, head-men, and warriors of the Cherokee nation east of the Mississippi, and the deputies of those on the Arkansas river. This treaty was most fairly obtained, without the least imputation of fraud from any quarter, and was unanimously ratified by the senate of the United States; by which Georgia would have acquired nearly all the lands in the occupancy of the Cherokee tribe within her territorial limits, and the obligations of the United States would have been fulfilled.

"Mr. Chairman, the treatment of my state, in relation to this very treaty, was so extraordinary, unjust, and unfaithful, that I feel constrained to ask a few moments' indulgence, in presenting the facts to this body, that the state I represent shall be vindicated, and the public mind disabused of the misapprehensions so extensively prevailing. Let me read to the committee the preamble to the treaty of 1817, and I ask particular attention to it: (6 vol. Laws of the United States, p. 702:)

"Whereas, in the autumn of the year one thousand eight hundred and eight, a deputation from the upper and lower Cherokee towns, duly authorized by their nation, went on to the city of Washington—the first named to declare to the president of the United States their anxious desire to engage in the pursuits of agriculture and civilized life in the country they then occupied, and to make known to the president of the United States the impracticability of inducing the nation at large to do this, and to request the establishment of a division line between the upper and lower towns, so as to include all the waters of the Hiwassee river to the upper town; that by thus contracting their society within narrow limits, they proposed to begin the establishment of fixed laws and a regular government: the deputies from the lower towns to make known their desire to continue the hunter-life, and also the scarcity of game where they then lived, and under those circumstances their wish to remove across the Mississippi river on some vacant lands of the United States: And whereas the president of the United States, after maturely considering the petitions of both parties, on the 9th day of January, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and nine, including other subjects, answered those petitions as follows:

"The United States, my children, are the friends of both parties, and, as far as can be reasonably asked, they are willing to satisfy the wishes of both. Those who remain, may be assured of our patronage, our aid, and good neighborhood. Those who wish to remove, are permitted to send an exploring party to reconnoitre the country on the waters of the Arkansas and White rivers, and the higher up the better, as they will be the longer unapproached by our settlements, which will begin at the mouths of those rivers. The regular districts of the government of St. Louis are already laid off to the St. Francis.

"When this party shall have found a tract of country suiting the emigrants, and not claimed by other Indians, we will arrange with them and you the exchange of that for a just portion of the country they leave, and to a part of which, proportioned to their numbers, they have a right. Every aid towards their removal, and what will be necessary for them there, will then be freely administered to them; and when established in their new settlements, we shall still consider them as our children, give them the benefit of exchanging their peltries for what they will want at our factories, and always hold them firmly by the hand."

"And whereas the Cherokees, relying on the promises of the president of the United States, as above recited, did explore the country on the west side of the Mississippi, and made choice of the country on the Arkansas and White rivers, and settled themselves down upon the United States lands, to which no other tribe of Indians have any just claim, and have duly notified the president of the United States thereof, and of their anxious desire for the full and complete ratification of his promise, and to that end, as notified by the president of the United States, have sent on their agents with full powers to execute a treaty, relinquishing to the United States all the right, title, and interest to all lands of right to them belonging, as part of the Cherokee nation, which they have left, and which they are about to leave, proportioned to their numbers, including, with those now on the Arkansas, those who are about to remove thither, and to a portion of which they have an equal right, agreeably to their numbers."

"The 'lower towns,' who thus made known their desire, in the year 1808, to continue the hunter-life, and also, the scarcity of game where they then lived, and their wish, under those circumstances, to remove across the Mississippi river, on some vacant land of the United States, were chiefly that portion of the Cherokee tribe who were in the occupancy of the lands which the United States were to obtain for Georgia. Notwithstanding this disposition of the Indians to surrender their lands as early as 1818, the United States did not embrace it, but, on the contrary, abandoned her duty, and made no effort to obtain the land until this treaty of 1817, which extinguished the occupant right of the Cherokee Indians to nearly all the lands contemplated by the compact of 1802. Georgia now thought her just rights were secured, and that soon her forests would become fields, and her population increase. Notwithstanding these just expectations, this treaty of 1817, against which no allegation had been made of fraud or injustice, unless it was considered a fraud in the United States to comply with her contract, and to have done an act of justice to Georgia, was, by articles of convention made between John C. Calhoun, secretary of war, being specially authorized therefor by the president of the United States, and the chiefs and headmen of the Cherokee nation of Indians, duly authorized and empowered by said nation, at the city of Washington, on the 27th February, 1819, readjusted, and, so far as the interest of Georgia was involved, measurably abrogated, and, on its very face, virtually declared that the United States did not intend to comply with the articles which she was solemnly pledged to fulfil. Sir, let me read to the committee the preamble of this treaty:

"Whereas a greater part of the Cherokee nation have expressed an earnest desire to remain on this side of the Mississippi, and being desirous, in order to commence those measures which they deem necessary to the civilization and preservation of their nation, that the treaty between the United States and them, signed the eighth of July, eighteen hundred and seventeen, might, without further delay, or the trouble or expense of taking the census, as stipulated in the said treaty, be finally adjusted, have offered to cede to the United States a tract of country at least as extensive as that which they probably are entitled to under its provisions, the contracting parties have agreed to and conclude the following articles."

"Thus, by this treaty, arrangements are made, and measures adopted, by which the Indians were to remain east of the Mississippi, within the limits of Georgia, and the treaty of 1817 to be set aside, in violation of the vested rights of Georgia under that treaty, and with a reckless disregard of the obligations of the compact."

Whatever may have been the motive of the honorable member, he has done me great injustice, both in what he has stated and what he has omitted to state, which it is the object of this communication to correct. The assertions that "the treaty of 1817 extinguish the occupant right of the Cherokee Indians to nearly all the lands comprehended by the compact with Georgia," that "the treaty of 1819 readjusted that of 1817," and that "it measurably abrogated it so far as Georgia was involved," or that "it virtually declared that the United States did not intend to comply with her compact with Georgia," or that "it set aside the treaty of 1817," are destitute of any foundation.

If the honorable member had turned to the map of Georgia, with the treaty of 1817 in his hands, before he made these unfounded assertions, he would have ascertained, in the first place, that it ceded to Georgia only a small portion of the Cherokee country within her borders; and if, after that, he had turned to the treaty of 1819, he would have found that it did not "readjust," a single article or provision of the treaty of 1817, nor "abrogate it," nor "measurably abrogate it," nor "set it aside," in the slightest particular, so far as the interest of Georgia, or any other interest, was involved. So far from that, it made very considerable additions to the cession made to Georgia by the treaty of 1817, as the honorable member will find, if he will turn to the map of Georgia, with the two treaties in his hands.

The honorable member seen not to be informed, or has, at least, omitted to state what was the object of the treaty of 1819. If he had turned to the treaty of 1817, and read it with care, he would not have fallen into the errors he has. He would have seen by its third and fourth articles that the treaty of 1819 grew out of that of 1817, and was simply intended to carry these two articles into effect. They are in the following words:

ART. 8. It is also stipulated by the contracting parties, that a census shall be taken of the whole Cherokee nation during the month of June, in the year of our Lord 1818, in the following manner, viz: That the census of those on the east side of the Mississippi river, who declare their intention of removing, shall be taken by a commissioner appointed by the president of the United States, and a commissioner appointed by the Cherokees on the Arkansas river; and the census of the Cherokees on the Arkansas river, and those removing there, and who at that time declare their intention of removing there, shall be taken by a commissioner appointed by the president of the United States, and one appointed by the Cherokees east of the Mississippi river.

ART. 4. The contracting parties do also stipulate that the annuity due from the United States to the whole Cherokee nation for the year 1818 is to be divided between the two parts of the nation, in proportion to their numbers, agreeably to the stipulations contained in the third article of this treaty, and to be continued to be divided thereafter, in proportion to their numbers, and the lands to be apportioned and surrendered to the United States, agreeably to the aforesaid enumeration, as the proportionate part, agreeably to their numbers, to which those who have removed, and who declare their intention to remove, have a just right, including these with the lands ceded in the first and second articles of this treaty.

All that was required, under these articles, was to ascertain the number that had emigrated to Arkansas, and the number that remained, and to obtain an additional cession from the Cherokees of such an extent as, being added to that already made by the treaty of 1817, would make the portion of land ceded, compared to what was retained, correspond with the number of emigrants compared to those remaining, and to divide the annuity between them in the same proportion. The treaty of 1817 was made in July, and, by the 3d article, the supplemental treaty (for such was that of 1819) was to be made in the following June. The treaty of 1819 faithfully carried out these stipulations, without infringing, abrogating, rescinding, or, in any manner whatever, impairing a single article or provision of the treaty of 1817.

So far otherwise is the fact, that instead of closing the supplemental treaty in June, 1818, as provided by the treaty of 1817, it was kept open by various causes till February, 1819. I took charge of the war department in December, 1817, and I found governor McMinn, of Tennessee, acting as the superintendent of the emigrating Cherokees. It was important to get off and enrol as many as possible for emigration, before making the supplemental treaty. I entered at once zealously into the subject, as the records of the war office will show, and did all I could to increase the number of emigrants. I continued to urge on the emigration and enrolment down to the time of making the supplemental treaty, in February, 1819, thereby greatly increasing the number of emigrants, and, of course, the extent of cession afterwards made. The Cherokees, in order to avoid further delay, made the liberal offer to cede one third of their territory on this side of the Mississippi; which was accepted, as well from its liberality as from the desire to avoid the expense and trouble of taking the census required by the treaty of 1818.

The only question that remained was the part to be ceded. I urged with all my might that the cession should be mainly in Georgia; on the double ground that the United States were bound by contract to extinguish the Indian title in that state as soon as it could be done peaceably, and that it would be for their benefit in the end, as Georgia would never be satisfied so long as they remained within her limits. After consulting Mr. Crawford, I used my best efforts to fix on the Etowah as the line, but found it impossible to obtain, on the side of Georgia, any other line more favorable than that which was finally agreed on. The treaty of 1817 made no stipulation as to the location of the additional land to be ceded; and of course it had to be done by mutual consent.

The honorable member has cited the preamble of the treaty of 1819. He does not state his object distinctly, but I suppose it was to prove that it was incompatible with the compact with Georgia to give any countenance to the civilization of the Cherokees. If this was his object, his censure ought not to fall on the treaty of 1819, but on the original promise of Mr. Jefferson in 1809, out of which the treaty of 1817, with its supplemental treaty of 1819, grew. He not only promised to those who remained, "patronage, aid, and good neighborhood," but urged them by the most persuasive language to betake themselves to the pursuits of civilized life, as the following extract from his speech will show:

Extract from Mr. Jefferson's speech to the Cherokees. "I understand, by the speeches which you have delivered me, that there is a difference of disposition among the people of both parts of your nation; some of them desiring to remain on their lands, to betake themselves to agriculture and the industrious occupations of civilized life; while others, retaining their attachment to the hunter's life, and having little game on their present lands, are desirous to remove across the Mississippi, to some of the vacant lands of the United States, where game is abundant. I am pleased to find so many disposed to ensure the cultivation of the earth, a plentiful subsistence to their families, and to improve their minds by education; but I do not blame those who, having been brought up from infancy to the pursuit of game, desire still to follow it to distant countries. I know how difficult it is for men to change their habits, in which they have been raised. The United States, my children, are the friends of both parties, and, as far as can reasonably be asked, they will be willing to satisfy the wishes of both. Those who remain may be assured of our patronage, our aid, and good neighborhood."

Now, I would submit to the honorable member himself, whether the bare statement of the fact in the preamble of the treaty, that the greater part of the nation desired to stay, and do as Mr. Jefferson had advised them, was a virtual declaration that the United States did not intend to comply with their contract with Georgia? And if it was, whether Mr. Jefferson himself is not the responsible party?

I have now given a statement of the facts of the case, and leave it, with confidence, to all, except the most bitter and prejudiced partisans, to determine whether the treaty of 1819 was so "extraordinary, unjust, and unfaithful," as the honorable member has asserted it to be; or whether it "set aside the treaty of 1817, in violation of the vested rights of Georgia;" or whether it "measurably abrogated the treaty of 1817;" or declared that "the United States did not intend to comply with their contract with Georgia." As to the motives, which the honorable member assigns in a subsequent part of his speech, for the treaty of 1819, that the government was in debt and needed money, and therefore made the cession in other states, in preference to Georgia, because the soil there belonged to them, it is all pure fiction. Such a thought never once entered my head, while negotiating the treaty; and the honorable member seems to forget that the government has never, and will, probably, never realize one cent from the ceded lands in North Carolina or Tennessee. The former belonged to the state of North Carolina, and the latter was covered by prior grants from the same state.

My object is to correct, and not to complain of the mis-statements of the honorable member; but it does seem to me, common justice required (to say nothing of our former, shall I say political relations) that, while he was arraigning my alleged political demerits against Georgia, he ought not to have forgot my merits. He ought not to have omitted to inform the house and his constituents, as an offset, at least, that I, whom he was holding up in so censurable a light to them for the treaty of 1819, was the author of the plan for removing the Cherokees and all the southern tribes of Indians to the west of the Mississippi, which has added so many millions of fertile acres to the states of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and North Carolina, and will, in a short time, remove the last remains of the aboriginal race beyond their limits.

As to the motive of the honorable member, I say nothing. I have never given any cause or provocation for the uncalled for attack; unless, indeed, the misfortune of differing from him, on the great question of the day, may be regarded as such.

J. C. CALHOUN.

From the Portsmouth Times.

LETTER FROM THE HON. MR. MALLORY, OF VIRGINIA.

Dear Sir: I see with regret that you have copied the perversion of my remarks published in the Baltimore papers, and in the Intelligencer. I am certain you could not intentionally do me injustice by placing me in a false position before my constituents. Not one word was said by me about 'persuading them,' or 'making an issue with the people.' Such language on such an occasion, would have been silly indeed. What I said was substantially this—That believing a majority of my constituents were opposed to the bill, I felt bound to vote against it, more especially as no opportunity had been offered of rendering it more perfect in its details. That I was in favor of separating the public money from the banks, so as to prevent its use by them, and that in discussing the subject, as I intended to do after the adjournment of congress, my views should be fully explained to the people—who could, perhaps, at some future time, authorize me to vote more in accordance with my principles, than might then appear to be the case.

Now this, I apprehend, is a very different affair from the colored statement going the rounds of the papers, and copied into those published in my district. I trust, that the people I represent, will never censure a public servant for saying he would discuss a great political question, involving such important consequences as this, and on which they have expressed no opinion since my election, that can be regarded as unequivocal. The question has been raised since I have been among them, and without discussion it is impossible for me to know certainly their wishes. Acknowledging as I do to the utmost extent, the right of instruction, it will always be my pleasure to carry out the opinions of the people, however they may conflict with my own. When a candidate for congress, I denounced the pet bank system in strong terms; and have seen no reason to change my sentiments—I can never support it in any form or shape. To a substantial deposit system, with guards sufficient to ensure its faithful execution, the same objections do not apply. A Bank of the United States cannot be had, if it is desirable, under five years, and in the mean time we must pass some law, or leave every thing to executive discretion. Such is the state of things here, and surely the currency question may be regarded as still open for discussion, and I cannot act intelligibly, if there is no agitation of it. What shall I do? how shall I vote? are questions I must put to the people, and I hope I may do so without calling down on me the sneers of the Richmond Whig, and the denunciations of men who would have me sacrifice the true interests of the people to promote their personal aggrandizement.

I have hurriedly drawn up this explanation, which I desire you to publish, that I may not be considered as acquiescing in the erroneous statement published in the northern papers, on the authority of hiring letter writers, haunting the dark passages of the capitol.

I am, your obed't servant,

F. MALLORY.

STEAM AND STEAM-BOATS.

A late number of the Frederick Herald contains the following interesting detailed description of the machinery of the Great Western, by one of the gentlemen who went out and returned in her. As the residence of lieutenant Wm. F. Lynch, of the U. S. navy, is in the neighborhood of Frederick, we presume that we are safe in assuming that he is the author of the excellent and perspicuous article which we subjoin.

"The 'Great Western steam ship' is worked by a pair of low pressure engines, constructed similarly to most engines used in British navigation. The great distinguishing feature of such engines is, that the whole of the machinery is under deck, although the cylinders are worked vertically.

The beam of the engine is not placed above the cylinder as in our boats, but a pair of beams are placed below the cylinder, and answer the same purpose, at the same time that they bring a great portion of the machinery below the water line, and do not hamper the deck. The stroke of such engines is shortened, though not necessarily, by this arrangement, and in the 'G. W.' it is only seven feet.

The two engines are connected to the main shaft on which the paddles are fixed, and in case of an accident to one engine, the other continues to work both paddles or wheels, by disconnecting the connecting rod of the deranged engine. This was the case in the outward voyage, when the engine propelled the G. W. during thirty-four hours, at the rate of 6½ knots per hour.

These engines are each 200 horse power: they are worked by steam, not exceeding 2 1-2 lbs. per square inch. An apparatus for reducing the steam by expansion is attached, but rarely used.

There are four boilers, each 10 1-8 feet long, 9 1 2 feet wide and 16 high. There are three fire-places to each floor, which terminates in a flue that runs through the boiler, an extent of about 26 feet, before it passes into the smoke funnel.

These four boilers are connected by valves to one general steam pipe which supplies the two engines. Any one boiler can be shut off at pleasure, and as three boilers with a little extra fuel can raise sufficient steam, the fourth can be cleaned out whenever required. The four boilers are more than sufficient for the work, and consume very little more coal than three; at the same time, the firemen are not hurried, and the doors of the furnaces are repeatedly thrown open to keep down steam.

The consumption of coal, both on the outwardly and homeward passage to the United States, did not exceed 6 3-4 lbs. per horse power, per hour. In rough part of homeward trip, when the ship was a week out of port, and in better trim from having consumed a considerable quantity of coal, the consumption was 5 4-5 per hour. The inconvenience to which steam boilers have been heretofore subjected by the deposition of salt and earthy matters, was obviated on board of this ship, by a peculiar arrangement, the invention of Messrs. Maudsley, Sons & Field.

In marine steam boilers, it is usual to blow off a portion of the densest salt water from the bottom of the boiler, by means of a pipe blow-off-cock. In this manner, a portion of the strongest brine is forced out—but the quantity is limited and much fuel wasted by the loss of heat.

On board of the G. W. a brass plunger pump is attached to the bottom of each boiler and draws off a constant stream of brine, the loss of which is supplied by a pipe conveying hot water from the reservoir,—which, pouring into the boiler, keeps up a constant current, thereby preventing deposition and subsequent concretions.

Supposing the density of the water of the ocean to be 100, and that deposition cannot take place, in other words, that the waters would hold the salt and other earthy matters in solution, until its density is reduced to 66 2-3ds, the density of the water in the boilers of the G. W. was rarely less than 90. At the expiration of each trip, the boilers were as clean as if fresh water only had been used. To ascertain the proper quantity to be drawn off, and to regulate the pumps accordingly, the density of the brine is ascertained by letting a portion of it cool and trying it with an hydrometer. This simple substitute for the old plan of blowing off has proven so efficient that it will no doubt be generally adopted.

The boilers of the G. W. are of wrought iron, square, with 1-2 wagon tops. The maximum pressure, is 3 1-2 lbs. to square inch. The moment that the pressure of steam exceeds that amount, the safety valve raises and the surplus steam passes through the safety pipe, to the upper air. From their shape and size, those boilers could not withstand a pressure of 8 lbs. to the square inch—and if they were to burst with that pressure, only those in the engine and firerooms would suffer—the passengers and the ship would escape uninjured. But, to guard against such an accident, which, on the ocean would produce great eventual inconvenience, and in our own boats for the protection of life itself, it would be advisable to have two safety valves to each boiler, one of each loaded to the maximum pressure it would be perfectly prudent to carry, and then closed and locked up, only to be visited by the commander. The others are at present accessible to the engineer. By this means, the engineer can always diminish, but never increase the pressure and by consequence the danger. Rash and inexperienced as many of our steamboat captains are, it would often be unsafe to entrust the keys of the safety valve cases with them. Unless they have been proved perfectly competent and trustworthy, those keys should on short trips remain with the agent or owner. These valves should also be examined at frequent, regular intervals.

With such precaution there can be no danger of explosion from pressure of steam, or, as it is generally termed, high steam.

The boiler of good metal, will bear the strain of one third of the cohesive force of that metal. In practice, twice the max pressure on the valve can be borne with perfect safety:—therefore, if a safety valve be loaded with 10 lbs to the square inch, the pressure of the steam can be more than doubled before an explosion can ensue.

The next greatest and almost only remaining cause of the explosion of steam boilers, is inattention in feeding with water. Though termed a cause, it is most generally a consequence or effect of the former. If the safety valve be too heavily loaded a great quantity of the water in the boiler is converted into steam, which, wherever it is in contact, tends to heat the boiler as much within as the fire does without; consequently, an unusual motion of the boat by the heave of the sea; a simultaneous movement of the passengers from side to side, or any other circumstance, causes the water within the boiler to run against the intensely heated metal, when the gas more powerful than steam itself is instantaneously evolved, and an explosion invariably ensues.

Besides the gauge cocks some of the English steamers have a float attached to each boiler, which by indicating the exact height of water in the boiler, proves a great additional safeguard.

The American steam engines are in some respects superior to the English,—for instance in length of stroke, by which greater speed is attained with equal power. The length of the cylinder should be twice that of its diameter, which is very nearly the proportion of that of the U. S. steamer Fulton. The Great Western, with 22 inches more of diameter has only 1 1-6 in length of stroke. The Fulton is in smooth water the fastest boat, and in all respects save its horizontal position her machinery is the best.

Improvements in steam apparatus. An act authorizing the appointment of persons to test the usefulness of inventions to improve and render safe boilers of steam engines against explosions:

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That the president of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint three persons, one of whom at least shall be a man of experience and practical knowledge in the construction and use of the steam engine, and the others, by reason of their attainments and science, shall be competent judges of the usefulness of any invention designed to detect the causes of explosion in the boilers; which said persons shall jointly examine any inventions made for the purpose of detecting the cause and preventing the explosion of boilers, that shall be presented for their consideration; and, if any one or more of such inventions or discoveries justify, in their judgment, the experiment, and the inventor desires that his invention shall be subjected to the test, then the said persons may proceed and order such preparations to be made, and such experiments to be tried as, in their judgment, may be necessary to determine the character and usefulness of any such invention.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said board shall give notice of the time and place of their meeting to examine such inventions, and shall direct the preparations to be made, and the experiments to be tried, at such place as they shall deem most suitable and convenient for the purpose; and shall make full report of their doings to congress at their next session.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That to carry into effect the foregoing objects, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of six thousand dollars; and so much thereof as shall be necessary for the above purposes shall be subject to the order of the said board, and to defray such expenses as shall be incurred by their direction, including the sum of three hundred dollars to each, for his personal services and expenses: Provided, however, and their accounts shall be settled at the treasury, in the same manner as those of other public agents.

RH. M. JOHNSON,
Vice president of the United States and President of the senate.

JAMES K. POLK,
Speaker of the house of representatives.

Approved, June 28th, 1838.

M. VAN BUREN.

Great Western steam ship office,
Bristol, 19 Trinity street,
May 31st, 1838.

My dear Hosken—

I have much pleasure in forwarding the following copy of a resolution unanimously passed at a board held on Monday last:

"Resolved, That this board highly approves the skillful, energetic, and conciliatory conduct of captain Hosken, in carrying through the great experiment which he has so happily brought to a successful issue."

Yours very sincerely,

CHRISTOPHER CLAXTON.

New York, June 18, 1838.

Dear Sir: The necessity of proceeding direct to my ship, which lies in another port, constrains me to adopt this mode of returning my grateful acknowledgments for the liberal courtesy of the directors of the Great Western steam ship company, as evinced by their invitation, transmitted through you in April last; though the terms of that invitation were not acceded to by my government, which, associating an older, more experienced, and much better officer, (first named in the invitation,) from the dictates of an equal liberal spirit defrayed the expense of our passage.

Unremitted observation for two consecutive passages in "The Great Western," enables me now to do that from which, because not thoroughly satisfied, I have heretofore most studiously refrained—to speak with confidence of the qualities and performance of the ship.

For stiffness and buoyancy combined in just proportions; for perfect comparative safety from explosion within, or the battling elements without, for speed, security and comfort, the "Great Western" may hereafter be equalled, but can scarcely be surpassed.

To captain Hosken, also, I beg leave through you to tender my lasting remembrance of his frank, unreserved, kind, friendly, and brother officer-like demeanor throughout the whole period. The high estimation in which he was held by the outward passengers, their card of thanks and service of plate presented, bear ample testimony. The passengers of the last trip will, I know from frequent inter-communion, unite with me in saying that they have ever found him, as a man, an officer and a seaman, amiable, honorable and efficient.

With unforgotten regard,

Your obed't servant,

WM. LYNCH, lieut. U. S. navy.

Richard Irvin, esq.

Consignee G. W. S. S. Co., New York.

The following are the dimensions of the steam ship British Queen, building in England for the British and American steam navigation company, by Messrs. Curling, Young & Co. She is supposed to be the longest ship in the world, the length exceeding, by about 35 feet, that of any ship in the British navy:

	Feet.	in.
Length extreme from figure head to	275	0
taffrail	265	0
Ditto to upper deck	223	0
Ditto of keel	40	6
Breadth within paddle boxes	64	0
Ditto, including ditto	27	0
Depth
Tonnage—No. 1852
Power of engine	500	horse
Diameter of cylinders	77	1-2 inches.
Length of stroke	7	feet
Diameter of paddle wheels	30
Estimated weight of engines, boilers and water	500	tons
Ditto of coals, for 20 days consumption	600	"
Ditto cargo	500	"
Draught of water with above weight and all stores	16	feet

THE ANNIVERSARY.

At the democratic celebration of the city and county of Philadelphia, on the 4th of July, 1838, latter, accompanied with sentiments, were received from the following distinguished individuals, viz: John C. Calhoun, Thos. H. Benton, Silas Wright, R. M. Johnson, Joel R. Poinsett, John Forsyth, Amos Kendall, Levi Woodbury, C. C. Cambreleng, H. D. Gilpin, James N. Barker, J. K. Paulding, and Lemuel Paynter.

Washington, July 2, 1838.

Gentlemen: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your invitation on behalf of the democratic citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, to participate with them in celebrating the approaching anniversary of our national independence.

I regret that my public engagements will deprive me of the pleasure of meeting the democracy of your city and county upon that interesting occasion. In compliance, however, with your request, I send you a toast, which I must ask of you the favor to present to the company in my name.

With my best wishes for the welfare of yourselves, and of those whom you represent,

I am your friend and fellow citizen,

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

John Rheiner, jr., John Thompson, James Eneu, jr., George Smith, James H. Hutchinson, H. Simpson, Miles N. Carpenter, Thomas M. Rush, and Joseph Snyder, esquires.

By Martin Van Buren—The state of Pennsylvania: To her noble public works and her fruitful soil, she adds the 'greater riches' of a hardy, incorruptible democratic population.

By the committee—Martin Van Buren, president of the United States: Great in all his achievements, whether in the presidential chair or in the halls of legislation; his love of liberty and honesty of purpose have gained for him the hearts of freemen.

Senate chamber, }

Washington, July 2, 1838.

Gentlemen: I thank you for the honor which you have bestowed upon me, by your invitation to celebrate the approaching anniversary of our independence, in company with the democratic citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia. I can assure you it would afford me very great pleasure to comply with your request. My public duties here, however, forbid me this gratification. Will you be good enough to present to the assembled company, in my name, the following sentiment:

David R. Porter: Firm, prudent, and practical. The democracy of Pennsylvania have shown their wisdom in selecting him for their candidate. He is now in the furnace of political persecution; but shielded by his integrity, he will come out pure gold on the second Tuesday of October.

Yours, very respectfully,

JAMES BUCHANAN.

To Messrs. Rheiner, Thompson, Rush, Snyder, and others, committee.

By the committee—Hon. James Buchanan: Our talented, patriotic, and urbane senator; whether at home or abroad, ever the same firm and unflinching advocate of democratic principles and man, and our country's dearest rights.

By Richard M. Johnson, vice president of the United States—The city and county of Philadelphia: Honored in the history of the first free born empire of the world; her democratic citizens have sustained the foundation of her glory; and while liberty bears a charm, her honor will be unsurpassed.

By the committee—Richard M. Johnson, vice president of the United States: His patriotism, and his firm and immovable democracy, have raised him far above the malice of a corrupt bank aristocracy.

By hon. J. R. Poinsett—The memory of James Madison, who throughout his long and eminently useful life so ably illustrated the principles of democracy.

By the committee—Hon. Joel R. Poinsett: The genuine democrat, and useful cabinet officer—accomplished and erudite, and the same true practical republican.

By hon. John Forsyth—Liberty, always in danger from the intrigues of the corrupt and the designs of the ambitious, but never lost by a people who are worthy of its blessings, since its preservation depends simple upon their knowledge of their rights and their resolution to maintain them.

By the committee—Hon. John Forsyth: The true republican, and, whether at home or abroad, acts the practical democrat; when abroad, kings could not intimidate him; when at home, banks cannot affect his principles.

By the committee—Hon. Amos Kendall: The friend and advocate of the people in opposition to soulless corporations, banks, thrones, and paper money.

By Hon. Levi Woodbury—Pennsylvanians: The pride of democracy. They always seek the van in the cause of liberty.

By the committee—Hon. Levi Woodbury: The talented and upright secretary of the treasury; the firm definer of the laws against an unconstitutional paper currency.

By James K. Paulding—The memory of Wm. Penn: The founder of a great state which does honor to his name and exemplifies his virtues.

By the committee—James K. Paulding, of New York: His recent appointment merits the decided approbation of the party, and we acknowledge the compliment paid by the president to worth, talent and literature.

By James N. Barker—The People: They are a majority every where, and of right should every where govern. When the few bear sway, it is a proof of the baseness or corruption of the many.

By the committee—James N. Barker, esq.: Our friend and fellow-citizen; a talented and faithful scion from a genuine democratic stock; like his ancestors, he prefers principles to interest. In him confidence cannot be misplaced.

By the committee—Hon. C. C. Cambreleng: The fearless champion of the democratic party in the house of representatives, United States congress. We value his talents and admire his firm integrity.

By H. D. Gilpin—The treasury of the constitution, and the currency of the constitution: These are the birthright of our people, according to the letter and spirit of that sacred charter.

By the committee—Henry D. Gilpin, esq.: Our late townsman and cordial friend; the friend of popular rights, and the enemy of chartered monopolies. A politician in whom there is no deceit.

By the Hon. J. C. Calhoun—The separation of banks and government. While more indispensable to liberty than the separation of church and state, it would prove in the end not less beneficial to both, than the separation of the latter has been to religion and politics.

By the committee—Hon. John C. Calhoun: The southern champion of democracy; not to be bought, bribed, cajoled, or driven by federal bank whigs.

By the Hon. Thomas H. Benton—Bank and State: A connection prejudicial to the state; may a speedy divorce take place between them.

By the committee—Hon. Thomas H. Benton: Though all the venom of the opposition, and all the shafts of the bank party were hurled against him, he, like pure gold, returns untarnished from the furnace. May our country always have such representatives.

By the Hon. Silas Wright, jr.—The Difference: The democrats of our country, led on by Andrew Jackson, got behind the cotton bags to fight, conquer and drive from our soil a foreign enemy; the Aristocracy of Wealth, at the order of Nicholas Biddle, "keep behind the cotton bags" to avoid the payment of their honest debts to their fellow-citizens.

By the committee—Hon. Silas Wright, jr: The fearless champion of democracy, who, by his splendid talents and his industry, has been able to say to the opposition that the time has not yet arrived when the chartered liberties of freemen are to be perverted to the use of a corrupt aristocracy.

By the Hon. Lemuel Paynter—Union and Harmony: May the democracy of Pennsylvania, after one of its family jars, be more united than ever, and rally as one man in the great contest in October, at the ballot box; and strike terror and dismay into the ranks of an insolent moneyed aristocracy.

By the committee—Hon. Lemuel Paynter: One of the glorious and faithful seventeen members of congress from Pennsylvania, who voted to sustain our democratic general administration, the law, and constitution.

THE PULASKI.

The following cant on behalf of the sufferers of the Pulaski, appears in the Baltimore papers:

To captain Davis, of the schooner "Henry Cameron," of Philadelphia—to the citizens, physicians, and authorities of Wilmington—to the directors of the Raleigh and Wilmington railroad company—to the hotel keepers there and on the route to Portsmouth, Va., and stage owners on the same route—also to captain Sutton, of the steamboat "Alabama."

The undersigned, in behalf of himself and other passengers of the ill-fated "Pulaski," fortunately rescued from a watery grave, take the earliest occasion after returning home and recovering from the effects of their suffering and exposure, to present their most grateful thanks—and shall ever regard them as friends of humanity—whose kindness and sympathy assuaged and relieved the undersigned after the perils and horrors of a dreadful shipwreck, and who provided for them all the comforts which charity and affection could dictate.

Some of the sufferers, cast houseless on the inhospitable and barren shore, without food and water, and almost without raiment to cover their sunburnt and lacerated forms, soon found these kind friends, among strangers, ministering to their wants with untiring benevolence. And if in this world the reward of good deeds is sometimes postponed, most surely will it crown the future destiny of those true christians, who literally clothed the naked, fed the hungry, and bound up the wounds of the afflicted. And to the highest of all rewards the undersigned leave their benefactors, with the utterance of the warmest thanks which gratitude can utter, or benevolence receive.

To captain Davis, however, of the schooner "Henry Cameron," they feel constrained to acknowledge a high and imperishable debt of gratitude. His arm, under Heaven, saved them, after a prolonged and unutterably terrible scene of suffering—at a moment when despair was fastening upon every heart, and physical strength was sinking under the cravings of hunger and thirst. The stormy ocean upon which they had floated for nearly five days and nights, in momentary fear of death, still rolling around and over them in fury—and followed by the insatiable monsters of the deep, ready to devour them—at this awful hour, did this humane man come to their rescue, at considerable risk to his vessel and crew. To him, then, we offer our deepest and warmest gratitude and praise, and feel assured that his own approving conscience, and a more approving God, will here and hereafter reward him for his noble deed, the simple record of which will ever speak his high and deserved eloquium.

To all, finally, who aided and befriended the undersigned in the extremity of their misfortunes, they offer the feelings of hearts—which the tongue cannot express—and, without stopping particularly to name each benefactor, beg that one and all will receive this as the sincere return of thanks from rescued and now grateful fellow beings.

JAS. P. HEATH,
For himself and others.

From the Army and Navy Chronicle.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF VISITERS.

West Point, July 21, 1838.

To the hon. J. R. Poinsett, secretary of war.

SIR: The board of visitors, convened at your request to attend the examination of the cadets of the military academy at West Point, beg leave to present the following report:

That, in order to accomplish more effectually the object of their mission, namely, to make "a full and free investigation of the military and scientific instruction of the cadets, and of the internal police and discipline, and fiscal concerns of the institution," they have arranged themselves into committees, instructed to inquire especially into such subjects as would most comprehensively embrace all the desired information. The reports of the committees containing the result of their observations, and their suggestions, in which the board of visitors have concurred, are herewith transmitted. But the board, as a body, would submit to your consideration the following engrossed statement of the actual condition of the institution:

The course of instruction prescribed by the regulations of the academy, is comprised under the following heads: 1st. Infantry practice, and military police; 2d. Mathematics; 3d. The French language; 4th. Drawing; 5th. Natural philosophy; 6th. Chemistry and mineralogy; 7th. Artillery tactics, the science of gunnery, and the duties of a military Laboratory; 8th. Engineering and science of war; 9th. Rhetoric, and moral and political science; and 10th. The use of the sword. This course of studies is required to be finished in four years.

The examinations which the board have witnessed, abundantly prove that, in the discharge of their duties, the academic staff of the institution have used that zeal and industry which a deep sense of the responsibilities of their stations, an honorable and patriotic desire to serve their country, a laudable ambition to elevate their profession, and an accurate estimate of the value of science must always inspire. The general proficiency of the cadets in the several branches of study, testify to the entire competency of the professors and their assistants.

In one important department of science alone, mineralogy, the studies have remained incomplete, owing to the insufficient number of assistants assigned to the professor of chemistry, whose duty it is to impart instruction in this branch also. The importance to a military as well as to a civil engineer, of a familiar acquaintance with mineralogy, which should be aided the no less useful science of geology, is so obvious, that in the opinion of the board, no pains or expense should be spared, to provide the professor with the most ample means of completing and illustrating these portions of his course. To enable him to give a full course of instruction on three branches of the natural sciences, so comprehensive and progressive as chemistry, mineralogy, and geology, it is indispensable that he should be allowed at least one additional assistant, and that he be provided with as complete a series of mineral and geological specimens, both foreign and domestic, together with drawings of sections, and other means illustrative of the cognate branch of geognosy, as can be procured. An appropriation to the latter effect has already been asked for, and it is respectfully solicited that the grant of it be earnestly recommended to congress. The erection of a new building to replace that which was destroyed by fire during the last year, the plans of which, it is understood, have been approved of by the chief engineer, will provide a suitable apartment for the mineralogical and geological cabinets, which, in the course of a few years, might be greatly enlarged, and become extremely valuable, were it enjoined upon the surgeons and officers at the different military posts throughout the union, to make some exertions to increase it by collecting specimens.

In connection with this subject, the present board cheerfully respond to the suggestion of a former one, who in their report have recommended, not only as an act of strict justice, but as conducive to the best interests of the institution, that the acting professor of chemistry should be placed on the same rank with his colleagues. The arduousness of his labors, together with the zeal and ability with which he has hitherto discharged them, would seem fairly to entitle him to this promotion. The board, therefore, recommend that the department of chemistry, mineralogy, and geology, be established by law, upon the same footing with the other departments, namely, with a professor and two assistants, receiving the same emoluments respectively that are received by the professor of mathematics and his associates.

The erection of the building already alluded to, the plan and location of which are warmly recommended by the committee on public buildings, will likewise provide for the ample accommodation of the library, as well as the models and apparatus for the departments of engineering and natural philosophy. Yearly appropriations to these departments have repeatedly been asked for and granted, the indispensable necessity of which is evident, in order to enable the professors and the cadets to keep pace with discoveries in science, and with the improvements of those arts that form part of their military education. The unexpended funds appropriated to the departments of philosophy, engineering, drawing, chemistry, mathematics, and for the increase of the library, amounted, at the end of the first quarter of the present year, to upwards of seven thousand dollars, a large portion of which, it is understood, will be forthwith applied, by the superintendent, to the engineering department, and the remainder to the other departments, so soon as the necessary buildings recommended for their uses shall have been erected. In regard to the disbursements for the library, it has been recommended to place them under the charge of a committee of the academic staff, elected from and by their own body, whose duty it shall be to select the most useful books appertaining to the several branches of studies that are or may be heretofore taught in the institution. The committee on public buildings have also called the attention of the board to the insufficiency of the barracks for the comfortable accommodation of the cadets, and have suggested some important improvements in their interior police. They recommend, too, an enlargement of the hospital, which at present contains only six rooms, accommodating 12 patients; and although, so far, these have fortunately been found sufficient, they could hardly be expected to be so in case of an epidemic. They, moreover, recommend the erection of an observatory, or a building to accommodate the large telescope, transit instrument, and astronomical clock; and the establishment of a swimming school: in all of which the board of visitors unanimously concur.

The committee on the internal police of the institution also remark upon the unfitness of the south barracks to the purposes for which they were designed; and further suggest the propriety of obtaining a legislative enactment from the state of New York, prohibiting the sale of ardent spirits to the cadets within certain limits of the military academy reserve. The latter suggestion is highly approved by the board. The investigations of this committee have resulted in an approval of the rules under which a distribution of goods at the "store" is made; though they have regretted to find that an imprisonment is very prevalent among the corps of cadets, that they are extravagantly charged for them. Your attention is respectfully invited to the subject.

The fiscal committee, after showing that the monetary affairs of the institution are conducted with system, accuracy, and good faith, propose that the applicants for admission, who are ordered to report themselves for examination, be allowed a mileage sufficient to defray the expense of their transportation to the post. The object of this is to equalize the facilities of admission for the youths of our country, in all conditions, and at the most remote distances; adding thereby to the republican character of the academy. They also recommend an increase of the salaries of the superintendent, professors, and assistant professors, in which the board of visitors concur.

The committee appointed to inquire into the course of military instruction and tactics, at the academy, are, as will be perceived by their report, quite satisfied with the manner in which it has been conducted, and in reference to the present discipline observed at the post, are of opinion that it is administered with a proper regard to the necessity of a strict enforcement of the prescribed regulations, unaccompanied by any exercise of unnecessary severity on the part of the officers, in hope of winning, as well as with a view to secure an entire obedience to them. They recommend the erection of a building to shelter certain pieces of ordnance, that have been deposited there for preservation as trophies of the revolutionary and late wars; an addition to the pieces now used, of at least one of the other kinds of guns now employed in the service; and the substitution of a company of mounted dragoons for the detachment of artillery now stationed at the post. In these recommendations the board likewise unite; and whilst they feel it imperative upon them to add, that the excellent discipline of the cadets, and the skill displayed in their military evolutions, are due, in a great measure, to the inflexible enforcement of the prescribed discipline by the present commandant of the corps, and to his experience and knowledge as a tactician, they regret that, by the regulations of the academy, which require, in this department, an officer of higher rank, the permanent services of the present incumbent may be lost to the institution.

In the branch of instruction embracing rhetoric and moral and political science, the studies have been found deficient. This subject has been fully investigated by the committee on the course of moral and scientific instruction of the academy, who have in their report suggested certain modifications of the present course, that are approved of by the board. Should these suggestions meet with your approbation and that of congress, and should it be found advisable to grant to the chaplain an additional clerical assistant, more time would necessarily be had, and more opportunities present themselves, of attending in a more especial manner than is practicable under the present arrangements, to the religious instruction of the cadets. The board are far from implying, by this, any deficiency on the part of the venerable clergyman now at the head of the ethical department, but, on the contrary, were pleased to discover that, on retiring from a situation which he has filled so honorably for upwards of ten years, he has received from his pupils gratifying testimonials of their respect and affection.

For further details concerning the actual condition of the academy, in its various departments, the board must refer to the reports of the several committees, at the same time that they rejoice, as Americans, to have in their power to bear testimony to the signal ability with which it is conducted. No one, how inveterate soever his prejudices may have been, can approach the institution, without a lively admiration of the fitness of its location, and will hardly be expected to leave it without a conviction of its utility. Surrounded by so many recollections of the glorious struggle of our forefathers in the cause of liberty, in sight of the monuments that commemorate them, the American youth cannot fail to imbibe strong feelings of patriotism, and a love of country, which form the best security for the maintenance of our independence. Every one must perceive an order and regularity in the service of the post, which bespeak the existence of an excellent system, faithfully pursued; and in the manly bearing, the elastic movement of limb, and the neat attire of the cadets, there is seen the result of a course of education admirably calculated to develop and improve alike his moral and physical capabilities. Entertaining these views, the board of visitors cannot hesitate to recommend the military academy at West Point, as an institution well worthy of the fostering patronage of government. They see nothing in its continuance that conflicts with the republican character which all our public institutions should possess. Admittance to it is opened to every condition of fortune and of birth; no favoritism is known to have been practised in gaining admission into it; and the greatest impartiality is apparent in the administration of its justice, as well as in the award of its privileges.

In a national point of view, it will tend to disseminate over the whole country knowledge of a peculiar description, which is daily becoming more and more required; will improve the condition of the militia; will elevate the moral as well as scientific character of the army; will furnish means for the security of our frontiers; and, above all, will cement the bond of union between the states, by establishing a community of feeling and concert of action among men on whom the nation will ere long have accustomed itself to look with pride, as its surest reliance amidst the difficulties of a war.

In conclusion, the board acknowledge, with unfeigned thanks, the polite attentions of the superintendent and military staff, of the academic staff, and the assistant professors, whom they have ever found ready and willing to aid them in their necessary investigations.

J. T. DUCATEL, Maryland,
President of board of visitors.

B. F. MORRIS, Illinois.

JOHN C. PLUMMER, Pennsylvania.

JOHN B. ARD, do.

H. W. ELLIS, Alabama.

DECOUDRAY HOLSTEIN, N. Y.

JOSEPH D. HOLT, Mississippi.

C. F. MCCOY, Georgia.

J. E. HOLBROOK, South Carolina.

JAMES JONES, Kentucky.

JAMES SHEA, New York.

EVAN M. JOHNSON, do.

FRANCIS LIEBER.

JOHN E. PAGE, Virginia.

THOMAS ROSS, Pennsylvania.

JOHN L. SMITH.

Major corps of engineers.

J. S. CONWAY, Arkansas.

THOS. B. McELWEE, Pennsylvania.

JAS. TAYLOR, Newport, Ken.

J. PAGE.

D. MURRAY, Maryland.

WM. R. GRIFFITH, Kentucky.

WM. H. RUSSELL, Missouri.

Z. PITCHER, of Michigan,
Secretary of board of visitors.

NAVY ORDERS.

July 10. Lieut. J. H. Rowan, navy yard, N. York.

P. mid. John Hall, do do

P. mid. H. Gausevoort, exploring exp.

11. P. mid. W. May, and G. Colvocoresis, exploring expedition.

12. P. ass't. sur. J. F. Sickles, passed mids.

A. S. Baldwin, (as acting master,) T. A. Budd, (as acting master,) H. Eld, jr., and F. A. Bacon, and mid. G. W. Clark, exploring expedition.

P. mid. R. Forrest, navy yard, Washington.

July 13. Comm'r J. Armstrong, rendezv., Boston.

14. Chaplain J. L. Elliott, exploring exp.

Mid. W. R. McKinney, naval school, Norfolk.

16. P. mid. W. Ronckendorff, navy yard, Boston.

Mid. J. C. Richardson, W. I. squadron.

Mid. W. H. Hudson, exploring exp.

For temporary duty in the frigate Macedonia, July 16.

Lieuts. G. C. Ashton, J. C. Sharpe.

P. mid. L. J. Bryan, W. Gwathmey, G. Wickham.

Midshipmen L. McLane, F. A. Parker, J. D. Usher, M. C. Watkins.

Master, A. Cunningham.

Officers relieved and detached.

July 10. Lt. W. Pearson, from navy yard, New York.

11. Lt. N. M. Howison, from W. I. squadron.

12. Mid. R. Burt, from do

Assist. sur. C. D. Maxwell, from steam-ship Fulton.

Passed midshipmen, appointed acting lieutenants, July 11, 1838, to serve in the exploring expedition.

No. 1. Overton Carr

No. 2. W. M. Walker,

No. 3. R. E. Johnson,

No. 4. H. J. Hartstene,

No. 5. J. Alden, jr.

No. 6. Aug. L. Cass,

No. 7. Geo. F. Emmons,

No. 8. Oliver H. Peiry,

No. 9. J. A. Underwood,

No. 10. John B. Dale.

Appointment.

Jared L. Elliott, to be chaplain, July 13.

Resignation.

Eugene Boyle, midshipman, July 14.

From the Army and Navy Chronicle.

ARMY—SPECIAL ORDERS.

No. 41, July 14—Leave until October 31, to brig. gen. Arminsted.

Sick leave for three months, Lt. W. H. T. Walker, 6th infantry.

No. 43, July 13—DETAIL FOR RECRUITING SERVICE:

Lieut. E. G. Mitchel, 1st infy., Hartford, Conn.

Engineer department.

Washington, July 17, 1838.

Engineer order, No. 1.

I. Captain A. H. Bowman, of the corps of engineers, will, as soon as the funds for the Memphis and St. Francis road are exhausted, close the operations on that work, and repair to Washington, D. C., for orders.

II. Captain G. W. Cullum is assigned to the immediate charge of the fortifications in New London harbor, and will report for instructions to col. Totten, to whom the general superintendence of those works is entrusted.

III. Captain William Smith is placed in charge of all the public works under this department on the southern shore of Lake Ontario; all communications from the local agents of those works, to the department, will be transmitted through him.

IV. The following officers have been appointed by the president of the United States to the corps of engineers, to rank as second lieutenants, and are assigned to duty as follows:

Second lieut. W. H. Wright, with col. S. Thayer, at Fort Warren, Boston harbor.

Second lieut. P. G. T. Beauregard, with col. J. G. Totten, at Fort Adams, Newport, Rhode Island.

Second lieut. J. H. Trapier, with capt. J. K. F. Mansfield, at Charleston, S. C.

Second lieut. S. H. Campbell, at Fort Monroe, Virginia.

Second lieut. J. M. Scarritt, with capt. R. E. Lee, at St. Louis, Missouri.

Lieutenants Wright, Beauregard, and Scarritt, will report immediately in person at their respective stations, lieut. Trapier by letter to his commander, and lieut. Campbell by letter to this department.

C. GRATIOT, chief engineer.

AFFAIRS OF CANADA.

The following is the concluding particulars of lord Durham's proclamation of general amnesty. It is dated at Quebec, the 29th of June.

"Know ye therefore that we have ordained, directed and declared, and by these presents do ordain, direct, and declare, that no further proceedings shall be had, or taken, against any person or persons whatsoever, on account of any high treason, or offences of a treasonable nature, with which they now stand charged, or wherewith they may be chargeable at this time, but all such proceedings, without exception or distinction, save as hereinafter mentioned, shall henceforth cease and determine. And it is our further will and pleasure, that with the exception of such persons as are in behalf named in the said ordinance and whose cases are thereby provided for, all persons at present in custody and charged with high treason or other offences of a treasonable nature, and also with such exception as aforesaid all persons who have withdrawn themselves from the pursuits of justice beyond the limits of our said province, shall immediately upon giving such security for their future good and loyal behaviour as our said governor general and high commissioner, or if there should be no such governor general or high commissioner, then the governor in chief, governor, or the person administering the government of this province shall direct, be at liberty to return to their homes, and may and shall there remain wholly unmolested by reason of any high treason or other offences of a treasonable nature, in which he or they may have been concerned."

—The following is a copy of a "proclamation" issued by the leader of the gang that destroyed the steamboat Sir Robert Peel. It was obtained for governor Marcy; and, if the facts may be relied on, is important, as showing that the attack, although made in the American waters, was concerned in and proceeded from the British dominions.

"To all whom it may concern.

I, William Johnson, a natural born citizen of Upper Canada, certify that I hold a commission in the patriot service of Upper Canada as commander-in-chief of the naval forces and flotilla. I commanded the expedition that captured and destroyed the steamer Sir Robert Peel. The men under my command in that expedition were nearly all natural born English subjects—the exceptions were volunteers for the expedition. My head-quarters was on an island in the St. Lawrence, without the jurisdiction of the United States, at a place named by me Fort Wallace. I am well acquainted with the boundary line, and know which of the islands do, and which do not, belong to the United States; and in the selection of the island I wished to be positive and not locate within the jurisdiction of the United States, and had reference to the decision of the commissioners under the 6th article of the treaty of Ghent, done at Utica, in the state of New York, 13th June, 1822. I know the number of the island, and by that decision it was British territory. I yet hold possession of that station, and we also occupy a station some twenty or more miles from the boundary line of the United States, in what was his majesty's dominions until it was occupied by us. I act under orders. The object of my movement is the independence of the Canadas. I am not at war with the commerce or property of the citizens of the United States.

"Signed this tenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight.

"WILLIAM JOHNSON."

Lord Durham's reception at Montreal. His excellency landed at the government wharf, opposite the barracks, Montreal, on Friday the 6th inst. The day being fine, vast crowds were collected. On landing he was received with the most enthusiastic cheers, which were kept up as he passed along the streets. A numerous deputation of the citizens of Montreal waited upon him at 3 o'clock, with the address voted on the 30th ultimo, which had been most generally signed. His lordship then read the following answer:

"Gentlemen: I am deeply sensible of your kindness, and acknowledge with feelings of pride and satisfaction, the flattering terms in which you are pleased to notice my public services.

"They are, and ever have been freely tendered to my sovereign and my country. I now offer them to you, in humble hope that, with your co-operation, I may be able to restore peace and prosperity to the Canadas.

"The task is arduous, as you state, but not impracticable; more especially after the wise and judicious course which you have pursued. On my part, I promise you an impartial administration of the government. Determined not to recognise the existence of parties, provincial or imperial, of classes or races, I shall hope to receive from all her majesty's subjects those public services, the efficiency of which must ever mainly depend on their comprehensive nature.

"Remember that you have all the same interest in the prosperity of your country—that the capital of the merchant and the estate of the seigneur, the skill of the artisan and the labor of the habitant, are alike depreciated by internal dissensions, while they are fostered and increased by harmony and public tranquillity. Follow up, therefore, the good work you have commenced. Extend the veil of oblivion over the past; direct to the future your energies; (and where are to be found energies equal to those possessed by British merchants?)—and the consequences cannot be doubtful.

"I will second you to the best of my abilities—and I trust that the result of our united efforts will be, to render the North American colonies as distinguished for the wisdom of their institutions, and the good conduct of their people, as they are for the magnificence of those gifts, and resources which a bounteous Creator has bestowed on their territories."

The Montreal Courier remarks that—

After reading his answer, his lordship addressed himself to the deputation, in a less formal manner, stating in language to which we regret that we cannot in a memoriter report do any justice. Referring to the reception he had just met with in Montreal, he remarked that he had never, on any occasion, through a long political life, felt more gratified by any expression of public sentiment, than he had been by that which he had just received. He assured the deputation, in the strongest terms, that the interests which they represented were interests which it was his settled determination to promote to the utmost of his power, so far as justice and a regard to the rights of others would allow; and farther, that he was satisfied that by measures of the strictest justice they might and would be most essentially promoted.

The members of the deputation were then severally introduced to his lordship, at his own request, by Mr. McGill.

The reply to the address was received by the deputation with applause; and his lordship's subsequent remarks were repeated and warmly applauded. We are certainly not wrong in saying, that the impression they produced on all present, was of the strongest and most favorable character. We must repeat our regret that we cannot do them justice in reporting them.

About half-past 4, P. M., after receiving a visit from the Catholic clergy of the city, who waited upon him after the deputation left, his lordship left the government house, and returned to the John Bull, accompanied nearly as before.

The meeting of the provincial parliament of Upper Canada, is adjourned to the 6th of August.

Lord Durham has appointed Mr. Charles Buller, with authority to appoint assistant commissioners, and a secretary, and with instructions to inquire into the method of disposing of the waste lands in Lower Canada, the property of the crown, and to collect information in regard to the advancement of the province, and the promotion of emigration thereby. The commissioner is instructed to report the results of the said inquiry, and to suggest such alterations or modifications as may appear likely to promote the objects above stated. Full powers are given him for calling on the officers of the crown lands for information, and for papers pertaining to the objects of inquiry. He is also empowered to frame temporary rules and regulations with regard to the manner of disposing of such lands, due regard being had to the provincial acts and royal instructions now in force. The governor-in-chief has also ordered and directed each of the lieutenant governors of the provinces of Upper Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the islands of Prince Edward and Newfoundland, to affix the great seal of their respective provinces to a commission, addressed to the said Charles Buller, to the like effect, and containing like powers in relation to the waste crown lands in their respective provinces or islands. [Boston Daily Advertiser.]

LATER FROM ENGLAND.

The steam packet, Royal William, arrived at New York on Tuesday evening last, from Liverpool, in eighteen and a half days. She brings accounts from London to the 4th, and Liverpool to the 5th ult., and for the following extracts we are indebted to the New York papers:

The Royal William, we understand, had eleven days of head winds and gales, and accomplished half the passage in seven days.

The coronation of the young queen Victoria, took place on the day appointed, (the 28th ult.) with the utmost conceivable magnificence, gorgeous pageantry, and loyal enthusiasm. For the information of our fair readers, we will just mention a few particulars about the young queen's dress, deportment, and so forth.

In the first place then, she is a very pretty young lady, and she had the good taste to make her first appearance in the choir of the immense abbey in which she was to be crowned queen of more than a hundred millions of people in a very neat and simple dress. Her gown was of the purest satin, covered with a transparent dress of white blond lace, and a circle of diamonds glistening in her hair. It is a great pity that the sweet effect of this maidenly attire, was spoiled by so huge and ponderous derous a train of velvet and gold, which however as a queen she was compelled to wear, and which was borne by eight young ladies, daughters of peers. The ladies who performed this humiliating service, and who are called "maids of honor" were dressed all alike, in white satin, and wore small white roses in their hair, so that this group of lovely women, must have been a delightful spectacle.

On ascending the choir of the cathedral, on the steps leading to what is called the theatre, she was compelled to pause nearly a minute, and thus the immense audience had an opportunity of gazing on the young creature without an intervening obstacle. The papers describe her as slightly affected with the grandeur of the scene around her and the acclamations which greeted her; but she is said to have walked with grace and self-possession to the seat, at which she was to receive the "homage" of the nobility and titled clergy. During the ceremony of the "homage;" rather a ludicrous accident occurred: lord Rolle, had reached the tip top step of the elevated dais, or platform, on which stood the throne; before which he was to kneel and kiss the queen's hand, when his lordship's toes anticipated his marrow bones, and slipping, pitched him right backwards, and so lord Rolle rolled heels over head down the whole flight of steps to the next landing place, in the sight and to the irresistible diversion of forty or fifty thousand spectators. He did not slide down, but fairly reeled over and over, till he became seated with his back towards her majesty, and his face and feet towards all the rest of the world.

However, he soon recovered a perpendicular position, wheeled about, and reascended the steps with as good a grace as possible, and the good natured queen rose from her seat, extended her hand to him, and expressed a hope that his lordship was not materially injured—for which, of course, she was vastly applauded.

The mere ceremony of the coronation, in its several stages, such as the inverting within the mantle, the offering of the sword and the spurs, the ring, the sceptres, the crowning, the anointing, the inthronization, the offerings, the arrangement of the regalia, and "all that sort of thing."

We have only to remark that the affair passed off with great spirit and harmony, and was altogether the most splendid coronation recorded in English history. The chivalry of all Europe seems to have been called forth on this occasion, and the foreign embassies vied with each other in displaying the most gorgeous paraphernalia that money could procure.

London, and indeed, all England, was entirely absorbed with the festivities which the occasion called forth, and the papers are so completely filled with descriptions, that we can find scarcely any other kind of news, either domestic or foreign. We trust that the reign of queen Victoria, who has been educated in a more liberal school than any other British sovereign, will prove a blessing to her immense empire, and favor the progress of those equal rights, without which it must be a reign of injustice to an incomparably great majority of her subjects.

We beg to acknowledge our obligation to the respected agent of the British and American Steam Navigation Company for English papers, brought by the Royal William, which fully supplied the deficiency occasioned by the detention of our files in Wall street.

On the evening of the coronation the places of amusement were thrown open to the public. The admission being regulated by tickets issued to admit as many as each house would accommodate. Mr. Bunn, of Drury Lane, and Mr. Macready, of Covent Garden, received 400*l.* each for the loan of their theatres, and to provide suitable entertainments.

It is also understood that 200*l.* each was paid for the Haymarket and English Opera. Mr. Davidge, the lessee of the Surrey Theatre, received 150*l.*; Mr. Honner, of Sadler's Wells, 105*l.*; Mr. Yates of the Pavilion, Whitechapel road, 100*l.*; and Mr. Osboldson, of the city of London Theatre, Norton-folgate, 100*l.* for a similar purpose. At Astley's, a grand spectacle was produced, got up expressly for the occasion, but the precise sum paid by the government we do not find stated. At Vauxhall, 750*l.* was to be paid for the use of the gardens, which it is supposed would accommodate nearly 87,000 persons.

We learn by the Times, that the famous Mrs. Trollope is dangerously ill at her brothers at Fulham.

Edward Lytton Bulwer, the popular novelist, has been created a baronet along with many other gentlemen. Numerous promotions by brevet have taken place in the army and navy, as is usual after a coronation.

Miss Landon, known to fame as L. E. L., embarked with her husband, Mr. McLean, for South Africa on the 2d of July.

One hundred and seventy-five thousand newspapers were despatched from the post office in London the Monday after the coronation.

The farewell benefit of Madame Vestris, prior to her departure for this country was fixed for the 12th of the present month.

The Times of the 4th inst., states that the wheat crop had prodigiously improved towards the latter end of June, and was coming into ear most propitiously.

One of the London papers reports that queen Adelaide intended to proceed to the island of Malta for the benefit of her health.

The government forces in Spain have gained several fresh successes, and there seems now to be some prospect that this ruinous war may be at length brought to a close.

A declaration of independence was reported to have been made by Mahemet Ali, the Pacha of Egypt, heretofore tributary to Turkey. The latest accounts go rather to discountenance the rumor.

The cholera or something similar to it, has re-appeared at Berlin.

There was an attempt at revolution in Portugal on the 14th June, but without success.

Another explosion on board a steamer. We see by the Scotch papers that the James Gallacher, a small vessel plying between Glasgow and the Dalmien cotton works, exploded, scalding several persons severely, five of whom had since died. The captain and engineer were arrested and committed to take their trial for manslaughter.

The continent of Europe. We find but little political news in the London papers. The following extracts from the French journals are from the Times of the 4th ult. The other continental news is of no importance:

The Paris papers announce, we regret to observe, the existence of a pestilential disease at the Sobres St. Gery, (in Belgium) and at Beaumont and Consonrie, (in France.) The symptoms occasioned fears that that malady was the black fever. Its progress was rapid, and in the place just mentioned, it had already discriminated the population.

London, July 4.—Half past twelve. There is evidently much anxiety felt as to the extensive operations in corn, and their probable effects on the currency and money markets. It was supposed that the decided tone of the debate in the Lords, on the corn laws, would have some influence on the prices of grain. No alteration is however perceptible this morning in the prices; the only features is rather large arrivals of foreign coin, which is offered at 50*s.* to 60*s.* per quarter in bond.

THE CORONATION OF HER MAJESTY VICTORIA FIRST.

The long expected morning, when a pageant was to be witnessed, which none of the present generation will perhaps ever see again, was ushered in under the most imposing appearances. The sky, as early as 5 o'clock, presented a gloomy appearance, and occasional showers seemed but the herald of more determined and continuous rain. Notwithstanding these unfavorable appearances, St. James' park, even at that early hour, contained vast numbers of individuals, attracted to witness the imposing spectacle of the coronation procession. Before half past seven o'clock the weather cleared up, the sun broke out, and the previous rain only added to the effect of the proceedings by laying the dust, and giving additional verdure to the foliage of the trees.

At six o'clock the 29th regiment of foot and the 5th dragons entered the park and took up their station in front of the palace, together with the 3d life guards. The division of police was also in attendance. Along and within the railings of the park and also up the side of Constitution hill, seats and standing places were erected some of them so frail that it was somewhat strange they should have been tenanted by people possessing any share of prudence. We saw more than one of them give way, but we believe without injury to any individual. Twelve pieces of artillery were ranged opposite St. James' palace within the railings, and the nineteen tents erected behind them gave a gay aspect to that portion of the park.

Soon after nine o'clock the procession began to form in the mall, and when all the carriages of the foreign ministers and ambassadors were in line, they presented a magnificent spectacle. Amongst them all, however, that of marshal Soult was pre-eminently attractive. It was at once rich, chaste and beautiful. Without being in the slightest degree gorgeous, it was the most magnificent coach we ever witnessed. A crowd soon collected round it, and as soon as it was rumored that its occupant was the celebrated marshal Soult, he was loudly cheered by the people, to whom he repeatedly acknowledged the compliment. The arrangements before the palace appeared to be under the orders of sir Hussey Vivian, sir George Quentin, sir C. Dalbiac, and col. Woodford.

About a quarter before 10 o'clock the royal standard was hoisted over the marble arch, and it was in good taste that it was done by sailors.

At five minutes before ten, the carriages of the foreign ministers proceeded to their places, forming in line up Constitution hill, and followed by the carriages of the royal family. The duke of Sussex on being recognised, was much cheered.

The moment that the carriage of the duchess of Kent emerged from the palace gates, the acclamations of the people were loud and general. The dukes of Sussex and Cambridge were also loudly cheered. At length the state carriage, bearing the queen, came in view, and it is impossible to describe or convey the least notion of the burst of loyal and enthusiastic cheers by which the assembled thousands greeted and hailed their monarch. Her majesty appeared in excellent spirits, and highly delighted with the scene, which was, at this moment, truly beautiful. The troops saluted her majesty in succession as she passed, and continued with "presented arms." The duchess of Kent was similarly recognised and complimented, and when, at twenty minutes past ten, her majesty passed under the triumphal arch, all in the surrounding windows and balconies rose, and, with waving of handkerchiefs, joined in the welcome with which the thousands below, with an unanimous burst of loud and long continued cheering, hailed their youthful queen. Her majesty seemed most cordially to receive the greeting offered to her, and her manner evidently evinced excitement from the pompous and exhilarating scene by which she was surrounded. The procession passed on to St. James' street and Pall Mall. The club-houses were all fitted up in the most splendid and convenient manner for obtaining a view of the procession.

At 20 minutes past ten o'clock a detachment of life guards made their appearance in St. James' street, headed by Lee, the high constable. Exactly at a quarter before 11 o'clock, the state carriage, containing her most gracious majesty, the duchess of Sutherland, and the earl of Albermarle, appeared in sight. The shouts of the multitude, the waving of handkerchiefs, and other demonstrations of affectionate loyalty on the part of the populace were now of the most enthusiastic description.

Her majesty was evidently highly gratified with the reception which she met with, for her countenance was animated with the expression of delight. She bowed most graciously to the warm manifestations of loyalty with which she was greeted, and pointed the attention of the duchess of Sutherland with evident satisfaction, to the appearance of the people and the general arrangements made for her reception.

The procession passed along in regular order to Charing cross. Before the procession arrived, standing near the statue of Charles, which, as well as that of George the third, in Cockspur street, was surrounded with ascending seats, the coup d'œil was most imposing. The few shop windows which commanded a view of the road were fitted up for the reception of visitors—the fair portion of whom sat within the glass in stately anticipation, and presented a curious sight, the splendor of their dresses, combined with their personal charms and their composed attitude, giving them the appearance of waxen images exposed for sale. Every part of every house in which a lodgement could be made was secured by such of the spectacle loving multitude as were able, either by the interest of friendship or money, to procure a station.

Her majesty arrived at the abbey precisely at half past eleven o'clock.

The peers were conducted to the southern transept and the peeresses to the northern. Occasionally, the names were announced as they moved up the choir, and public curiosity was much gratified on being thus informed of the character of those distinguished individuals.

About nine o'clock the greater number of peeresses had arrived. Perhaps there were one hundred and fifty present, and as soon as they were in their places, the general attention was confined in that part of the church which was appropriated to their use. It is impossible to conceive any thing more brilliant than the appearance of these benches. The impression of so much beauty, dignity and luxury combined can never be effaced from the memory of those who had the good fortune to be present.

At nine o'clock all the persons who were to take part in the ceremony not included in the procession as well as those who had tickets of admission; were assembled in the abbey; and every tribute and gallantry was densely ranked. Those who were content with witnessing the ceremony from one of the lower galleries could not have at that moment any idea of the varied and magnificent scene which demanded their attention. It was those only who sought the upper galleries and looked down from one of the angles bordering on the theatre that could form a just opinion of its splendour and extent.

On every side, galleries containing ladies of fashion, dressed in ball room costume, met the eye. In one part the gallery was seen in its fullest extent, in another only a side glance could be obtained. Here the full glare of daylight revealed all the luxury of dress,—there the pageantry was dimmed by the shade of one of the massive pillars of the abbey. The scene was quite theatrical, and it would be difficult to arrange, with the greatest resources of the finest theatre of the world, any thing capable of the same result. The half concealed galleries, seen in shade or in perspective, had, by contrast, most charming effect. The different angles of the building threw the different tribunes into light and shade; and while all commanded attention, each had a separate claim.

Approach and arrival of her majesty. At ten, the noise of cannon announced, that her majesty had left the palace, and the different persons in the abbey took up the station which they intended to occupy during the ceremonial. Every ear was directed to catch the sound of her near approach, and every eye was turned towards the door which she was to enter. The gentlemen pensioners began to rally their partizans, and the heralds and gentlemen of the gold stick to marshal their proper forces. The regalia was delivered to the several noblemen entitled to bear it.

It was not, however, until near eleven o'clock that there was any distinct imitation of her majesty's approach. At that hour the bustle out side the abbey became so distinct that it was evident the queen was close at hand, and every one rose from their places, and stretched forward with anxiety to catch the first glimpse of her appearance. The ladies of the household and the officers of the household, who had no duties assigned to them in the solemnity, passed to their respective places, and the noblemen carrying the regalia, and the bishops carrying the bible, chalice, and patina, went forth to receive the queen.

Previously, however, to her majesty's entrance, the distinguished diplomatic personages who had taken so prominent a part in the procession advanced into the abbey in the order in which their carriages had set them down. Each of these distinguished personages was attended by a brilliant and numerous suite, and it is difficult to imagine any thing more glorious than their appearance as they came together, dazzling the eye by the variety and elegance of their costumes. When the Turkish ambassador presented himself, he looked around on all sides as if lost in admiration, and remained some time immovably fixed on the magnificent scene. Whilst gazing on the benches on which were seated all that could most peculiarly attract his attention as exhibiting the female nobility of England in the height of exalted rank, enhanced by every possible embellishment, he evidently showed, by his expression of countenance, that never before had his eye lighted upon so brilliant and beautiful assembly.

The great officers of state, the archbishops of Canterbury and York, the noblemen appointed to carry the regalia all in their robes of state, and the bishops who were to support her majesty, as well as those who were to carry the bible, the chalice, and the patina, assembled in the Jerusalem chamber, adjoining the deanery, before 10 o'clock; where the regalia, having been previously on the table, was delivered by the lord chamberlain of the household to the lord high constable, and by him to lord Willoughby d'Eresby, as lord great chamberlain, and by his lordship to the noblemen, by whom the same was borne in order.

The queen, ascending the theatre, passed on the south side of her throne to the chair of state, on the south east side of the theatre, being the recognition chair, and after her private devotion, (kneeling on her footstool) took her seat; the bishops her supporters, standing on each side; the noblemen bearing the four swords on her majesty's right hand, the sword of state being nearest to the royal person; the lord great chamberlain and the lord high constable on her left, the other great officers of state, the noblemen bearing the regalia, the dean of Westminster, deputy garter, and black rod, standing near the queen's chair; the bishops bearing the bible, the chalice, and the patina stood near the pulpit, and the trainbearers, the lord chamberlain of the household, and groom of the robes, behind her majesty.

Her majesty appeared rather pale and exhausted. She was received in the most flattering manner; the general burst of approbation exhibited the feelings of the assembled thousands in a manner worthy of the solemn occasion. The company in every part of the Abbey rose in honor of her majesty, and continued standing, while she slowly advanced along the choir. At the same time, the following anthem was sung:

"I was glad when they said unto me, we will go into the house of the Lord. For there is the seat of judgment, even the seat of the house of David. O pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee. Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces.

"Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost."

"As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen."

The queen was no sooner seated, than the utmost silence prevailed in the whole assembly, in expectation of the approaching solemnity, than some amusement was excited by the Westminster queen's scholars exercising one of their noisy privileges. While all was quiet and composure, a few of these lads, who were stationed at each end of the galleries, began to roar, "Regina Victoria!" "Regina Victoria!" Every one looked up to the box to see what was the matter, but the boys enjoyed the fun, and roared out, at the top of their lungs, "Regina Victoria."

Upon the conclusion of the anthem, the archbishop of Canterbury advanced from the station at the southeast pillar, and together with the lord chancellor, the lord great chamberlain, the lord high constable, and the earl marshal, preceded by deputy Garner, moved to the east side of the theatre, where the archbishop made the recognition, thus: "Sirs, I here present unto you queen Victoria, the undoubted queen of this realm—wherefore, all you who are come this day to do your homage are you willing to do the same?" The archbishop repeated the same at the south, west and north sides of the theatre—during which time her majesty stood up by her chair, and turned towards the side on which the recognition was made; the people replying to each demand with loud and repeated acclamations of "God, save queen Victoria!" and at the last recognition, the trumpets sounded and the drums beat. The bearers of the regalia, during the recognition, remained standing about her majesty.

Her majesty then resumed her seat; and the bible, the chalice and the patina were carried to and placed under the altar by the bishops who had borne them, who then retired to their seats.

The great officers then resumed their station near her majesty.

Two officers of the wardrobe spread a rich cloth of gold, and laid a cushion on the same, for her majesty to kneel on, at the steps of the altar.

The archbishop of Canterbury then proceeded to the altar, put on his cope, and stood on the north side.

Here follows an account of the various religious ceremonies for which, of course, we cannot find room to-night.

The crowning. The archbishop, standing before the altar and having St. Edwards crown before him, took the same into his hands, and consecrated and blessed it with prayer, "O God, who crowned thy faithful servants with mercy," &c. Then the archbishop came from the altar, assisted by the archbishops of York and Armagh, with the bishops of London, Winchester, and other bishops, the dean of Westminster carrying the crown; and the archbishop took and placed it on her majesty's head, when the people, with loud and repeated shouts, cried "God, save the queen;" and immediately the peers and peeresses present put on their coronets; the bishops their caps; and the kings of arms their crowns; the trumpets sounding, the drums beating, and the tower and park guns firing by signal.

The homage. The exhortation being ended, her majesty delivered the sceptre with the cross to the lord of the manor of Worksop, to hold the same on her right hand, and the sceptre with the dove to the duke of Richmond, to hold the same on her left hand, during the homage.

The archbishop then knelt before the queen, and for himself and the other lords spiritual, pronounced the words of homage, they kneeling around him, and saying after him. The archbishop then kissed her hand, and the rest of the lords spiritual did the same, and retired.

The holy sacrament. After receiving the holy sacrament, the queen, still kneeling, made her second offering, (a purse of gold,) which the treasurer of the household, delivered to the lord great chamberlain, and he to her majesty, from whom the archbishop received it. The archbishop then said the prayer, "O God, who dwellest," &c. Her majesty then went to her chair on the south side of the area, and knelt at her footstool.

When the archbishop and the dean, with the bishops' assistants, namely, the preacher, and those who had read the litany, and the epistle and gospel, had communicated, her majesty approached the altar and received the sacrament, the archbishop administering the bread and the dean of Westminster the cup.

The queen then received the crown from the lord great chamberlain and put it on, and repaired to her throne, receiving again the sceptre with the cross in her right hand and the sceptre with the dove in her left, being there supported and attended as during the enthronization.

The service being concluded, her majesty, attended by the two bishops, her supporters, the great officers of state, the noblemen bearing the four swords before her, and the noblemen who had carried the regalia then lying upon the altar, descended into the area, and passed through the door on the south side into St. Edward's chapel; the noblemen who had carried the regalia receiving them from the dean of Westminster as they passed by into the chapel, the organ and other instruments all the while playing.

Her majesty being in the chapel, and standing before the altar, delivered the sceptre with the dove, which her majesty had borne in her left hand to the archbishop, who laid it upon the altar there.

Her majesty was then disrobed of her royal imperial mantle, or robe of state, and arrayed in her royal robe of purple velvet by the lord great chamberlain.

The archbishop then placed the orb in her majesty's left hand.

It was nearly 6 o'clock before the royal carriages in returning reached the park, where her majesty was received with the same loyal and enthusiastic greeting that marked this portion of the line at starting.

Not a single accident occurred either during the day or the night, to mar the harmony of the national jubilee; and the police had scarcely more occupation than on an ordinary day.

The queen bore the fatigues and excitement of the day—no slight demand upon the nerves of a delicately nurtured young lady—without exhibiting very visible signs of exhaustion; and was no worse next day than many of her more robust but still more tired subjects.

CHRONICLE.

Baltimore flour inspections. Amount of flour inspected in Baltimore, during the quarter ending on the 1st instant, was—

76,366 bbls. wheat flour,
5,835 half do. do.
7,489 bbls. rye,
765 hhd. corn meal,
2,322 bbls. do.

During the quarter ending on the 1st April, 1833, the inspections were 80,839 bbls. wheat flour,

3,008 half bbls. do.
6,054 bbls. rye do.
263 hhd. corn meal,
2,915 bbls. do.

During the first two quarters of 1837, the inspections of wheat flour were as follows:

	bbls.	half bbls.
1st quarter,	94,954	3,157
2nd do	81,622	2,093

By comparing the first two quarters of 1837, with the two of 1833, noticed above, it will be seen that the wheat flour inspections of the first half year of 1833 are less than those of the corresponding period of 1837 by 19,231 bbls. while the half bbls. are more by 3,598.

A singular and fortunate escape is mentioned in the last Zanesville Gazette. Mr. G. Fracker of that place, having plunged in the Muskingum river with a view to bathing, had scarcely dived half a rod before he felt himself caught in the upper lip by a fishing hook of very large size, and suddenly thrown back. After an ineffectual attempt to loosen the line, he caught it in his teeth, and succeeded in biting it in two, and swam to shore with the hook fast through his lip. He was held under water by the line, and had he failed in severing it with his teeth, he would have been obliged to tear the hook from his lip, or submit to speedy strangulation.

[Columbus, (Ohio.) Reg.]

Imports and exports of the U. States. From the annual statements of the commerce of the United States, lately communicated to congress, it appears that the imports during the year ending on the 30th of September, 1837, have amounted to $140,989,217; of which there was imported in American vessels, $122,177,193, and in foreign vessels, $18,812,824. The exports during the year ending on the 30th of September, 1837, have amounted to $117,419,376; of which $95,564,414 were of domestic, and $21,854,962 of foreign articles. Of the domestic articles, $75,482,521 were exported in American vessels, and $20,081,893 in foreign vessels. Of the foreign articles, $15,725,082 were exported in American vessels, and $6,129,920 in foreign vessels. 1,290,720 tons of American shipping entered, and 1,266,622 tons cleared from the ports of the United States; 763,703 tons of foreign ships entered, and 756,292 tons cleared during the same period.

Tonnage of the United States. In the annual treasury statement to congress, the registered tonnage for the year ending on the 30th September, 1837, is stated at

The enrolled and licensed tonnage at	810,447
And the fishing vessels at	946,980
	129,258

Tons 1,886,635
The total tonnage of shipping built in the United States during the year ending on 30th of September, 1837, was, viz:

Registered	42,843
Enrolled	80,648

Tons 122,986
Foreign salt trade of the United States, during the year ending the 30th September, 1837. Importations—bushels, 6,343,706—value, $862,617. Exportations—41,118—value, $12,722.

Leaving for consumption and stock, 6,302,588 bushels—value, $49,905.

Exportation of domestic salt—bushels, 99,133—value, $58,472.

It appears from a detailed official statement published by the mayor of Charleston, that the total amount of donations made for the relief of the sufferers by the late destructive fire in that city, was $180,506 87. This liberal sum was contributed by the people of the several states, as follows:

By South Carolina,	$76,771 66
Georgia,	29,830 57
Pennsylvania,	27,975 25
New York,	14,510 00
Louisiana,	8,650 00
Massachusetts,	5,977 34
Virginia,	4,642 10
Alabama,	3,116 65
North Carolina,	3,005 90
Maryland,	3,362 17
Florida,	1,763 50
New Hampshire,	897 62
Connecticut,	800 00
District of Columbia,	150 00
Rhode Island,	50 00

Grand total $180,506 86

Pensioners. The law to provide for the payment of pensioners appropriates the following sums:

For the revolutionary pensioners, under the several acts, other than those of the fifteenth of May 1828; the seventh of June, 1832; and the fourth of July, 1836, four hundred and twenty-six thousand seven hundred and seventy-two dollars.

For the invalid pensioners, under various laws, one hundred and thirty-four thousand and seventy-five dollars and sixty-two cents.

For pensions to widows and orphans, under the act of the fourth of July, 1836, one million four hundred and ninety-two thousand six hundred and eighty-five dollars.

For half pay pensions, payable through the office of the third auditor, five thousand dollars.

In all, two millions, fifty-three thousand, five hundred and thirty-two dollars and sixty-two cents.

An army of pensioners. From a document communicated (among others) to the house of representatives on Friday, it appears that the number of pensioners on the rolls of the several pension agencies of the United States at this time is as follows:

Invalid pensioners	4,121
Under act of 18th March, 1818	8,930
Under act of 15th May, 1828	692
Under act of 7th June, 1832	23,783
Under act of 4th July, 1834	1,832

Total number of pensioners 41,453

Honorable. It is stated in the Tuscaloosa (Ala.) Intelligencer, that Mr. Morely Baker, who left Alabama some years since for Texas, under very unfavorable circumstances in regard to his transactions, with the state bank at Tuscaloosa, has honorable and fully repaid the injury which that institution sustained through his means. He wrote to the officers of the bank, and in pursuance of his request, Mr. J. White, one of the directors, visited him, and received the full amount of the claim including interest, being in all about thirty-two thousand dollars, and gave Mr. Baker a full discharge.

Death of a Veteran. The Nashville whig notices the death of the only survivor of the soldiers of the old French war, as it is called, or the war against the French in Canada. The name of the deceased was John Lusk; he was born on Staten Island, N.Y., on the 6th of November 1784, and was consequently nearly one hundred and four years old when he died.

Monument to Franklin. The Mobile typographical society have passed a series of resolutions recommending the erection of a public memorial to the memory of Franklin by the officers of the National Typographical Association, and urgently requesting that body to correspond with the different local societies throughout the union for the purpose of eliciting their sentiments upon the proposition. The resolutions likewise state that in the event of the approbation of this project, committees will be formed to collect subscriptions among printers only, to carry it into effect. The city of Washington is recommended as the suitable spot for the location of the monument.

Imprisonment for debt. This relic of dark ages will shortly, we hope, be obliterated from the statutes of every state in the union. The following excellent resolution on the subject was passed at the late whig convention in Vermont:

Resolved, That the law authorizing the imprisonment for debt, is a violation of the plainest principles of justice—that it is a fruitful source of crime and oppression; that it is opposed to the genius of our institutions, and the spirit of the age in which we live—and that it is the duty of the government of Vermont immediately to abolish it.

The New York Star states that Mr. John Jacob Astor has presented $10,000 to the German society of that city, of which he is president. The fund is to be employed to establish an agency to protect German emigrants against imposition.

Cheap postage. The British parliament contemplate a very important reform in the English post office system, by which the postage on letters to any part of the kingdom is to be reduced to one penny, (two cents.) In a financial point of view our nation is not uninterested in this affair—the prospective idea of at least sustaining the post office revenue by the more general diffusion of public information. The details of the project will shortly be published.

Indiana. Our young western sister is gradually developing her mineral strength. We learn by the Indianapolis Journal that, "by late examinations between Putnamville and the lower falls of El river, in Putnam county, it is fully ascertained that there are inexhaustible mines of rich iron ore within two and a half to four miles of the falls, with every requisite for carrying on the manufacture of iron to any extent which may be required." The proprietors are about erecting suitable works. Coal of an excellent quality, and in abundant quantities, is also found convenient.

The state geologist, also, has recently discovered in Posey county an extensive bed of handsomely shaded marble, with beautiful variegated veins running through it, fitting it for ornamental and other work.

Franking public documents. As congress has adjourned, it is well to mark some of their "movements, doings, and so on." Among them is the franking of about 500 canvass bags of public documents, averaging 70 pounds each, which have passed through the New York city post office, principally for that state.

Cost of court. A civil action was tried at Springfield, Mass., last week, which occupied the time of the court from Monday morning until Thursday afternoon. The subject of litigation was a cow, worth, perhaps, $20. It has been tried several times, and the costs of carrying it on amount to nearly $1,000. The verdict of the jury was for the defendant.

Silk. The West Chester silk company, of Pennsylvania, had a sale of handkerchiefs, manufactured from their own silk, on Tuesday last. There were 35 in number, and the aggregate proceeds were $71 06. They were knocked off in quick time at from $1 75 to $3 a piece, to the supporters of domestic industry.

Sale of Durham cattle. Mr. C. S. Clarkson, of this city, in the course of last week, sold at auction, on his farm in the neighborhood of Cincinnati, his stock of Durham cattle. The whole amount of the sale fell but a little short of $28,000. This is believed to be the largest sale of the kind, ever made by one individual in the United States. One fine bull sold for $1,450—one cow sold for $975—another cow and calf for $1,075—another cow $1,000—a heifer, a year old, sold for $850—the balance for various prices, ranging from $37 1-2 up to $300. [Cincinnati Whig.]

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 23.—VOL. IV.]

WASHINGTON CITY, AUGUST 4, 1838.

[Vol. LIV.—WHOLE No. 1,401.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

TREASURY NOTES. Treasury department, August 1, 1833. The whole amount of treasury notes authorized by the act of October 12th, 1837, having been issued, viz: $10,000,000 00
And there having been redeemed of them about 7,100,000 00
The new emissions made in place of those under the act of May 12th, 1833, have been 5,086,532 81
This leaves a balance of all outstanding, equal to only $7,936,532 81

LEVI WOODBURY,
Secretary of the treasury.

DEATH OF COMMODORE RODGERS. General naval order. As a mark of respect to the memory of commodore John Rodgers, late senior officer of the navy of the United States, who died in Philadelphia on the 1st instant, the flags of the navy yards, stations, and vessels of the United States navy, are to be hoisted half mast, and thirteen minute guns fired at noon on the day after the receipt of this order.
Officers of the navy and marine corps are to wear crape for thirty days.

J. K. PAULDING.

Navy department, August 3, 1833.

Naval order. All officers of the navy, who are attached to the U. S. naval station, at Philadelphia, are directed to attend the funeral of the late commodore John Rodgers, from No. 260, Walnut street, this afternoon, (3d inst.) at 5 o'clock, in uniform.

Com'dts office, U. S. Navy Yard,
Philad. 2d August, 1833.

CHARLES STEWART,
Commanding officer of the station.

The remains of commodore Rodgers, accompanied by his family, will arrive in this city to-day.

CANADA FRONTIER. Gen. Macomb, commander-in-chief of the United States army, arrived in this village on Saturday from the north, and leaves to-day for the Niagara frontier. We are happy to learn from him that the disturbances on the northern line have entirely subsided; and though a feeling very naturally exists among a great proportion of our citizens favorable to the cause of freedom abroad, as well as at home, a respect for our laws, and a desire to avoid any infraction of the amicable relations existing between our own and the British government, will prevent any interference in the internal relations of the Canadas.

The presence of gen. M. within a district of country where his services were so distinguished and important during the last war, has undoubtedly produced a very salutary influence; and we have no doubt a similar effect will result from his visitation to the western frontier.

[Saratoga (N. Y.) Sentinel of July 31.

Col. Worth. We are happy to perceive that col. Worth has been assigned by government to the command of the new regiment for the defence of the frontier; because no man can be better qualified for that important duty. We repeat, however, at the same time, only the general expression of regret that he will be necessarily called from associations to which he is endeared by so many and such high qualities. The Detroit Free Press pays a high and deserved compliment to col. Worth; than whom the service does not know a more brave, chivalric and capable officer. He has already taken his departure for the frontier. [Albany Argus.

STATE OF TRADE. The New York Gazette of Wednesday, says: Since it was settled by the late bank convention that a general resumption of specie payments should take place on the 13th of this month, a large number of merchants from Virginia and other southern states have made their appearance in our market, who had not been this way on business before since the suspension in 1837, in consequence of the depreciation of southern exchanges. They are buying pretty freely of goods, and there is a fair prospect of a large fall business, as the south and west are very bare of goods, and may soon be expected to be in as wholesome a state as they were two years ago.

VOL. IV.—Srg. 23.

From the N. Y. Express, August 1. Stocks have all gone up to-day. Not only the speculative stocks, but also all solid stocks stand better. The cause of this advance is owing to the prevailing sentiment that a better state of things is fast approaching. First there is a general desire to get hold of Biddle's bonds—next government securities. As these begin to disappear and become scarce, loans on stocks are desirable.

At present it is not a difficult thing to obtain any sum on stocks at 6 per cent. at a brokerage; as this description of securities become scarce, good business notes at 5 a 6 per cent per annum will begin to be in securities, money will be readily obtained on bond and mortgage. The instant this period arrives, there will be a new spring to business. Builders and real estate holders will obtain the means for setting mechanics in motion; all in good time we may expect that there will be a general improvement in all departments of trade and business.

Trade in Philadelphia. The Philadelphia Herald of Thursday says:

A number of merchants from the south have arrived to purchase goods, and there is a prospect, we are happy to say, of a fair business being done by our merchants this season.

Trade in Baltimore. Merchants from the south and west are in our market, making their purchases for the ensuing fall and winter business. The indications of an active trade are quite promising. During the past six months, Baltimore has done an unusually extensive business in the grocery branch—larger, in fact, than she has done for a number of years past. We need scarcely add that her merchants in that and in the other branches of trade, are ready to supply the wants of their friends in the interior on the same advantageous terms which they have heretofore offered. [Balt. American.

New Orleans, July 22. We may now be said to be on our summer establishment. Things have settled down into the dullness and monotony of the sickly season. Transactions are light and confined principally to the retail trade. Indeed business of all kinds is very much curtailed. The undertaker, and even the sexton has less to do than usual. The most industrious portion of the community are the laborers in the employment of the second municipality, who make rapid progress in the pavement of our streets, apparently regardless of the hot sun that burns upon them from morning to night. The fidelity with which this hardy class of citizens stick to their work, during all seasons, is admirable, and might be held up as an example to many of higher pretensions, who reap during harvest time, but when pain, sickness and death stalk over the field, are found among the missing. We have noticed also that a great deal of activity prevails among the mechanics. A great number of houses is going up in different parts of the city, which keeps a multitude of carpenters, bricklayers, &c. &c. employed. On the levee of course, a manifest change has taken place. The hum of business is silenced. The squadron of drays that formerly dashed along so furiously, dwindled down to a few teams. The steam boat wharves are nearly empty. A few black chimneys rise solitary from the water's edge, furlongs a part, where a month ago, they stood close and thick as the brick chimneys along our streets. The quantity of shipping is also rapidly diminishing, and many days will not elapse, ere our fleet of steam and canvass will be reduced to some dozen or twenty vessels, scattered along the margin of the stream for a distance of several miles. [Bulletin.

MESSRS. MAURY AND CAMPBELL. From the Baltimore American. Baltimore, July 19, 1838.

Gentlemen: In your paper of — inst. I perceive that you have copied from the Washington correspondent of the New York American an account of the unfortunate collision which took place in the house of representatives on Sunday morning, 8th inst. between Messrs. Campbell and Maury, of Tennessee. As that statement is wholly erroneous, and does great injustice to both the gentlemen, but especially to col. Maury, I take the liberty of briefly stating the facts as related to me by the hon. J. L. Williams, of Tennessee, who witnessed the whole occurrence.

Col. Maury was one of a large number of members who absented themselves from the house between 3 and 4 o'clock on Sunday morning (supposing all the important business to be closed,) and were brought back again by the sergeant-at-arms.

After the adjournment, about 8 o'clock, Mr. Campbell joined Messrs. Williams and Maury, who were conversing in a window of the lobby of the house. The two former were disposed to make merry at the proceedings of the house, but col. Maury made some pretty severe remarks upon the conduct of the members present in regard to the absentees. These general remarks, it appears, were applied personally by Mr. Campbell, and in the irritation of the moment he made an assault upon col. Maury. There were no epithets exchanged between them whatever, the statement of the correspondent to the contrary notwithstanding. The best feeling existed between the parties before the collision, and shortly after it Mr. C. called upon col. Maury at his room, made all due apologies, and attended upon him assiduously during the day.

Thus it appear that this little occurrence, which has been magnified into an enormous affair, was the result of an accidental misunderstanding operating upon nerves rendered peculiarly sensitive by a most wearying and irritating session. It might have happened to any one; and it is known that such occurrences are totally repugnant to the character of either gentleman. A TENNESSEAN.

GEN. GEORGE McDUFFIE (late governor of South Carolina, but better known as a distinguished representative in congress from that state,) passed through this city yesterday morning on his way to take passage at New York for Europe. We are very sorry to learn that his health is not as good as his friends could wish. [Nat. Intel. of yesterday.

Commodore Porter arrived at his residence in Chester, Pa., on Monday, the 23d ult., and was warmly welcomed by his friends and neighbors. It is said that after remaining a short time with his family he will return to Constantinople to resume the duties of his station as charge d'affaires.

Gen. Wool and governor Kent have returned to Bangor, having completed their reconnoissance of the north eastern frontier.

UNITED STATES BANK BONDS. The Philadelphia National Gazette of Monday afternoon says—It is rumored that the bond of the bank of the United States, due in 1839, for two millions of dollars, has been sold by the treasury department, at par, to Charles Macalister, esq., of this city.

The foregoing paragraph is copied into the U. S. Gazette of Tuesday morning, with the following remarks:

The above rumor, we are happy to say, is well founded. The same offer was made for the bond due in 1840, for a like amount, but declined, the secretary of the treasury not having decided that the public exigencies will require its sale.

The purchase, we understand, is for account of the United States Bank. We also understand that Mr. Macalister has effected a negotiation by which the third bond for two millions of dollars, will be liquidated in a manner equally acceptable to the government and to the bank.

We are truly gratified to hear of these arrangements. We hope, and, indeed, cannot doubt, that they are indicative of a better understanding between the contracting parties; and we congratulate the country upon this event, which we consider as equally creditable to the administration and to the bank, and which cannot fail to have a beneficial influence upon all the business relations of the union.

BANKS, CURRENCY, &c. The directors of the bank of the state of North Carolina announced in the Raleigh Register of the 23d ult. that their bank and its branches would, on the 1st of August next, resume the payment of their respective liabilities in specie.

Small bills. We learn that the small bills of all the banks in Maryland, are received at the respective banks in Baltimore, and will continue to be received as usual.

Bank of Tennessee. The Nashville Union of the 13th ult. says this institution has determined to receive the paper of all the Tennessee banks on deposite, in payment of debts, and for eastern exchange. This will be a great convenience to the trading community, as the rule at our other banks has been to receive none but their own notes in payment for checks or drafts on the eastern cities. The course of the bank of Tennessee will probably be followed by the other banks, which will tend materially to elevate the character of our paper, and to remove some of the difficulties attending the procurement of remittances.

The Nashville Whig contains a letter from a correspondent at Brandon, Miss., under the 12th July, in which, speaking of the Brandon Bank, he says—

Its circulation is very little over three millions, and in 90 days from this time it will have a million of specie in its vaults. It will be in a condition to resume specie payments as soon as any bank in Mississippi. Its debts are secured by the best securities in the state, and in short it is sustained by the most solvent planters this country holds. Owing to the course other banks have pursued in this state in refusing to receive its paper on deposit, it has greatly depreciated, and a re-action will take place in a very short time, which will place the paper of this institution equal to any in Mississippi.

The new Exchange Bank of Virginia, it will be seen by the annexed paragraph from the Norfolk Herald, of the 27th ult., is about to go into operation at Norfolk, with literally a golden capital.

The Exchange bank of Virginia. It affords us pleasure to state that Wright Southgate, Esq., cashier of this institution, arrived in the Baltimore boat yesterday morning, bringing with him the amount, in gold, of about $433,000, the proceeds of the treasury drafts held by the Pennsylvania bank of the United States to the credit of the Exchange bank.

As more than the amount of specie required by law to be held in its vaults prior to commencing operations, is now received, we may anticipate the issue of the proclamation of the governor as soon as the facts are officially communicated to him; and the bank will then assume its duties as an office of discount and deposit.

New York money market. The Express of Monday, 2 P. M., says—

It will be seen that stocks are firm, but without material change. There is a general impression that money will become very abundant. Indeed at the present time it is difficult for capitalists to employ their capital. Business paper is not to be had, and United States bond are becoming scarce.

The New York Express of Tuesday, 2 P. M. has the following items:

It is said that the United States branch will file their necessary papers for organizing of business to-morrow, and will immediately proceed to transacting business.

This is packet day, and the rate of exchange was fixed at 107 1-2 per cent. on London, and 527 1-2 on Paris. But a moderate amount of bills were sold; buyers are holding off for the steam ship.

It is the opinion of many intelligent men that banking in this country will undergo a very considerable change. Hitherto the legislature of every state in the union has been beset for acts of incorporation authorizing banking. The number already granted exceeds one thousand. The late law of the state of New York has placed the matter, in this state, under one general law. The whole matter therefore is beyond the reach of political or other favorites,—all are now equally at liberty to bank, provided they conform to provisions of the law. The principles of the scheme were well understood and forcibly argued by many leading and intelligent men. Yet it is exceedingly doubtful whether this great revolution in banking could have been brought about this year, had it not been for an accident, altogether unlooked for, and not connected with the subject.

While the measure was before the legislature the exposure of the usurious conduct of the Phenix Bank, as made public in this journal, was brought before them which decided the whole matter. The members, many of them who were in doubt, decided at once to throw the whole matter open to the public,—whatever was the cause of its final passage, it is now the law of the state, and under its provisions, three large companies are about to go into operation in this city, and others in different parts of the state. There is now an end to all application to the legislature for new charters, and hereafter all capital to be employed in banking must be under the new law.

The leading principles of one of the new companies is, to found it on trust property—principally on real estate. A false notion is entertained by many, that they intend to bank on real estate. Not so;—the strength, solvency and power of the establishment is founded on real estate; that is, they intend to build up a credit sufficiently strong to enable them to issue bonds that will command a ready sale in European markets. The money realized on these bonds they will invest in this country on bonds and mortgages at 7 per cent.; or in other words will borrow money in England at 4 and 5 per cent., and lend it here at 6 and 7 per cent. This is now done to an immense extent by trust companies existing by special act of the legislature; and if it can be done to advantage by companies having two millions capital, it surely may be done by other companies, if equally well managed, with larger capitals.

If the experiment should answer in this state, it is not only probably, but almost certain, that the example will be followed by most or all of the other states. Whatever changes there may be in the mode of banking and in its principles, there will be none in the circulating medium of the country. The local incorporated institutions, scattered as they are over the great extent of our country, will issue the great circulating medium, the present bank notes of the country. These institutions, therefore, enjoying the whole circulation, will continue, where they are well conducted, to be as profitable as ever.

FROM FLORIDA. We learn from the "Globe" of Tuesday night, that recent despatches received from the commanding general in Florida, of July 13th, at the office of the adjutant general, advise the department of the measures which have been recently taken for the effectual defence of the neighborhood of the Okefenokee swamp.

General Taylor states, in his report, that he shall "establish a post near the mouth of the Shwanonchee river, to be occupied by one company of dragoons and one of infantry, and that he shall locate another company of infantry between that and Traders' Hill, on the St. Mary's river. One company of dragoons has been ordered to the opposite side of Okefenokee swamp, in the vicinity of Waresboro. Major Dearborn will select positions for the two latter. These four companies general Taylor believes will, with the addition of one of militia, just organized along the Florida and Georgia line, be sufficient to give ample protection to the inhabitants in the vicinity of the swamp, as long as they can occupy the country. If they should not, however, major Dearborn is empowered to muster into the service such additional companies of militia as he may think proper.

The five companies referred to, as well as any that may be called into service, are placed under the command of captain B. L. Beall, second dragoons.

General Taylor further states that a depot of provisions, &c. has been established at Traders' Hill, to be furnished from Black creek. Captain Waite, acting quartermaster, has been ordered to that place, to take steps necessary for supplying the post around the Okefenokee, as well as the troops which may be called into service in that quarter.

From the best information he could obtain, gen. Taylor believes that there are not more than forty or fifty Indian warriors in the swamp, and they are probably refugee Creeks from the emigrating tribe of that name.

The Tallahassee "Floridian" of the 21st ult. contains the following:

The Seminoles. Our latest accounts from the frontiers state that the Indians, apparently feeling insecure in their former retreats, are generally making their way north, and concentrating in the Okefenokee swamp in Georgia. Several depredations, and one or two murders, have been committed in that vicinity. General Taylor is making arrangements to prevent their escape again into Florida, and has established posts on the borders of the swamp. We have heard it stated that gen. Floyd, has been placed in command of a regiment of Georgians to dislodge the enemy from the swamp. From the character of the Georgia troops, under such an experienced officer as general Floyd, we have strong hopes that something decisive will be the result of this expedition. The country is said to be healthy, and the season propitious for the campaign.

The citizens of Columbia county, we are informed by colonel Brown, have generally left their homes and plantations, in consequence of the frequent appearance of the Indians.

THE SUPREME COURT. It is probably not known to most of our readers—for until yesterday it was not known to us—that there is a rule term of the supreme court held, according to law, at the court room in the capitol annually on the first Monday in August. At this court it is made the business of the circuit judge for the fourth judicial district to attend. For many years past, the business of the court has been entirely pro forma, requiring neither argument by counsel, nor decision by the court; at the attendance of the judge has not always been deemed necessary. We understand, however, that chief justice Taney, now judge of the fourth circuit will be on the bench on Monday next, the term day; and that the highly interesting case, the removal from office, avowedly without cause of the clerk of the circuit court for the District of Louisiana, will come before him, upon a motion show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue to that court to restore the old clerk to the discharge of the duties of his office. [Nat. Intel.

ARRIVAL OF THE CONSTITUTION. The United States frigate Constitution, commodore Elliot, arrived in Hampton Rhodes on Tuesday, from the Mediterranean, and 29 days from Madeira.

List of officers of the Constitution.

Com. J. D. Elliot, commander-in-chief.
Wm. Boerum, esq., commander.
1st lieut. Oscar Bullus.
2d do Charles H. McBlair.
3d do Henry A. Steele.
4th do Henry Darcantel.
5th do Percival Drayton.
6th do Bushrod W. Hunter.
Acting master, Wm. J. Muse.
2d do do Wm. S. Ringgold.
Fleet surgeon, B. Washington.
Surgeon, Samuel Barrington.
Purser, J. N. Hambleton.
Lieutenant of marines, J. L. C. Hardy.
Commodore's secretary, Thomas Wells.
Assistant surgeon, D. C. McLeod.
Passed midshipmen, E. Middleton, D. F. Dulaney.
Midshipmen, J. B. Carter, E. C. Anderson, J. H. Jenkins, E. E. Rogers, C. E. Fleming, Charles Wager, W. C. B. F. Porter.
Boatswain, Robert Whitaker.
Gunner, Thomas Riley.
Carpenter, Francis Sague.
Sailmaker, N. C. L'Hommiedieu.
Passengers, passed midshipman James L. Healy and Mr. H. H. Kuhn, Mahon.

DEATH OF JUDGE BRUYN. The Albany Argus announces the death, by consumption, of the late Andrew D. W. Bruyn, member of congress from the district composed of Tioga and Tomkins counties, in this state. Judge B. was a friend of the national and state administration. "He has filled says the Argus, "several official stations with high credit to himself, and advantageously to the public interests; and in all his relations, as a citizen, a judicial or legislative life, and among his family and friends, he was greatly esteemed for his personal worth, and for an exemplary rectitude of life and character." [Journal of Commerce.

FROM CANADA. Col. Moreau was tried by jury at Niagara, convicted and sentenced to be hung on the 30th August, when 30 more will be tried.

George Cooley, an American, was tried and convicted of treason.

The Montreal papers contradict the report that lord Durham had declared himself in favor of the union of the province.

It is said that lord Durham has recommended the British government to loan 250,000l. to the Welland canal, and 250,000l. for the improvement of the St. Lawrence. A regiment of Highlanders arrived at Quebec on the 24th; they appeared in their national uniform, and attracted considerable attention.

Navy Island. A corps of Woodcutters is now busily engaged in clearing Navy Island of its timber. This is done we presume, in order to prevent trouble which might arise from its future occupation by a hostile or insurgent force. The island is one of the most beautiful in the river, and would make a most delightful farm, being easy of access of surpassing fertility, and commanding a view not exceeded in grandeur by any in the world. It covers an area of about 300 acres, and could have been purchased of the British government last year for a mere song, but now probably could not be bought at any price. [Buffalo Com. Adr.

FROM BUENOS AYRES. Advices to the 3d June were received at New York on Tuesday, of the arrival of the ship Nile. General Alvear, Buenos Ayres Minister to the United States, came passenger in the Nile. Captain Hepburn informs us that governor Rosas had called a special session of congress to take into consideration the subject of their differences with France, and the blockade of the port by a French squadron. It was the prevailing opinion when he left, that congress would commend an immediate declaration of war.

It was generally believed at Buenos Ayres that a declaration of war against France would follow. The Nile has brought out as passengers, gen. Alvear, minister plenipotentiary from Buenos Ayres to the United States, and his son.

By way of inducement to foreigners to run the hazard of the blockade, a reduction of duties, equal to 33 1-3 per cent., has been declared on all goods imported either by land or water.

FROM MEXICO. The United States sloop war Vandalia has arrived at Pensacola from a cruise of seventy-four days in the Gulf of Mexico and on the coast of Texas, having visited Vera Cruz, Tampico, Matamoras, and Galveston.

The ports of Mexico were very closely watched by the French cruisers. The contemplated attack on the castle of San Juan de Ulloa has for the present been abandoned, the baron Defaudis, the French minister, having sailed for France. Vessels from the United States and Cuba will not be warned off before being subject to capture, a sufficient time having elapsed for the blockade to become known.

Commodore Bazoele, in the frigate L'Herminee, is at anchor under the island of Sacrificios; and one brig and two schooners, and the frigate's launches, are cruising close in with the shoals, and frequently within musket-shot of the castle. One brig is off Alvarado, which port was opened on the 18th of May by the Mexican government. The cruisers off Tampico and Matamoras lay at anchor close in with the harbor, and other vessels are cruising along the coast between these ports.

All appeared quiet in Texas. The British packet, which sailed from Vera Cruz on the 27th of May, had been detained a week after the regular day of sailing, at the request of the Mexican government, for the purpose of taking out a request to the British government to become mediator between the French and Mexican governments. The best feelings have thus far been kept up between the French squadron and our own. While the Vandalia lay under Sacrificios, the French and American officers were in the constant reciprocation of services and courtesies. [N. O. Bulletin].

The Washington Globe states that information has reached the department of state, of a decree having been issued by the Mexican government on the 17th of May last, opening to foreign commerce the ports of Alvarado, Puxpan, Cabo Rojo, Soto la Marina, and Isla del Carmen, on the Gulf of Mexico; and Huatulco and Manzanillo on the Pacific; the former from the 15th of June, and the latter from the 15th of July.

CHILE. From the Globe of Wednesday night. Information has reached the department of state, from the charge d'affaires of the United States at Santiago de Chile, of the Chilean government having decreed the blockade of the ports of Callao, Chorillan, and Ancon, from the 18th of April last. The commencement of the blockade was subsequently put off to the 25th, and on the 19th, five Chilean vessels of war sailed from Valparaiso, for the purpose of carrying the decree into effect.

FROM TEXAS. The editors of the New Orleans Commercial Bulletin have received Texas papers to the 20th ult. Things remained quiet, and no important event had transpired in the country. The newspapers were chiefly occupied in canvassing the merits of the respective candidates for the presidency and vice presidency. The death of the hon. James Collingsworth, chief justice of Texas, is mentioned. The bar had a meeting at Houston, to express their esteem for his character, and regret for the bereavement the public sustained by his decease.

The Mexicans, driven by stress of blockade, have taken possession of Corpus Christi, where goods and supplies are landed and forwarded to the interior. In consequence of this intelligence, an express had been forwarded to the president at Nacogdoches. In taking possession of this place, the Mexicans will, to some extent, evade the blockade of their ports by France. The Texans appear to be very much exasperated at this renewal of hostilities, and talk loudly of marching to Matamoras. Public meetings had been held at Brazoria and Matagorda, where resolutions were passed to raise a volunteer force to be forthwith put in motion against Matamoras, should the policy of the government not be adverse to the proposed measure. The feelings of the people have been greatly irritated, by depredations committed on the frontier by the Mexicans. A company of two hundred recently entered Goliad, and stole all the horses and mules about the place. On their retreat they overtook seven wagons, loaded with merchandize, which they pillaged, killing one driver and wounding another. The value of the goods amounted to several thousand dollars. President Houston is severely censured for his supineness. Congress had appropriated $50,000 for the equipment and sustenance of a body of cavalry; but the first dragoon has not been enlisted for the protection of the frontier. It is stated, also, that the Camanchees are becoming hostile, having killed a Mr. Campbell on the Rio Frio and stolen a number of horses from the Rancheros, near Bexar. Two or three parties of traders who left that place several weeks since for the Camanchee villages have not returned since, and many suppose that they have been killed or made prisoners.

HAVANA. The following letter is published in a Charleston, S. C. paper:

Havana, July 14. Of course ere this you are aware of Tacon having left us; he has been succeeded in the governorship of the island by Espeleta, a fine man, but without the firmness of the former. However, things go on pretty well. We shall shortly have all the church property put up for sale. Commissioners are now arranging the affairs of our old friars, in a way not at all satisfactory to those pious men.

The necessities of the government at Madrid, for the extraordinary expenses of the civil war, have compelled them to levy a subsidy on this island, for $2,500,000, but how it is to be raised is not yet determined, meanwhile drafts for the whole amount have been sold to Rothschild & Son, London, by the treasury of Madrid, on the treasury of this place, but alas the money as yet is "non est inventus." The intendante here, in order to meet them, has tried to raise a public loan, offering thirteen per centum per annum interest, and giving as guarantee, the capital of the Bank of Juan Fernandes and other security; but there is no public confidence, and he found that in all the island he could not get offers for more than $20,000 even on these conditions; the consequence is money is scarce with the government, and the progress of the rail road is stopped, and contractors and agents, who have been expressly sent for from England, are turned adrift without a moment's warning.

The editor of the Charleston Mercury has received the following account of the celebration of the late anniversary by the American residents at Havana.

Havana, 4th July, 1838.

Pursuant to previous arrangements, the American residents in the city of Havana, met to celebrate the anniversary of their national Independence, and partook of a dinner prepared for the occasion by Mr. Butts of the Union hotel.

The meeting was organized by choosing the following gentlemen as officers:

Col. O. H. Throop, president.
Dr. E. D. G. Bumstead, 1st vice president.
M. Ant'o. Herrera, 2d vice president.
H. A. Gibson, secretary.

After a short, but pithy address from the president, the Declaration of the Independence of the United States was read by M. A. Herrera, of Florida, 2d vice president; after which the company partook of the luxuries with which the boards were profusely loaded, and blest the host for the excellency of the repast.

Among the toasts drunk on the occasion were the following—

By Dr. Bumstead—The signers of the Declaration of the Independence of the United States—Though no longer in the land of the living, the remembrance of their glorious deeds will ever teach the Americans what industry and perseverance can effect under the most desponding circumstances.

By M. Ant'o. Herrera, esq.—"The American and Spanish flags."—May the friendship existing between the two flags still continue, and may they long waive as emblems of peace and intercourse between the two nations.

THE STEAMBOAT WASHINGTON. From the Poughkeepsie, (N. Y.) Journal. We prefer to give the following unvarnished tale in the words of the writer himself, as they very forcibly convey to the reader a knowledge of facts with which the public should be fully acquainted. It always happens, when steamboat disasters occur, that some will be found who will lend their aid to screen the captain or engineer from the censure he deserves—though we believe that very few indeed are the instances where those who have charge of the boat are blameless. All or nearly all of the recent steamboat calamities are chargeable to gross negligence, or what is worse, to palpable mismanagement. With the writer of the account which we give below, we are not personally acquainted, nor are we particularly conversant with the statements in relation to the burning of the Washington, which have heretofore been given to the public, but we would take occasion to remark, that the communication of Mr. Lown bears on its face the impression of truth—and is particularly worthy of attention, coming as it does, from one who had the opportunity of knowing what actually occurred.

To the editor of the Journal:

Sir—I have just returned to Red Hook. I was a passenger in the steamboat George Washington, at the time of the disaster, together with my wife and family. We lost five children, and my wife was burned so that we could not move her for some days. We remained at Silver Creek. I think I should say nothing about the affair of the Washington, but I have seen so many statements, without truth, I think it my duty to say something. Some papers state that there is no blame laid to the captain. That, sir, is the captain's statement, and he has got a few of the cabin passengers to enter their names to it.—I know that they were driving the boat with all possible speed. There was a passenger on board who told the captain he would pay him one hundred dollars to drive the boat all he could and not land at any other port. That was immediately after landing at Ashtabula, Ohio. He had passengers to land at Erie and Dunkirk. In my presence he told these passengers he would refund their money, board them, and pay their fare back to their respective landings. He did not land at either place.

The captain also says "the wheel ropes were burned off and she became unmanageable." That is not true. The boat was stopped one hour and twenty minutes before the fire broke out on deck. At the time she stopped, she had twenty inches of steam on her. The engineer was a young man just married. His wife was on board. She said her husband stopped the boat to send her ashore in the yawl, so that she might be saved. The boat was hoisted out, and in lowering they filled her with water, and were fifty minutes in bailing her. He never tried to start her after that. The captain and all the crew left the boat, and did not leave a man on board to take charge of her. The passengers were left to do the best they could for themselves. He also says "there were from fifteen to twenty lost." There were from fifty to sixty to my certain knowledge. The man who offered the captain the one hundred dollars, lives in Genesee, Genesee county, New York. I do not remember his name. This was on Friday, and on Monday he had a suit in court, and said it would be five thousand dollars damage if he could not be there in time.

I saved myself by swimming three miles with a child three years old. My wife also jumped over board with a child in her arms. The child was drowned but floated on the water forty minutes, and was taken into the boat.

I wish you would write out my statement as it should be and publish it.

Yours respectfully,

WILLIAM LOWN.

Red Hook, June 15, 1838.

LETTER FROM MR. BIDDLE. The following letter was addressed by Mr. Biddle to the town council of Reading, Pa.

"Bank of the United States, June, 22, 1838.

"Gentlemen: I have had the honor of receiving your letter of the 31st ultimo, requesting from this bank a loan, for three years, of twenty thousand dollars, in silver, for the purpose of redeeming the notes issued by the borough of Reading, for sums less than one dollar. The board of directors approve entirely of the object of the loan, and were disposed to grant it with pleasure, when they received a published remonstrance against it by the "committee of safety of the borough of Reading," who declare that "it has been ascertained that the loan could have been intended for no other purpose than to sell the town to the said bank, and to put our citizens and their posterity into the power of the Philadelphia money king." I am sure that the worthy members of the committee of safety will, on reflection, perceive that they have been misled by their zeal in ascribing to the town council a design to sell their constituents, or to the bank the least desire to make such an acquisition; and I am quite sure that the respectable inhabitants of Reading are wholly incapable of being influenced by the sordid motives ascribed to them. Nevertheless, as there seems to be so much opposition to the measure, and as its adoption may give alarm to a portion of your community, it is deemed most proper to decline the proposed loan.

Very respectfully yours,

NICHOLAS BIDDLE, president.

LETTER FROM THE MAYOR OF BRISTOL. The New York Express contains the following:

We take great pleasure in publishing the following from the ancient city of Bristol, communicated to the mayor of New York. With Bristol were many of the earliest commercial associations of the city of New York, and it will give all persons great pleasure to renew them.

Bristol, 8th June, 1838.

Sir: As mayor of the city of Bristol, I have the greatest pleasure in transmitting you copies of certain resolutions, passed unanimously at a very numerous meeting of the merchants of this city, held at our Guildhall yesterday, at which I was called upon to take the chair.

That the feelings of cordiality and affection between the two countries, which the success of the late enterprise has manifested, may continue and increase, is the proudest wish of

Sir, your most obedient servant,

JOHN NEILE HABERFIELD.

Resolved, 1st. That this city hails with delight the opening of steam communication between Great Britain and the United States of America, as the certain means of drawing closer the intimacy, and of promoting the prosperity and happiness, of both countries.

2d. That whilst justly proud of having been the port in which this mode of connection between the old and new world has taken its rise, Bristol is deeply sensible that the signal success of her enterprise is mainly to be attributed to the warm feeling with which its accomplishment was received on the shores of America, and this city most gratefully and eagerly acknowledges the generous kindness and splendid hospitalities showered upon the "Great Western" by the government, the civic authorities, and the inhabitants of the United States."

STATE ELECTIONS. A correspondent of the New York E. Post has the following memoranda of elections for members to take place during the present year:

Missouri elects two, on the first Monday in August; Illinois three, on the same day; Vermont five, on the first Tuesday in September; Maine eight, on the second Monday of the same month; Georgia nine, on the first Monday in October; Arkansas one, on the same day; South Carolina nine, on the second Monday in October; New Jersey six, on the second Tuesday in October; Ohio nineteen, on the same day; New York forty, on the first Monday in November; Massachusetts twelve on the second Monday in November, and Delaware one, on the second Tuesday in the same month. (This list is not complete.)

The congressional terms of the following senators will expire on the 4th March, 1839: Benjamin Swift of Vermont, whig; Daniel Webster of Mass. do; Asher Robins of Rhode Island, do; S. L. Southard of New Jersey, do; Samuel Mc Kean of Penn. do; Richard H. Bayard of Delaware, do; William D. Merrick, of Maryland, do; John M. Niles, of Connecticut, Van Buren; Trotter, of Miss. do, Felix Grundy, of Tennessee, do; Thomas Morris, of Ohio, do; John Tipton, of Indiana, do, and Thomas Hart Benton, of Missouri, do; N. P. Fallmadge, of New York, conservative; and Wm. C. Rives, of Virginia, do.

General elections for members of the state legislatures, governors, &c. will also be held in the following states, viz:

Illinois, } first Monday in August.
Indiana, }
Missouri, }

North Carolina. The elections for governor and the state legislature, take place, as follows:

For the counties of Franklin, Granville, Warren, Nash, Edgecomb, Beaufort, Pitt, Washington, Hyde, and Tyrrell, on Thursday, July, 26.

For the counties of Johnston, Wayne, Lenor, Craven, Carteret, Jones and Greene, on Thursday, August 2.

In all the other counties, on the general election day Thursday, August 9.

Tennessee, } 1st Thursday in August.
Kentucky, }

Vermont—first Tuesday in September.

Maine—second Monday in September.

Georgia, 1st Monday in October.

Maryland, 1st Wednesday in October.

South Carolina, 2d Monday in October.

New Jersey, 2d Tuesday in October.

Pennsylvania, 2d Tuesday in October.

Ohio, 2d Tuesday in October.

Mississippi, } 1st Monday in November.
New York, }

Massachusetts, 2d Monday in November.

Delaware, 2d Tuesday in November.

Arkansas, 1st Monday in November.

MR. MAELZEL. We see that Mr. Maelzel, whose fame is connected with the re-production of the automaton chess player, died recently, on his passage from Havana to this city. His ingenuity seemed to breathe life and thought into the works of his own hand, but it could not retain the breath of his own nostrils; and the kindly smile that he had for children, will be no more lighted on earth; and the furrow of thought that marked his brow as he inspected the movements of the famous Turk, will no more convey intelligence—he has gone, we hope where the music of his harmonicons will be exceeded, but his body will rest beneath the blue waves of the Atlantic till the "last trumpet" shall sound for the convocation of quick and dead.—Philadelphia U. S. Gazette.

DEATH OF A VETERAN. Died, in Whitley county, (Ky.) on the 30th June last, captain Charles Gatliff, aged about 90 years.

Captain Gatliff was an early adventurer in Kentucky. In 1779, he settled with his family in Logan's station; he shortly after assisted in erecting Riddle's station, upon Hingston; joined captain Hagan, and served upon the expedition commanded by colonel Bowman against the Shawnees, on Little Miami; they were defeated at Chillicothe.

In 1780, he was appointed captain of Martin's station, which was taken and destroyed by the British and Indians, under the command of colonel Bird, of Detroit, and the inhabitants taken prisoners; his family, a wife and four children, were taken. He was absent at the time of the surrender, and on his return, joined to serve under colonel Clark, being the second expedition from Kentucky. He was appointed a spy and pilot for the army by colonel Logan, had a battle at Pickaway and returned. He then took command of Bryant's Station, and after some short time, he was appointed a spy to ascertain the movements of the British and Indians at Limestone. After he returned, relinquished all military service, and went to Virginia, in company with colonel Logan and colonel Daniel Boone. He returned in the spring of 1781. Went to Virginia the fall following. In 1793 he received intelligence of his family returning from captivity. He met them below Staunton, and returned with them to Kentucky, and settled in Baughman's station. In 1786, he was appointed a spy and pilot by colonel Logan, in which capacity he went against the Shawnees and Delawares combined. In 1788, he commanded as spy against the Creeks. In 1790, he served as spy and pilot for Harmer's campaign against the combined hostile tribes collected on the Miami of the lakes, at the junction of the St. Joseph's and St. Mary's; during this expedition he was appointed to command the pioneers; they had a severe engagement with a loss of half their men killed, in which he received a wound in the left shoulder; thence marched to Cincinnati and was disbanded. He served in all the campaigns ever raised in Kentucky, with the exception of general Clark's, at the Blue Licks, in 1782. He was in four general engagements. The different skirmishes with Indians is not known. He was a man of rare qualities; fond of the chase. The Indians viewed him as a deadly enemy whom they never could surprise. He was of a penetrating mind, manly, hospitable and kind, and died as he had lived, much esteemed. A. C.

DEMOCRATIC REVIEW. The next, or ninth, number of the Democratic Review will be published on the 1st of September, commencing the third volume. The first number of the Democratic Review having been published in October, 1837, in advance of the regular monthly issue, commencing January 1838, it becomes necessary to intermit one month's publication, so as to bring the usual series of twelve numbers within the present year. Advantage will be taken of this delay to complete in the next, or September number, the "history of the late session of congress," executed in the same manner as the "history of the extra session," published in the January and February numbers of the Democratic Review.

Ⓔ—Papers exchanging with the Democratic Review are requested to copy the above.

PIRACY. Capt. Cobb, of the ship Hibernia, at New York from Liverpool, reports that on the 6th ult. at 4 o'clock p. m. he spoke the brig Isabella of London, 150 days from Sydney N. S. Wales, for London; the Isabella the day previous had been boarded by a Spanish piratical brig of 8 guns, full of armed men: took her spare sails, cordage, canvas and twine; also robbed the passengers and seamen of all their clothing and every thing that answered their purpose; the captain further informed that on the following morning he spoke the U. S. sloop of war Cyane, capt. Percival, from Boston, bound to the Mediterranean, who immediately hauled up to the south eastward in pursuit of her.

The New York Gazette contains the following additional case of piracy. Captain Winehenback, of the brig Ceylon, from Marseilles, informs that on the 4th July, lat. 36. 13, N. long. 47. 20, W. saw a suspicious looking schooner ahead with fore and main topsails, standing south, and at half-past 6, P. M. she hoisted a Portuguese flag, and fired a shot across our bows. Shortly after she fired three more guns, when the brig hove too. She came along side, and ordered our boat to come on board.

The captain and two seamen got into the boat and went along side the pirate. They immediately manned the boat with five men, and came on board of the Ceylon. Finding no money, they took a box of wine belonging to the cargo, and what water and provisions they wanted, and left her. The brig had on board $1500, which the captain threw into a cask of water and saved.

AN AUSTRIAN DUKE COMING. The editor of the Boston Atlas has a letter from an officer in the frigate United States, dated Trieste, May 8th, which states that the Austrian government were getting a frigate ready for sea, to bring an arch duke of Austria to this country. The officers of the United States had been treated with greatest attention at Trieste. The United States was to sail for Corfu in a few days, and afterwards to Smyrna.

WEST POINT. In publishing the report of the board of visitors, we accidentally omitted the following:

I concur in the above report, except so much as commends the system of moral instruction, and recommends that a "company" of dragoons be stationed there, and the appointment of an assistant professor, who must be a clergyman.

J. D. WESTON, Ohio.

LIGHTNING. More buildings, &c. were struck with lightning, during the extensive shower of Friday, July 20th, than in any previous shower within our remembrance. We have already mentioned the following casualties which occurred, and they are doubtless but a small part of the whole number. Of course, great numbers of trees were struck, of which no mention is made in the papers.

Barns struck and burnt	8
Houses struck	9
Do. and burnt	1
Stack of hay burnt	1
Loco-foco hickory pole struck	1
School-house struck	1
Lady deprived of her shoes	1
Men knocked down	2
Cows killed	6
Oxen killed	2
Horse killed	1
Bed and bedstead torn to pieces	1
Boots unsoled	2
Boot-leg torn open	1
Man rendered totally blind	1
Panes of glass broken by hail	1000.

It is remarkably that every barn reported as struck, was burnt; while only one house was burnt, out of ten struck. This fact may be accounted for by the reason of the combustible materials with which barns are generally filled. Not a single human life is known to have been lost, although nine of the houses struck were inhabited.

[New York Journal of Commerce.]

THE PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM. It is too often the case that objects of interest within our reach, do not receive the notice to which they are entitled. When they are permanent, and can be seen at any time, a portion of the public at least are apt to be so far indifferent about the matter, as to register it in memory as something to be attended to hereafter; and thus, strangers, on a visit of inspection, frequently become better acquainted with the actual curiosities of a place, than many of its inhabitants, and it often occurs that this species of knowledge about home affairs is chiefly gained by the resident of a great city in playing the part of a cicerone to his friends from other places. In many instances perhaps this indifference is excusable, but it would argue a great lack of creditable pride as to the character of our city, if it were manifest in reference to the Philadelphia museum in its new location. In any other great town, such an establishment would be a matter for continued boasting, and certainly it affords cause enough for indulgence in that respect.

The collection composing this museum, the result chiefly of individual enterprise and untiring energy on the part of the late venerable Mr. Peale, is well known as by far the largest in the United States, and is in some respects richer and better selected than the most celebrated in Europe. Herefore, it has never been so placed as to be exhibited to advantage, neither the State House nor the arcade being adapted to the purpose; but now it is contained in a new and magnificent structure, displaying it in an admirable manner, while the building itself is an honor and an ornament to the city. Works of this character are generally constructed in America under the dictates of a niggardly spirit. It is the practice where science and the liberal arts are concerned, to be content with something that is said to "do well enough" without regard to the future. But the new museum is not of this character. The gentlemen at whose cost it was erected, have entered into the matter with the proper disposition, and their liberal views have been ably seconded by Mr. Holden, the architect of the building.

The edifice is two hundred and forty feet in length, by seventy in breadth. The great saloon occupying the second story, is of these dimensions, of course deducting the thickness of the walls; and its immense size, with the taste of its arrangements, and beauty of embellishment, will of itself abundantly reward the spectator for his visit. Nothing at all comparable to it, is to be found in the union. It is lighted by very large windows extending from the floor to the ceiling, and a spacious gallery passes round it. The cases are so placed as to be examined with ease and comfort, leaving the great promenade without the slightest interruption to its majestic sweep, except the pedestal upon which the enormous skeleton of the mammoth is mounted. At the east end of the hall, the wall is covered with a beautiful oriental scene painted by Russell Smith, at the foot of which, within a railing, the elephant and rhinoceros are placed, as if again sporting in their native jungles. The cases containing the other stuffed animals have likewise an appropriate scene painted at the back, adding materially to the effect. The curiosities from various countries are arranged according to the geographical distinctions, and among them, few will attract greater attention than those connected with the explorations of the western wilderness, the very sleds and Indian dresses used by Lewis and Clark, being carefully preserved. The gallery of portraits, consisting of upwards of two hundred original likenesses, is of inestimable value, giving, as it does, the "counterfeit presentments" of nearly all the distinguished warriors and statesmen of the revolution, there being no less than three portraits of Washington, one taken soon after Braddock's defeat, the other after the battle of Trenton, and the third while he was president. A number of the prominent officers during the last war, both naval and military, as well as all other celebrated men, are in this collection.

On the lower floor is another very large room, intended for the reception of Mr. Dunn's immense collection of Chinese curiosities; and adjoining it, is the lecture room, capable of accommodating a thousand persons, and so arranged that every one can have a clear uninterrupted view of the lecturer and his experiments.

Altogether, this museum is one of the chief "lions" of Philadelphia; and every one should take occasion to pay it an early visit. [Pennsylvanian.]

CORONATION ITEMS. "The prettiest sight in the Abbey was the queen's 'body guard' of maids of honor, all dressed alike, simply and in good taste. There were some shocking frights, male and female, with coronets."

"When poor old lord Rolle rolled down the steps of the throne, a 'distinguished foreigner' was told that to roll down the steps of the throne at the coronation, was the feudal tenure by which he held his barony and immense estates. The information was gravely recorded in a note-book."

"The queen (who went through her part extremely well) looked sadly fatigued towards the close of it; and frequently put her hand to her head, as if the crown sat uneasily on it."

The value of the jewels on the Queen's crown is estimated at £111,000.

The present regalia of England are not of very remote antiquity, for, in the wars of king Charles the first's reign, the former crowns, &c. were either lost, sold, or destroyed; and those which are now used were first manufactured for the coronation of Charles the second. The regalia, collectively speaking, consist of five crowns, as many sceptres, four swords, two rings, one golden orb, one pair of golden spurs, various splendid robes, and a golden vessel and spoon for the anointing.

The crown in which the queen appeared at the coronation is exceedingly costly and elegant: the design is much more tasteful than that of the crown of George the fourth and William the fourth, which has been broken up. The old crown, made for the former of these monarchs, weighed upwards of 7lbs., and was much too large for the head of her present majesty. The new crown weighs little more than 8 lbs. It is composed of hoops of silver, enclosing a cap of deep blue velvet; the hoops are completely covered with precious stones, surmounted with a ball, covered with small diamonds, and having a Maltese cross of brilliants on the top of it. The cross has in its centre a splendid sapphire; the rim of the crown is clustered with brilliants, and ornamented with fleur-de-lis and Maltese crosses, equally rich. In the front of the Maltese cross, which is in front of the crown, is the enormous heart-shaped ruby, once worn by the chivalrous Edward the black prince. Beneath this, in the circular rim, is a large oblong sapphire. There are many other precious gems, emeralds, rubies, and sapphires, and several small clusters of drop pearls. The lower part of the crown is surrounded with ermine.

The following is an estimate of the value of the different jewels contained in the late magnificent diadem, the "queen's rich crown," and from which the present one, manufactured by Messrs. Rundell and Bridge, is composed, and which her majesty wore on Thursday:

Twenty diamonds round the circle,	£1,500 each,	£30,000
Two large centre diamonds,	£2,000 each,	4,000
Fifty-four smaller diamonds, placed at the angles of the former,		200
Four crosses, each composed of twenty-five diamonds,		12,000
Four large diamonds on the tops of the crosses,		40,000
Twelve diamonds contained in the fleur-de-lis,		10,000
Eighteen smaller diamonds contained in the same,		2,000
Pearls, diamonds, &c., on the arches and crosses,		10,000
One hundred and forty-one diamonds on the mound,		500
Twenty-six diamonds on the upper cross,		2,000
Two circles of pearls about the rim,		300
		£111,000

Notwithstanding such an uncommon mass of jewelry, independent of the gold velvet cap, ermine, &c., this crown weighed only 19 ounces 10 penny weights; it measured seven inches in height from the gold circle to the upper cross, and its diameter at the rim was five inches.

CASE OF CONTEMPT.

REPORTED FOR THE BALTIMORE PATRIOT.

Baltimore City Court.

The court on Saturday July 14th, 1838, passed the following order:

"BALTIMORE CITY COURT, July 14, 1838.

"On motion of the attorney for the state, it is ordered that Josiah Baily, jr. esq. a member of the bar of this court, show cause on the 21st day of July instant, why attachment should not issue against him for contempt, for having written and caused to be published in a paper called the Sun, the following address to the citizens of Baltimore, having relation to the trial of a cause now depending in this court, and bearing date 13th July, instant:

"To the citizens of Baltimore. In behalf of an unfortunate young man, now confined in the jail of this city, charged with an offence, the highest known to the laws of God and man, I make this solemn appeal to an enlightened, just, and humane community.

It is well known that the trial of William Stewart, indicted for the murder of his late father, Benjamin Stewart, has been postponed until the next term of Baltimore city court. I trust it is also well known, that the accused was anxious for an immediate trial, and was averse to its postponement. I myself insisted that he should not be tried at this time. I considered that justice required that the excessive public indignation should subside, which most unhappily had been enkindled against him; and I also considered that time might afford an opportunity for the discovery of the true author of this most dreadful and horrid murder.

I am convinced, beyond a doubt, that the blood stained murderer of Benjamin Stewart is yet unsuspected by this community. I am convinced that the fiendish wolf is yet couched in his den, undiscovered, covered with the blood of the unfortunate dead. I pray that God, in his infinite justice, may yet bring to light the infernal murderer, now cloaked in darkness, unknown, unsuspected, and concealed.

Citizens of Baltimore! will you condemn this young man, before you know that he is guilty? Citizens of the monumental city! far-famed for your intelligence and justice, give him, I beseech you, a fair and impartial trial. In the sacred name of justice, I entreat you make every effort to discover the guilty murderer, and punish not, I pray you, the innocent. Truth is the first law of Heaven, let it not, O let it not be trampled in the dust.

JOSIAH BAILY, JR.
For William Stewart.

Baltimore, July 13, 1838.

"And it is further ordered, that a copy of the above be served on Josiah Baily, jr. esq. on or before the said 21st instant."

To which order, the following answer of Josiah Baily, jr. esq. was filed on Saturday, the 21st July, 1838:

"In the matter of Josiah Baily, jr. esq. Baltimore city court—Rule to show cause why attachment should not issue against him."

The answer of Josiah Baily, jr., to the rule of this court of the 14th instant, to show cause why an attachment should not issue against him for a contempt, for having written and caused to be published in a paper called the Sun, an address to the citizens of Baltimore, dated the 13th of the same month, having relation to the trial of a cause then pending in the said court, and a copy of which address makes a part of the said rule, respectfully states to the court that he admits the writing and publishing of the said address, and that his sole design in the publication, was to subdue the great popular prejudice which he was informed and believed, was entertained against the accused William Stewart, and which threatened, if not quieted, to deprive him of a fair and impartial trial, of the high crime of which he stands charged in this court. This respondent has seen some, and he had heard of other statements in the press of this city, not only purporting to give an account of the circumstances attending and following the murder of Benjamin Stewart, but expressing in decided terms an opinion of the guilt of his client, and he had witnessed with alarm, (he believing as he then did, and now does, in the innocence of his client,) the great excitement produced by these statements, upon the public mind.

As far as he was or is yet advised, these publications were allowed to pass without judicial censure, and in his effort, now made the subject of the present rule, to arrest this excitement, and produce a condition of quiet in the popular feeling, he supposed, so far from interfering illegally with the course of public justice, he was only doing an act which was alike demanded by professional duty and common humanity. If, however, the law has been violated by his publication, which however, he by no means admits, and in his opinion he has the sanction of other counsels than his own, he owes it not less to himself than to this court to say, that his error has been one of opinion and not of intention; for he gives this court to be informed that in the publication complained of in the rule, he had no idea of committing a contempt of this court, or in any way influencing the administration of justice in the trial of the case referred to against said William Stewart, or in any other particular, and he prays therefore to be hence dismissed.

REVERDY JOHNSON,
Attorney for respondent.

Sworn to in open court, by respondent, this 21st July, 1838.

Test, WM. M. MEDCALFE,
Clerk Baltimore city court.

The court then adjourned over until Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock, when Mr. Baily proceeded to show cause against the rule. He commenced by stating the peculiar circumstances under which he appeared before the court. He had been employed by William Stewart, as his counsel, to defend him from the charge which had been made against him, which was a crime of the highest nature. When he arrived in Baltimore he found the greatest excitement prevailing against his client—he was not only charged with the murder of his father, but also with that of his sisters—the latter he knew to be utterly false, and believed the former to be equally so. He had seen in the public prints of the city, accounts given of the murder of Benjamin Stewart, which were, in his opinion, calculated greatly to prejudice the cause of his client. He had frequently visited his client, who always insisted upon an immediate trial of his case, but that he (Mr. B.) had always advised him against that course, believing that the excitement was so great that he could not then have a fair and impartial trial, and he had accordingly applied for a continuance of the cause, which had been granted. He believed that the prejudice which now existed in the public mind would be allayed, and it was with that view he caused the card to be published which was now complained of as a contempt of court. He disavowed any intention on his part of treating the court with contempt; on the contrary, he then had, and still entertained, for the court, both individually and collectively, the highest respect—that, in all his intercourse with them, he had experienced the greatest kindness and courtesy. He further said, that he had no intention to influence, control or disturb the course of justice by the publication, or of prejudicing the public in favor of his client. His object was merely to allay that excitement and prejudice which he fully believed existed against him, that he might have a fair and impartial trial.

He maintained that the publication was no contempt, inasmuch as it was no open insult to the court, or any resistance of the power or authority of the court, or to the individual members or officers thereof—nor had it any tendency to create any disregard of their authority, nor did upon its face show any intent to obstruct or control the course of public justice, nor to influence the public mind upon a cause then depending before the court. He considered the question now before the court, one of great importance—that if the publication should be considered as contempt, the liberty of the press was at an end, and the freedom of speech abolished. He further said, that the case of William Stewart could not be considered before the court, because he might at any time, under the laws of the constitution of the state, have it removed to some adjoining county for trial.

Mr. Johnson, who appeared as counsel for Mr. Baily, said that, with the court's permission, he would state the propositions for which he meant to contend, in reply, and give a reference to the cases upon which he would rely to sustain them, in order that the counsel on the other side might have an opportunity to comment upon them. The first was, that the publication upon its face, was no contempt. 2d. That if it was, there being no criminal intent on the part of Mr. Baily in making it, no attachment could issue.

He referred to 1 Southard's Reports, 139; 2 Johnson Com. Law Rep. 290; 1 Tidd's Practice, 487; 5 Viner's Abridgment, 443; 5 Term Rep. 362; Croke. ch. 148; 22 Serg't & Lowber, 278; 4 Barnwell & Alderson, 213; 6 Serg't & Low, 407; Peck's trial, 432; and 592 Passmore's case, there referred to by Mr. Buchanan, in argument; and also the act of congress of 1831, to be found at the conclusion of the report of that trial; and also to the 19th, 20th, and 21st articles of the bill of rights.

Mr. Richardson, deputy attorney general for the city of Baltimore, in support of the rule, said, that it was from a deep sense of his duty, as the officer of the state, that he had called the attention of the court to the publication complained of—that he had the kindest feelings and highest regard for Mr. Baily, and that he believed that he (Mr. B.) had no intention of committing a contempt of court, by making the publication complained of, but at the same time, he was constrained to say, that in his opinion it was a contempt of court, and that it came fully within the decisions to which he should hereafter refer the court, and he would merely remark in reply to one of the arguments of Mr. B., that he did not consider the freedom of speech at all abridged, or the liberty of the press at all interfered with, by punishing as contempts, such publications as that complained of. He contended that contempts of court were of two kinds. Either direct, which openly insult or resist the powers of the court, or the persons of the judges who preside there, or consequential, which tend to create universal disregard for their authority, or which tend to bring the court or any constituent part thereof, into disrespect, or to impede the due course of the law, and that an attachment could as well issue for matters done out of court, as for those done in its presence, and that the party could not purge himself of the contempt by pleading a want of intention on his part to produce such effect. To support those positions he referred to Blackstone's Com. 233; 2 Aitkyn, 469; 2 Veazy, junior, 520. 1 P. Williams, 675. 1 Ld. Raymond, 148. 14 Veazy, junior, 237. 1 Caines 485 and 518. The case of Baptiste Irvine, decided in the old court of Oyer and Terminer in this city, and referred to by Mr. Meredith, in argument in Peck's trial, page 342. 2 Virginia cases, 478. 4 Barnwell and Alderson, 218, and 1 Dallas, 319.

He further stated in reply to Mr. Baily, that the case of William Stewart was still pending in this court, and must be considered so until it is actually removed; but even if it had been removed, this court is the proper one to punish for the publication referring to that case, if such publication be a contempt. He further contended, that the publication complained of, was a contempt of court, and that it came clearly within the principles laid down in the cases he had referred to. The party, he said, was indicted by a grand jury, a constituent part of this court, who it must be presumed had sufficient to satisfy them, that at least there was a prima facie case against him, before the indictment was found. The publication on its face is intended, and the public would so understand from it, that the grand jury had acted without due consideration of the case, and that they had found a bill against an individual who is asserted upon the authority of the name of Mr. Baily, to be innocent, and he must be considered as intending, that the public should rely upon his assertion, otherwise the publication would be of no service to his client whatever, and would have no tendency to allay the great excitement and prejudice which he supposed existed against him, and the effect of it, therefore, is to bring the grand jury into disrespect by charging them with being in error in finding the bill. The publication further had a tendency to impede the due administration of justice, by influencing the public in his favor, and thereby rendering it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to obtain a petit jury to try his cause, and that it was an appeal from the court to the public, and seeks to enlist public feeling in his favor.

He concluded by stating, that in the remarks which he had used in reference to the publication, he did not wish to be understood as imputing to Mr. Baily, the intention to produce the effects, which he (Mr. R.) had contended the publication was calculated to produce. He wished to be understood as merely contending that the paper on its face was calculated to produce such effect; and that the public would so understand it, although not intended so by Mr. Baily, who, he believed, had no such intention, and for whom he entertained the kindest regard, and with whom he was up to this moment on terms of most friendly intercourse. He believed that he only intended to serve his client, but he had done so in a way not sanctioned by the law.

Mr. Johnson in reply to Mr. Richardson, said, that the case now before the court was one of the utmost importance. The consequences involved in the present case were infinitely beyond the present controversy, so far as his client was concerned he had nothing to fear from the decision of the case, but the consequences would survive the determination of this case; it would be a precedent hereafter, and he believed it would tend to weaken the confidence of the community reposed in the judiciary. He asked, what was the character of the offence and the mode of trial. It was admitted, he said, by the learned attorney of the state, that it was incapable of definition and that the punishment was incapable of limitation, and the mode of trial was at war with the principles of the common law. The offence charged is one against the judicial tribunal which is the judge and juror in the case, and the punishment which it may inflict is beyond the pardoning power. The power now claimed to be exercised has never been dreamed of. The doctrine is not only confined to courts of record, but equally applies to the legislative and executive departments of our government as well as to every petty magistrate in the land.

In England, he said, the power to punish for contempts was exercised not only by the judiciary, but also by the executive and legislature. Three kinds of contempt could be committed against the king: his title to the throne and his prerogative could not be disputed without contempt of his authority, and a contempt could also be committed against the sanctity of his palace. There, the doctrine of contempts was expanded, but this country had not adopted the English doctrines.

Among others, he referred to the following cases, where offences similar to that now complained of had been committed, but it was never attempted to punish them as contempts. In the case of the Cohen's, congress had, by law, authorized a lottery in the District of Columbia. Pinkney and Webster gave an opinion that a purchaser of tickets in that lottery had a right to dispose of them in the several states, although the sale of such tickets was by the laws of such state prohibited. A purchaser of tickets goes into Virginia and sells them; he is arrested, tried, and convicted. The case goes by writ of error to the supreme court of the U. S. Virginia is alive to the importance of the question, and all classes of her people partake of the excitement. They deny the jurisdiction of the supreme court, the case having been determined by their own superior court. The Virginia legislature refuse to appear to the suit. The case is heard ex parte, and the court assert their jurisdiction. The public press and public men of Virginia hurled their defiance and anathemas at the court. Did the supreme court of the U. S. ever dream of bringing before them the citizens of Virginia for a contempt of its authority. The press had teemed with strictures on the court both prior to and subsequent to its decision, but that court never attempted to punish any individual for a contempt of its authority; and yet if you will turn to Blackstone you will learn that any attempt to bring into disrepute the bench, any thing in its opinion calculated to bring it into disrepute would authorize the judge to punish him for contempt.

He then referred to the chartering of the Bank of the United States by congress. Congress claimed authority to charter a bank. Men out of congress holding a different opinion denied their right to grant any such charter. They denied it in the face of years of legislation and repeated enactments by congress; the constitutionality of the bank was also maintained by a decision of the supreme court. Every one knew what had been the character of the strictures of the public press and of prominent men in every part of the country on this exercise of power by congress, and the decision of the highest tribunal known to our laws. But what judge had dared, what congress had dared, to bring an American citizen before them to punish him for a contempt without the form of a trial? He then referred to a period of our political history when the existence of the union was threatened. Congress passed the alien and sedition laws. By these laws, any publication calculated to bring into disrespect the president of the United States was deemed a crime worthy of punishment. How? Not by the summary process of contempt, but by trial in the ordinary form. By a grand and petit jury—the accused had his accuser face to face, the liberty to examine the witnesses and the privilege of counsel. How did the people receive these laws? Their passage sealed the fate of the administration—the people hurled their rulers from their stations as unworthy agents of the public will. Some of the courts of the country subscribed to the constitutionality of these laws. Virginia met in solemn convocation. Mr. Madison was made chairman of the committee, to whose pen we are indebted for the resolutions of '98. That distinguished man, in his report, handled both legislature and judiciary with ungloved hands, warning them that the day that saw the execution of these laws would lead to a separation of the union.

These laws were resisted and their authors and abettors, legislative and judicial, were heaped with abuse. Did the legislature or judiciary bring before them any citizen for punishment for contempt? Did they bring Mr. Madison up and tell him that his report was calculated to bring the executive and legislature into contempt? No! and if the attempt had been made it could only have been made successful after American blood had been shed sufficient to cover the land. But the king punishes for contempts against his high prerogative and the sanctity of his palace.

He referred next to the tariff laws. These laws had been passed, altered, modified, restrained and enlarged by congress, from time to time. A celebrated statesman had denounced the tariff bill as "the bill of abominations." South Carolina in arms resists the laws, lifts her banners and hurls defiance. Her militia is organized and her daily press lash her citizens into frenzied resistance at what they deem an unconstitutional exercise of power by the national legislature. South Carolina doctrines spread, other states are ready to rally round her, and danger threatens the union. Did congress dream of bringing before them a citizen of South Carolina for contempt of its authority? No! the storm passed harmless by, the agitation of the waves subsided, a breath was cast upon them which more than once had calmed their troubled waters.

Mr. Johnson, in the course of his remarks, admitted the right of the courts to exercise all powers necessary to the maintenance of their authority and to punish, as contempts, any thing done in the presence of the court, or out of it calculated directly to disturb the course of public justice. Such cases, he said, required summary punishment without waiting the ordinary process by bill of indictment. The power of punishing for contempts was the creation of necessity and was limited by necessity, and he referred to several cases to show that the courts had refused to exercise that power for alleged contempts for matters done without the presence of the court, and not interfering directly with the business of the court. Such cases, if punishable at all, were punishable in the ordinary course of law, but not as contempts.

He further contended, that Mr. Baily had fair, constitutional right to publish the card. It contained no imputation upon the court, nor upon the grand jury. It was a mere asseveration of the innocence of his client, which he had the undoubted right to make. The indictment, he said, was no evidence of guilt against Stewart—it was only the legal form of preferring the charge, and was only evidence of the fact that such charge had been made. He said the court must look at this charge with reference to the facts of the case.

He then recapitulated the facts of the case, and referred to the publication, and said that it contained no imputation on the integrity of the grand jury, but only alleged that prejudice against his client existed in the community. He does not ask to be saved by corruption on the part of the jury, but only asks for a fair and impartial trial—a right secured to him by the constitution of the state. In reference to the second point,—whether, in the absence of any criminal intent on the part of Mr. Baily, in the publication, there could be any contempt,—he said, that the rule in criminal cases, (and he contended that this was in the nature of a criminal case,) was, that where nothing criminal was intended, nothing criminal was done; and, having purged himself from any criminal intent, no contempt had been committed. Mr. Johnson, in the course of his remarks, referred to, and commented upon, the various authorities before stated, as referred to by him.

After some short explanation by Mr. Richardson, in reference to a former part of his argument, and a short reply to some of the arguments of Mr. Johnson, Mr. Johnson made a few remarks in reply, and the case was submitted.

The following is the opinion of the court.

State vs. Josiah Baily, jr. The court entertain no doubt of their power, on fit occasions, to proceed by attachment, technically called attachment for contempt, and think the attorney for the state was right in bringing this case to their notice. The publication in question, unaccompanied with any other explanation of the writer's meaning than appears on the face of the paper, certainly conveys at least, an implied censure on those whose duty it was to investigate the facts connected with the late murder, and particularly on the grand jury, whose especial duty it was diligently and carefully to examine the testimony and exhibit the charge; and had the defence rested here, the court would have been justified in treating it as an illegal interference with the regular course of justice; but being satisfied, from the traverser's answer, on oath, as also from his public declaration in court, that he had no intention, in making the address, to convey any imputation on the grand jury, or other member of the court, or in any manner to embarrass the proceeding, in relation to the trial now pending, but was actuated solely by the desire to do away prejudices he thought existed unfavorably to his client, (although it does not amount to a legal justification of the offence,) inclines the court to suspend further proceedings. The rule is therefore discharged without costs.

23th July, 1838.

STEAM NAVIGATION.

The New York Courier has the following letter from its London correspondent, under date of 16th June.

We are still in the midst of a thousand speculations on the general subject of Atlantic steam navigation. One important fact which arises out of the new system of navigating the Atlantic, is that the English ship owners and steam engine builders are becoming confident of taking away from your merchants the ownership of the future packets between London and Liverpool and New York. However the Americans may have triumphed for many years past in the building of sailing packets—it is now said that in steam machinery you will not be enabled to compete with the ship owners of this country, and thence a new and very extensive field of employment is expected to be opened out at several of the English ports. So rapid however is the progress of the improvement and simplification of the steam engine that it is difficult to conjecture how long this country may retain its superiority in that branch of manufactures—and probably the abolition of the duty upon steam machinery, or even upon boiler iron, alone imported into the United States, would enable your ship owners to continue to compete in the packet system in which there is probably involved some feelings of national pride.

The Sir Lionel Smith which left New York for London some time since arrived in the Thames only last night. As the failure of this vessel to act up to the expectations of the friends of the Atlantic steam navigation may tend to throw some little damp upon the system—it may be well to explain that this is not a vessel of the smallest repute, and has only accidentally been in the way of steaming to England from New York. The Sir Lionel Smith belongs to a company lately in existence here for the inter-annual navigation of the West Indies—and was ordered to New York for repairs in consequence of there not existing in the West Indies any port where merchants vessels can be hauled up. The company has lately been dissolved in consequence of this and numerous other difficulties and losses, and the Sir Lionel Smith was in this manner sent to New York for repairs and comes here from New York to be sold.

Another steam ship of considerable tonnage, called the Royal William, is about to be taken off of the Irish stations, and starts for New York on the fifth of the ensuing month. The various companies are looking out in all directions for steamers suitable for the purpose—for there is a great struggle for a share in the wealth which must be reaped by those who can come into the field, until new steamers can be built. What has become of capt. Cobb and his large steam ship of which so much was proclaimed in Liverpool and London some months since?

The prediction of the engineers, however, was that the engine would not be found to work satisfactorily, on account of the liability to be choked by the clinkers—a result which the enterprising captain has found to be correct.

The blockade of the ports of Mexico by the French squadron, has become a subject of great interest among the merchants and Mexican mining companies here. The accounts from France represent that the blockade has the entire approbation of the court of the Tuilleries, and that several additional vessels of war are being hurried from Toulon to reinforce the squadrons of Tampico and Vera Cruz. The entire justice of the conduct of the French is, however, much doubted by very numerous persons in this country—and all parties engaged in transactions with Mexico, regret the expected long derangement in trade. The imports into Mexico average about £8,000,000 per annum, of which the most important item consists of cotton fabrics of a cheap description, which are almost entirely supplied by your northern manufacturers, "domestic" being the only branch of the cotton manufactures in which the Manchester manufacturers cannot compete in the markets of the South American states. The loss of the export trade will fall therefore principally upon the manufacturers and merchants of the United States—the English mining companies being expected to be the principal sufferers in this company by the blockade of the ports of Tampico and Vera Cruz. This however, is a very important branch of investment of English capital—for one of the London companies—the Real del Monte—has expended in Mexico little short of a million of money, and only recently has commenced to receive any considerable return from the mines, when all their operations have become threatened with suspension by the news of the blockade. The English bond holders also complain of the conduct of the French—for the demands upon the Mexican government are believed to be enormously exaggerated, to be more than ten times greater than any real damage which the property of French residents may at any time have received in Mexico—and the payment if submitted to can only be made out of the custom-house revenue of the country—of which a considerable portion has recently been set apart in favor of the foreign bond holders—but which an over-ruling necessity may compel the Mexican authorities to pay over to the French. The loss of revenue—the suspension of commercial and mining facilities, and the universal hatred of all foreigners promiscuously—which this excessive demand and unjustifiably severe method of exacting it, will create amongst the population of Mexico—are all dwelt upon by the interested parties here. The very impossibility of compliance with a demand for a sum of £1,200,000, by a government, in so impoverished a condition as that of Mexico, is also thought to be a reason for expecting a long continuation of the blockade. There is a growing disposition in this country to think that what is called, "the law of nations" is very undefined, and a more modern system is required in these days of universal commerce, and when the interests of foreigners who are not parties to quarrels out of which they arise, are yet so extensively injured by these not always justifiable blockades.

THE PRESTON BARBECUE.

From the Columbia Times and Gazette.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To Messrs. Joseph A. Black, S. Boatwright, John McCully, T. Center, W. Denly, J. D. Mordecai, J. C. Phillips, T. H. Wade, and Robert Adams.

Gentlemen: We have been appointed, on behalf of some of the citizens of Richland district, a committee to confer with you as to the barbecue dinner, proposed to be given to the hon. W. C. Preston, one of our senators in congress.

The marked party character proposed to be given to this dinner, by confining it to Mr. Preston, who represents the state, and excluding col. F. H. Elmore, who is our fellow townsman, and represents the district, has been seen with great pain.

We are directed, respectfully, to submit for your consideration.

1st. That the invitation be extended to both our senators in congress, and to col. F. H. Elmore, our immediate representative, by name, as well as to the remaining portion of the delegation from the state.

2d. That the dinner be postponed to such period as will allow a reasonable time for communications to be made to the guests to be invited.

3d. That the following gentlemen be added to the committee of arrangements for the occasion, viz: col. R. H. Goodwyn, col. John G. Brown, Wm. M. Myers, B. L. McLaughlin, Emanuel Friday, major Wm. Hopkins, John S. Lott, Jesse Debruhl, Richard Sondley.

Representing those who are in favor of the separation of the government from the money power, and opposed to the establishment of a national bank, and to the elevation of Mr. Clay to the presidency, we think it due to the citizens, if information be the object, that both sides be heard, if any, or all these matters are to be brought into discussion; and the more especially, if the dinner is to be considered as given by the district of Richland, or the citizens of Columbia.

An early reply is respectfully asked.

We have the honor to be, &c.

R. H. GOODWYN.

J. G. BROWN.

WM. M. MYERS.

JOHN S. LOTT.

16th July, 1838.

Col. R. H. Goodwyn, and others, committee on behalf of some of the citizens.

Columbia, July 17, 1838.

Gentlemen: The committee appointed to give a hearty welcome "to our distinguished senator, Mr. Preston," and "to afford him an opportunity of addressing his constituents," have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a communication on yesterday, the 16th inst. signed by R. H. Goodwyn, John S. Lott, Wm. M. Myers, and John G. Brown.

The committee cannot forbear to express their surprise, that a proceeding avowedly intended as a personal compliment to senator Preston, should be characterized in this communication, as bearing the impress of a "marked party character." Whatever pain gentlemen may have experienced under this impression, (and we have deep regret in discovering, that it is so great,) the committee take occasion to assure them, in the most respectful terms, is wholly gratuitous. It is ordinary courtesy, paid by the constituency of public men to their agents, and never before, that the committee are aware, has it been regarded as having any connection with party, when conferred upon a representative or senator, by his immediate neighbors and fellow citizens, and when the congressional delegation has been invited without distinction, to attend as guests. The committee are not aware, that any "marked party character" was attached to a personal compliment of the same nature, paid by the citizens of Edgefield, in November last, to our other distinguished senator, because his colleague was not also included; and an inference that would not apply to that, cannot be fairly predicated of this. The committee have extended to the distinguished colleague of senator Preston, as well as to the delegation of this state in the house of representatives in congress, generally, the courtesy which is appropriate and usual, and the gentlemen whose names are attached to the communication, to which the committee have now honor to reply, will be pleased to understand a like courtesy as extended to them.

The committee are equally desirous with these gentlemen, of information on the several political points referred to in their note, and will promote any means of eliciting their amicable discussion; but they must be permitted to observe, that if there be any party in this state or district, opposed to "the separation of the money power from the government," and favorable to "the establishment of a national bank, and to the elevation of Mr. Clay to the presidency," they are not conscious of its existence. Certain they are, that they are not its representatives. If the committee are found to be exclusively composed of that party who disapprove the proceedings of the extra session, it must be attributed to the circumstance that the propriety of such a course did not suggest itself to any other.

But "if any or all these matters are to be brought into discussion," the committee "think it due to their fellow citizens, (if information be the object," that both sides be heard," and with that impression they will be most happy to hear the views of all our representatives, and both our senators, if the time will permit. The committee are desirous, however, to satisfy all the friends of Mr. Preston and Mr. Elmore, and therefore accede, with great pleasure, to the request, that col. Elmore be included in the compliment; the more especially as we are informed, that that gentleman, for whom we entertain the highest respect, has changed his determination of spending his summer abroad, and is soon expected to return. Our notice will be altered accordingly.

Very respectfully,
JOS. A. BLACK, committee.

From the Columbia Times and Gazette.

Mr. Editor: Many of the citizens of Richland district who are in favor of separating the banks from the government, and the establishment of a national bank, and opposed to the elevation of Mr. Clay to the presidency, were anxious to join some of their neighbors, in giving a public dinner to our immediate representative in congress, col. F. H. Elmore, and our two senators, J. C. Calhoun, and Wm. C. Preston, and to receive all the light which these distinguished gentlemen could throw upon those subjects; they would have been exceedingly glad to see the whole district unite in paying this compliment, and in obtaining this light: but as their wishes could not be gratified, they now propose to do what they had hoped would meet with unanimity; for the purpose therefore of giving a public dinner to our representative col. F. H. Elmore, and our two senators, and inviting our other members of congress, the following gentlemen are constituted a committee of arrangements, who will take the necessary measures in this regard.

Col. R. H. Goodwyn, John English, B. L. McLaughlin, Adam F. Dubard, Maj. James O'Hanlon, Wm. Douglas, col. W. Moye, Joseph Ellison, Gilbert Stalker, Dr. A. S. Clifton, Jas. Fenton, Allen Gibson, Harman Coon, Daniel Crawford, capt. F. Lykes, B. Rely, W. M. Myers, Richard Sondley, major William Hopkins, John S. Lott, Dr. Thomas Starke, Emanuel Friday, Theodore Starke.

The committee of arrangements, for the dinner to be given to col. F. H. Elmore, and our two senators, are requested to meet at the town hall, in Columbia, on Monday next, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

R. H. Goodwyn, Chairman.

SPEECH OF MR. DROMGOOLE, OF VIRGINIA,

On the bill to separate the government from the banks. In the house of representatives, June 20, 1838—In committee of the whole, against the constitutionality and policy of employing state banks as fiscal agents of the federal government, and in favor of organizing the treasury of the United States in conformity with the constitution.

Mr. Dromgoole rose and addressed the committee as follows:

Mr. Chairman: I am aware that our session is drawing to a close, and that, consequently, our time is precious; but the recollection that I have seldom, heretofore, obtruded myself upon the house, or committee, and always with brevity, in connection with the importance of the subject now under examination, will, I trust, relieve me from the charge of asking, on this occasion, an unreasonable indulgence. No question, perhaps, since the American revolution, and the subsequent adoption of the federal constitution, has arisen in the United States, involving more seriously and extensively the principles of civil liberty and free government.

Ought the financial operations of the federal government to be entirely and completely separated from the business and the transactions of banking institutions? Ought that "treasury," mentioned in the constitution, required by it, in which "all public money" is to be placed and kept, and from which "no money shall be drawn, but in consequence of appropriations made by law"—ought that "treasury" to exist separately and distinctly organized—ought that "treasury" to be independent of the banks of the country? Or, ought that "treasury" to be closely connected and allied with the banks, and made essentially dependent on them? Does the constitution require that this "treasury" shall, in any manner, be connected with, or made dependent on, banking companies? Does the constitution require, did I ask—does it permit that money in the "treasury" may be promiscuously blended with the funds of these companies, and used and employed in their business, so that its ultimate availability to the government is left to depend upon their honesty, their solvency, their success or failure in trade? And if the constitution does not positively enjoin such connection, still is it practicable or possible to dispense with it? Is such a connection "necessary and proper for carrying into execution" any power vested by the constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof? Can the "treasury" of the United States be properly, completely, and constitutionally organized, and made to perform its appropriate functions successfully, without the aid or interposition of banks, or, who it must be presumed had sufficient to Sir, these questions involve the great problem, are the people capable of self-government; whose solution, we had flattered ourselves, had been definitely accomplished by the establishment of our republican and representative systems. Substantially, the momentous, the vital question, is revived of the right and the capacity of the people to govern themselves.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, if the framers of the constitution had sufficient wisdom, and did they exercise this wisdom, in forming a plan of government capable of healthy existence, and efficient action, independent of the fact, whether companies, with the power of banking, would, or would not, be created. Can the people of the United States, through their own agents, constitutionally appointed, and constitutionally responsible, administer this federal government peacefully and successfully? Or, must they, with a shameful and degrading admission of their incompetency, resign the management of a portion of the affairs and business of their government—a portion, too, vitally important; must the people of the several states confess their utter incapacity, and quietly submit the management of their finances, their entire moneyed concerns, to artificial persons—to bodies politic, irresponsible to the constituted authorities of the United States; distinguished from the mass of the community, not by their superior integrity, but by their odious monopolies and exclusive privileges; who boast of vested rights, not enjoyed by the rest of society, but inviolably secured by charters, which, in most instances, presumptuously claim to be beyond the reach of repeal or modification by the whole legislative authority of the country?

Mr. Chairman, I desire to examine this proposed union of banks and government according to its own intrinsic merit. I will not yield blind obedience to the opinions or dicta of any, however eminent. I will deliberate and reflect. I will draw my own conclusions. I will form my own opinions; and I will venture to express them, I hope, with becoming boldness. I will not search for precedents, scattered through the history of federal legislation, opposite and irreconcilable in character, and borrowing their complexion from the alternate ascendancy of party. No, sir: were all such precedents collected, and congregated into a mountain's magnitude, they would not, they ought not, to preponderate over my own deliberate convictions of the true intent and purpose of the federal constitution. It is my duty to exercise the faculties of my own mind, however feeble, in applying the test of immutable principle and the constitution, to every measure presented here for adoption or rejection. A tame submission to precedents, an acknowledgment of their binding obligation, may protect error, and promote a continuance of its evils in society, whereby the development of truth is retarded, and the gradual work of improvement is impeded. On this doctrine of precedents, I beg leave to read to the committee some brief extracts from a political work, written by one of Virginia's most illustrious statesmen. I refer to the late John Taylor, of Caroline, than whom no man had more thoroughly considered the principles of the constitution, and to whose writings Mr. Jefferson himself confessed that he was indebted for the correction of some errors of opinion into which he had fallen.

"Let us, (says he in his Construction Construed,) look at the logic which supposes that acquiescence makes precedents, and that precedents make reason. All precedents or laws are at first theory, and acquiescence alone can convert them into practice. Banking began as a theory; and political augurs differed in their prognostications of its effects. The worst precedents are often but little felt in their infancy, because they move with caution, until they gather strength; and the worse they are, the more time is often required to develop their character. Some foretold that banking would be beneficial; others, that it would be pernicious to our country. It would be an odd judgment, however honest, which should assert, that fulfilment ought to destroy, and falsehood to establish an augury, because just at the time when experience has converted the theory of banking into evidence, both felt and understood, acquiescence has also mellowed the same theory into a precedent, and a precedent deprives us of the benefit of experience; so that the time expended in ascertaining the truth or falsehood of an augury, renders it impossible to remedy its imposition, just at the moment when it is discovered."

And in another place he continues:

"Precedents would make a strange species of constitution, according to our notions; they would be repealable by the legislatures which made them. In those countries where the governments are absolute, this is no objection to them; but here precedents are nothing but laws, and the question, whether they are constitutional or not, must forever remain attached to them, unless it can be proved that it is a question of no importance after having obtained the title of precedents. It will then become a matter of very great importance to ascertain by whom this title is to be bestowed."

And whilst I repudiate the authority of precedents, I will not search for practices or professions of party to guide me. I will not hunt up the isolated opinions of this or that illustrious statesman, living or dead, as a rule by which my own vote is to be controlled. Much less will I rely on any hasty or detached opinions of my own, expressed or inferred, on former occasions. My freedom of thought and my right of independent deliberation, shall not be fettered with the chains of pre-judgment. The illuminations of experimental truth shall not be excluded from my political path, because heretofore I may have boggled in darkness, or been misled by an imperfect light or a false glare. The friendly advances of reason and argument, with all their benign influences, shall not be obstructed by any barriers which pride and prejudice may exert in defence of primary positions. No peculiarity of position, no associations, personal or political, connected with its first occupancy, can justify, for the single purpose of holding out in its defence, an abandonment of the interests of the whole country. Whilst pride may urge selfish considerations in favor of obstinate perseverance, patriotism will strongly recommend the surrender of original prepossessions for the sake of a nation's good. Those who will, may make their boasted consistency the sole deity of their adoration, and may fall down at its shrine in blind and unthinking devotion. Those who will, may remain immovably fixed to their peculiar positions, and may spurn with scorn every change or modification which time and circumstance, and the development of principles, may suggest and invite, until their positions, by their outré and inharmonious appearance, as contrasted with the surrounding improvements, effected by a judicious application of political science to human affairs, will serve only to excite the ridicule of all intelligent and patriotic observers. For myself, I shall ever hold my anxiety for consistency in strict subordination to my love of truth. The correctness and sincerity of my present convictions, are to me a matter of much higher consideration than their conformity to opinions of a previous period on other subjects, and in a far different condition of affairs. Instead of appealing to formal precedents, to the influence of conspicuous names, or mooted the unimportant question of my own consistency, I prefer to recur to fundamental principles, and to the plain letter and spirit of the constitution, and by these to test the correctness of my present views.

It is then, sir, a fundamental principle, that there is a division of political power between the states and the federal government. The powers conferred on the government of the United States, in the language of the federalists, "are few and defined;" whilst, without exception, "the powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people." The powers, therefore, which remain with the states respectively, and with the people of each state, "are many and undefined." These governments having a separate and distinct organization, and having a separate and independent action of each other, in the execution of their respective powers and duties, there is necessarily a dividing line, which must be kept constantly in view. The more clearly it is marked and defined, the more certainly will each government be restricted within its own appropriate and constitutional province; and the more effectually will confusion, embarrassment, and collision be avoided in the progress of their administrations. An obliteration of this line, an encroachment upon this boundary, mars the beauty, deranges the design, destroys the harmony, and impairs the strength of our whole political system.

Having presented to the committee this fundamental and essential principle of a separation of the powers of the states and of the government of the United States, I beg leave to read certain express provisions of the constitution, to which our action, to be rightful, must conform in prescribing regulations for the administration of the finances.

Section eight of article the first, vests congress with power—

"To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises, shall be uniform throughout the United States;

"To borrow money on the credit of the United States;

"To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures;

"To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States; "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

Sec. 7, Art. 1. "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives."

Sec. 9. "No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time."

Sec. 10. "No state shall coin money; emit bills of credit; make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts."

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is proposed, on one hand, to organize the treasury of the United States, so as to dispense with bank agency, and to conform strictly with the requisitions of the constitution; on the other hand, it is proposed to engage and employ, by contract, state banks, corporations, to perform the office of fiscal agents to the federal government. Thus a direct issue is made up between the advocates and opponents of the two schemes, and fairly presented to the country. To the employment of the state banks, an objection, in limine, has sometimes been urged—that they are contrary to the constitution of the United States. It is not necessary to the course of argument which I propose, to enter into the question of the constitutional power of the states to incorporate banking companies. From careful study and honest conviction, I belong to that political party who insist upon a strict and limited construction of the grants of power enumerated in the constitution, and who, in my own state, in the early struggle waged between state rights and federal encroachment, concurred with the general assembly in peremptorily and explicitly declaring that "it views the powers of the federal government, as resulting from the compact to which the states are parties, as limited by the plain sense and intention of the instrument constituting that compact, as no farther valid than they are authorised by the grants enumerated in that compact; and that in case of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers not granted by the compact, the states, who are parties thereto, have the right, and are in duty bound, to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining, within their respective limits, the authorities, rights, and liberties, appertaining to them." Holding fast to this doctrine, maintaining that the states, as sovereign parties, having no common arbiter, may interpret the compact for themselves, and may interpose to arrest its violation, as a state rights man, I cannot admit—on the contrary, I utterly deny—that congress, or any department of the federal government, the mere creature or agent of the parties, can construe the powers, or define the limits of state authority. Congress is not a competent tribunal, and cannot undertake to decide whether any provision of the federal constitution prohibits the states from creating banking institutions. I am not to be understood as contending that such a question might not incidentally arise before the courts of the United States, or that they could not properly decide such point, arising in a case of which, under the constitution, they had cognizance. Nor do I mean to deny that their decision, pronounced in such a case, would be of binding obligation between the parties litigant. I decline, therefore, a discussion of the constitutionality of state banks, and shall admit, for the purpose of argument, their rightful existence. On this occasion, too, I decline an examination of their expediency or utility. For the present, also, the important inquiry is waived, whether their exclusive privileges and chartered immunities are in accordance with the genius and principles of republican government, or consistent with the equal rights of all the citizens. I will not indulge myself here to speak of the great question of bank reform—the great question of a necessary and thorough revival of the entire system and doctrine of corporations—questions which are irresistibly forcing themselves upon public consideration both in England and America, in spite of all conservative resistance in both countries. Waiving the discussion of these topics on this floor, I proceed to an examination, not of the provisions in detail, but of the principles of this fondly cherished scheme of selecting in the first instance, and then employing, by contract, state banks to perform the fiscal operations of the federal government. I arraign it before the country, and impeach it at the bar of public opinion of violating some of the express provisions of the constitution—of tending to defeat the object designed, by the substitution of a direct power to raise revenue, in place of the indirect mode of requisitions on the states—of exercising "other powers not granted in the compact"—of disfiguring, if not obliterating, the line of distinction and separation between the authorities of the United States and of the respective states—of contradicting the settled doctrines of political economy, and grossly mistaking the nature and effect of taxation and public expenditure—and finally, upon a comprehensive view of all its purposes, promises, and designs, I accuse it of commending to our lips a rank and poisonous federalism, worthy of the time and the school of Alexander Hamilton.

The plan of converting the state banks, by league and compact, into an adequate and uniform fiscal system for the whole United States, requires a latitudinous construction of the constitution, and an expanded exertion of federal power, extravagant, unprecedented, and alarming. Solemnly and deliberately convinced that such is the character of the measure, I am impelled by a sense of duty to essay its exposure to public reprehension; and although I strongly desire to indulge a peaceful temper and a conciliatory spirit; to avoid crimination, dissension, and division; and to prefer no charge against personal friends and political associates; yet, sir, this sense of duty to my constituents and my country is paramount and must be obeyed.

By reference, Mr. Chairman, it will be clearly perceived that the clauses of the constitution which have been cited, absolutely require that the revenue, and all the "public money," shall be kept in a treasury. It is, therefore, the duty of congress to create by law, to call into existence by legal enactment, this treasury, in which the public money must be deposited when collected or received; and it is also the duty of congress so to regulate and guard the custody of the revenue, that it may be ready at every moment, without contingency or delay, after its receipt into the treasury, when required, to meet appropriations. As the revenue must be placed in the treasury, and as no money can be drawn therefrom but in consequence of appropriations made by law, it results conclusively that no part of the public money once received into the treasury can be intermediately withdrawn, or otherwise used and employed. Now, sir, a treasury cannot be recognised by these essential characteristics—of being the receptacle of all public money, retaining it secure and inviolate for any purpose but for appropriations, and keeping it ever ready for these—unless it be of the entire creation, and under the separate and independent supervision and regulation, of the constituted authorities of the United States. This treasury, to answer the wise purposes of its institution, must, of course, be entrusted to the management of human agency; and this agency, to insure its fidelity and efficiency, must be held strictly accountable and responsible, and made susceptible of coercion into a proper discharge of duty. The laws creating and organizing the treasury may and ought to contain sanctions; they may and ought to prescribe and enforce fine and punishment for delinquency and failure. Corporations, especially those existing by state authority, cannot completely and effectually, if at all, be subjected to compulsory and penal legislation. Hence not only the superior expediency, but, to my mind, the necessity, of selecting individual rather than corporate agency—of employing natural rather than artificial persons. If this be so, it cannot be completely and effectually accomplished unless the treasury is wholly administered by officers of the federal government. Yes, sir, the officers proper of the treasury must be appointed and commissioned, as officers of the United States, by authority of the federal government, must be amenable to the same authority, punishable by the same authority, and by the same authority removable from office.

According to my perception, it appears clear and indisputable that the deposit of the public money in the state banks, and the grant of its entire custody to them and their officers, are a violation of the positive provisions of the constitution, which require that this public money shall be placed in the treasury, and there so kept, that no part shall be withdrawn at any time, or for any purpose, "but in consequence of appropriations made by law." But the revenue, the public money, thus on deposit, although collected and received, is not actually in the treasury of the United States. It is there only by contemplation of the law—it is there only by the magic of legal construction. The revenue is placed in the possession of these corporations; they have the same use and control of the public money, for all purposes of business, as they have of the money and funds of themselves; and, in palpable contradiction of this flagrant fact, a credulous and confiding constituency are gravely inclined to believe, to take it for granted, that the money is really and bona fide in the treasury, lying ready and capable of being drawn therefrom according to law.

Sir, this requires a force of the imagination, a transport of the fancy, utterly beyond the exertions of plain sense and common observation. It is offering an idle mockery to an honest man's reason. It cannot be that the mass of the people of this country have a love for fiction and romance so extensively cultivated, so exquisitely refined, as to require artifice and deception for its gratification, in the dull and dry concern of an account current of receipts and expenditures. It cannot be that the people are yet prepared to adopt a system, and stamp it with "a final consideration and deliberate adherence," which authorizes and requires financial inventions, instead of "a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money." An honest and confiding people cheerfully and generously discharge all their public burdens; they ungrudgingly, and without complaint, satisfy the last exactions of their government; with an uncorrupted simplicity, they readily believe that their contributions, rendered in willing obedience to law, will be put in their own common treasury, and drawn out only to meet legitimate and necessary appropriations; and that their servants will give them, from time to time, a plain, intelligible, and satisfactory exposition. Instead of a regular statement and account, comprehensible to an ordinary mind, they receive an elaborate dissertation upon the condition of the finances, and an abstruse explication of available and unavailable funds. The very laws are an offence to their sense of morality and their love of truth, because they require technical misrepresentations of the true state of the treasury.

Sir, congress is guilty of gross financial dilapidation, by surrendering the public money to irresponsible persons and bodies politic for their own use and benefit, instead of keeping it securely in the treasury; and but for legal forms and technicalities, would be justly chargeable with peculation and embezzlement. The withering indignation of a betrayed and outraged community is prevented only by imposing on them "a fiction of law" for "a matter of fact."

Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to show that the constitution requires that the collected revenue shall be safely kept in the treasury of the United States, and that it cannot be intermediately used or employed, because there is a positive injunction against taking any money out of the treasury but to meet appropriations made by law.

I have also endeavored to show that this treasury, which is thus to hold the public money, must necessarily, if it accomplish its intended purposes, be wholly created and solely governed by the authority of the United States. Those who are required to place money in a treasury, and keep it there securely, without being used by themselves or others for any purpose, until wanted for a specific object, and are then bound to produce it, must, in the very nature of things, not only have access to this treasury, but must also, to the entire exclusion of all others, have the entire possession and control of it. Now, sir, bank officers and directors and stockholders do not correspond with this description of persons; and the banks do not, and cannot, constitutionally, constitute such a treasury as I have described.

A mere direction to deposit the public money in the banks does not, ipso facto, convert them into the treasury. The act of congress does not create them, cannot increase or diminish the powers, and cannot rightfully stipulate for the performance of any service regnant to their charters. It will hardly be argued that congress has power directly and peremptorily to require the banks to receive, to keep, to transfer, and to disburse the public money—to prescribe, by law, the manner in which these duties shall be performed, and to punish for refusal failure or neglect. Sir, I hazard nothing in expressing the opinion, that no man will maintain that congress can compel the banks to become the depositories of the revenue. If there be no substantive power, which can be directly exercised to compel the banks to perform these duties, then the authority to accomplish the same end circuitously, by indirect means and by contrivance, must be derived by unfair interpretation. If congress does truly possess the power under the constitution, to devolve this duty on the banks, then it may legitimately carry it into execution, and may adopt coercive measures. Not only does the constitution expressly authorize the passage of all necessary and proper laws to carry into execution a granted power, but it is the very essence of law to exact obedience. A law is a rule prescribed, which must be obeyed—it enjoins duty, and may compel performance—it speaks to command, and not to parley—and a want of approbation cannot render a law, enacted in pursuance of the constitution, nugatory, or justify disobedience on the part of those to whom it is addressed. If a sanction cannot be annexed—if a penalty cannot be enforced, then it is clear that there is a want of legislative authority to command what it proposes to be performed. In other words, an evident and acknowledged inability to enforce compliance, to compel performance, is conclusive proof of the non-existence of the power. As then congress cannot constitutionally impose fine and punishment on these corporations and their officers, for refusing to keep the public money, for failing to keep it safely, for declining to transfer or disburse it, for neglecting to refund it when required, or even for embezzling it, it would seem idle to discourse about the existence of any substantive or efficient power to prescribe and command such duties. A palpable defect of power can be supplied only in the mode designated in the constitution: it cannot be obviated by artful contrivance, by indirection, and by circuitry of legislative action. No compact, stipulation, or agreement with these corporations can confer on congress, or the executive, or any department of this government, additional powers. The authority of congress over the subject of finance and revenue cannot depend, in whole or in part, for its existence or its exertion, upon the assent or dissent of bodies politic. The consent of one or more states cannot empower congress to do an act not warranted by the constitution, nor can the dissent of one or more states prevent the exercise of a power clearly granted. This doctrine applies a fortiori to corporations created by the states, and subordinate to their sovereignty.

The conclusion is regularly reached, and is undeniable, that the state banks are not, and cannot become, the treasury of the United States, as designed and required by the constitution itself. The corollary from this conclusion is, that public money placed in the banks on deposit, is not in the treasury, safe, and ready at every moment, from the time of its receipt, to be drawn therefrom, "in consequence of appropriations made by law," and incapable of being subtracted therefrom, in consequence of any thing else. It is true, that the secretary of the treasury annually reports all that public money as being in the treasury which is on deposit, and in possession of the banks; and it is also true that the acts making appropriations, regard this public money in the same point of view. But, sir, I think it has been made manifest in a previous part of my argument, that this whole proceeding rests upon delusion, and not upon reality; upon hypothesis, and not upon fact; that artificial conclusions are required by the character of our financial system, and the nature of our legislation, not warranted by the actual condition of the treasury. Are we to be told that there is no distinction between the actual possession of money, the real cash in hand, and a debt due, a mere liability to pay money. I understood my colleague [Mr. Garland] as asserting that money deposited in bank was just as much in the possession of government, as when in the hands of its own officers. Do you recognise no difference, Mr. Chairman, between drawing money out of your own chest, and paying your creditor, and giving him a check or order on your debtor, in satisfaction of his claim? The most ordinary intellect must perceive clearly the distinction in the case of individuals; and, having perceived this, must inevitably admit that there is a similar distinction between money in the treasury, in the actual possession of the government, which can be seen, touched, counted and used, and a debt or liability from the banks to the government, which may or may not be paid, according to promise and contract, on demand. Many an honest creditor, by the story of his disappointment and distress, a tale of real life without the embellishment, of fiction—can readily and easily explain the difference between receiving money drawn out of the treasury and paid to him by a responsible and authorized officer of the government, and receiving a draft upon an insolvent or suspended debtor bank, in discharge of his claim. Such an one knows and feels the difference between the receipt of money and the receipt of a bill drawn on another for money. A debt due and unpaid, is not money in possession. This delusive idea, that money deposited in bank is in possession of the government, is dissipated by a positive enactment of congress at the late extra session. This act rests upon the existing facts of the case, and not upon the hypothesis of the deposit system.

[Mr. Dromgoole here introduced and read to the committee the act of congress passed October 16th, 1837, and entitled "An act for adjusting the remaining claims upon the late deposit banks."]

Here, sir, is an admission of the fact, which the deposit system endeavors to conceal and mystify, that the public deposits in the banks are not public money in the treasury. This act recognises them as debts due to the United States from those institutions; it extends indulgence to them; and it exacts interest for delaying payment. It is an utter absurdity to assert that the same identical money is in the treasury, and at the same time an unavailable or unpaid debt. It is defaming the constitution to charge it with giving sanction or countenance to such inexplicable contradictions—such irreconcilable inconsistencies.

Next in the order of impeachment, Mr. Chairman, I am to make good the charge, that this union of the banks with the government tends to defeat the object designed by the framers of the constitution in substituting a direct power to raise revenues in place of the indirect mode of making requisitions on the states. It is unnecessary to detain the committee with the history of the requisitions made by congress, under the articles of confederation, on the different states of the union; with an account of the delay or failure of the states, in many instances, to comply; or with explanations of the insuperable difficulties, indeed the acknowledged inability of congress to enforce compliance. The principles of legislation for states or governments, in their corporate or collective capacities, as contradistinguished from the individuals of whom they consist, was pronounced by the writers of the day to be the "great and radical vice" of the existing confederation. The narrative of those times, the current essays, and the solemn debates, incontestably prove that the correction of this radical vice was a powerful and leading inducement in the formation of the present constitution. So thoroughly penetrated were the framers of the constitution, and the American people, with the conviction of the necessity of delegating to congress a power of raising revenue, separate from and independent of the states, in order that that body might preserve the public faith, comply promptly with all engagements entered into in behalf of the United States, and execute efficiently all acts requiring an appropriation of money, that they consented, in this particular, to give the government of the union a national instead of a federal aspect.

Congress was, therefore, authorized to apply the revenue power directly to the persons of the citizens, relieved from any dependence on the states, as communities, in their corporate character, and exempt from the embarrassments and difficulties of their intervention. The principle introduced is that of obtaining the necessary revenue by acts of legislation operating upon individuals; the object was to secure to the government the appropriate application or use of this revenue to its wants, without dependence on corporate bodies. The principle will have been introduced in vain, if, after the collection of the revenue, it may be returned to the states under the name of deposits, by which operation congress is again reduced to a dependence on them, and compelled again to resort to the abandoned system of requisitions. And is not the principle violated in a twofold degree by a dependence on banks, by creating the necessity of making requisitions on corporate bodies, which are but the creatures of the corporate authority of the states? The case is too clear for argument, that in both instances the principle is violated, and in both instances the object is defeated. These corporations may delay or decline compliance with the requisitions of the government—may refuse to pay the bills of government drawn on them—may deny to the government the use of its own revenue. The patriotism, the public spirit, the sense of justice which resides in corporations, is a sorry and unsafe reliance for the support of government. Suppose they lock up the revenue; suppose they refuse to yield it up for ever, or for a time, in peace or in war, where is the remedy against their contumacy; where is the relief from this miserable dependence? For the present, I only raise the question of remedial action—I do not go into a discussion of its feasibility.

Mr. Chairman, I am sincerely convinced that a government made, by its organization, dependent on corporations is fundamentally defective and imbecile; if the agents, entrusted with its administration, voluntarily reduce it to such a dependence, they are faithless to their charge. Such a dependence, especially in matters of revenue, is incompatible with the very idea of government. A government does not exist in its full constitutional health and vigor, which depends, for its supplies, on the contingent will of a corporation.*

The next count in the bill of indictment which I have preferred, charges the scheme under examination with exercising powers not granted in the compact. It usurps a power, nowhere granted, of loaning out the public money. The constitution does not, and for wise reasons, ought not, to confer on congress the authority to lend money. "To borrow money, on the credit of the United States," is expressly authorized; but no permission of the converse operation is to be found in the enumeration of grants to congress. To loan public money is not necessary or proper for carrying into execution any vested power, and cannot be regarded as of indispensable implication. The power to loan money implies the right to levy and collect an excess of revenue beyond the necessary and appropriate wants of the government. Applications for loans would greatly multiply the inducements to superfluous, unjust, and oppressive taxation. A desire to negotiate loans from the government, urged under the pretext of promoting the public good, would enlist a host of expectants and applicants, and would combine an interest in favor of surplus revenues, which would ultimately prove irresistible and overwhelming. Among the most eager and importunate in their solicitations for the use of the public money always, as at present, will be seen the corporations of the country. Deficiencies of the revenue appear to have been contemplated as of probable occurrence, and hence, very properly, the power "to borrow money" is expressly granted, and made permanent; but the idea of a surplus revenue of taxation beyond the necessary wants and consumption of government, seems to have been cautiously excluded from any place in the constitution. We search in vain for any semblance of the power to lend public money. The evident danger of abuse and oppression, by inordinate taxation, for the purpose of granting loans to favored individuals or associations, vindicates the wisdom of withholding such a power, and impresses, with certainty, the conclusion that none such could possibly have been contemplated. A total absence of all authority to lend the public money, in any form, ought to furnish some security that taxation would be restricted to the simple purpose of appropriation. Unless loan and appropriation are synonymous, or confounded, the restriction of the money in the treasury to appropriations is an exclusion of its employment in the business of loans.

Having ascertained, as I think, incontrovertibly, that "to lend money" is the exercise of a power not granted in the compact, it remains, in regular order, to inquire whether the deposits of the public money with the banks are, in fact, loans. It has been previously demonstrated that these deposits are not money actually in the treasury, but are debts due from the banks to the United States. To undertake, in addition to this, to demonstrate further that these debts are the result of moneys advanced or loaned, would be clearly to supererogate. It would be the useless employment of adducing testimony in proof of a notoriously self-evident fact. The eleventh section of the famous distribution and deposit act of the 23d of June, 1836, entitled "An act to regulate the deposits of the public money," expressly admits that the public money placed in the banks, under the name of "deposits," is loaned to them, and requires interest for the use of it. In committee of the whole on that bill, I moved to strike out the part requiring interest, placing the motion distinctly on the ground that it openly recognised the right of congress to loan out the public money. The clause requiring interest had been inserted and defended upon the principle that the banks ought to pay for the use of the public money. Thus did congress, "a mere trustee of the public treasure," bound to make a specific application of it, assume the right to divert it, and to loan it out on interest.

Mr. Chairman, this scheme of forming compacts or agreements with persons or bodies politic, not holding offices created, or appointments made, by this government, to take possession of the revenue, with permission to use and employ it upon condition of performing certain services, rests upon a virtual assumption of the power to "farm out the revenues." There are general laws specifying and declaring what duties or taxes shall be paid. We have an estimate of the probable amount of revenue accruing from the collection. Can the government turn over to others, be they natural or artificial, the collection of the taxes, with the right of conversion to their own use, in consideration of a promise or agreement to pay out and disburse, as may be required, an equivalent sum? Let this indebtedness, this liability, be equal to a fairly estimated amount of all duties and taxes, deducting only a reasonable compensation for the expense and trouble of collection, and making a just allowance for failures or losses; let there be ample security for strict and faithful performance, still is it competent for congress to convey and transfer the gross uncollected revenue? I shall take it for granted that no person will undertake to defend the policy or the constitutionality of such an arrangement. And where, it may very properly be inquired, is the difference in principle between receiving an acknowledgment of a debt, as a consideration for the transfer of the revenue before and after its collection? In both cases, the custody, possession, and use, of the revenue is surrendered, given, granted, and conveyed; and, in return therefor, a promise or obligation is taken for so much money, payable and to be paid on demand; to be disbursed or doled out by the grantee according to the requisition of the grantor.

*The reader is respectfully referred to Nos. 15 and 16 of the letters of Publius, in the work entitled the "Federalist;" extracts from which had been noted, but were omitted in committee for the sake of economizing time.

The government, sir, is to encounter all the difficulty and expense of collecting the public money; it is to incur, as it should do, the responsibility and the odium, if any, of enforcing an unjust and oppressive system of taxation; and then, is to let out, by special contract, to such banks as may be the selected objects of favor, the entire revenue, to be employed, at their unlimited discretion, in the business of trade and speculation in all its varieties. No matter how artfully this system of deposit may be disguised in its terms and stipulations; no matter by what delusive epithets it may be denominated, "to this complexion it comes at last," that the banks are the "farmers general" of the revenues of the United States. I have characterized this proceeding as an assumption of a power not granted, but it might be adopting a more correct mode of expression, to designate it a surrender of the rights and duties of congress to corporations.

Let us, Mr. Chairman, to these charges of a violation of the constitution, and an assumption of power not granted, make an application of a leading doctrine of the republican party, contained in their creed, as expounded in the Kentucky resolutions, in Taylor's resolutions, and in Madison's report. In that resolution, to which the attention of the committee has been heretofore invited, it is declared: "That, in case of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers, not granted by the compact, the states, who are parties thereto, have the right, and are in duty bound, to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining within their respective limits, the authorities, rights, and liberties appertaining to them." The principle here asserted is maintained also in the Kentucky resolutions; and it is clearly explained, strongly enforced, and conclusively defended, in Madison's report. It receives my most hearty and unqualified concurrence. The purpose, at present, however, is not to inquire whether it is a case of such deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of powers not granted, as to require and justify the interposition of the states for the purpose of arresting it within their respective limits. Probably it might be so regarded, were it possible to discuss the matter in all its relations and consequences to our institutions, state and federal, free from the influence of banks and the power of money.

The federal government possesses its powers, separate and distinct from the states and their governments, and in a rightful exercise of them cannot be hindered, obstructed, or prevented by the interposition of state authority. The states cannot so exercise this right of interposition for the purpose of arresting the evil of federal usurpation, as to violate the compact to which they are parties. Whenever, therefore, a state can successfully interpose, without violating the compact, to defeat and prevent the progress of federal action, it would seem to show conclusively that the arrested action was not authorized by the compact. I do not mean to go into an exposition of the whole doctrine of state interposition. Let it suffice here to avow the belief that the modes are various; that the interposing act may be effected by the existing governments of the states through the agency of one or all its departments, as may be deemed best and most appropriate; and that the mode and the manner of interposing must depend on the nature and extent of the evil to be arrested.

Now, sir, is there any mode in which the states may, rightfully and successfully, interpose to arrest and prevent the employment of their banks as fiscal agents of this federal government?

Surely it will not be questioned but that the states may prohibit any subscription to the stock of their banks on behalf of the United States, and may prevent the federal government from becoming a member of any incorporated company within their respective limits. The states, in the act of incorporation, may prescribe admissions into, and exclusions from, the company. Here, then, is one species of connection which may be avoided. The states have clearly the right to supervise, regulate, and control, the conduct of their own local institutions. They may, in their wisdom and discretion, in the progress of time, discontinue, within their respective limits, the whole banking system. They may, in virtue of their exclusive power of legislation over their own corporate bodies, interdict them from entering the service of another government. They may inhibit or annul all contracts and agreements made by the banks, which are not in strict pursuance of a rigid interpretation of their charters. These things are manifestly within the competency of state authority, and would effectually prevent any connection between federal revenues and the local banks, without impeding or obstructing the rightful action of the government; without impairing, in the least, its right "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," to place all public money in the treasury, to provide for its being kept there exclusively and securely, and to regulate the mode and manner of drawing out the same by its own officers, in consequence of appropriations. If, however, the selection and employment of these banks rested upon any authority deducible from the terms of the compact, the states, who are parties, could not thus easily and efficiently interpose to arrest the progress of its exercise.

Mr. Chairman, I proceed next to show that this alliance with the banks tends to efface the line of partition between the states and the federal government. It will be borne in mind by the members of the committee, that, in the commencement of my remarks, I laid down, as part of the groundwork of my argument, the fundamental principle of a division and distribution of political power between the two governments. I have marked several passages, both in Taylor's "Construction Construed" and his "Inquiry," demonstrating and enforcing this great principle in the structure of our political systems. It is with pleasure that I refer to the views and arguments of this pure patriot and eminent statesman, on account of their own merit and the high estimation in which they are held in my own state; but to save time, now become so valuable, I will forego my desire to read extracts from the works before me.

This primary principle teaches us that each government has its appropriate and separate duties to perform, and that each has its separate and distinct functionaries and institutions. The conversion of those belonging to the states into the fiscal functionaries of the federal government, blends, mixes, and confuses the public money of the latter with the money and funds of the states, and of the local companies organized by their authority. In many instances the same banks will be in the fiscal employment of the states and of the United States at the same time. The officers and members of companies created by the states, accountable and responsible to the states, undertake, by contract, to render themselves accountable and responsible to this government, and thus to draw over them the mantle of federal jurisdiction. If, technically speaking, they do not become officers under federal appointment, yet most assuredly they are contractors with the government. How far, in virtue of this contract with the corporate body the character of contractor attaches to each member individually, it is not material to inquire; nor is it necessary to revive a question mooted in this house in 1806, whether contractors are officers. If the president, directors, and members, are converted into contractors, and contractors are officers, then they are ineligible to seats in either house of congress, under the sixth section of the first article of the constitution; and in my own state, every person holding any office or place, any commission or appointment whatsoever, whether any pay or emoluments be attached thereto or not, and every person in any way accepting or receiving any emolument whatever, is entirely disqualified for holding any office therein. I will not undertake to decide here for my state a question coram non jure, and which she is fully competent to decide for herself: whether every officer and stockholder of a bank, performing, under selection and appointment by this government, and under the terms and obligations of an express stipulation or agreement, the duties of fiscal agent, do not hold some office, place, commission, or appointment, or do not, in some way, accept or receive some pay or emolument and are not thereby entirely disqualified for holding any office in the commonwealth? It is a question, perhaps, novel to all, and never considered by any; but in the progress of the system, should it unfortunately be revived and continued, it may prove to be one of deep and vital importance to the rights of the state, and to the pure administration of her laws. It is no part of my purpose to discuss or decide it. My object was to bring to view such effects, to suggest such questions and doubts and difficulties, as served to show that the enlistment of state institutions into federal employment, tended to confuse and complicate the business and the duties of the two governments, and thereby to efface, or render less distinct, that "line of partition," which the republican members of the general assembly of Virginia, in their solemn address to the people, accompanying the resolutions of December, 1798, declared they were under "the strongest obligation to preserve unimpaired." I will conclude this division of the subject, by repeating and re-affirming some observations which were incidentally drawn from me on a former occasion:

"He was one of those who wished to organize the treasury of the United States upon its true constitutional ground, and to disconnect it entirely and wholly from its union with state institutions. He believed that good policy required it; that past experience demonstrated its necessity; and he believed it to be according to the spirit of the constitution, and the obvious intention of the framers of that instrument. He was well satisfied, from reason and reflection, as well as from the lights of former experiments, that the state banks, from their limited and local character, and from their separate and unconnected existence, under different state authorities, could never harmoniously, adequately, and efficiently perform the functions of fiscal agents to the federal government.

"Mr. D. observed that it was a principle long established in Virginia, that the business and operations of each government, state and federal, should be kept separate and distinct. That each government should be confined to its own orbit; that each should separately exercise its own appropriate powers; that the officers and the administration of the two governments should not be united or blended in the same persons—are, in the good old commonwealth of Virginia, regarded as cardinal doctrines. The proposed connection between the banks and the federal government—the mixture of the revenues of the two governments in the hands of a common fiscal agent—the transfusion of the moneys of the federal government into the business of corporations—are a palpable violation of the political creed of Virginia, which she has constantly and ardently cherished. Such was the wakened jealousy on this subject; such the anxious desire to establish and secure this great principle of state sovereignty, (doubtless to guard effectually against any sinister influence on the part of the federal government)—that at the very first session after the Virginia convention had ratified the federal constitution, the legislature enacted that any person holding any office or place, any commission or appointment whatsoever, whether any pay or emolument was attached thereto or not, or if in any way accepting or receiving any emolument whatever should be entirely disqualified from holding any office in the state. And the preamble of the act, after reciting that the convention had assented to the federal constitution and the creation of a federal government, declares, that 'it is judged expedient and necessary that all those employed in the administration of said government ought to be disqualified from holding or administering any office or place whatsoever under the government of the commonwealth.'

This was the doctrine maintained from the first by the revolutionary fathers of the Old Dominion, and solemnly embodied into law in 1788, at the session that intervened between the act of ratification and the commencement of the federal government. From that period to the present it has been carefully preserved among our living statutes. And for the purpose of upholding the same principle of keeping the state, and all its institutions exempt from any improper influence or interference by the federal government, it is a part of our fundamental law, a provision of our amended constitution, that certain persons in the service of the United States shall be incapable of exercising the elective franchise. Mr. D. unhesitatingly avowed that he was of those who advocated an entire separation between the revenues of the federal government and the state banks."

Mr. Chairman, I have also charged this scheme, of surrendering the revenues to the use and employment of the banks, with contradicting the settled doctrines of political economy, and grossly mistaking the nature and effect of taxation and public expenditure. On this branch of the subject I might detain the committee with numerous references to authors of established reputation, and with copious extracts from their erudite investigations. Admonished by the brevity of our time, and out of respect to the anxiety of others to be heard, I will content myself with a few quotations from a single writer.

On the subject of public expenditure, of consumption by government, I will take the liberty of reading from Say's Political Economy the following:

"If I have made myself understood, in the commencement of this third book, my readers will have no difficulty in comprehending that public consumption, or that which takes place for the general utility of the whole community, is precisely analogous to that of consumption, which goes to satisfy the wants of individuals or families. In either case, there is a destruction of values, and a loss of wealth, although, perhaps, not a shilling of specie goes out of the country.

"By way of ensuring conviction of the truth of this position, let us trace, from first to last, the passage of a product towards ultimate consumption on the public account.

"The government exacts from a tax-payer the payment of a given tax in the shape of money.—To meet this demand, the tax-payer exchanges part of the products at his disposal for coin which he pays to the tax-gatherer; a second set of government agents are busied in buying with that coin cloth and other necessities for the soldiery. Up to this point, there is no value lost or consumed; there has only been a gratuitous transfer of value and a subsequent act of barter; but the value contributed by the subject still exists in the shape of stores and supplies in the military depot. In the end, however, this value is consumed; and then the portion of wealth which passes from the hands of the tax-payer into those of the tax-gatherer, is destroyed and annihilated.

"Yet it is not the sum of money that is destroyed: that has only passed from one hand to another, either without any return, as when it passed from the tax-payer to the tax-gatherer, or in exchange for an equivalent, as when it passed from the government agent to the contractor for clothing and supplies. The value of the money survives the whole operation, and goes through three, four, or a dozen hands without any sensible alteration: it is the value of the clothing and necessities that disappears, with precisely the same effect as if the tax-payer had, with the same money, purchased clothing and necessities for his own private consumption. The sole difference is, that the individual in the one case, and the state in the other, enjoys the satisfaction resulting from that consumption.

"The same reasoning may be applied to all other kinds of public consumption. When the money of the tax-payer goes to pay the salary of a public officer, that officer sells his time, his talents, and his exertions, to the public, all which are consumed for public purposes. On the other hand, that officer consumes, instead of the tax-payer, the value he receives in lieu of his services, in the same manner as any clerk or person in the private employ of the tax-payer would do.

"There has long been a prevalent notion, that the values paid by the community for the public service, return to it again in some shape or other; in the vulgar phrase, that what government and its agents receive, is refunded again by their expenditure. This is a gross fallacy, but one that has been productive of infinite mischief, inasmuch as it has been the pretext for a great deal of shameless waste and dilapidation. The value paid to government by the tax-payer, is given without equivalent or return; it is expended by the government in the purchase of personal service of objects of consumption; in one word, of products of equivalent value, which are actually transferred. Purchase or exchange is a very different thing from restitution."

"Turn it which way you will, this operation, though often very complex in the execution, must always be reducible by analysis to this plain statement. A product consumed must always be a product lost, be the consumer who he may: lost without return, whenever no value or advantage is received in return but to the tax-payer, the advantages derived from the services of the public functionary, or from the consumption effected in the prosecution of public objects, is a positive return.

"If, then, public and private expenditure affect social wealth in the same manner, the principles of economy, by which it should be regulated, must be the same in both cases. There are not two kinds of economy, any more than two kinds of honesty, or of morality. If a government or an individual consume in such a way as to give birth to a product larger than that consumed, a successful effort of productive industry will be made. If no product result from the act of consumption, there is a loss of value, whether to the state or to the individual; yet probably that loss of value may have been productive of all the good anticipated. Military stores and supplies, and the time and labor of civil and military functionaries engaged in the effectual defence of the state, are well bestowed, though consumed and annihilated; it is the same with them as with the commodities and personal service that have been consumed in a private establishment.—The sole benefit resulting in the latter case is, the satisfaction of a want; if the want had no existence, the expense or consumption is a positive mischief, incurred without an object. So likewise of the public consumption: systematic profusion, the creation of an office for the sole purpose of giving a salary, the destruction of an article for the mere pleasure of paying for it, are acts of extravagance either in a government or an individual, in a small state or a large one, in a republic or a monarchy. Nay, there is more criminality in public than in private extravagance and profusion; inasmuch as the individual squanders only what belongs to him; but the government has nothing of its own to squander, being, in fact, a mere trustee of the public treasure.

"What, then, are we to think of the principles laid down by those writers who have labored to draw an essential distinction between public and private wealth, to show that economy is the way to increase private fortune, but, on the contrary, that public wealth increases with the increase of public consumption; inferring thence this false and dangerous conclusion, that the rules of conduct in the management of private fortune and of public treasure, are not only different, but in direct opposition."

In relation to the character and effect of taxation, I ask indulgence whilst I read a few selected sentences from the same author:

"Taxation is the transfer of a portion of the national products from the hands of individuals to those of the government, for the purpose of meeting the public consumption or expenditure. Whatever be the denomination it bears—whether tax, contribution, duty, excise, custom, aid, subsidy, grant, or free gift—it is virtually a burden imposed upon individuals, either in a separate or in a corporate character, by the ruling power for the time being, for the purpose of supplying the consumption it may think proper to make at their expense; in short, an impost, in the literal sense.

"It would be foreign to the plan of this work to inquire in whom the right of taxation is, or ought to be, vested. In the science of political economy, taxation must be considered as matter of fact, and not of right; and nothing further is to be regarded than its nature, the source whence it derives the values it absorbs, and its effects upon national and individual interests. The province of this science extends no further.

"The object of taxation is, not the actual commodity, but the value of the commodity given by the tax-payer to the taxgatherer. It being paid in silver, in goods, or in personal service, is a mere accidental circumstance, which may be more or less advantageous to the subject or to the sovereign. The essential point is the value of the silver, the goods, or the service.

"The moment that value is parted with by the tax-payer, it is positively lost to him: the moment it is consumed by the government or its agents, it is lost to all the world, and never reverts to, or re-exists in, society. This, I apprehend, has been already demonstrated, when the general effect of public consumption was under consideration. It was then shown that, however the money levied by taxation may be refunded to the nation, its value never is refunded, because it is never returned gratuitously, or refunded by the public functionaries, without receiving an equivalent in the way of barter or exchange."

"The same causes we have found to make unproductive consumption nowise favorable to reproduction, prevent taxation from at all promoting it. Taxation deprives the producer of a product, which he would otherwise have the option of deriving a personal gratification from, if consumed unproductively, or of turning to profit, if he preferred to devote it to a useful employment. One product is a means of raising another; and therefore, the subtraction of a product must needs diminish, instead of augmenting, productive power.

"It may be urged, that the pressure of taxation impels the productive classes to redouble their exertions, and thus tends to enlarge the national production. I answer that, in the first place, mere exertion cannot alone produce: there must be capital for it to work upon, and capital is but an accumulation of the very products that taxation takes from the subject; that, in the second place, it is evident that the values which industry creates expressly to satisfy the demands of taxation, are no increase of wealth; for they are seized on, and devoured by taxation. It is a glaring absurdity to pretend that taxation contributes to national wealth, by engrossing part of the national produce, and enriches the nation, by consuming part of its wealth. Indeed, it would be trifling with my readers' time to notice such a fallacy, did not most governments act upon this principle, and had not well-intentioned and scientific writers endeavored to support and establish it."

The opportunity afforded the banks, the permission and encouragement to them, to employ the revenue in trade and business; its conversion, in fact, after collection, into banking capital, as the basis not only of commercial, but of various other operations, is a palpable violation of these plain and simple truths. The introduction of a system founded upon the hypothesis that that value which is consumed by government is still in existence, and capable of profitable employment and reproduction is an absurdity and a delusion little less extravagant than would be the idea, in a treatise on population, that the extinguishment of life is not a destruction of human existence—a subtraction from the numerical aggregate. It may be urged that the visible growth and prosperity of the country, the acknowledged augmentation of the grand total of national wealth, rebuts the opinion that taxation and expenditure are an absolute destruction of so much value or wealth. Such reasoning is about as convincing, such logic is as conclusive, as to maintain that the continued increase of population, the constant and invariable addition to the aggregate number in a country, by natural means, proves that no death has ever occurred. It is passing strange that a fallacy so absurd, a delusion so implausible, should be attempted upon the credulity of a whole nation. And what are the necessary consequences, the unavoidable mischiefs, of this scheme of deception and folly? The employment of the revenue in business and trade inevitably tends continually to the creation of an unnatural condition of things, tends incessantly to disturb and derange the regular and ordinary course of business transactions, and tends to produce an artificial and deceitful relation between the trade of the country, and the capital actually applicable to that trade. In the intervening time, between collection and consumption, the revenue is stimulated into active employment; it becomes a moving cause in business and speculation; it is regarded and considered as the basis upon which may safely rest extended additional operations. Whenever the revenue, thus enticed or forced by the action of government into busy employment, is withdrawn, as it must be necessarily at some time, then the public expenditure is a destruction, to that extent, of so much capital. The capital being gradually withdrawn to supply the wants of the government, in the same ratio, and even in a much greater, must business be affected. Not only the amount of business resting on this capital, artificially multiplied, must cease and perish; but the tumbling of the superstructure, thus erected, must shake and convulse all others in any way connected with it, and must produce panic and alarm throughout the country. But the accruing revenue, in order to prevent these, otherwise certain and disastrous, consequences, must be made to supply the deficiency created, must be made to fill up the chasm. Thus we have disclosed and avowed the startling, the odious doctrine, that besides the mere support of government, the object and purpose of taxation is to contribute to the increase, or certainly to prevent a diminution of that amount of capital employed by bank agencies.—The principle of transferring wealth or value, by force of legislation, from one class or portion of society to another, under whatever pretext of public utility, is a principle of plunder and robbery. It is taking the property of A, depriving him of the use, increase, and profit, and giving it to B, because he will, in the estimation of the legislature, vest and employ it more beneficially for the "general welfare." It is as clear as the sun in the firmament on a cloudless day, that this unprincipled and unconstitutional connection between the banks and the government operates as an unmitigated stimulant to superfluous, excessive, tyrannical, and unconstitutional taxation—to taxation greatly surpassing the amount required for proper and economical expenditure.

But suppose, admit, that this licensed and approved conversion of revenue into bank capital does essentially assist in augmenting the aggregate wealth of the nation to an extent not otherwise attained. The admission of such a fact would be no refutation of the charge of injustice, partiality, and tyranny, urged against the system; and would, by no means, prove that such a system operated equally in improving the condition and multiplying the general comforts of society—that its tendency was

"Dr. Hamilton, in his valuable tract upon "The National Debt of Great Britain," illustrates the absurdity of the position here attacked, by comparing it to the "forcible entry of a robber into a merchant's house, who should take away his money, and tell him he did him no injury, for the money, or part of it, would be employed in purchasing the commodities he dealt in, upon which he would receive a profit." The encouragement afforded by the public expenditure is precisely analogous.

the production of "the greater good for the greater number."

Take, for example, a small community of one hundred persons, whose total production of value, or increase of wealth, is ten thousand dollars. Whether this increase shall, by the partiality and injustice of law be monopolized by five individuals, or shall be left free to the acquisition and enjoyment of all, does not at all affect the certainty of the fact of such increase; but it does materially concern the comfort, happiness, and equal rights of ninety-five out of one hundred in society. The augmentation of the aggregate wealth of a nation is not, therefore, always the proper measure of the aggregate improvement and amelioration of the condition of its inhabitants. Strange and paradoxical, therefore, as it may at first appear, it is nevertheless undoubtedly true, that a nation may be rapidly increasing in wealth, whilst individual poverty and inequality may be still more rapidly multiplying; and this deterioration of the comfort and means of subsistence of the inhabitants, separately or in different sections or parts, may be the result of those very laws which are stimulating the employment of capital, and enhancing its profits. Such will be the tendency, in a greater or less degree, of any system which takes from individuals, by taxation, a sum more than sufficient for the most rigidly economical wants of government, and permits the sum of taxation, or any portion thereof, to be transferred to favored classes or associations, to capitalists and speculators, under the shallow pretence of sustaining credit, invigorating confidence, extending commerce, and promoting the general prosperity of the country, but really for the purpose of swelling the profits and aggrandizing the wealth of these favorites.

I should not have gone thus seriously, and at large, into this investigation of the deposit system, as connected with the principles of political economy, but for the fact that the policy of using the revenue, as active business capital, has heretofore been recommended and sanctioned; has been maintained on this floor, and has been recently and zealously urged and defended in the other end of this building. "The whole surplus revenue beyond the current disbursement of the government" is to be rescued from "barren and unproductive idleness," is to be preserved from "annihilation" as so much "national capital," and is to be made "susceptible of multiplication, through conventional substitutes, to four times its nominal amount, and capable of fructifying and sustaining the national industry to a corresponding extent."* I have felt it my duty to meet and repel this doctrine of availing ourselves of the revenue power, the power of taxing the people, for the acquisition of national capital, to be employed in the encouragement of national industry. Such a system of deriving capital from the labor of the country, such a mode of giving it employment, with the consequent distribution of its profits, is partial and unjust in its effects upon the different sections of the union, and is repugnant to the spirit and intention of the constitution. Against such a departure from the meaning and intent of the compact, against such sectional preferences, against such odious inequality, we have just cause of complaint. Without discrimination or favor, let all be left free to exert their industry and skill, to employ their capital according to the suggestions of their own judgments, and to enjoy, without interference, the fruits of their toils. But to see taxes, generously contributed for the sole purpose of equal government and equal security, diverted from their legitimate end, in order to bestow partial benefits, is to feel the sting of injustice and oppression.

In vain has the constitution secured uniformity throughout the United States, in "all duties, imposts, and excises;" in vain has it ordained that "no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one state over those of another;" these provisions lose their salutary qualities under the operation of that system which regards the revenue as national capital, and allows its employment for the encouragement of the industry and trade of one commercial city in preference of another.

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding all these objections, to the constitutionality and policy of the measure, which I have endeavored to enforce, and which, to my own mind, are insuperable, a revival of this exploded experiment is still most pertinaciously recommended. Numerous apologies, alike ingenious and unsatisfactory, are offered for past insufficiency, whilst the most liberal promises are tendered for future fidelity and prompt performance of duty. For myself, I have no confidence in its adequate ability or its efficient agency. Unquestionably it has performed one miracle, a repetition of which, no man, in his senses, who loves his country and its government, ought to desire. With millions of revenue actually collected and unexpended, reported by the secretary as having been received into the treasury, this system has reduced the government to want and embarrassment; in the language of the day, to bankruptcy. Is it the part of wise men to urge an immediate exposure to a similar fate? Or is it not a wanton disregard of a high and solemn obligation to insist again to place the public money in an exposed condition, liable to be withheld from lawful use and appropriation at the mere pleasure of artificial and irresponsible bodies, acting under the suggestions of fraud, caprice, convenience, or necessity. Exposed to such contingencies, and destitute, as I contend, of any complete remedy, we cannot, with strict propriety, affirm that the revenues are in a place of security. He, who is exposed to danger, who is in actual peril, cannot, in truth, be considered safe, because probably he may have the good fortune to escape without injury. The banks may again suspend, (should they generally resume and get possession of the public money,) may refuse to redeem their promises, may violate their contracts, and may disregard all their obligations. Because they may ultimately prove solvent, because they may perhaps, if so inclined, refund the money placed in their custody, and because eventually nothing may be lost, is it therefore safe or prudent to subject the government, for its support and very continuance, to such contingencies? To speak with accuracy and precision, I cannot admit that banks are such agents as the public ought to believe safe and suitable. My colleague, (Mr. Garland,) however, will insist that banks give security, and are as much responsible as the officers of the government; and that we have all the power over them which we have over individuals.

It will be an exceedingly difficult task to demonstrate that there is the same degree of responsibility to this government on the part of state banks and federal officers. It will be a rash undertaking to strive, by argument, to prove that we have all the power over them which we have over individuals holding federal offices. This subject of corporate responsibility, and corporate liability to coercion and punishment, has already been anticipated. Suppose, in defiance of all principle, it should be attempted to declare by law the same penalties, the same sanctions, against state corporations, as against individual officers of this government for delinquency; suppose, by the contrivance of compacts and stipulations, you set on foot some species of prosecution in the federal courts: how can their judgments and sentences be enforced against body politics of the states? If the coercion of the civil magistracy be insufficient, shall resort be had to the coercion of arms? It is absurd to think of fine and punishment, and imprisonment, as applicable to corporations. In the very nature of things, there cannot be the same kind, or the same degree, of responsibility on their part as on the part of regularly appointed officers. In the very nature of things, no government can exercise all the power over its own corporations which it may exercise over individuals; and much less can, or ought, this federal government to exercise all the power over the state banks which it may, and does, exercise over its own officers. But there is an acknowledged distinction between a law commanding and compelling performance, and a compact or agreement for mutual service or favor. Suppose a violation of the bargain by the government, or its officers, where is the remedy of the corporations? Confiscation of the public money? Suppose a violation or failure on the part of the corporations, how can a specific performance of the contract be enforced? And again, these contracts may be prohibited by the state legislatures; nay, more: may be set aside, nullified by the stockholders in general meeting, as was the case of the contract made with the Bank of Virginia.

Having made these suggestions in relation to security and safety, to responsibility, and to the practicable application of a coercive power, I proceed to take a very cursory view of the manifold advantages so confidently promised, as the result of this fiscal connection with the banks. I am much mistaken if the ends to be accomplished, the benefits designed, will not be found, on examination, to be objects not contemplated or authorized by the constitution. The power to raise revenue, and to disburse it is unquestionably granted.

It is proposed so to exercise this power as to regulate or restrain the banks from issuing notes below a certain denomination to be prescribed by act of congress. Congress has no power to enact in direct terms any such prohibition, and yet principle is equally violated by the adoption of regulations indirectly accomplishing the same purpose. It proposes to stimulate the banks to good management, and to deter them from misconduct, by operating on their "hopes and fears." The hope of being permitted to derive profit from the use of the revenue, the fear of losing the opportunity of enjoying this boon, are held out as inducements to the banks to conform their proceedings to the wishes of federal authority. The power to foster and encourage domestic manufactures in the states, by means of the revenue power, and by force of commercial regulations, rests on no better foundation than the power to foster and encourage the issue of a local currency. The power to encourage the manufacture of articles of prescribed dimensions and quality depends upon the same rules of construction as the right to encourage the manufacture of bank notes of prescribed denomination and value. The right to create public confidence in the strength and durability of the articles of cloth, is as clear as the right to impress public confidence upon the articles of paper promises. They are both articles of domestic manufacture, and may be produced with or without acts of incorporation.

The "reward" of public confidence is proffered to one class; the withholding of public confidence is the rod of "punishment" to another class of banks. Where is the constitutional power to convert the public confidence and the credit of the government into a system of "rewards and punishments?"

It virtually establishes a treaty of peace and cooperation with the pliant and conformable, and makes war upon the solvency and credit of the recusant and non-conforming banks.

The power of selection is founded upon the assumption of a right to pronounce upon the solvency and sufficiency of our state institutions. In practice, it makes an odious, unjust, and injurious discrimination. Its effect is to divide the local currency of the states into two classes: one class is to have the credit and confidence of the government, and its issues are to be received in payment of dues; the other class has not the endorsement of the government for its solvency, has not the favor of its confidence and good opinion, and its issues are not receivable in payment of dues. Equal though they may be in all other respects, the receivability of one in payment of dues, and the exclusion of the other, destroys their uniformity. The additional function of discharging public dues, enhances the value of the one in public estimation, and depreciates the other.

On this subject of currency the United States present an anomaly.

No State can make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts. The power thus prohibited to the states, is no where conferred on congress. "To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures," is a power delegated to congress, and expressly denied to the states. The gold and silver coin, thus under the regulation of congress, is the only money known to the constitution, and of which congress can take cognizance, or can produce or regulate. In addition to this current and constitutional coin of the whole United States, the states respectively claim, and have exercised, the right of creating banking companies, with the privilege of issuing promissory notes serving the purpose of a local currency.

The advocates of the deposit system propose, by an affiliation of certain banks, placed by contract under the supervising control of the federal government, exerted by an application of the revenue power, to convert this local currency into a general currency, and to impart to it uniformity. Sir, the plan, at the outset, is chargeable with the absurdity and inconsistency of promising uniformity, and actually aggravating inequality by the mode and terms of selection. The promised uniformity in the multifarious and diversified paper currencies of so many separate communities, can never be consummated. Such is its versatility, such its uncertainty and inequality, at different times and places, that it seems to expose mathematical truth to ridicule and doubt. A bank note in the city of Richmond may be equivalent to specie, and so may another bank note, of similar denomination, be in St. Louis. Now, sir, in mathematics, that things equal to the same, are equal to each other, is a truth independent of time and place. He who should act upon this truth, in reference to the two supposed bank notes, would be egregiously deceived. They are, perhaps, in no other places, equal to the same thing, and are no where equal to each other. The uniformity of such variety of circulation and currency, emanating from the separate an independent states of this confederacy, can never be effected by any constitutional application of the limited powers conferred on congress. The want and the desire of uniformity in this various currency, its elevation above, or depression below, the standard of the constitution, its tendency to exclude gold and silver from circulation, its useful or injurious functions in commercial transactions, its agency in disturbing or deranging the fair rate of exchange between different parts of the union, neither from one, or all of these considerations combined, can any power be derived to congress over the subject. For correction and reform in the character of the currency of the several states, we must, under our forms of government, rely upon the same authority which has bestowed the privilege of creation and issue. For weal or woe, in wisdom or in folly, constitutionally or unconstitutionally, the states have adopted this paper system; they have, respectively, exclusive jurisdiction in the regulation of their own issues, and each may wholly exclude from circulation within its limits the issues of any or all the rest. Sir, I repeat that the great question of reform in local banks and currency, the great question of a revival of the whole system of corporations—these great questions between republican equality and aristocratic privilege—belong to the states separately; and any attempt on the part of congress to interfere, regulate, control, or settle state policy, directly or indirectly, overtly or clandestinely, I denounce as an unwarrantable exercise of power. Congress ought not to be permitted to divide with the states the glory of achieving a radical reformation in their own peculiar local institutions, nor ought it to desire to participate in the crime of perpetuating existing abuses by interposing the ægis of protection, upon the false and slanderous suggestion that, under the cloak of reform, the democracy conceal the demon of destruction. Let the struggles for reform of state policy be carried on, free from all unjust obstrusion and illegal interference on the part of this government.*

*See speech of Mr. Rives in the senate of the United States, February 6-7, 1838.

I see with approbation that the eminent individual to whom is entrusted the executive power, has adopted this safe rule of conduct; and, in his adherence to it, I trust confidently that he will be triumphantly sustained. The states may, and doubtless, will improve their currency; will cause it to approximate more nearly to the constitutional standard; will make it uniform, and equivalent to gold and silver within their own limits; and without, must leave it to depend upon our good character at home and the condition and wants of business. I will not doubt both the inclination and wisdom of the states to accomplish, without federal dictation or prescription, the general reform so earnestly demanded by the state of public opinion. In the fulness of time it will be accomplished. It is at a certain stage in the regular advancement of political truth, and in the gradual progress of the great democratic principle.

Mr. Chairman, let us briefly recapitulate the purposes, promises, and designs, of this union of the state banks with the federal government.

It assumes the power to loan out the public money:

It converts the state banks into farmers general of the revenues:

It reduces the government to the necessity of making requisitions on the banks for the use of its own revenue:

It effaces the line of partition between the two governments:

It applies national capital, raised by taxation, and multiplied four-fold, to fructify and sustain national industry:

It undertakes to prescribe the denomination of notes to be issued by the state banks;

It undertakes to restrain and regulate their issues:

It addresses, as motives of conduct, their "hopes and fears:"

It uses the public credit for "reward and punishment:"

It promises to give uniformity to the whole local currency:

It makes odious discriminations, and aggravates its disparity:

It proposes to recur to "existing materials," "state institutions," upon which to build up a system of federal power:

To made the most of these for the convenience of the government, as well as for the general good:

To reform their abuses, corrects their defects, and adopt every precaution which may be necessary to insure their fidelity and efficiency.

These are but an imperfect enumeration; and where, since the days of Hamilton, can its parallel be found? I call to mind none, except, perhaps, the extravaganzas of Richard Rush, in his first annual report, as secretary of the treasury. There appears to my mind so strong a resemblance, that I cannot forego the opportunity of introducing to the notice of the committee the enumeration of the legitimate objects of federal legislation contained in that famous document:

"To give perfection to the industry of a country rich in the gifts of nature, and blessed in the beneficence of its government; to draw out its obvious resources, and seek constantly for new ones, ever ready to unfold themselves to diligent inquiry, urged on by adequate motives; to augment the number and variety of occupations for its inhabitants; to hold out to every degree of labor, and to every modification of skill, its appropriate object and inducement—these ranking amongst the highest ends of legislation. To organize the whole labor of a country, to entice into the widest ranges its mechanical and intellectual capabilities, instead of suffering them to slumber; to call forth, whenever bidden, latent ingenuity, giving to effort activity, and to emulation ardor; to create employment for the greatest amount of numbers, by adapting it to the diversified faculties, propensities, and situations of men, so that every particle of ability, every shade of genius, may come into requisition, is, in other words, to lift up the condition of a country, to increase its fiscal energy, to multiply the means and sources of its opulence to imbue it with the elements of general, as well as lasting, strength and prosperity."

With an avowal of so many objects and purposes of federal legislation, with our state institutions nationalized, and drawn, by consequence of compacts and agreements, within the cognizance of, and subjected, if possible, to the decision of, the federal judiciary, as cases in law or equity, arising under the constitution and laws of the United State, what portion of the reserved rights of the states, may we hope, will ultimately be saved from encroachment, should these alarming doctrines obtain? Then the republicans of the present day, as did the republicans of '98, will have too much cause to express their deep regret, "that a spirit has been manifested by the federal government to enlarge its powers by forced constructions of the constitutional charter which defines them."

In lieu of this scheme, which has so lately failed with a most disastrous explosion, it is proposed in the bill before us, reported by the committee of ways and means, to organize the treasury according to the requisitions of the constitution. My colleague [Mr. Garland] has candidly admitted that there is no constitutional objection to the plan which we, on our side, advocate, whilst the plan which he so zealously defends, is surrounded with insurmountable difficulties. I was glad that my colleague did not indulge in the usual cant of charging our bill with creating two currencies, one for the government, and another for the people. Sir, it is utterly untrue that this bill creates any currency at all. I have heretofore adverted to the anomalous condition of the United States on the subject of currency, and have shown that whilst the constitution requires a metallic currency, and authorizes no other, the states respectively, with or without constitutional right, have superadded a paper currency. Neither congress or this bill is at all responsible for the existence of two currencies in the country. The coinage of money, the regulation of the value thereof, and of foreign coin, is the imperative duty of congress. The existence of a metallic currency, therefore, is an indispensable constitutional requisition. There is, then, one currency, under the constitution, which is necessary and unavoidable, and must perform its intended functions: and those who are disposed to murmur because there is another currency, which cannot answer all the same purposes, ought to go to the source of its creation to vent their complaints and remonstrances, and ought not to hurl their indignation against our bill, which, in that particular at least, is innocent. Our bill is based upon the principle, that according to the constitution, in the payment of all dues and debts to the government, gold and silver ought to be required, and looks to the ultimate establishment and general application of this principle. Although taxation, in its broad sense, implies any species of contribution or impost for the support of government, yet I presume that it will not be contested or denied that our rates of taxes, duties, imposts and excises, must be laid and collected in a general medium denominated money. We have seen that the constitution makes money to consist of gold and silver, and does not authorize any other currency; this, therefore, must be the species of money intended to be employed, in government purposes, by the framers of that instrument. Money is only the standard or measure of value. Taxation is but the transfer of individual wealth or value to the government for its consumption. The amount or extent of value taken from each citizen is measured by this standard. Entire uniformity and exact equity in all contributions and exactions cannot be attained really as well as nominally, but by the use of this common, or constitutional standard or measure of value. Specie payments of all debts and dues to the government are the necessary result of requiring uniformity, and employing a common and invariable standard. In addition to the argument resting on uniformity and a common standard, it will be remembered, that neither the states or the federal government can make any thing but gold and silver a tender in payment of debts. Should the government receive the paper substitutes, issued in the different states, in place of gold and silver, how can it with these preserve the public faith, and fulfil all its engagements at home and abroad, according to the terms of the constitution? Should the government receive paper at all, it ought to be with a certainty, excluding every possibility of doubt of its immediate convertibility into gold and silver, and it ought to be so converted invariably before disbursement. In such case, the government, as a matter of convenience to the tax payer, assists him in the process of converting his paper into that medium required for the use of the treasury.

As an authority for the receipt and disbursement of a paper currency, my colleague [Mr. Garland] relies upon the construction given to the act of 1789 by Alexander Hamilton, then secretary of the treasury, and to the subsequent practice of the government. In my opinion, sir, there has been a constant tendency to depart from the strict line of constitutional duty, in the administration of the finances, from the commencement of the government, which is mainly attributable to the unfortunate bias acquired from the doctrines inculcated by Hamilton, under the imposing authority of the head of the treasury department. Hamilton's federal ideas were embodied and brought into practice in his management of the treasury, and in his systems of finance.—Against his constitutional constructions and his fiscal arrangements, the republican party have regularly protested; and I cannot but think that my colleague, as a republican, has made a most unfortunate reference. Instead of gold and silver in the receipts and disbursements of the government, in pursuance of the provisions of the constitution, it is maintained that the receipts and disbursements of equivalents is a fair compliance with the constitution and the law. Sir, the doctrine of equivalents is unknown to the constitution. It is one of the many and fatal heresies of federalism. If congress, or any department, or officer of the government, can, in place of a specific thing, at discretion substitute an equivalent, then all the specific provisions of the constitution may be supplanted, at the discretion of one, or all the departments combined, by the substitution of their equivalents.

Sir, all the doctrines and arguments of those who profess to belong to the republican party, and yet advocate bank agency and a paper medium in the public receipts and disbursements, are of strong federal tendency; they lead, inevitably, to an admission of the constitutionality and necessity of a national bank. They maintain that bank agency is essential in the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the revenue, and that a paper currency, convertible into gold and silver, and as an equivalent for gold and silver, is also indispensable in the collection, transfer, and disbursement of the revenue.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a chief justice Marshall would, from premises not so strong and pointed, easily and logically deduce the conclusion that it was the right, and the duty, of congress to establish a national bank as a proper, convenient, useful, and necessary appurtenance of the revenue power.

I do not mean to charge my colleague [Mr. Garland] or all his political associates on this question, with any wish or intention to favor the establishment of such an institution at present. He has always disclaimed it—disclaims it now, and I am satisfied of his sincerity. I was, however, showing, as I might legitimately do, and, as I think, I have successfully done, that the creation of such an institution must be the ultimate result, the final conclusion, of all their arguments and doctrines.

In the long departure of the government from the true rule of duty, and in the systems and practices which have grown up, I am fully aware that the habits, business, and interests of society are involved in a complicated and intimate connection. No man is more sensible than I am, that, in the application of principles, however true in theory, we ought most carefully to survey all the difficulties and obstructions presented by the existing condition of things. Whilst I would not, in defiance of every obstacle, and regardless of consequences, press an immediate adoption of a favorite system, in all its parts; neither would I, relinquishing all hope and all effort, abandon it in despair, because it was not, at once, wholly practicable. Existing difficulties, caused by the errors and defects of the past, cannot justify a change or an abandonment of principles founded in truth, and in the constitution. It is rather the duty of the statesman and the philosopher, sincerely convinced, and firm of purpose, to strengthen his defences by reason and arguments; and to remove, prudently and gradually, with the least inconvenience and injury, the difficulties which oppose the introduction of his system. In obedience to the suggestions of prudence, and from a desire to avoid any shock or injury to the interests of the community, the bill under consideration proposes, very gradually, an entire disuse of the paper currency for the use of the treasury, and a complete restoration of the constitutional standard; and thus, after a long course of error, to retract the government, in the management of the finances, to the simple duty prescribed in the instrument defining its powers.

* See Democratic Review, No 1, pages 118-19.

Mr. Chairman, an objection has been urged, that this separation of the treasury from the banks will require an additional number of officers, and will increase the patronage of the executive. Sensitive as may be the public mind on the subject of patronage, it is yet too intelligent and too patriotic to be deluded into an abandonment of a wise and constitutional measure, by an unfounded clamor. It relies for its execution, like every other measure, upon officers competent in capacity and number, constitutionally appointed, and constitutionally responsible. Ample personal security, the solemn sanctions of oaths, liability to removal from office, the certainty of punishment for offences, the dread of exposure and disgrace—these are the guarantees, which will, in the general, ensure capacity and fidelity. Shall we surrender the belief, so long and so universally entertained in America, that man in his natural person, and in his individual responsibility, is worthy of trust and confidence, is capable of executing the ordinary functions of civil government? Shall we surrender this theory of republican government as an impracticable speculation or an idle dream, and in utter despair commit the vital concerns of this extended confederacy, to associations of men converted by legal magic into bodies politic and corporate, with chartered protections, known to the government as agents only in their artificial character, whereby responsibility is diminished, and the difficulty of applying the restraints and coercions of the law is greatly increased? In lieu of the vast and complicated machinery of bank agency, our bill substitutes only some nine or ten additional officers. The increase of patronage to be exerted through these few additional officers of the treasury department, rigidly prohibited from using or employing any public money in their charge, under any pretence, for private purposes, dwindles into insignificance, compared with the almost incalculable influence which may be secured by an alliance between the banks and the treasury. Take the favorite number of deposit banks—twenty-five; multiply these by the whole number of officers, stockholders, and debtors, too, in each: the extent of corrupt influence and patronage into which this system may degenerate is absolutely appalling. The public attention cannot be diverted from the contemplation of this stupendous combination, so susceptible of a sinister influence, and so tempting to a designing secretary, by the artful and causeless cry of executive patronage over nine or ten officers, fettered with legal restraints. Look at the number of opulent merchants, capitalists, stockholders, and stock-jobbers, who may, under the operation of this system, be brought into financial, and, probably, political, union and concert, with the secretary as common head. It would seem that the genius of Hamilton had awakened to revive "those fiscal systems and arrangements which keep a host of commercial and wealthy individuals embodied, and obedient to the mandates of the treasury," and which the advocates of free government and the enemies of corruption have heretofore assailed.

Mr. Chairman, under the separation of the banks and the government, proposed to be effected by the bill under examination, "a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money" will be practicable. All the artificial conclusions and legal constructions of former systems, which, in most cases, were confused and unintelligible to the mass, will be avoided. A plain system of accounts, so anxiously desired by Mr. Jefferson, will be introduced, and the object of the constitution fulfilled in requiring a publication from time to time, of the account current of the treasury. The great body of tax-payers will see and understand the whole operation of the treasury.

The strict inhibition against employing any portion of the revenue in trade or business, will remove every inducement to excessive taxation; a superfluity of revenue beyond the economical wants of the government, will neither be desired by congress or permitted by the people. The transfer of revenue, in no way connected with trade or commerce, from points of collection to places of expenditure, can produce no inconvenience, shock or revulsion. No charge can with justice be preferred, that the financial operations of the government have interrupted business, paralyzed commerce, and destroyed credit. No class of citizens or section of the United States, can complain of partiality in the benefits to be derived from the use of the revenue, whilst all are alike excluded from any such favors. All unjust discriminations in the local currency, all improper interference in its regulation, will be avoided; and the states, without impediment or assistance, may proceed in its reformation, according to their own sense of duty and policy. The strict adherence of the government in all its money transactions to the common standard, will furnish both the measure of value and the example of enforcing it, which the constitution intended, and will be more persuasive to the states to conform to it, than any direct attempt to control and regulate their diverse currency. Finally, the organization and management of the treasury, according to the constitution, will be to exercise and vindicate the right and capacity of the people of the states respectively to govern themselves, and to emancipate their federal government from bank thralldom.

CHRONICLE.

Ship letters. The number of letters forwarded through the New York post office, by the packets, for Liverpool, London, and Havre, from the 16th of April last to the 17th July, was 61,807
For other ports, 4,860

The number received at the upper post office from 1st January to June 30th, was 240,548
For city delivery, 101,848

Tonnage of the lakes.—For the year 1837, the tonnage on the lakes was as follows:—

	Tons.
Buffalo,	2,982
Erie,	2,993
Cleveland,	6,719
Sandusky,	822
Maumee,	2,811
Detroit,	7,078

The Natchez Free Trader of the 9th inst. states that Messrs. Drane and Dinkins, citizens of Canton, Madison county, Mississippi, both gentlemen of high respectability, fought a few days ago near that place with double-barrelled shot guns, and were both killed.

Health of the cities. The number of deaths in New York last week was 199. Of these, 126 were under the age of five years; by cholera infantum, 33; consumption, 27; convulsions, 17.

In Philadelphia, last week, there were 163 deaths, of which 94 were children under two years of age, 15 were by consumption; 6 by apoplexy.

In Baltimore, it will be seen by the bill of mortality, there were 71 deaths last week; of which 41 were children under two years of age.—Baltimore Republican.

Emigrants. German papers mention the arrival at Berlin of a number of emigrants, rigid Lutherans, formerly composing the congregation of the reverend Mr. Schirbel, against whom, with his flock, the military were turned out. They were bound to Hamburg, thence to embark for America, having, it is said, been preceded hither by agents to purchase land. It is stated that they are not without resources. They emigrate to "preserve the true faith," and in this feature resemble the pilgrims who of old left England, and then Holland, to come to this country to preserve liberty of conscience.—New York Sun.

King Philip. This distinguished brave of the Seminole tribe, we learn from the New Orleans True American, expired on board of the steamboat Liverpool, on his way to Arkansas. At forty miles below Fort Gibson, the two boats containing the emigrating party, were brought into the shore, the yards manned, and the body of King Philip taken out and buried with the honors of war. One hundred guns were fired over his grave, and the Indians, under lieutenant Reynolds, commanding the party, permitted to attend the funeral, appeared to be much moved at the loss they had sustained.

Longworth's new directory of New York, contains upwards of 37,000 names, of which nearly 10,000 are not included in the preceding volume. The number of changes and alterations exceed 11,000.

Indian treaty. The Tallahassee papers of the 30th ult. state that "gov. Call and the Indian agents, Messrs. Walker and Boyd, have recently succeeded in making a treaty with John Walker and Econ Chatamico's tribes of Apalachicola Indians. The treaty provides for their removal on the 20th of October next. The Indians are paid for their lands and improvements, and a liberal allowance for their emigration. This treaty has long been desirable—the contact of the Indians with the whites in the neighborhoods of settlements bordering on the reserve, is productive of bad consequences to both parties. The reservation, too, occupies some of the best lands in the territory, which will be settled immediately upon the extinguishment of the Indian title."

Florida crops. The Tallahassee papers state that the crops of corn and cotton in middle Florida, are unusually good for the season. The corn crop will be much larger than the last year, more having been planted than usual. The lateness and drought of the spring kept the cotton backward but the recent rains have brought it forward astonishingly.

Milk sickness. The governor of Kentucky has offered a reward of one thousand dollars for the discovery of the origin of the disease called milk sickness, which has cut off thousands, from time to time, in parts of that state, and parts of Indiana and Ohio. The editor of the Indiana Free Press, who has "seen many cases of the milk sickness, or sick stomach, compares its malignity to that of the cholera, and adds:

"It is frequently the case that cattle have what is called the trembles, or milk sickness, without showing any symptoms of disease, until they have been driven or considerably worried, when it exhibits itself by causing the animal to fall down and a trembling similar to that occasioned by a severe shake of the ague upon a person.

"In Ohio, and in other parts of this state, it has been the cause of hundreds of deaths, and consequently retarded the improvement of the country. It also exists in parts of Illinois."

Taking Squills. A capital hoax was played off last week with several barrels of the roots of the squill, a well known medicinal bulb, which sometimes attains a large size. This plant is allied to the onion, which it resembles. They cost in the West Indies about a dollar a barrel; and as their strange appearance excited some curiosity among our amateur florists, a slight advance in price was resolved upon by the holders. By a flourishing description and the name of Spanish lilly, and a glowing description of colors, yellow tipped with scarlet, crimson with white stripes, &c. they were easily worked off at two shillings a piece, and carefully transferred to sundry gardens and pots about town, many owners no doubt waiting for the expiration of the four weeks, at which time they are to bloom. At any rate they can raise their own squills, and will have a curious white flower, though nothing very gorgeous. [N. Y. Amer.]

The olden time. Forty years ago this day, the first rural tea party was held in Northampton, judge Lyman delivered an oration, and the rural entertainment was held near the great bridge in the meadows. This festival has been seldom omitted since that time, every year adding to its interest and beauty. It is usually served up in a grove, the ladies having the chief management. Tables, decorated with evergreens and beautiful flowers, and loaded with refreshments of the richest kind, are contributed by the various families in town. Eight lady managers preside assisted by delegated gentlemen. Music is in attendance, and a dance on the green follows during the afternoon. It is a rational and pretty entertainment, free from the selfishness of political festivals and dinner parties, from which the ladies are always arbitrarily excluded. We wish they were more universally prevalent.

A heavy fall of rain was experienced in the city of New York on Thursday night the 26th ult. During the gust, St. Bartholomew's church, in Lafayette square, was struck by lightning. The lightning struck the steeple, which was shattered to pieces, and the fluid descended, and went out at the clock. A gentleman who saw it strike says it exploded like a rocket, and must have set fire to the building had it not rained so very severely.

Mr. William Bromwell was brought to Baltimore on Tuesday, from New York, where he had arrived from Mobile, in the charge of officers despatched thither, and was committed to prison, to take his trial for forgery.

Baron de Talleyrand, former perfect and plenipotentiary minister of France in Denmark, has been raised to the dignity of Peer, by a royal ordinance dated the 16th June.

Moral effects of marriage. The statistics of the eastern penitentiary of Pennsylvania, are curious in the great inequality which they exhibit between married and unmarried convicts. Of the one hundred and sixty prisoners received the last year, one hundred and ten were unmarried. Six were widowers, and forty-five only were married. I have never seen a stronger illustration of the moral influence of marriage.

By the upsetting of a schooner in Chester river, near Love Point, of sixteen persons on board, seven were drowned. Mrs. Richardson and her three daughters, of Kent island, capt. Denny, and a colored man and woman. The rest were saved by clinging to the vessel.

The following important fact has been published by the consignees of the Royal William steamer:—"The Royal William belongs to the city of Dublin company, established in 1834, to run steamers between Liverpool, Dublin and Belfast. They have a fleet of 17 vessels employed in the Irish Channel, which make annually above 1,000 voyages, and from the peculiar care used in their construction, and from their almost daily inspection, not an accident has occurred to endanger life during a period of 14 years."

From the Fur West. The steamboat Antelope, belonging to the American fur company, arrived at the wharf yesterday, from the mouth of the Yellow Stone. She brings about a thousand packs, chiefly Buffalo robes. The most valuable furs are on their way down in Mackanaw boats, and will probably be here in a few weeks. The Antelope reports the river as unusually low; she was detained nearly two weeks by reason of this.

The agent of the company reports that the small pox had ceased its ravages amongst the Sioux, but was still raging amongst the Indians higher up the Yellow Stone. The Assineboines are said to be extinct, and most of the Blackfeet have fallen victims. It was believed that more than 25,000 have died of the disease, and that it would not stop short of the Pacific ocean. [St. Louis Republican.]

Canal tolls, &c. The tolls collected on the New York state canals for the third week in July 1837 and 1838, were as follows:

In 1837	$33,908 14
In 1838	33,897 72

Increase $4,999 53 or nearly 15 per cent.

The flour and wheat arriving in the Hudson river via the canals for the same periods, is as follows:

	bbls. flour.	bushels wheat.
In 1837	16,748
In 1838	26,297	10,312

Increase 9,549 bbls flour and 10,312 bushels wheat.

The merchandize shipped at Albany and West Troy for the same time, was as follows:

In 1837	2,776,800 pounds
In 1838	3,439,500 "

Increase 662,700

A respectable gentleman of this city has requested us to state that almost immediate relief may be afforded to persons who imprudently drink too much cold water during the prevalence of hot weather, by administering fifteen drops of Spiritus Salis in about a wine glass full of any kind of spirituous liquor. The Spiritus Salis may be procured at any apothecary's shop. [Bull. Amer.]

Swimming. A sailor named Samuel Brown, we are informed, swam for a wager, from Smith's foundry in this place, to Fort Washington, a distance of nearly eight miles! He was accompanied by a boat, to see that all was fair. This feat was performed on Wednesday evening. [Alexandria Gazette.]

A novel salute. When gen. Washington, whilst president, visited the works of the James river canal, the chief engineer caused the quarriers to charge some hundreds of blasts, which were exploded at Washington's approach. This internal navigation salute he pronounced the most gratifying he had ever heard: and, by the bye, he gave all the workmen a guinea a piece to drink his health.

We have received the first number of a new Graham periodical, called the Johnny-Cake. After a hasty examination of its contents, we have come to the conclusion that it is slack-baked.

[Boston Gazette.]

Munificent donation. It is stated, that John Jacob Astor, of New York, has presented the sum of $350,000, for the purpose of establishing a public library in that city.

No less than four new churches are now in progress in the borough of Alleghany, adjoining Pittsburgh, and two others are in train of erection.

A curiosity. We have on our table the head of a pipe taken yesterday from the ground on the bank of Wheeling creek, in front of the dwelling of William Chaipleine, esq., where excavation for a street is now going on, which is the greatest curiosity of the kind we have ever seen. It is evidently of Indian manufacture, and we think, a petrification of wood, by the strong resemblance of the grain to it. It is nine inches in length and weighs three pounds. The hollow bowl is very small for the size of the pipe and was evidently made with a great deal of labor, as also was the perforation for the stem. The whole forms a perfect representation of a duck swimming, and is distinctly marked with the beak, curve of the neck, wings and tail, as also the shading of the breast. The stem must have been of cane or elder, and long enough to rest the bowl on the ground, as it never could have been used in any other way except by the mouth of one of Gulliver's sixty feet gentlemen. It can be seen, for the present, by the curious, at our office. [Wheeling Times.]

High pay for lectures. During the last month the Rev. Dr. Chalmers of Edinburg, delivered in London a series of lectures, for which according to a statement in the Edinburg Chronicle, he receives from the Christian Influence Society the sum of FIFTY POUNDS for each lecture. The lecturer's theory of a church establishment recognizes, not only a legal provision for the clergy, but the territorial distribution of the people into parishes, each under the superintendence of its own clergyman. His scheme proposes that the whole country should be parceled out into parishes, each containing not more than a population of 2000—and that the clergyman of each should fill his church out of his own parish, and reclaim every family and every individual committed to his care to the habits of regular church going.

The grand jury of the U. S. circuit court, sitting at New York, have refused to find a bill against the officers and crew of the American sealing schooner Anna Howard, who were charged with the commission of a brutal murder of a number of Patagonians. The defence was, that the killing was perpetrated in self defence, the natives having made an attack upon the seal vessel.

Lobby services. The New York Express says a gentleman of high standing in Albany lately presented a bill of $1000 to a widow lady for his influence with the members of the legislature in procuring the passage of a law in her favor. And a judge of the court of common pleas in New York has commenced suit against 251 subscribers to the Coal Stock Company, for $1500 for lobby services. By a late decision, however, of judge Ulshoeffer, of New Jersey this lobby business is likely to be knocked in the head. He has decided against the legality of claims for lobby services.

Fires in London. The total number of fires observed and reported by the police in 1836 was 240, exclusive of chimneys; in 1837 it was 229. Of these, 140 in the former year, and 50 in the latter, equal to 34 per cent. of the whole number, were extinguished by the police before the arrival of the engines. The estimated amount of loss, generally taken from the statements of the sufferers themselves, was 496,500*l.* in 1836, and 198,559*l.* in 1837. In the former sums is included 400,000*l.*, the estimated loss at the warehouses of Fenning and co. near London bridge; and in the latter 150,000*l.*, the loss at Davis' wharf, Shadwell. If these two sums be excluded, the loss in the two years amounts to 135,659*l.* [Jour. of the London Statistical Society.]

Wool in the U. S. The Vergennes, Vt. paper says that the fifteen wool growing states produce forty million pounds of wool annually. In 1836, the average price of wool was 58 cts. per lb. Between 1827 and 1836, it never went below 36 cts., but in 1837, the average price was only 34 1-2 cts, and in 1838, it has fallen to 28 1-2 cts. per lb.

The drought. As the train of cars was passing through Brandywine Hundred, Delaware, on Tuesday last, a spark from the locomotive fell in a stubble field, and a flame immediately flashed over the whole field, consuming the stubble and dead grass like tinder.

Mr. Sully, the artist, is expected to arrive from England in the course of the present month, bringing with him his portrait of Victoria.

Excellent. The Cincinnati insurance offices have agreed to an abatement of ten per cent. on the premium due from steam boats conducted without intoxicating drink.

The packet ship St. James arrived at New York on Wednesday. She has no news. Among her passengers are several Bedouin Arabs, who have been performing at Paris with much eclat.

The Pulaski. The following extract from a letter written by Dr. Sharpe to the hon. James Buchanan, has been sent us for publication. The gentleman alluded is Dr. George W. Evans, of the United States navy—a native of Morgantown in this county, and well known to many of our citizens. We understand that his friends had for some time past expected his arrival at home, but from this letter as well as other circumstances have now given up all hope. [Berks Journal.]

United States navy yard, near Pensacola,

June 25th 1833.

Sir: Your friend Dr. Evans of the navy left this place on the 6th inst., in company with judge Cameron and judge Rochester, and I am extremely apprehensive that he is one of the victims of the late disaster of the Pulaski, as I see the name of Evans among the list, and can but think that he is the person, although no title is given. He would hardly have parted company with them as he remained several days to avail himself of their society on his journey.

Oneida Indians Isaac Denniston, esq. agent for this state, returned a few days since from Green Bay, Wisconsin territory, where he distributed among the Oneida Indians the money payable to them as annuities under the various treaties from 1788 to 1824. The amount paid was $27,963 14, which was done in a way entirely satisfactory to the Indians. The Albany Argus, from which we gather these particulars, adds:

"Mr. D. has been Indian agent for a great number of years, and has assisted in making most of the treaties between the state government and the several tribes of Indians within its borders, and most of the annuities secured by these treaties have been paid through him, amounting annually to about fifteen thousand dollars. And it is worthy of remark that the duties of Mr. Denniston's agency have been conducted with such care and fidelity as not only to meet the approbation of the state government, for a long series of years, but to protect him from any complaints on the part of the Indians."

From Valparaiso. By the ship Natchez, which arrived at New York in the short passage of sixty days, the editors of the Journal of Commerce received the following:

Valparaiso, May 10, 1833.

This government has declared the port of Callao in a state of blockade, and their fleet is now off that place. Another expedition is being prepared here which will sail against Peru in the course of about six weeks; it will consist of about five thousand men. It is generally believed that they will land in the northern part of the province, unless some dissatisfaction takes place in the army of general Sata Cruz—we think the expedition will again be defeated.

Buenos Ayres. A letter from Buenos Ayres of the 24th May informs that the Buenos Ayrean minister to the United States was to leave in the Nile. The government had determined that they would never accede to the demands of the French, and the blockade will of course be continued until the present chief shall be superseded, or the want and distress of the country oblige them to change their determination.

The New Orleans Commercial Bulletin of July 28, says:—"The hon. Anson Jones, minister plenipotentiary from Texas to the United States, arrived in our city yesterday, in the steamboat Columbia."

Charleston banks. The Charleston Patriot urges the banks of that city to resume specie payments simultaneously with those of Baltimore and Philadelphia, on the 13th of August. The editor states that an arrangement to that effect can be made with the Georgia banks in sufficient time.

The Army and Navy Chronicle states that lieutenant colonel Pierce declines the promotion and transfer to the 8th regiment of infantry, which had been bestowed upon him, preferring to remain in the artillery.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 27th. reports the health of that city to be over good.

A donation of 1,500 yards of calico has been made to the sisters of charity at Boston, by Messrs. John McCarty and Edward Barr, of Providence.

The amount of deposits in the Boston Savings Bank is $2,009,832.77, belonging to 13,015 depositors. Savings banks, in which the industrious and economical may find a safe place of deposit for their spare earnings, are among the most useful institutions of the day.

It is stated in the last Charleston Mercury, that there are now about sixty stores and dwelling houses in progress of erection in the "burnt district," of that city. The ruins are said to be fast disappearing.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 24.—Vol. IV.]

WASHINGTON CITY, AUGUST 11, 1838.

[VOL. LIV.—WHOLE No. 1,412]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

The Royal William steam ship left New York on Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock. She took out thirty-five cabin passengers and about six thousand letters.

NORTH CAROLINA. The elections for governor and members of the state legislature, were held in this state, in the counties of Franklin, Granville, Warren, Nash, Edgcomb, Beaufort, Pitt, Washington, Hyde and Tyrrell, on Thursday the 26th of July; in the counties of Johnston, Wayne, Lenor, Craven, Carteret, Jones and Greene, on the 2d inst. and in all the other counties on the 9th inst. Thus far 19 friends of the administration and 16 whigs have been elected—and Mr. Dudley has received a considerable majority of votes over Mr. Branch.

OFFICIAL. Notice. The money bequeathed by the late James Smithson, esq. of London, for founding an institute in the city of Washington, amounting to about a half of a million of dollars, will, it is expected, be received during the present month. By an act passed July 7th, 1838, the undersigned is directed to invest the same "in stocks of states, bearing interest at the rate of not less than five per cent. per annum." He is now prepared to receive proposals from persons who have stocks of this description to dispose of.

LEVI WOODBURY, secretary of the treasury.
Treasury department, August 6, 1838.

CANADA AFFAIRS. Mr. Buchanan, the British consul, received despatches by the Great Western, for Lord Durham and Sir George Arthur. It is said they are of unusual importance. They were forwarded to Quebec and Toronto by special messengers, and arrangements were made by the consul so that the return despatches shall arrive here in view to be sent by the Great Western on her return. Despatches were also received for the government of Halifax, this being the most direct communication between London and Halifax.

[N. Y. Express.]

Our government has purchased from the Americans a steamer, to be manned, armed, and put in charge of Lieutenant Duffie. She was coming down the Niagara river the other day to go into the Chippewa river, and owing to improper management, she passed the river, and was fast approaching towards the Falls before she could be brought up by three anchors. Should they or the ropes give way, over the Falls she goes. They have sent to the Americans at Buffalo for assistance, which is thought will be very expensive before she gets to safe moorings. [Kingslon Spectator, July 27.]

The staunch and swift steamboat Milwaukee has been chartered by the United States for the service of the government upon the waters of the upper lakes, in the place of the Erie.

Lieutenant Homans is to command the Milwaukee. The charge of the soldiers, &c. is to remain, however, as heretofore, under an army officer, and the vessel is to be subject to the requisitions and orders of the commanding officer on these frontiers. [Buffalo Journal.]

GEN. HAYNE. The Washington Chronicle of Tuesday evening says: "Gen. Robert Y. Hayne passed through this city yesterday on his way to the north, where he purposes to pass a short time in examining the latest improvements in the construction of railroads, &c. He will, we understand, return through the upper part of Virginia, with the view of examining the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, and thence proceed to the meeting of the directors of the Charleston and Louisville railroad, of which he is president, to be held on the 27th instant, in Lexington, Kentucky."

BARBECUE TO MR. PRESTON. A great barbecue was given to Messrs. Preston and Elmore, near Columbia, S. C., on the 27th ult., to which Mr. Calhoun and the other representatives of the state were invited. We learn from the correspondent of the Mercury, that only Mr. Preston was present. We learn also from the same source, that six or eight hundred gentlemen attended the dinner, one-third or one-half sub treasury men. Mr. Preston spoke at large on the interesting topics of the times. "His argument against the sub-treasury system, (says the Mercury correspondent,) was replete with his utmost powers of wit and sarcasm, yet by no means fair, just, or effective," &c. &c. Much cheering attended his remarks. Mr. Albert Rhett gave a toast in favor of the sub-treasury, which the writer said received cheering quite as general as that given to Mr. Preston. A complimentary toast "in favor of Mr. Calhoun as a candidate for the presidency, was warmly and enthusiastically applauded." A toast was given, declaring Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Clay unworthy the vote of the state.

The writer says: "I have been greatly gratified to perceive that the general proceedings of the day manifested far less of the violent war spirit of the Telescope, and more of that of concession and reconciliation, than we had at first any reason to expect. I earnestly trust it will be met in a similar spirit—nay, I am sure it will; and that however we may differ from our old associates on principle, and honestly battle with them for the right, on that ground, we will ever be as ready to remember the old and affectionate ties which bound us with them to our beloved state as their own bearing and deportment will possibly admit. Our principles we cannot compromise, but in battling for them we will not war on persons, except in self defence, and desire to forget their personal errors, in the grateful remembrance that they "have done the state some service."

INDIAN AFFAIRS. The Cherokees. Extract of a letter from major general Winfield Scott, to the adjutant general of the army, dated head quarters, eastern division, Cherokee agency, July 23, 1838.

"It is, I learn, reported throughout this country, that the Indians collected in camps for emigration are sickly and dying in great numbers. I mention this report to contradict it. The Indians are, very generally, in excellent health, and so are the troops. Please cause this to be officially announced."

Murders in Georgia. The Darien Telegraph of the 31st ult. contains the following:

Dear Sir: I have just learned from an authentic source, of the murder of two families in Ware county by the Indians. Mr. Wilde and family were murdered on the 17th inst., and Mr. John Davis and family on the 24th, not more than twenty or twenty-five miles from Waynesville.

Mr. Davis is, I believe, well known, having formerly been a member of the legislature.

These murders were perpetrated by five Indians, whose trail was followed by the neighbors into the Okefenokee swamp, where they found the trails so large, and indicating the vicinity of so many Indians, that they were obliged to return. They estimate that there are as many as four or five hundred in the swamp. Great excitement prevails in Ware and Camden on the subject of these murders, and from Waynesville an express has been despatched to obtain particular information; and a meeting of the citizens is to be held to-morrow, to take such measures as the urgency of the case may require.

I write this in the greatest haste, thinking it may possibly—in the absence of more particular and recent intelligence than has been received here—be of service to you. Yours, &c.,

L. LYMAN.

C. M. Ardell, esq.

Murders in Florida. The Tallahassee Floridian of the 28th ult. says: On Wednesday morning last, two more of our citizens fell victims to savage barbarity. A Mr. Lasley, residing about fifteen or twenty miles from Tallahassee, on the Oculocnee river, when returning to his work from breakfast, discovered a number of Indians on his plantation. He, with his son, retreated to the house, followed by the Indians, but succeeded in defending his dwelling till about 1 o'clock, when the savages retired a short distance in the woods. Supposing it safe to retreat, the family left the house, but had proceeded only a short distance when they were overtaken by the Indians, Mr.

Lasley and his daughter shot down, and the son received a ball through the hand. Two young men succeeded in making their escape. The number of Indians was stated at fifty or sixty. We think the number exaggerated.

Governor Call has taken such measures as are in his power to give defence to the frontier of Leon and Gadsden counties, and if possible, prevent the Creeks from effecting their escape to the Seminole; as is no doubt their intention. Captain Walker's company at Shell's point, has been ordered to scour the country on the line from the point to Mr. Allgood's plantation, about six miles from this city. He has also called for a force from Gadsden, and it is probable that major Taylor's battalion, now stationed on the Oscilla frontier, will also go in pursuit of the Creeks.

The governor received, by express, early yesterday morning, information from major Taylor, that his command would be discharged from the service by major Dearborn; in which event they have been ordered by the governor to report to him at this place, when they will be employed against the Creeks. It is probable that colonel Green, of the sixth regiment, recently arrived from Green Bay, will receive the troops into the service of the United States. Colonel Green is charged with the command of the defence of Middle Florida, and is a highly efficient officer. At all events we are assured that the frontier will be defended, and protection given our citizens, if not by the United States authorities, at least by the territorial.

BANKS, CURRENCY, &c. Money affairs in Philadelphia. The New York Courier and Enquirer, of Thursday, says: "We learn from Philadelphia, that in consequence of the approaching resumption of specie payments, several of the banks of that city had seen the necessity of a speedy contraction, and had already commenced a curtailment of their accommodations, and that money was for this cause, becoming sensibly scarce, and the rate of discount proportionately advancing. This scarcity of money no doubt will continue to increase, as the banks of Philadelphia must do after the resumption, what the banks of New York did before they resumed, viz—contract their money accommodation, as much as possible; the inconvenience however will no doubt be merely temporary, and has been all along foreseen."

The Pennsylvanian of yesterday, says—We understand that the notes of the Philadelphia banks are now received in payment of duties at our custom house—satisfactory proof having been furnished the collector by the officers of the bank, that notes and checks on this institution are redeemed in specie.

Resumption of the Ohio banks. The Columbia (Ohio) Journal of the 3d instant has the following announcement of the contemplated resumption of specie payments by the Ohio banks on the 13th instant—the day on which the banks in the Atlantic states have agreed to resume.

It will be seen by the following circular, that Monday, the 13th instant, is the day agreed upon for the general resumption of specie payments by the banks of Ohio. The duty of laying this circular before our readers is the most gratifying we have performed this many a day.

Columbus, August 2, 1833.

At the convention of the banks of Ohio, held in this city on the sixth and seventh days of June last, the following resolution was adopted.

"Resolved, That in case the banks of Philadelphia and Baltimore do not resume on or before the fourth day of July next, then Messrs. J. Creed, R. W. McCoy, and Wm. Niel, be and they are hereby appointed a committee to fix the day, and give information to each of the banks, so soon as it shall be known that said banks of Philadelphia and Baltimore have resumed, after said fourth of July.

Believing that the banks of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kentucky and Baltimore will, under a resolution adopted at a convention of banks held at Philadelphia on the twenty-third ultimo, resume the payment of their bills in specie on the thirteenth of August inst.; and believing that sound policy requires of the Ohio banks to resume simultaneously with them, the undersigned, by virtue of the authority in them vested, recommended to the Ohio banks to resume on the said thirteenth day of August instant.

JOHN CREED.
R. W. McCoy, } committee.
WM. NEIL.

The Alexandria Gazette says that the banks in the District of Columbia commenced redeeming their $5 notes in specie on the 1st inst., and will resume generally as soon as the banks in the neighboring states do.

Some of the corporations of Philadelphia which have issued small notes during the suspension of specie payments, are beginning to withdraw them from circulation.

A glorious example. The city certificates about to be redeemed. We learn with pleasure that an arrangement is made by which the Bank of the United States will redeem all the certificates of loan issued by the city of Philadelphia. This glorious example, we hope will be speedily imitated by the other corporations. The city councils deserve great credit for the movement.

[Phil. Eng.]

The notes of the corporation of Baltimore have been redeemed by the banks of that city, since the 1st of May last.

Michigan Money. The Detroit Advertiser of July 31st., says, "the money of this state is still improving in the confidence of the public, and of course grows scarcer. Nearly all of the notes of the best chartered banks are out of circulation—some having been redeemed, and others placed on deposit, which have not again been thrown into circulation."

Philadelphia money market. Bicknell's Reporter of Tuesday says—"Money is abundant in this city at moderate interest, and the prospect generally looks well. In fact the certainty of the banks resuming on Monday next, and their known ability so to do, have proved the means of restoring monetary and business affairs of the city to a healthy state."

The Girard bank has ceased to act as agent for paying the government pensions, and that business will be hereafter done by the Moyamensing bank.

Sales at the New York stock board, August 7.

328 shares U. S. Bank,	- - -	121 3-4
100 " " " b. n. w.	- - -	122

The New York Express, second edition of Monday, says—

A portion and a very large portion, of the mercantile community, too, will learn with regret, that there are some embarrassments in the establishment of a branch of the United States Bank in this city. We have it from what we deem good authority, that threats have been thrown out from persons in high authority, that if a branch is established here, measures will be immediately taken to put an injunction on the bank. This threat has had the effect for the present, as we are informed, to cause a suspension of the intended location of a bank. Whatever unkind feeling there may be lingering in the bosom of political adversaries towards that institution, there is none among men of business; all, ALL are in favor of permitting any man whatever on this side, or the other side of the water, to bring his capital here and employ it in banking or any other lawful pursuit. If there is no method by which the bank can bring their capital here in open day, we trust it will be brought here and employed through indirect channels.

The number of letters brought by the Great Western, is astonishingly great; all our merchants have their correspondence from all parts of the continent as well as England, to a very late period. They generally speak of the great abundance of unemployed capital in the principal cities of Europe, but particularly in London. Although there is no change of any importance in American funds, yet there is a growing desire to invest, and securities from this side, from the fact that they can give a greater interest, meet with great favour. United States Bank stock is the great favorite. That institution has so long paid their dividends of 7 and 8 per cent. per annum, that it has become as regular for an English capitalist to get his dividend, on this stock, as on that of the Bank of England. It is this, and probably this alone, that has caused it to be as great a favorite as it is in the London market.

The Philadelphia U. S. Gazette of Tuesday says, We learn by letter from London, that it is proposed to form a stock company for the purpose of establishing a line of Steam Packets to ply between London and Philadelphia. Shall we have no share in the matter?

VERY LATE FROM EUROPE.

From the N. Y. American.

The Great Western is back again, improving upon the speed of her former voyages. She left Bristol at 8 o'clock in the evening of the 21st of July, and took a pilot off the Hook on Saturday night, 4th August, at 10, and actually reached the quarantine yesterday morning by 9 o'clock, making her passage in 14 and a half days. Her passage out was made in less than 12 days.

She brings 130 passengers, a good deal of freight, and many letters. One of her passengers left this city only 39 days ago, and passed twelve days of the time in England.

Again and again we express our rejoicing at the success of this noble enterprise, which now, after five such trips by the Great Western, should no longer be treated as an experiment.

Of political or other news, there is really not much of interest.

The crops were moderately promising in Great Britain, and the weather generally fine.

The Great Western steam ship company have taken steps to increase its capital from 250,000l. to 1,000,000l. They have contracted for the immediate building of three large and splendid steamships, to run between Cork and New York, in conjunction with the British Queen; they are to be christened President, Great Britain, and United States. The keel of the President has been already laid; she is to measure 2,028 tons.

The parliamentary news is of a very unimportant character. The Irish municipal reform bill, notwithstanding the arrangement entered into by the leader of the conservative party with the ministers, has been nullified by the cutting out of the most important provision. On the 12th of July, on the several clauses being discussed in committee, lord Lindhurst moved that the qualification to vote, be raised from 5l. to 10l., when the radicals were left in a fearful minority. The Irish poor law bill was carried by a majority of 62.

Another discussion had taken place respecting the power of lord Durham to dissolve the old executive council in Canada. The motion ended like all its predecessors, in the ministers declaring that time must be allowed for the governor general to develop the fruits of his policy, which, if it ripened into a general pacification of the two provinces, the nation would have reason to be satisfied with, notwithstanding the appointments he had made since the reins of government had been entrusted to his hands. The conservatives are terribly bitter at lord Durham, and one of their leaders said, in the course of the debate, that under the new administration, Canada would have the singular fortune of possessing, among its principal officers of government, the only two men ever divorced by parliament on the complaint of their wives.

The bill for the abolition of imprisonment for debt, from the lords, has been twice read in the commons. Great Britain will have the honor of going ahead of the federal government of the United States in this great step of civilization.

In the course of a discussion on the international copy-right bill, it was proposed to put in a proviso in favor of anonymous authors, whose works are not protected by the bill in its present shape.

It was generally stated about the house that the present session will not conclude until the 20th August. If so, the two houses will have continued sitting for nearly nine months.

Since the year 1814, so many visitors had not been known to have sojourned in the metropolis, as during the fortnight of the coronation.

Grand reviews of the Household troops had taken place in Hyde Park and Woolwich Common. At the former place it was computed that more than 100,000 spectators were present. The inspection, with the sham fight that followed, occupied four hours. Marshal Soult was the chief lion after the queen and her staff of Amazonian aids de camp. Several accidents happened in the course of the day. A tree overloaded with sight-seers broke down and precipitated fourteen persons to the ground. A surgeon bled the sufferers on the ground, and they were sent home in coaches. One man fell from the roof of a house 70 feet high and was killed. A private of the lancers was unhorsed during a charge, and rode over by the squadron in the rear. It was expected he would recover.

An unfortunate man named Thomas Flower, who has been charged upon two several occasions at the Queen Square police office with having been found in the precincts of Buckingham palace, in order to demand the hand of her majesty in marriage, was brought before Messrs. Gregorie and White, charged at the instance of the hon. Charles Murray, with having attempted to intrude himself into the apartments of the queen at the palace. Mr. Randall, one of the queen's pages, deposed, that on Monday night, about 10 minutes before 12 o'clock, he was passing through the picture gallery and found the defendant, who was attired in the meanest manner, seated upon a chair, within seven yards of the royal bed room. It appeared that her majesty had only retired to rest about 10 minutes previously, and that the defendant had obtained entrance by mixing with the servants of the foreign ambassadors, who had been invited to an entertainment after the review in Hyde park. Police sergeant Cook, of the B. division, stated, that the man, who styled himself captain Flower, of the 13th Light Dragoons, was most obstreperous upon being taken into custody. It required the aid of two policemen and two of the rifle brigade to convey him to the station house, and even then it was necessary to strap his legs and arms. He said that his intentions towards the queen were highly honorable. Defendant.—And so they are.—It was entirely by mistake that I wandered into the picture gallery, nor did I know that her majesty's bed room was so closely adjacent. I came to speak to lady Mary Stopford. Mr. Randall stated that the man had tried several gates of the palace before he managed to gain access to the picture gallery. Had he entered ten minutes sooner, the queen would have been passing to her bed room. Defendant, who is evidently a lunatic, was ordered to find sureties to keep the peace for the future; in default, he was sent to the Totbills-fields house of correction. The man is of a respectable family, and has for many years been connected in the jewelry line with one of the first firms in London. [London Paper.]

The mayor and corporation of London had given a grand entertainment to the foreign ambassadors and other strangers. All the great political men, without distinction of party, were present. Among the foreigners we notice the name of Mr. John Van Buren.

It is stated in the London Globe of the 20th ult. that Mr. Rush, of the United States, had sailed, two days previously, for home, in the Mediator, having succeeded in the objects of his mission.

His excellency Mr. Throop, minister of the United States to Naples, captain Perry, U. S. navy, and Mr. McCauley have been presented to the queen. The levee was attended by Mr. Benjamin Rush, secretary, R. Vaux, private secretary, and H. B. Livingston, attachee of the American legation.

Madame Vestris had an immense parting benefit at Covent Garden, preliminary to her starting for New York. The receipts are estimated at £600 or 700.

The British Queen. This stupendous steamship, commanded by captain Roberts, formerly of the Sirius, arrived at Port Glasgow, and has gone into dock, where she is to receive her machinery. The Queen was towed to Plymouth, from Gravesend, by the Vulture steamer. Betwixt these places she had foul winds. At Plymouth the Vulture left, and the Queen then came round by the Land's End herself in fine style, carrying all sail, and beating every vessel in her way, especially a French brig, which attempted to compete with her for some time. Having arrived at the tail of the bank early on Saturday morning, she was towed into the wet dock at eleven by the Sampson steamer, the top of whose funnel, it was observed, just reached the top of the Queen's paddle box. It is thought she will not be ready to sail as early as announced, and that the Tiger will take her place.

The steam ship Sirius, lieutenant Moule, hence, arrived off Plymouth on the 16th July, making the passage in 16 days.

The city of Cairo has been visited by a serious conflagration.

London, July 20, 12 o'clock.

Market. The public securities were rather less favorably quoted at the commencement of business this morning, but they have since partially recovered. Consols are now 94 1-4, buyers for money, and for account. Exchequer bills are 80s to 82s. premium; and bank stock 206 to 207.

Two o'clock.

No alteration in the quotations for stock has occurred in either market since our first report. Scrip of the Belgian new loan is at 2 1-2 premium.

Four o'clock.

Consols for the account closed at 94 3-8.

FRANCE.

From the London Courier.

Paris, July 18.

It appears that another misunderstanding has arisen between France and Switzerland. The French government demand the expulsion of Louis Bonaparte, whose intrigues give serious annoyance to Louis Philippe, and menace Switzerland in case of a refusal. The latter power pleads its inability to accede to the demand, Louis Bonaparte being a citizen of Halvetia, and enjoying a great share of popularity in the Canton of Thurgovia, in which he resides. The Allgemeine Zeitung seems to think that the federal government will not yield to this subject.

Not content with the conviction and punishment of the editor of Le Temps for publishing a report of the proceedings of the peers in deliberation on the case of M. Laity, the government have directed that three opposition provincial papers, La Feuille de Cambrai, Le Progres, of Arras, and the Liberal, of Douai, be prosecuted for copying into their journals respectively the incriminated article.

The Siecle of Paris says that one of the objects of marshal Soult's mission to England, was to obtain permission to remove the remains of Napoleon to France; and in this it is said he has succeeded, with the aid of the duke of Wellington. It is stated farther, that the prince de Joinville is to proceed to St. Helena, in command of a frigate, having on board a soldier from every regiment in France, and that the remains of the emperor are to be deposited under the column in the place Vendôme, with solemn religious ceremonies, at which the duke of Wellington will be invited to be present.

Paris has been visited with another calamity. The theatre of the Vaudeville has been destroyed by fire. This is the third theatre that has been burnt in Paris within the last twelvemonth. Fortunately there has been no loss of life on this occasion, although the decorations have all perished in the flames.

The Vaudeville is situated in one of those narrow streets that connect the Place du Palais Royal with that of the Tuileries; as a building it was not in any way remarkable, indeed it was much inferior in external appearance to most of the other theatres of Paris. The minister of the interior, we are told, had ordered some time ago that no more representations should be given in the Vaudeville, but recalled his ordinance in consequence of the numerous reclamations to which it gave rise. Be this as it may, yesterday morning, at 3 o'clock, smoke was seen to issue from the roof, and shortly after, the flames burst forth with a degree of violence which alarmed the whole quarter. The inhabitants of the neighboring hotels at first thought of migrating with their effects, but abandoned this idea when they saw the precautions which were taken in order to arrest the progress of the flames. The French journals are unanimous in praising the municipal authorities for the zeal they displayed; and it is only in justice to say that they braved every danger in order to accomplish their duty. The prefect of the police set the example; I saw him in the morning issue forth from the ruins of the theatre covered with ashes from head to foot. The duke of Orleans was also present, and remained on the spot till the flames were mastered.

The adjacent houses suffered a little. Yesterday evening, at six o'clock, several of them were still on fire, but the damage, as I stated above, is not very serious. Many regret that the whole quarter was not destroyed, as it is one of the filthiest, although a central one, in the French capital.

BELGIUM.

Brussels, July 18.

The king will return from Paris on Sunday or Monday next. His majesty is expected in the camp at Beverloo on the 24th. It is said that there will be several nominations to the order of Leopold in different regiments.

The provincial council of Antwerp, in the sitting of the 16th, had to consider several important proposals. The last, and, in the present state of affairs, the most serious, was that for an address to the king relative to the integrity of the territory. It was made by M. Lauwen de Browsers, supported by Messrs. Fremie and Schoppers, and immediately discussed and adopted. The second related to the payment, which is still delayed, of the indemnity due for the losses occasioned by the revolution of 1830. It was brought forward by M. Moreliers, and taken into consideration.

Letters from Prussia make us easy respecting the pretended levies of troops for the purpose of enforcing the twenty-four articles. It is only the annual calling out of the landwehr for two months' exercise, and also to complete some garrisons which were too weak to perform the regular duty.

London, Friday, July 20.

It appears that the general impression in Paris on the Hollando-Belgic question, was, that great danger would attend the attempt to coerce Belgium. The Prussians seem prepared for all events; but it is now stated, that instead of being united to the troops of the Germanic confederation, and instead of entering with them into Belgium, the Prussian contingent will become a corps of observation on the frontier. The Suabian Mercury, in an article dated Lower Rhine, July 9, states that "since the reserve of the corps of the army of the Rhine, which is to take up a position on the frontiers of Belgium, has been called out, much exertion is used in re-occupying the Prussian fortresses on the borders of the Rhine."

There was such a heavy fall of snow on the 20th June, at the Font de Cere, in the Cantal, that the agents of the Pont-e-et-Chausses, who were employed in making a survey, were obliged to suspend their labors. [Brussels paper.]

SPAIN.

Madrid, July 11.

The Aynntamiento of Madrid has drawn up a memorial to the queen, praying her majesty to dismiss her present councillors. The ministers are doing all they can to prevent a manifestation of public opinion, which will be imitated by the municipalities of all the great cities of the kingdom.

It is reported that a column of the army of reserve has surprised and defeated Pallillos, at Villacanas, and taken 100 of his cavalry prisoners; but no official account of the affair has yet reached the capital.

The Madrid Gazette publishes a letter from Cuenca, of the 6th, announcing that the Cure Merino was at Jesa, with 2,500 men, marching upon Santa Cruz de Moza, where he proposes effecting a junction with the insurgents of Chelva.

The Madrid Gazette of the 4th, contains a despatch from general Epartero, giving an account of a successful affair he had had on the 25th of June at Rames, with a body of Carlists, whom he put to flight, after causing them a loss of 120 men; his own loss amounted to 45 wounded.

Narvaez has been nominated captain general of La Mancha and Toledo. He has had an advantage over the Carlists and taken many prisoners. Expectation is chiefly directed towards Aragon and Valencia, where generals Oras and San Miguel are menacing the stronghold of Cabrera. According to Saragossa journals of the 10th, Padinas with his four battalions entered Daroca on the 7th.

A letter of the 8th instant from Logrono, published in the Constitutionnel, states that the Christino forces which are to besiege Estella will be commanded by general Van Halen, who has made several reconnoissances in the valley of Solana. The besieging army will consist of 40 battalions of infantry, and 20 squadrons of cavalry. The Carlists general, Maroto, had arrived at Estella with 6,000 men, and the total force under his command is said to be 15 or 17,000 strong. A sanguinary and decisive affair was therefore expected.

From the French frontier. According to letters from Bayonne, to the 14th instant, Munagorri had received permission from the French government to exercise his men on the French territory for a few days, and is then immediately to cross the frontier with them. Besides the necessary muskets, he is to receive three howitzers; and Jauregui, with three English officers, are to be added to the expedition, Jauregui commanding it.

The noted Carlist chief, Osma, who recently blockaded Pampeluna, was killed on the 10th inst. with six of his men, in an attempt to intercept a Christino courier at Cizur, as we learn from a Spanish correspondent of the Messenger.

POLAND.

"Polish frontier, July 5.

"The longer stay of the emperor at Warsaw, his easiness of access, and the gracious reception given to all those who approach him, are generally considered as tokens of good for the kingdom of Poland. It is indeed probable that not all their wishes will be so quickly fulfilled, which many sanguine persons perhaps entertained; but it is a great gain that the sovereign seems to have more confidence in his Polish subjects than after the unhappy catastrophe of 1830. This is said to be chiefly owing to the favorable reports sent to the emperor by the governor general of the kingdom. For the west of Europe, indeed, Poland is still a land of fable; and from the Paris journalists in particular, a real mine, which they work to furnish their readers with piquant anecdotes. The emperor's visit to Warsaw will doubtless be turned to account by them for the same purpose."

RUSSIA AND THE CIRCASSIANS.

On the 20th of May a Russian squadron appeared on the coast off Mamahie, in Circassia, where the troops on board vainly attempted to effect a landing. On the 23d, however, they were more successful at Sotshah, and had time to throw up some fortifications before the arrival of reinforcements to the small native corps left to defend the coast. On the 31st of May a squadron of 99 sail cast anchor in the bay of Thoapsah, and the adjoining country being level and offering no defensible positions, the natives were unable to prevent the disembarkation of a division of about 10,000 men. The Russian general immediately afterwards addressed a proclamation to the inhabitants, offering them terms, which they indignantly rejected.

TURKEY AND EGYPT.

The Augsburg Gazette of the 11th inst. states, that the British ambassador in Vienna, had sent off a courier to London on the 5th, with important despatches relative to the difference between the Porte and Mehemet Ali. It was believed in Vienna that the cabinets of England, France, and Austria, had declared in favor of the Sultan, and were determined on adopting coercive measures against the pasha of Egypt should he persist in his rebellious intentions.

Another account says, it seems to be well settled that the pacha of Egypt has been compelled by the European consuls to abandon his design of declaring himself independent of the sultan. A letter from Constantinople, dated June 27, states that most of the Egyptian men of war have returned to their stations, and that Mehemet Ali has given the most positive assurances that he will do nothing to displease the sultan. He has paid one million of piasters on account of the arrears of tribute.

"Constantinople, June 27.

"More satisfactory accounts have been received from Alexandria, and every thing assumes a pacific appearance. Most of the Egyptian men-of-war have returned to their stations, which may probably be ascribed to the declarations of the foreign consuls, and the approaching arrival of an English and French squadron, with which Mehemet Ali was threatened, if he did not remain quiet and respect the authority of the Porte.

"He has given the most positive assurance that he would do nothing to displease the sultan. One million of piasters of Mehemet Ali's arrears of tribute has been paid. This money comes very seasonably; the garrison here had received no pay for a fortnight. The Sultan's treasury is quite exhausted, and it seems unaccountable, that, notwithstanding this pecuniary distress, so much expense should be incurred for embassies to foreign courts.

Great fire at Grand Cairo. The Garde National of Marseilles, publishes a letter from Alexandria of the 27th ult., containing an account of a great fire at Cairo:

"The fire broke out on the evening of the 21st ult., at the Catholic chapel, and immediately communicated to the neighboring houses. But slight assistance was obtained from the governor, Kabbib Effendi, and it is even said that the men sent by him to extinguish the flames, aided rather in promoting than in subduing the conflagration to enable them to commit acts of plunder with greater facility. The fire soon spread and destroyed two entire streets, one of which formed part of the Frank quarter. On the evening of the 22d it was considered nearly at an end, when it suddenly broke out on two new points. The Frank quarter and the surrounding neighborhood soon presented one vast blaze, and the confusion created by the anxiety of the inhabitants to save themselves and remove their property was indescribable. Several important manufactories were destroyed. Kabbib Effendi, on perceiving the serious nature of the conflagration, at last assembled the troops, and proceeded in person to the scene of the disaster. A number of houses were immediately sacrificed, in order to concentrate the fire on one point; and on the evening of the 24th hopes were entertained that the measure would be attended with the desired result. The calamity had given rise to the most lamentable excesses on the part, not only of the Arabs, but of the soldiers, who were sent to give assistance and preserve order. Hussein Bey had been invested with discretionary powers by Mehemet Ali, and despatched to Cairo, where it was hoped that his presence would operate as a check to further abuses. The panic created among the European inhabitants by the audacity of the populace and the neglect of the authorities, would seem fully justified by the extraordinary facts which were stated.

Amongst the number, it may be mentioned that M. Tidel, the French consul at Cairo, had demanded and obtained a guard of twenty-five men, and that while he was occupied in removing the archives of his office to a place of safety at Boulac, his guards commenced plundering his house, in which occupation he found them busily employed on his return. Although no further danger was apprehended, M. Coehet, the French consul general, had applied for some ships of war. A correspondent of the Semaphore, writing from Cairo, under date of the 25th ult. states that the fire had entirely ceased at ten o'clock on that morning.

Another letter from Alexandria, of the same date has the following:

"The viceroy was astounded at the news of this event; he could not believe the accident had been so fatal to him; and he suspects, perhaps with reason, the wickedness of his enemies. These moles of vengeance are quite in accordance with the customs of Turkey; but still, fires were not a means employed by the mob of Constantinople; and one cannot believe that the government would resort to such means. Be it as it may, the cruel event which has thus struck at the fortune of the viceroy cannot fail to exercise a considerable influence on his political views, and cause him to adjourn his plans of independence."

Notwithstanding this deplorable event, it does not appear from the letters from Egypt that any serious decline of trade was anticipated. Most of the warehoused goods at Cairo were saved, chiefly by the vigilance and energy of the English and French merchants.

Another letter from Alexandria, dated the 27th, announces that the fire which has burst out at Cairo has almost destroyed the whole of the Frank quarter. More than 600 houses have fallen a prey to the flames.

A large Egyptian ship of war had been destroyed at Alexandria.

A letter from St. Petersburg, dated June 23, says, "We learn from Pekin, where a mission from the Greek church at Russia has existed from the time of Peter the Great, that upwards of 300,000 Chinese have embraced Christianity, and that there is every reason to believe that all persecution of Christians on the point of ceasing. The emperor himself is said to have studied Christianity, and to hold it in respect; while at his accession to the throne, Christian blood was frequently made to flow. The rigorous laws against Christians now exist only on paper, and their execution is intrusted to such mandarins alone as are favorable to the Christians."

The law of 1833, although in terms applying to all Christians, was directed solely against the English, of which political influence the emperor began to be afraid. There are in China several vicariats, whose chiefs are to be found at Pekin, Nankin, and Macao. [French paper.]

VOYAGE OF THE ROYAL WILLIAM.

*Royal William steam ship,
New York harbour, 24th July, 1838.*

TO THE EDITORS:

As the American public took so much interest in the success of the "Sirius" and "Great Western," showing by the kind reception they gave to the commanders of these vessels how sincerely the people of the United States were gratified at the solution of the great problem of crossing the Atlantic by ships propelled by machinery, I am confident I shall add still more to the public gratification, and more particularly to that of the scientific portion of the population, by giving a concise statement of the result of the "Royal William's" voyage from Liverpool. The ship left the river Mersey at 6h. 30m. P. M. of the 5th July, and arrived at her anchorage here at 5h. 33m. P. M. of the 24th of July, being 13 days, 23 hours on the passage; but if I deduct three hours and a half, during which time her machinery was stopped for the purpose of attaching new packings, &c. when 9 days from Liverpool, the total time occupied in steaming was eighteen days nineteen hours and a half, and that without any intermission whatever in working the machinery. From pilot to pilot she was 18 days 19 hours. The "Royal William" is 276 horse power, on the condensing principle; she has three separate circular boilers, worked at a pressure under 8lb the inch; and the steam is economised by expansive valves. During the entire voyage across the Atlantic, the average expansion was 19 inches of a 66 inch stroke, and her total consumption of fuel was 351 tons 2 cwt 2 qrs from anchorage to anchorage, leaving a sufficient quantity on board for 600 miles additional steaming, having still in her hold 59 tons 7 cwt. She has worked the whole distance at an average of 2 cwt 11 lb. per mile, or going more into scientific detail 6 lb. 4 oz. per horse power per hour, a result, I believe, unprecedented at least in Europe.

Leaving England in the middle of summer, it may be said that her voyage has been long, and that her predecessors did more than she has done. To prevent such an erroneous opinion going forth to the world, I give below a detailed statement of the different winds she has encountered on the passage; winds as adverse as any winter season generally produces, and as a proof that the Atlantic has been visited with westerly gales, I beg to state that in latitude 42 and longitude 61, we overtook the "Sir James Kemp," out 53 days from Dundee, and in latitude 40 29, and longitude 63 18, we passed the "Hibernia," which vessel left Liverpool on the 27th of June, 18 days before the "Royal William." The undernamed packets have not yet reached New York, and as their usual passages are much shorter than that they are now on, nothing can show more clearly the adverse weather in the Atlantic for vessels coming to the westward.

North America, left 16 June

Roscoe, " 24 "

William C. Nye, " 26 "

Louisville, " 26 "

Total time of the Royal William between Liverpool and New York 18 days and 23 hours.

	Days.	Hours.
Winds blew from N. W. to S. W.	11	11
N. W. to North	2	17
S. W. to South	2	0
Easterly	1	17
Calm	1	2
	18	23

Now as the course from Cape Clear to New York is about W. by N. it is evident the "Royal William" had to contend against eleven and a half days of opposing winds, that is to say, those blowing between S. W. and N. W.; and as it frequently blew gales, I trust some credit will be given to a vessel which has opposed them so successfully. For the eleven days she had no opportunity of setting her fore sail or fore top sail. As a proof of her capabilities for speed, it is only necessary to give the result of the last seven days she was at sea, during part of which time she had 56 hours of head winds—

Noon ending the 18th July,—206 miles,

19th " 240 "

20th " 182 "

21st " 179 "

22d " 230 "

23d " 238 "

24th " 239 "

Total in seven days, 1,514 miles.

The above are by observations—by dead reckoning she ran 257 miles on the 19th July, 257 miles on the 23d.

The "Royal William" is fitted up with water tight bulkheads, which by dividing the hull into five compartments renders it perfectly safe under almost any circumstances; certainly from collision or fire: this plan of dividing the vessel into sections, was originally adopted by Mr. C. W. Williams of Liverpool, to whom the public are indebted for so great a means of preservation to human life, and which has gained him in England the applause of the public at large. The "Royal William" belongs to the City of Dublin Company established in 1824 to run steamers between Liverpool, Dublin, and Belfast. They have a fleet of 17 vessels employed in the Irish channel which make annually above 1,000 voyages, and from the peculiar care used in their construction, and from almost daily inspection, not an accident has occurred to endanger life during a period of 14 years.

The experience acquired by the managing directors has led parties in the United Kingdom to solicit their assistance in the formation of a company to run steamers of a large class between Liverpool and New York; and in consequence of that assistance being afforded, progress has been made. Subscribers have come forward, and two vessels of 1,250 tons and 420 horse power each are now in course of construction, to be followed by others as numerous as the wants of the station will ultimately require.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JAS. C. SHAW, marine manager.

THE FUNERAL OF THE LATE COMMODORE JOHN RODGERS.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer, August 4.

The mortal remains of this distinguished officer of our navy, were interred yesterday evening, in Christ church burial ground, at the corner of Fifth and Arch streets. The occasion was a solemn one, and respect for the memory of the deceased, and a due sense of the virtues both of his public and private character, attracted a concourse of many thousands of our citizens to the place of interment, which large cemetery, as well as the adjacent streets, were thronged with people, amongst whom the most perfect order and decorum prevailed.

In compliance with the naval order of commodore Charles Stewart, commanding officer of the Philadelphia station, all the officers of the navy at present in the city, together with several officers of the army and a numerous company of the immediate friends of the deceased, assembled at the house of commodore Biddle, No. 260 Walnut street, whither the body had been removed from the U. S. naval asylum.

The first brigade of the Pennsylvania militia, under the command of general Provost, who officiated in the absence of general Patterson, also assembled on Walnut street, for the purpose of assisting in the solemnity, where they were met by the fine corps of U. S. marines, from the navy yard.

Shortly after six o'clock, the procession moved towards the burial ground, the body being conveyed in a hearse, and covered with the star spangled banner for a pall.

When the coffin was removed, and taken into the burial ground, the national flag was supported by six pall bears, all of them being distinguished officers. Amongst them we observed commodore Stewart, commodore Biddle, captain Sturbrick, major H. Bache and captain Thornton, all in full uniform. The body was borne by veteran sailors of the U. S. navy. These were followed by a large number of officers, both of the navy and army, but particularly of the former service; amongst them, lieutenant McKane, Dr. Morgan, Mr. Purser Stockton, lieutenants Mercer and Bynum, Dr. T. Dillard, &c. &c. Citizens two and two; and the first brigade of the P. M. with their flags muffled in crepe.

The military made an imposing appearance; and the mournful cortege, which extended several squares in length, marching to the slow music of the German Washington Guards' band, was remarkably solemn and impressive.

Having arrived at the Arch street gate of the cemetery, the military formed in line, and preserved a clear passage for the mourners and attendants; and as the procession entered upon the ground, the rev. Dr. Tying commenced the beautiful and affecting burial service of the Episcopal church, by reading "I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord," &c.

After the entire burial service had been read, and the body lowered into the grave—the marines fired the customary farewell salute of three volleys. The military, friends and attendants then retired, and the thousand assembled dispersed, doubtless bearing with them to their homes, an honorable recollection of the services which the deceased had rendered to his country, and a proper sense of the fleeting and transitory nature of this mortal state of existence.

Our hope and trust is that the distinguished deceased, has put off this early corruption for a happy and glorious immortality.

We find the following interesting sketch of the life of the deceased in the "Intelligencer."

Commodore John Rodgers entered the navy as a lieutenant in the year 1798. He was 1st lieutenant of the Constellation in the action with the Insurgente which resulted in her capture. His zeal in performing his duty on this occasion, and complying strictly with the orders of his commander, (Commander Truxton,) was, in commodore T's language, "not to be surpassed." After the action the command of the Insurgente was conferred upon him.

With midshipman, D. Porter (the present commodore) and 11 men, he took possession of the prize, and commenced moving her crew to the Constellation; but before this could be done the ships were separated in a heavy gale of wind, and 178 prisoners were left on board to be guarded by lieutenant Rodgers and his handful of men, whose situation was rendered peculiarly perilous by the circumstances of there being no handcuffs or shackles on board to secure the prisoners who manifested a disposition to retake the prize. The energy of lieutenant Rodgers, assisted by the gallant midshipman Porter, conducted the prize safely into St. Kitts.

Returning to the United States, lieutenant Rodgers was commissioned a captain in the navy, in consideration of his highly meritorious conduct and known qualifications. He was appointed to command the sloop of war Maryland, in which vessel he cruised in the West Indies for many months, rendering important services. In 1801, he sailed in the Maryland, for France, with Mr. Dawson, sent as a diplomatic messenger to that court.

In 1802, he was appointed to the command of the John Adams—attached to the Mediterranean squadron—destroyed the Meshouda of 22 guns, "the largest cruiser belonging to Tripoli," and performed other valuable services.

In 1804, he was appointed to the frigate Congress, and proceeded to the Mediterranean as a part of a squadron of vessels, under the command of commodore Samuel Barron, sent thither against Tripoli.

From commodore Barron's extreme ill health, he resigned the command of the squadron in Mar. 1805, to commodore Rodgers, whose decisive conduct soon disposed the Beshaw of Tripoli, to make peace with us, and in less than two months after the command devolved upon him, a treaty of peace was concluded with that power, on terms dictated by him and colonel Lear.

In 1812, the command of a squadron was given to him. He dashed into the European seas, made a number of captures, most of which he, from se-cessary, destroyed, returning triumphant after an absence of more than three months. At the time he sailed, a number of the enemy's vessels were on our coast, greatly exceeding the commodore's squadron in force. These he successfully evaded, and by drawing them off in pursuit of him, enabled a great number of our merchant vessels, with valuable cargoes, to return in safety to our ports. One of the effects of this cruise was to save millions to our merchants and to our government.

When the British army marched upon Baltimore, commodore Rodgers acted a distinguished part in the defence of that city. Many believe that Baltimore would have been surrendered but for the seasonable aid of the force under his command.

After the war, he was appointed commissioner of the navy, and presided over that board for several years. He was mainly instrumental in making regulations which have conducted to the economy of the naval service. He was offered the appointment of secretary of the navy, but declined it.—Having acted as president of the board of navy commissioners about ten years ago, the president invited him to take command of the Mediterranean squadron, mentioning considerations, inducing him to do so, highly honorable to the commodore. He accepted, and his flag was hoisted on board the North Carolina ship of the line, of which D. T. Patterson, esq. was appointed captain. He cruised in the Mediterranean seas nearly three years. He had much intercourse with the commanders of other naval powers, and was held by them in high estimation. The ship was particularly distinguished for her fine condition at all times, and the high state of discipline maintained on board. The commodore, his accomplished captain, and this noble specimen of American naval architecture, were objects of universal admiration. Returning to the United States, he was again appointed president of the board of the navy commissioners, and continued to discharge, with great fidelity and zeal, the arduous duties of that station, till his constitution was literally worn out, and his mind exhausted in the service. He then retired—made a trip to England in the hope of recovering his health, and was there received with those kind attentions which were gratefully remembered till his last moments.

Of his personal character, it may be added, that, though of quick temper, he was noble and generous in his disposition. He was a patriot in reality. Though stern in his appearance, he was particularly distinguished for his humanity. The story of his noble and successful exertions to save two young ladies from the massacre of Cape Francois—his sublime efforts to save a poor old negro woman floating upon a cake of ice down the Susquehanna, which were also crowned with success, must be told as characteristic incidents in his life, when these brief outlines of his character shall be filled up by faithful history.

SUPREME COURT OF THE U. STATES.

Monday, August 6—11 o'clock.

The hon. R. B. Taney, chief justice, opened the August term of the supreme court in pursuance of the law. An application was made on behalf of Duncan H. Hennen, for a writ of mandamus, to be directed to the judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, commanding the said judge to restore the petitioner to the office of clerk of said court. A similar application was made for a mandamus, to be directed to the judges of the circuit court of the U. States for the eastern district of Louisiana, commanding them to restore the same gentleman to the office of clerk of the circuit court. The petition was read by Richard S. Cox, esq., counsel for petitioner, as follows:

To the honorable the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the United States. The petition of Duncan H. Hennen respectfully sheweth:

That your petitioner was, on the twenty-first day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, duly appointed clerk of the district court of the United States, in and for the eastern district of Louisiana, by the honorable Samuel H. Harper, judge of the said district court; that a commission was given to your petitioner by the said district judge in the words and figures following, to wit:

United States of America, eastern district of Louisiana:

By virtue of authority in me vested, I do hereby appoint Duncan N. Hennen, of said state, clerk of the district court of the United States, in and for the eastern district of the state of Louisiana. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, at the city of New Orleans, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1834.

[L. s.] SAMUEL H. HARPER, judge U. S.

That your petitioner accepted the said appointment and commission, presented the commission to the said district court, and it was duly recorded on the minutes of said court, on the same 21st day of February, 1834, as by reference to the said original commission now in the hands of your petitioner, and ready to be produced when and where your honors may direct and appoint.

And your petitioner further shows unto your honors that, in conformity with the provisions of the statute in such case made and provided, he took the oath of office, and gave a bond with sureties, which bond was approved by the said judge Harper, and the said bond was duly filed, and the facts of producing the commission, taking the oath of office, and giving the said bond, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of said office, were all duly entered on the minutes of said court, on the same 21st day of February, 1834.

And your petitioner further shows unto your honors that he entered upon the duties of said office of clerk of the said district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, and held the same, and continued to perform the duties thereunto appertaining with diligence, fidelity, and skill, to the satisfaction of said district court, and of the parties suitors in said court; that, by virtue of said appointment, and of the provisions of the statute in such case made and provided, your petitioner was also, from the period of the organization of the circuit court of the United States for the said district of Louisiana, in like manner the clerk of said circuit court, and performed all the duties appertaining to said office, and during the periods aforesaid your petitioner, in like manner, received the fees and emoluments of office belonging to the same.

And your petitioner further shows unto your honors that he so continued to perform said duties, and to receive said emoluments, and in all respects to occupy and hold said offices, until on or about the 18th day of May, in the year 1838, when he received a communication from the honorable Philip K. Lawrence, then and now the judge of the said district court of the United States for the said eastern district of Louisiana, in the words and figures following, to wit:

New Orleans, May 18, 1838.

Dear Sir: The object of this communication is to apprise you of your removal from the office of clerk of the United States district court of the eastern district of Louisiana, and of the appointment of Mr. John Winthrop in your place. In taking this step, I desire to be understood as neither prompted by any unfriendly disposition towards you personally, nor wishing to cast the slightest shade of censure on your official conduct; on the contrary, whether it will afford you any gratification to be thus assured or not, I avail myself of the occasion to declare to you that my most ardent wishes respecting you are for your entire success and prosperity through life. I consider it due to myself to have made this declaration, and a sense of justice to you demands that I should do what lies in my power to repel any unfavorable inference which might be drawn from your dismissal from the office of clerk, in regard to the manner in which the duties of the office have been discharged by you. On this subject, the situation in which I have been placed during the last two years and upwards has afforded me the means of speaking advisedly; and I am happy in being able to testify, as I now do, unreservedly, that the business of your office, during that period, has been conducted methodically, promptly, skillfully, and uprightly. In appointing Mr. W. to succeed you, I have been purely actuated by a sense of duty, and feelings of kindness towards one whom I have long known, and between whom and myself the closest friendship has ever subsisted. I cannot but consider his claims to any benefit in my power to confer as of a paramount character; and as his capacity to fill the office in question cannot be disputed, I feel that I am not exercising any unjust preference in bestowing on him the appointment.

I am, sir, very respectfully, &c.

P. K. LAWRENCE,

U. S. judge district court of Louisiana.

To D. N. Hennen, esq.

And your petitioner further shows unto your honors that he has heard and veily believes that the said judge Lawrence did, on or about the same 18th day of May, 1838, execute and deliver to said John Winthrop a paper purporting to be a commission or appointment as clerk of said district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, and that the said Winthrop, under and by virtue of the same claims to be entitled to hold said office, and does in fact execute to a certain extent, the duties appertaining thereto; and that he is recognized by said judge Lawrence as the only legal clerk of said district court, and as such signs writs and process, and receives the fees and emoluments of said office; that he has, by the direction and authority of said P. K. Lawrence, judge as aforesaid, obtained and holds possession of the records and minutes of said district court, and in general assumes to be the clerk of said court, and performs the duties of said office; and that said Winthrop and the said judge Lawrence exclude and keep out your petitioner from said office of clerk, and from performing the duties thereof, and from receiving the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging.

And your petitioner further shows unto your honors that on or about the 21st day of May, 1838, the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana met according to law, when the hon. John McKinley, one of the associate justices of the supreme court of the United States, and the said judge Lawrence, took their seats upon the bench as judge of said circuit court, and your petitioner and said John Winthrop severally presented themselves, each claiming to be rightfully and lawfully the clerk of said circuit court, and the said matter was argued by counsel for each of said claimants. The said judges, however, differed in opinion upon the said question of right, and, being unable to concur in opinion, neither of said parties was admitted to act as clerk, or recognized by the court as being the rightful clerk; and no business was or could be transacted, and the court adjourned. And your petitioner represents to your honors that he is advised and verily believes that he was legally and in due form appointed the clerk of said district court, and by virtue of said appointment became lawfully the clerk of said circuit court, and that he has never resigned the said offices, or been legally removed from the same, or either of them; but that he is rightfully entitled to hold and exercise the same, and to receive the fees and emoluments to the same belonging; and that he is illegally kept out of the said office of clerk of said district court, and prevented from performing the duties thereof, and from receiving the fees and emoluments attached to the same, by the illegal acts and conduct of the said Philip K. Lawrence, judge as aforesaid, and of the said John Winthrop, claiming to hold the said office by some pretended, but, as your petitioner is advised and believes, illegal and void appointment or commission from said judge Lawrence. And your petitioner further shows that the said judges of the said circuit court continue to differ in opinion as to the legal rights of your petitioner and the said John Winthrop to said offices, so that no one does or can perform the duties of said office of clerk of the circuit court, and that the suitors in said court are thereby delayed, and the administration of justice therein wholly suspended, and the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court of the United States over the judgments and decrees of the said circuit court altogether suspended and incapable of being exercised; all which evils are remediless at and by ordinary proceeding before said district or circuit courts, and can only be terminated and redressed by the interposition of this honorable court by its extraordinary process of mandamus. Wherefore your petitioner respectfully prays that your honors, the premises considered, will award the United States writ of mandamus, to be directed to the honorable Philip K. Lawrence, judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, commanding him that he forthwith restore your petitioner to his office of clerk of said district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana.

This petition having been read, upon motion by Mr. Cox, the court granted rules in both cases, returnable to the ensuing term of the supreme court, to be held in January next, upon the parties, to show cause why the writs as applied for should not be awarded—reserving to the parties the right to move for a rescinding of the rules.

After transacting some other business, the court adjourned to the next term. [Nat. Intel.]

THE HON. J. K. POLK, OF TENNESSEE.

From the Pennsylvanian.

We subjoin a correspondence between the hon. James K. Polk of Tennessee, the able speaker of the house of representatives, and a number of his democratic friends of this city, who were desirous of meeting him at the festive board for the purpose of testifying their respect for his private worth and distinguished public services. It will be seen, however, that Mr. Polk's stay in this city was so short as to prevent him from complying with the wishes of those by whom he was addressed, as well as of the democratic party generally in this vicinity, who would have been highly gratified to join in the proposed testimonial to one who has been ever firm and fearless in the cause of the people under the most trying circumstances:

Philadelphia, 14th July, 1838.

To the hon. James K. Polk:

DEAR SIR: Your republican friends of the city and county of Philadelphia, having heard of your recent arrival amongst them, are desirous of availing themselves of the opportunity to manifest to you those sentiments of esteem and regard, with which your private character and eminent public usefulness have so deeply inspired them.

Your uniform devotion to democratic principles and firm and consistent support of the late and present administration, together with the able and dignified manner in which you have discharged the arduous duties of presiding officer of the house of representatives, have produced an impression upon the minds of your democratic fellow citizens in this section of the union, which cannot be effaced, and which they would be extremely gratified to express to you in a body, at such time as it may comport with your convenience to favor them with a meeting.

Be pleased to accept the assurance of the high consideration with which we are, very truly and sincerely, yours,

Henry Horn, Wm. V. Pettit, George Taber, Bartholomew Rees, Jos. H. Newbold, Pierce Butler, Christian Kneass, Peter Wager, F. A. Raybold, H. M. Phillips, J. W. Nesbitt, Wm. J. Leiper, C. J. Jack, H. R. Campbell, George Guier, C. F. Breuil, J. Page, J. Sidney Jones, Wm. Duncan, Wm. Dilworth, Joseph C. Neal, John Thompson, Lemuel Paynter, Henry Simpson, Thomas S. Stewart, John Horn, Rowland Perry, F. Stoeber, Michael W. Ash, Benjamin Mifflin, Robinson R. Moore, R. A. Patton, W. Bonsall, J. Murray Rush, Miles N. Carpenter, R. T. Moffit, Wm. R. Cash, James H. Hutchinson, Wm. English, Edward M. Meader, Benj. Brewster, E. A. Penniman, Thomas Cook, James Campbell, Geo. F. Lehman, Benj. E. Carpenter, James Eneu, jr.

Philadelphia, July 14, 1838.

Gentlemen: I have received your letter of this date, inviting me to attend a "meeting of the democratic citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia" "at such time as may comport with my convenience." I regret that the limited time which I can remain in your city, will deprive me of the great pleasure which I would otherwise take, in meeting that portion of my fellow citizens whom you represent; citizens, who, though residing in the strong hold of the power of their political opponents, have, under the most trying circumstances, firmly maintained the great principles of democracy, which we profess. Pennsylvania, justly regarded as the "Key Stone" of the political arch, has more than once saved the democracy of the union from overthrow, and is destined, I doubt not, in the great contest of principle which is before us, proudly to maintain her position at the head of the democratic states. Under her lead the democracy have nothing to fear. In the political contest in which we are engaged, the country is thrown back more distinctly upon the ground occupied by the federal and republican parties some forty years ago, than it has been at any time since that period. Party names have changed, but the principles which divide us are essentially the same. Our political opponents have drawn to their aid, in the pending contest, the power of associated wealth, in the form of privileged banking corporations, and have made them the instruments, as they are the natural allies of that party in the country who have at all times, distrusted the power and capacity of the people, for self-government. These corporations are now with a few exceptions, notoriously in close political alliance with the "prostrate federal party," in a struggle to resuscitate and again fasten upon the country, the exploded doctrines of that party. A self constituted and dangerous political power, unknown to the constitution and laws, not chosen by the people and not responsible to them, has arisen in the country, and in the hands of the party opposed to the democracy, claiming the right not only to violate all law and disregard all engagements, but arrogantly assuming to control the action of the government, and to dictate public policy. The country has to choose between the government of this self-constituted, dangerous and irresponsible power, and the regular government of the constituted authorities, chosen by the people and responsible to them. In such a contest the course of the democracy is a plain one. It is a bold, fearless and unyielding adherence to principle. There can be no middle or "conservative" ground. There can be no compromise when principles are involved.

Regretting that I cannot meet my "republican friends" "in a body," during my short visit to your city, I have to thank you for the kind terms in which you have been pleased to refer to my public course and services: and have the honor to be, with sentiments of respect, your obedient servant,

JAMES K. POLK.

To Messrs. Henry Horn, Wm. V. Pettit, George Taber, Bartholomew Rees, Joseph H. Newbold, Pierce Butler, Michael W. Ash, and others.

THE CROPS OF EUROPE AND THE UNITED STATES.

The New York Express has the following advices touching the European grain market, derived from its London correspondent.

London, July 4. We have nearly got over our fright about our crops, the fine weather till to-day having quieted the anxiety. In Scotland the harvest will be very late. There is a great complaint of thinness in the largest wheat growing counties. We shall not have a great crop, but if the weather continues favorable, we shall not have a bad crop.

The news from the United States of the prospects for favorable crops has prevented the otherwise decided advance that would have taken place in our wheat market. If you have no call for the surplus wheat of the Baltic, that surplus will more readily come here. In Ireland our prospects are best for a good crop.

We have advices from St. Petersburg of the 17th ult.; Kubanka wheat was offering for delivery in August at 25ro. per chetwert, with 5ro. down, which at the exchange of 10 5-8 would bring the price per imperial qr. or free on board 34s. The accounts from the interior were by no means favorable, the crops of all kinds of grain suffering from dry hot weather.

From Konigsberg we have letters of the 21st ult. The holders of wheat continued to ask high prices; the accounts respecting the growing crop were still unfavorable, both in Prussia and Poland; high mixed qualities were held at 39s. to 40s. mixed at 35s. to 36s., and red qualities at from 32s. to 34s. per qr. Rye was also held at higher rates, and the best kinds could not be obtained below 22s. per qr.

Our Danzig letters reach us on the 22d June, on the 17th of the month the weather had become more genial, with refreshing showers of rain, which had continued up to the 22d; this auspicious change it was hoped would still be in time to benefit the crops, and in some measure to repair the damage done by the severity of the winter and lateness of the spring. On the 19th, prices of wheat had declined about 1s. per qr., but as the London mail of the 15th brought favorable accounts, a renewed demand had been experienced on 22d, and prices had fully recovered the slight depression; altogether about 360 lasts changed hands, part of which was high mixed of a fine bright color, which had obtained 47s. per qr.

At Hamburg on the 26th June, wheat was in brisk demand and about 3,000 qrs. were disposed of. Red Mecklenburg, weighing 62 lbs. had made 49s; old red Brunswick, 61 lbs. 46s. 3d; Silesian, 60 to 60 1-2, 46s. 2d; red Madgeburg, 59 1-2 lbs., 42s. 6d; and mixed Polish weighing 50 lbs., 46s. per qr. free on board. Some business had also been done free on board in the Baltic ports, a cargo of red, 61 lbs. Wheat had been sold at 43s. 6d. free on board in Elbing, and one of fine red Holstein, free on board at Newstadt, at 42s. 6d. per qr; at the latter rates there were more buyers but no sellers.

There was a brisk demand for flour, no sales however were made, as there were no stocks to meet the orders, and the manufacturers refused to enter into contracts for forward, delivery unless buyers were disposed to pay prices equivalent to the value of wheat.

The Rotterdam market on the 25th June opened briskly for wheat, and in the beginning of the day fine Zealand realized an advance of 1s. per qr. prices varying from 48s. 4d. to 56s. per qr. according to quality. Bonded wheat was in animated demand for English account, and prices were 2s. per qr. higher than during the previous week; good Rhine was quoted from 46s. 3d. to 47s. 6d. per qr., and Danzig 46s. to 53s. 3d. according to quality; Pomeranian of 62 lb. weight could be had at from 47s. 6d. to 48s. 3d., and red Konigsberg at from 44s. 6d. to 45s. 5d. per qr. all free on board.

We gave yesterday, a notice of considerable length relative to the corn market of London, with a view of following it up with some remarks upon the European markets and crops, and the harvests of our own country. The connexion between these, is of course, intimate, and the subject is one of interest to a majority of our readers.

We think ourselves warranted in setting down the wheat and rye crop of this country as large, not only in regard to the general yield, but also in reference to the number of acres cultivated. There have been failures in some places, and in some others it is probable that the harvest has not quite fulfilled its early promise, but the average of the crop is good, and the amount of wheat gathered in is very great. How is this great crop to be made most serviceable to the producer, to the merchant, and to the business of the country? This is a question which can only be answered by a reference to the state of the markets and grain fields of Europe. This is evident, because there is a superflux which must seek foreign markets, and on the state of supply in those markets will depend the price, and consequently the profit or loss, of those who send their bread stuffs thereto.

Let us, then, spend a few moments in examining the state of the principal market of grain, and the means of supplying any deficiencies therein beyond our own produce.

Undoubtedly London must be looked to for a solution of all the questions upon the demand and supply of bread stuffs, which concern the United States.

The crop of 1837 was deficient in England to a considerable degree, and to a far greater extent on the continent, say to the north of France. This state of things was early known; and as soon as the harvest of 1837 closed in England, orders to purchase wheat on English account were despatched to all the ports of export of that grain on the German ocean and the Baltic. Now it is known that these orders were being executed and contracts made under them, from the December following until the middle of May, 1838, about which time, say, the latter end of May, all further proceedings under these orders were arrested by the very considerable advance in prices that occurred in the principal ports of the continent, in consequence of the great prospects of a failure of crops in Germany and Poland.

The wheat purchased between December, 1837, and May, 1838, was regularly shipped, and early before the first of June, it seemed to be coming into the British ports from all parts of the continent. This sudden influx caused a pause in the rise of the article in England; but early in June the demand was estimated in Liverpool, and large sales were made in one market day.

Our readers will recollect that our information relative to the London markets is incomplete, there being a chasm (at least in our information) from the 16th of June to the 3d of July; but we find that the weekly average of the 15th of June is 64s. 11d. and on the 22d it is 65s. 6d. Prices, therefore, of wheat free for home use must advance. Free wheat is quoted in Liverpool on the 3d of July, in the regular price current, fully as high as during the week previous, though the sale was rather dull. This brings us to notice the probability of the introduction of foreign wheat; and in order to form a correct opinion upon this subject, especially as to the rate of duties, it is necessary to recur to the production of the former harvest, or more properly to the stocks on hand.

The stocks remaining with the farmers can only be inferred from facts. The harvest was, it is admitted, deficient. The millers and corn dealers, however, as the farmers seemed anxious to sell, or, to use a technical term, seemed to be free sellers, purchased only to supply immediate demands, as we gather distinctly from the quotations and remarks in the price current from day to day, and they were in turn as free sellers as the farmers—no wheat was hoarded or laid up in speculation. When Lady day came (25th March,) and found the corn dealers and millers without stock, and the farmers without their customary deliveries on that pay day date, there was at once forced upon the public mind the apprehension of a necessity for a large import, and this apprehension has been strengthened by fears of the deficiencies of the coming crops in England.

We have, on the 7th of June, the opinion of one of the most intelligent merchants of England, versed in the corn trade, that a million of quarters (8,000,000 of bushels,) of corn will be required to be admitted, before the harvest could be made available; and be confidently expected that it would be admitted at a duty of 20s. 8d. to 24s. 8d.; and on the 6th of July, the same gentleman thinks that the duty will be from 18s. 8d. to 20s. 8d. This implies a reduction which could only take place from a proportionate advance in the price of wheat free for consumption.

As early as the 5th of June, there were strong apprehensions that the growing crop would prove considerably deficient. The root had been killed, and the fine weather, by promoting the growth above ground, showed how much had been destroyed. So extensive and general had been this injury, that on the 5th of July the opinion was entertained that in the most favorable state of weather, there could not be expected an average crop—and it is known that England requires a full average of her own and of the Irish growth, to meet her consumption.

We have above expressed the opinion that a million of quarters of wheat (eight millions of bushels) must be admitted into England before the harvest. What proportion of this can be readily obtained, we are unable to state explicitly, and must, for want of data, trust to conjecture.

In London on the 4th June, the amount of wheat in bond was 248,000 qrs., and it is a fair calculation to take the amount in London as half that of the whole kingdom. This assumption is founded on the fact that London is the great market both of corn and capital—is situated on the east side of the island, and is contiguous to the continent. We find, however, on recurrence to the "Corn Reporter" of July the 2d, that the official return for the whole kingdom gives 627,233 qrs. or 4,217,664 bushels. But Holland is also a competitor with England for wheat, and at Rotterdam on the 25th of June, it is remarked that the duty on bonded wheat introduced for home consumption, was reduced to one shilling, the minimum of duty for wheat admitted for domestic use. This fact has an important bearing upon the subject, because it shows that there is a scarcity of, and of course a demand for, corn in that market.

We have above referred to the fact, that the continental grain fields were not promising, and we may add, that the stock of old wheat, both in England and on the continent, is far less than has been held for many years previous. Of course, then, the demand in Holland, as well as in England, is to be made upon a reduced stock, and it would seem that English grain dealers regard the subject in this light; because while they speak favorably of the weather in relation to the grain fields, they at the same time remark that "the duty on wheat from foreign ports is reduced one shilling per quarter this week"—a necessary consequence, of course, of the rise in the price of wheat, and that rise in England shows that the landed interests have not the wheat wherewith to keep down the price, and thus prevent a glut of the market by the introduction of foreign wheat into England; though it would seem that the surplus on the continent is so small, that if any considerable portion was sent to England, that is, if an over drain of the continental ports were to be made, the prices in England would become depressed, and the bonded wheat must return to the ports whence it came, to supply the want caused by its own shipment.

The fluctuations in prices of bonded wheat unknown, are not always significant of quantities brought to, or taken out of, market. Much wheat is held on speculation, and the prices of that must always be affected by the money wants of the holder, who will rather force a portion of his speculation upon the market at a reduced price, than to suffer for want of the money invested therein—hence we repeat, that fluctuations afford no criterion to judge of the wants for consumption.

We would add that our remarks are not founded upon the supposition of a failure of the English and continental crops—we believe that both will be less than an average, and the want of stock remaining over from last harvest, will produce the demands which we have anticipated; and as the continental crops cannot supply the demand of England before the harvest, we may suppose that she must look elsewhere.

Should our anticipations prove correct, and the demand for flour in England and Holland more than exhaust the supplies of the continent, it will follow as a matter of course, that the surplus of the large harvest of this country will go towards making a balance of trade in our favor, in different parts of the world. The demand in England, and the want of abilities to supply in the continent, will leave open to our merchants the West India and South American markets; and we may add, that while there has been a diminution of supplies in Canada, there has been a large accession to the means of consumption, so that the flour of the western part of New York will probably find a ready market on the British side of the lake.

From the view of circumstances at home and abroad, we come to the conclusion that a judicious course on the part of our merchant, and a let us alone (laissez nous faire) course on the part of the government, will with existing means at home, and certain want abroad, place our commercial relations in a most enviable position, rewarding the producer for his toil, and the merchant for his enterprise and risk, of paying off and giving to the government in due time the means of its newly created responsibilities, while at the same time it sees the people enjoying prosperity, as the fruits of commercial integrity and honest industry.

We are not unmindful while we speak of grain as entering into the means of our national prosperity, that there is a mutual dependence among the great staples of our country, and that our foreign and commercial relations, especially those with Great Britain, are best sustained by an average produce and demand for them all abroad. [N. Y. Exp.]

SPEECH OF MR. DUNCAN, OF OHIO,

On the bill making appropriations for harbors, and in reply to Mr. Bond of Ohio, delivered in the house of representatives, Saturday July, 7, 1838.

Mr. Duncan addressed the committee as follows:

Mr. Chairman: I am happy to have this opportunity to make some remarks in relation to the financial policy adopted, and so far pursued, by this and the late administration. The bill now under consideration has been amended in the senate, by striking out the appropriation of twenty thousand dollars for the improvement of the Cumberland river within the limits of Kentucky and Tennessee.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Williams] says that this amendment was made in a certain quarter (meaning the senate) for a certain purpose, (I suppose to punish the people of Kentucky for not being more democratic,) and to affect a certain individual, [Mr. Clay.] This may all be, if we are prepared to suppose that grave senators could so far forget their high stations as to make such paltry considerations an object of action in the discharge of their high functions and sacred duties. But I think we may find another reason for this judicious and laudable amendment—a reason that has its foundation in patriotism and economy. The howl of extravagant profligacy and bankruptcy has never been out of our ears since the commencement of the session until this time, and it will continue with the session. Yes, sir, that howl has cost the people more money than would redeem the treasury notes now in circulation, which constitute our present national debt. I say it was a regard for economy, and a desire to confine the appropriations within the probable estimates for the year, that induced the senate to make the amendment in question.

Sir, what base and sickening inconsistency do we witness here every day: a charge constantly kept up that the government is bankrupt, and the best prospects of the country ruined, by a profligate administration; when it is a well known fact, and the journals show it, that every measure of extravagance and profligacy is brought forward, sustained, and carried through to a law, by those who are opposed to the administration, and who are constantly denouncing it for its prodigality.

It seems, from the profligate and reckless course of the opposition in worthless and extravagant expenditures, that bankruptcy of the government is one of the means by which this administration is to be brought into disrepute with the people, and finally overthrown. Whenever there is an attempt made at reform, it is denounced as demagogical. Whenever there is an attempt made at economy and prudence in public expenditures, the whole pack of oppositionists who may have the most remote local interest, raise the howl that this attempt at economy is made for party purposes—to affect a certain state—to affect certain individuals—and to effect certain purposes. Yes, sir, although economy dwells on the lips of a certain party, extravagance has its home in their hearts. For the truth of this assertion, I refer you to the examination of the journals of the last six or eight years; where on all appropriations made that savor of extravagance, there will be found a large majority of the names of those opposed to this and the last administration in favor of such measures, and the names of a large majority of the members friendly to those administrations will be found to be recorded against them.

Sir, I hold up the journals which contain the evidences of what I say. I only ask investigation. Among the vast number of unwarrantable appropriations, which I have not time to notice specially, I ask your attention to one, only distinguished from the rest by the size of the sum. It is the appropriation made in the session of 1835 and 1836, for liquidating the debt due from the District of Columbia to Holland, and for carrying out certain improvements for which that loan was made. This entire appropriation amounted, I think, to one and a half millions. But let us inquire for what purposes this money was applied. It was applied first to the construction of a canal through the suburbs of your city, (Washington,) which needs a canal about as much as a cart wants a third wheel. The south side of the south wing of this capitol faces the whole line of that canal. It is in view of every one who looks out of one of the south windows. I have been looking out for seven months, and I have yet to see the first boat disturb the stillness of its water. One is at a loss to know which to be most astonished at, the wickedness that conceived such unpardonable folly, or the sterility of the soil through which the canal is excavated, or the poverty and sterility of the country for whose benefit it is made. This canal is of whig origin. The next extravagant and worthless appropriation of this money is for the construction of a turnpike road, made on the bank of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. This road was made at great expense, and runs the extent of the District. The next is the turnpike road running parallel with the former. I am unable to draw the distinction between the folly involved in the construction of each of those roads. The existence of the one completely supersedes the necessity of the other, and both of but little use. The hill road seems to have been made to display the power of the federal government to prostrate hills and fill up hollows. I occasionally ride out in the evening for exercise. My rides have, some six or seven times, been on these roads. I generally go out the bottom road and return the hill road. I have once seen a shackling wagon drawn by two mules and a jack, (Demerara-tean,) so poor that one might hang his hat on their hip bones. This establishment was driven by a negro half naked, lame in one leg and blind of one eye. This, sir, is a specimen of the use made of what is called the bottom turnpike road; but I have never seen the first living creature on the hill road except the horse I rode. So much for the roads—useless roads—I mean those that have come under my observation, which have been made by the people's money, and, I undertake to say, in gross violation of their rights, if not in violation of the constitution.

But, sir, the most profligate and extravagant appropriation is yet to be presented. It is the appropriation for the Georgetown and Alexandria canal and aqueduct. This canal is now under way. Is located on the bank of the Potomac—a canal, deep, still, and wide, (being tide water.) Why, sir, what will your people say when they learn that half a million of their money has been appropriated for the construction of a canal on the bank of the Potomac—a canal constructed by the Almighty, as far superior to your pitiful effort as the majestic steamboat that rides upon its bosom is superior to the contemptible packet that floats upon your canal? But, sir, for whose benefit has this vast appropriation been made? For the benefit of the city of Alexandria. It is almost incredible with those who have seen Alexandria within the last three or four years, that such an appropriation should be made for her—a city that seems to have the anger of God and the hand of ruin upon it—now desolation itself, and without the most remote prospect of ever surviving. The almost total abstraction of trade from her port, the barrenness and poverty of the soil that surrounds her, must ever prevent her from being revived. Nothing can save her from final prostration and ruin. In half a century from this time, there will hardly be a standing monument of art for the tooth of time to operate upon; and yet it was for the benefit of these tottering remains of a city that this vast and expensive work has been undertaken, and to finish it, must take much of the sacred proceeds of toil and sweat of those who will never see or witness the practical result of such consummate folly and wicked extravagance. Sir, you may draw upon the industry of the people for, and recover, a sufficient amount to complete this work; but there never will be commercial motion enough on it to prevent the stagnation of its water. The noble canal which the Almighty has made, (the Potomac,) and of which yours is but a contemptible imitation, will for ever bear the produce destined for other places, (no toll being to be paid on it, but, like other divine gifts, free.) Your canal will be the generator and birth-place of reptiles, and the abode of frogs. It will be a putrid, green pool of pestilence; and its exhalations will spread disease and death over your country. These, sir, are specimens of the appropriations that have emptied your treasury, and been part of the means that have made it necessary for you to use your credit in the form of treasury notes, to keep the wheels of government in motion; and I repeat it, that these profligate appropriations are made at the instance, and carried into ruinous practice by the votes of the very party who are constantly denouncing this and the late administration for their extravagance and profligacy.

Sir, my object in discussing this question is not only for the purpose of sustaining the amendment in question, and to sustain the principles and policy that induced it, but also to answer and refute many of the propositions and assertions contained in a small pamphlet, which I hold in my hand, purporting to be a speech delivered by my colleague, [Mr. Bond, from Ohio,] on a resolution offered some time since by the gentleman from Virginia, on the subject of the public printing.

In order to give his remarks upon that resolution some force with the democratic party, my colleague says that the gentleman who offered it acts generally with the administration party. I deny that assertion. I deny that the gentleman from Virginia, [colonel Hopkins,] had acted generally with the administration party; and I say so without any disrespect to the gentleman, for he has a right to act with whatever party he pleases, and no one has a right to question his motives. But fair play is a jewel; and my colleague must represent things as they are, not as he would desire to have them, for political effect. Sir, this is a little pamphlet, but it contains more federal poison in a small way, than any thing I ever saw of the kind. It is a little pamphlet, and its whole contents remind me of minnow-catching. I live near a river called the Little Miami, and into it there empties a creek called Sycamore. I fish in the river, and my boy catches minnows in the creek for bait. It is this last operation that the contents of this little pamphlet remind me of. It is a system of a small kind of fault-finding; and yet I am told that there is not a foul stream of federalism in the union, on which it does not float. Every corrupt, bought-up federal press in these United States, I am told, has given it an insertion in its columns; and the mails have groaned under the weight of its multiplied numbers, by the franking privilege, ever since it made its appearance.

Sir, seeing, on one occasion, a great number of federal members engaged busily in franking documents, my curiosity induced me to walk round among them to inquire what documents they were franking for distribution. I asked one: Mr. Bond's speech; another: Mr. Bond's speech; another: Mr. Bond's speech; and so on. This led me to a perusal of my colleague's speech, and the vast circulation which was given to it, for political effect, induced me to collect some statistics by which I might neutralize any poisonous effects his speech might have on the political atmosphere. Those statistics I have procured, and have them in my hand, and will ask that they may constitute a part of my speech, which I design to write out more fully than time will now permit to deliver.

But to the speech. My colleague complains that, within the last nine years, there has been an increase of public officers and of public expenditures, which he charges as a fault of the party in power. It is their fault, too, I suppose, that within the same time, two new states have been added to our union, and several millions of people to our population. If public officers have been increased, so has public business, and in a much greater ratio. As a matter of course, an increase of expenditures must follow. If this be an evil, it can only be cured by stopping the extension of our settlements, and the increase of our population. There is a large increase of clerks in the New York custom-house; but the business there has been more than doubled. There has been a large increase of clerks in the land office; but the business of that office has increased ten-fold. It was physically impossible that the president could sign the increased number of land patents, and yet it is made an offence to create another officer for that purpose. There has been some increase of clerks in the war department; but the business in that department has been more than doubled. The number of postmasters has been doubled, and so has the number of post offices, for the convenience of the people.

Would our new-light bank federal reformers have six or seven thousand post offices discontinued to avoid an increase of executive officers? Do the people want any such reform? Would they shut up the land offices, because to keep them open requires an increase of officers? Would they deny patents to purchasers of land, because it takes a few additional clerks to make them out? Shall the business of all the departments remain undone, because it requires more clerks to do it as it increases with the growth of our country? These would be reforms worthy of federal bank reformers! Let the business of the people's government remain undone, and the banks will govern for the people.

There are few offices, if any, in the country, in which the public business has not increased faster than the clerks and the expenditure. As our country increases, the public officers and public expenditures must and will increase. It is unavoidable, as every man knows. It is as stupid as wicked to complain of the party in power on account of this increase, for no party can prevent it and do its duty to the country. The only inquiry should be, whether there are too many clerks to do the public business; whether any of them spend in idleness the time for which the people pay. If so, they should be lopped off. But no such thing is alleged. It is not asserted that the clerks who have been added have not enough to do, or that the public business could possibly be done without them.

These new-light federal-bank-reformers propose no measures to retrench, because they know that no retrenchment can be made, but seek only to fill the country with false impressions, for the sake of producing political results favorable to the federal-bank cause. This game of base and foul lying, to get into power, is as old as Absalom, the son of David, and older too. My colleague undertakes to arraign certain members of the administration for having, in some instances, received payment for extra services. But does he pretend that any one of them has received such compensation in violation of law? not at all. He knows that the principles upon which those allowances were made have been repeatedly adjudicated upon and sanctioned by the supreme court, the highest judicial tribunal in the country. The allowances, therefore, were all lawful. Is the principle wrong? If gentlemen think so, why do they not bring forth a proposition making all such allowances unlawful? If they were really in favor of a reform, or change in this respect, should we not see them proving it by acts, rather than by words? They have a majority in this house, and have had during this seven months' session, and yet they have made no attempt at reform of any kind.

Perhaps my colleague may have thought the prospect discouraging; but he ought not to have stopped on that account, he ought rather to have followed the example of the gallant colonel Miller, who, when he was ordered on a perilous service on the Niagara frontier during the war of 1812, did not say it was impracticable, but said "I'll try, sir," to the commanding general. He did try, and he succeeded. The achievement not only rendered essential service at that crisis, but honored his country's arms, and elevated his own fame. I hope my colleague will not be dismayed, because the undertaking of reform of the abuses of which he complains is perilous. If he will try he may succeed, and if he does, he will render essential service to his country, and crown himself with laurels as unfading as those of colonel Miller. But, sir, the fact that they content themselves with mere clamor, without attempting to do any thing to bring about reform, is conclusive that they do not believe there is any thing wrong in the principle, and have only one object in view, that is to put others out of office that they may get in. How they used their power over the public money while in office, and how they may be expected to use it again, I will attempt to show before I am done.

But my colleague brings a general charge against the party in power, who, by their representatives in part (colonel Benton, Mr. Cambreleng, and others) had promised something like reform (should they get into power) in abuses which they said existed, and which they set out in a report on that subject, and which my colleague has presented in a garbled manner to the public attention, through his speech. Does my colleague not know that many of the abuses in that report complained of, grew out of the manner in which the powers that then existed got into office, and the corrupt manner by which they held the administration of the government? The government fountain being corrupt, all the streams that flowed from it conveyed abuse and violation wherever they reached; and that by a reformation of the administration, most of the abuses that flowed from it were dried up; which, in a great degree, superseded the necessity of further reform. Some abuses still remained; they were reformed in part, as I will show you before I am done. Some remain unreformed, and always will, as they do in all governments, and are of a nature like the cholera, incurable. Yes, sir, the people have made that general reformation, by pulling down an administration that had its origin in a corrupt bargain, and existed in violation of the spirit of the constitution, and the sacred right of the elective franchise.

Here, sir, permit me to name some of the objections my colleague presents to the public against this administration. Some of the practices which he denounces as corrupt, and still existing, notwithstanding the reform the people were promised; and permit me to compare these practices, that he is pleased to denounce as corrupt, with those of a similar character, but a thousand times more aggravating, as practised by the administration of Messrs. Clay and Adams, which is urged upon us as worthy of example, and entitled to the confidence of the American people, and soon to be revived.

My colleague complains that the aggregate expenses of the government far exceeds the expenses of the administration of the dynasty which he wishes revived.

That there is an additional number of clerks in all the departments, and consequently an unnecessary expense incurred to the government. Such is the character of his charges against each of the departments of the government.

And now, sir, I proceed to answer the gentleman on some of these charges, and, I trust, I shall be not only able to prove many of these destitute of foundation in truth, but that the gentleman has withheld many important truths in relation to reforms and abuses, which it is due to this administration that the people should know.

Sir, there is very little difference in the moral offence of withholding the truth, where it may be due to reputation and character that it should be told, and telling that which is willfully false. The gentleman constantly (indirectly) holds up to view the coalition administration (Adams and Clay) as a mirror, in which is to be seen a pure administration. I think, sir, we shall find some corruptions charged to this and the last administrations, which will be found to have been practiced with unity in that. One of the great violations of economy and extravagant expenditures of the administration of general Jackson, was sending Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Randolph, severally, as ministers to Russia, with a salary of $9,000 per annum, and an outfit of $9,000; that each of them staid but a year and a day, and then returned. Now, sir, let us see if we can offset this "useless" expenditure of general Jackson's administration by one of a similar character in the administration of Messrs. Adams and Clay. During the immaculate dynasty which my colleague desires to have renewed, no less than three ministers were sent to England, viz: King, Barbour, and Gallatin, with an annual salary of $9,000, and an outfit of $9,000. This made 27,000 in outfit, besides the annual salary, which amounted to the same. Also, the son of Rufus King, who was left secretary of legation, was left by his father as charge d'affaires, who received an outfit of $4,500, although (being there) he had not to fit out at all.

Then the account for money expended for keeping up our legation in England, during that short reign of corruption and bargain, which only lasted four years, was—

Outfit for R. King	-	-	-	$9,000
" for A. Gallatin	-	-	-	9,000
" for J. Barbour	-	-	-	9,000
" for Mr. King's son, who never was fitted out	-	-	-	4,500
Salary for do.	-	-	-	4,500
" " Ministers	-	-	-	27,000

$68,000

Yes, sir, $68,000 was spent during that administration, to procure the discharge of the diplomatic duties of one single individual. I think this will offset the Russia diplomatic story. My colleague had better have kept that story in the dark, as his reform is a kind of one-sided reform. My colleague says that the state department sent Mr. Early to Bogota with despatches, and that he never delivered them, but received his pay. Well, sir, this was a hard case, and, taken in the abstract, smacks of fraud and improvidence. But what is the whole story? Mr. Early was sent to Bogota with despatches: when on the way, and within two days of St. Thomas, the vessel in which he had taken passage caught fire. There was a cargo of powder on board. The crew and passengers, amounting to nineteen in all, were instantly, to save their lives, compelled to take to the boats, two in number. They had left the vessel but half an hour when she blew up; and with her went the despatches. After the lapse of seventy-four hours without water or food, the famished crew reached the island of Hayti, from whence they got home as well as they could. I believe Mr. Early was paid the same as though he had delivered the despatches. Perhaps this was wrong; but I can tell you something worse under the coalition administration.

Mr. Clay (secretary of state,) sent Mr. Plazens to Buenos Ayres with despatches. It is said that he found the crew rather unpleasant, (he being a pleasant man,) being principally mechanics and workies, and not the white fingered gentry. He put the despatches in the possession of the captain, and he wheeled about and put for England, where he amused himself in high life a time, and returned; for which Mr. Clay paid him nineteen hundred and forty dollars. So I think this will offset the charge of paying Mr. Early.

So far, I think my colleague has been unfortunate in his charges, inasmuch as they have the effect to call to recollection charges against the dynasty he wishes to reinstate, much more aggravating and pernicious. This, so far, seems to me to be a blunder on his part; but the worst has to come yet. I think his speech will be unfortunate for his party and his purposes. Another most important blunder has been committed by my colleague in his "few comments on the profession and practice of Mr. Amos Kendall, late fourth auditor, now postmaster general." He quotes from certain letters of that gentleman, published soon after he came into office, showing some of the abuses he found in office, committed by my colleague's political friends, and showing, also, that he had or would reform them, and affects to show that he had not done so. One of these extracts is as follows, viz: "The interest of the country demands that this office shall be filled with men of business, and not with babbling politicians." Can any man say with truth that this principle was not carried out? I assert, sir, and challenge contradiction, that the fourth auditor's office, while Mr. Kendall was in it, was "filled with men of business," and not "with babbling politicians." Mr. Kendall himself was "a man of business," and neither he nor his clerks ever neglected their public duties to babble politics with any one. When he went into that office, what did he find to be its condition under the dynasty which my colleague is laboring to restore? Was it all purity, all honesty, all industry? No, sir: it was all rottenness, all idleness. His predecessor was one of the favorites of the Clay party; and Mr. Kendall soon discovered that he had been guilty of the grossest and most direct frauds on the treasury, of which he was found guilty by an unwilling court, and more unwilling jury, after a tremendous party struggle to secure him from punishment. What thanks did Mr. Kendall get from my colleague and his party for exposing these frauds, and bringing them to merited punishment? Why, sir, he was abused through the party presses as a conspirator and persecutor, and while the prosecution of the culprit was in progress, was night after night insulted and hooted at under his window. Yes, sir, this was the mode the gentleman's party undertook to prevent the exposure and punishment of their corruptions. This was the reward they, then, bestowed on integrity and fearlessness in office; and the same game has been kept up since, down to the speech of my colleague. Now, I ask, was it no reform to remove a speculator upon the treasury? My colleague does not seem to think so. Why? It is because he belonged to his party.

Well, Mr. Kendall filled the fourth auditor's office, "with men of business," and what was the consequence? Much of its business was one, two, and three years in arrears, and in about a twelve month, it was brought completely up. Did he obtain or ask any additional force? No, sir. After the business was brought up, he snubbed two clerkships to remain vacant for a long time, and one until he left the office, because, having "men of business" about him, he did not need the whole force which the law allowed. Moreover, under the Clay administration, which my colleague would restore, the contingent appropriation for the fourth auditor's office was $1,500 a year; but Mr. Kendall reduced it to $1,000, and one year asked for no appropriation at all, having enough surplus of former appropriations on hand to meet his wants. Thus the expenditures of the office were largely reduced by him, while its business was greatly improved. What credit do my colleague and his friends give him for it? They have poured on him, from beginning to end, a torrent of unceasing abuse. On every new exposure of a defaulter or a rogue, through his instrumentality, their abuse has been redoubled; clearly showing that an honest and fearless public officer is their bitterest antipathy.

While complaining that the party in power have not made the promised reforms, my colleague gives incontrovertible evidence of his sincerity by sneering at those which were made. He even finds grounds of attack upon Mr. Kendall for sending to the post office, to be charged with postage, the letters and pamphlets fraudulently enclosed to the fourth auditor to evade the post office laws, and for discontinuing sundry newspapers, because he could derive no assistance from them "in settling the accounts of the United States navy." Yes, sir, in the reforms actually made by Mr. Kendall, as well as in those not made, the bank attorneys, innaculate and consistent men! find ground of attack!!

When Mr. Kendall went into the fourth auditor's office, the legal postage on private letters received under cover to the fourth auditor, was about a dollar a day, or at the rate of $365 a year, and on the supposition that as great a number had gone out under his predecessor's frank, the fraud on the post office revenue, through that single office, under the Clay-Adams administration, was over $700 a year! Mr. Kendall put an entire stop to this abuse, and what thanks does he get from the bank stipendiaries? They hate and abuse him the worse for it. But, says my colleague, he franked some prospectuses of the Globe. Well, if he chose to send them to his friends, had he not a lawful right to do so? Did he violate any law, or do so much of it as to constitute an abuse? That is not pretended, nor can it be with truth. But because he put a stop to violations of the law, and then exercised his privilege in conformity with law, the bank attorneys find an inconsistency in it! I can tell my colleague, upon unobscured authority, that Mr. Kendall's course in that respect is not changed; that he uniformly sends to the post office letters for others enclosed to him, to be charged with postage, and sometimes pays it himself; that he covers no letters with his frank, not strictly his own; no, not even those of his wife and children. What praise does he get from the bank attorneys for this scrupulous obedience to the law? The highest praise—their unceasing abuse.

My colleague finds a vast inconsistency in Mr. Kendall's discontinuing newspapers as fourth auditor, because they gave him no assistance "in settling the accounts of the United States navy," and paying for a number of them as postmaster general! Is this effort to show inconsistency a whit sort of contemptible? The papers were not of use to him in performing his public duty as fourth auditor, and therefore he did not take them; they are of use to him in performing his duty as postmaster general, and therefore he does not discontinue them. Is there any inconsistency in this? None but a bank attorney can make it out. While Mr. Kendall was fourth auditor, he paid all his newspaper subscriptions out of his own pocket, because they were exclusively for his private use; but, as postmaster general, it is essential that he should have not only the general but the local intelligence from every quarter of the country, and the only wonder is that he pays so little for it.

It is natural, sir, for the bank attorneys to find fault with the part acted by Mr. Kendall in the removal of the deposits. Their client was destroyed by that measure, and the source of many a good fee dried up. But here, again, Mr. Kendall is followed by misrepresentation. "He got ten dollars a day," it is said, "for doing this injury to the public"—meaning the bank. Now, sir, I pronounce this statement entirely without foundation. Mr. Kendall, under an appointment from the secretary of the treasury, visited the cities of Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, to negotiate with the banks, and spent some days in each city. He had necessarily to see much company at the hotels where he stopped, and those who have had occasion to take private parlors, and have private tables, at the public houses in those cities, where they necessarily see, and treat civilly, many gentlemen calling on them, know that the actual expense, including travelling, can scarcely average less than ten dollars a day. Mr. Kendall paid all these expenses out of his own pocket, and received from the treasury barely enough to make himself whole. This is the whole of this mighty air, and the sum received, all told, was $316 11. How rich this man must have made himself!

My colleague follows Mr. Kendall into the post office department, and makes another mistake at the first jump. "The printed list of clerks in his department," says he, "exhibits his father-in-law, and two nephews, with salaries of $1,000, $1,200, and $1,400," &c. Mr. Kendall has not, and never had, two nephews among the clerks of his department. But what if he had two nephews in his department? Have they not as good a right to be there as any body else, if they are honest and competent to the duties assigned them? If there be places of peculiar trust, is it wrong that the head of a department should fill them with men whose integrity he best knows, although they may be his nephews or his brothers? When abuses and frauds, instead of the most honest and honorable discharge of their public duties, are perpetrated by his relations, it will be time enough to censure their appointment.

Nothing will satisfy these bank attorneys. Major Barry is abused for not keeping every thing right in the post office department, and Mr. Kendall is abused for putting every thing right. The committees of congress, majority and minority, complained of major Barry for making extravagant allowances to Stockton and Stokes, and now Mr. Kendall is abused for not being willing to pay them allowances a thousand times more extravagant. One of my worthy colleagues [Mr. Whittlesey] I believe wrote some twenty five pages in a book, 30,000 copies of which were printed by order of the house, to prove that major Barry had allowed those contractors some $100,000 more than they were entitled to by law, and yet voted for an act under color of which they have been allowed $161,000 more under the same pretences, and has stood quietly by and seen Mr. Kendall compelled to pay it by judicial usurpation, if not something worse. I should like to ask my honorable colleague [Mr. Whittlesey] a question or two. Did he not thoroughly understand this case, having investigated and written a long report about it? When the bill for the relief of Stockton and Stokes was before the house, did he not offer a long string of provisos, which were adopted? Were not these provisos so carefully framed as not to touch one of the claims in controversy, and be, in fact, perfectly negatory? If so, what was the object? If he did not think Stockton and Stokes entitled to as much as they got from major Barry by $100,000, why did he vote for a bill to give them more? And when he found that an enormous sum more was awarded them, why did he not propose to repeal the act, instead of standing by and seeing Mr. Kendall compelled to pay it?

This case will illustrate the sincerity and honesty of the bank attorneys. For political effect, they abused major Barry for making allowances, then voted for a bill authorizing allowances much more extravagant; and because Mr. Kendall refused to pay still further allowances, which he did not believe authorized even by that act they abuse him for withholding from Stockton and Stokes their just dues! All this shows that they care not a fig what use is made of the public money, and that their only object in finding fault is, to impair the confidence of the people in the administration. They see $161,000 wasted on Stockton and Stokes with indifference, if not with joy, and complain that $316 was allowed Mr. Kendall, to pay his expenses when upon public service.

Sir, I have taken some pains to ascertain on what principles the post office department is administered by this much-abused man. I understand that he went into it with a declaration that he should try the experiment of administering in a strict conformity to moral principles, and the laws of the land; and, if convinced of its impracticability, would fold it no longer. It was the fashion for officers and clerks in the department to receive presents from contractors; and, when travelling, to ride free in their coaches. Believing that, to say the least of it, these practices tended to corruption, he forbade the reception of all or any such favors from contractors under penalty of dismission, and prescribed the same rules for himself. All presents from contractors he has declined; and on every occasion has refused to travel free in their stages, steamboats, and cars. Free tickets have been sent him from some of the great lines, which he has uniformly returned.

As before remarked, this man does not cover with his frank even the letters of his wife and children, but pays the postage out of his own pocket; nor does he take stationery from the department for his own use, much less for that of his family, believing that the public stationery is not his property, and that he has no right to use it but for public purposes. Of this, I have the most conclusive testimony, not coming from himself. When I was informed of this fact, although I was bound to believe it myself, I did not know that others would believe Mr. Kendall's honesty was so scrupulous. I therefore addressed the following note to his stationer, of which this is a copy, and received the annexed answer.

Washington city, D. C. July 1, 1838.

Dear Sir: Will you be so good as to inform me where the Hon. A. Kendall, postmaster general, procures stationery for the post office department? If from you, will you have the kindness to inform me from whom he procures his private stationery, such as he uses for his private purposes, and for the use of his family? If from you, will you next inform me whether both are paid out of the public contingent fund, or is the latter paid for out of his private means? These inquiries are not made from any sinister motives, nor are their answers intended for any unfavorable prejudice to Mr. Kendall or any other person.

Your early attention to this request will much oblige your friend,
John T. Sullivan, esq.

A. DUNCAN.

Washington city, July 1, 1838.

Dear Sir: In reply to your note of this morning, I would remark, that I "supply stationery for the post office department," which is charged to that department, and paid for "out of the public contingent fund." Those articles are procured by the messenger, and are entered in a pass-book kept by him.

I have also furnished paper and other articles of stationery for Mr. Kendall's private use. These have been ordered by his servant, or by members of his family; sent to his private residence, and charged, in every instance, to his individual account.

I remain, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN T. SULLIVAN.

Hon. A. Duncan.

I know that most men think Mr. Kendall over-scrupulous, and too precise on these points; but to all such suggestions he replies, that it is impossible for a man to err on that side, and that he will go out of office as conscious of rectitude as he came in. And has this man done nothing for the public that he should thus be pursued with never-ending abuse? Has he not been efficient and faithful in every public trust? Could the duties of fourth auditor be better discharged than they were by him? Did he not bring the post office department out of deep embarrassment as by magic? Has he not almost doubled its business and usefulness? Has he not, with great skill, sustained its credit under circumstances which shook that of all the banks in the country, and of most business men? In fine, could that department be managed with more efficiency or better success?

Sir, it is for his virtues, his talents, and his success, that the bank stipendiaries hate him. They know he will not corrupt, and cannot be corrupted. He was efficient in putting down the Bank of the United States; and he desires to see the government independent of institutions which, experience proves, have not discretion enough to manage their own affairs, and, of course, not enough to be trusted with the use or custody of the public money. These are his real offences. It is feared that his integrity, his efficiency, and his success will give weight to his opinions and his judgment; and every pretext is seized on to assail him. He has sent a few prospectuses of a newspaper to a few friends; he has expressed his opinions in certain letters and toasts; he takes a few newspapers to see what complaints there are of the mails, and what suggestions of improvement; and he received three hundred and sixteen dollars for his expenses in negotiating with the state banks! Are these his only crimes? No, sir. It is made an offence in him to have said that he could sustain the credit of his department without the help of congress! The treasury department is abused because it wanted help, and the post office department because it did not; as if to put it out of the power of Mr. Kendall to sustain the credit of his department, we have been throwing extra allowances upon him, and endeavoring to force upon him, in the present depressed condition of the revenue, near 500 new mail routes to be put in operation. And I have seen men exult here, under the impression that they would thus embarrass him, that they had "got him up a tree at last." It has even been said that he was already embarrassed; but this is so far from the truth, that the most credulous do not believe it. Their "wish is father to the thought." The committee on the post office expenditures contains a majority of opposition men. If they find the department embarrassed, why do they not show the fact? Do you think, sir, the matter would not be examined into, and reported if there was the slightest faith in the assertion? If it were so, we should soon know it, and the exultation of certain patriotic gentlemen on this floor, would know no bounds. But, sir, scrutiny is invited, and malignant aspersion defined. Instead of having treed their game, gentlemen will find themselves still "barking up the wrong tree."

I cannot help giving some very conclusive evidences of the sincerity of the bank attorneys, in their attack upon the administration in money matters.

Mr. Kendall is abused for having received $316 to refund his expenses, after performing a journey on public business. Now let us see what the bank men did while in power.

Mr. Southard was secretary of the navy in 1826, 7, 8. He is now, I understand, one of the pillars of the party; a man whom they specially delight to honor. He had a chief clerk, named Hay; he was positively forbidden by law to advance the public money to any body but disbursing officers of the navy, and persons employed in the naval service, on distant stations; yet, though thus positively forbidden, Mr. Southard advanced to his chief clerk $300 of the public money, in November 1826, and sent him to New Orleans to look after the accounts of a former navy agent. He did nothing there whatsoever, but got $100 more from the navy agent; and without any bills rendered, Mr. Southard allowed him $890 for his expenses, when he was allowing only $200 to officers of the navy for the expenses of the same journey. Would you believe it, sir, after hearing my colleague's speech? This man was receiving his $2,000 salary as chief clerk during the whole period of his absence. In what case has any member of the present administration so grossly and directly violated the law?

This Mr. Southard, as secretary of the navy, was also commissioner of the navy pension fund, which was vested in stocks. On the 1st of July, 1828, these stocks were paid off to the amount of $281,334 72, and on the 1st of January, 1829, to the amount of $243,880 17 more. These were not reinvested until February 17th, 1829, by which means more than $9,000 of interest was lost. Who was using the money in the mean time, is what I do not know. Mr. Hay having written a letter or two on the subject, and perhaps conferred with the cashier of the branch bank in this city, made out an account, charging half per cent. commission for reinvesting these stocks, and $150,000 more which had been reinvested in 1825. Mr. Hay was still Mr. Southard's chief clerk, at a salary of $2,000 per year; he was cut off by law from receiving any extra compensation; the service rendered was properly a part of his regular duty, and did not probably occupy him two hours; and yet Mr. Southard allowed him this monstrous charge of $3,376 32, and he pocketed the money. Thus was this charity fund for the support of the crippled officers and seamen, and their families plundered; yes, sir, plundered, by loss of interest through neglect, and cash actually paid Hay, in violation of law, of about THIRTEEN THOUSAND DOLLARS; and yet the men who want to restore the dynasty who did this, mouth at us about corruption and abuses which now exist only in their own corrupt hearts. Has any thing like this been done by the present administration? No, sir, it has put an end to the allowances of commissions in all such cases.

Let us look a little further at the pure dynasty whom the reign of banks is to restore.

Upon Mr. Southard's recommendation, Mr. Adams, in 1828, I believe, appointed one Andrew Armstrong, navy agent at Lima, in Peru. This is believed to be the only instance on record, in which a foreign navy agent was nominated to the senate, that class of officers having been considered special agents, not expressly provided for in the law. Mr. Southard then advanced to Armstrong $10,000 out of the treasury. What this was for, nobody out of the secret could divine; for exchange at Lima is always in favor of the United States, and it seemed ridiculous to send money to a country where money grows. But a reason has been discovered. No sooner was the money got, than $2,000 of it was lent to Mr. Southard's chief clerk for two years, without interest, and was never repaid by him! Whether this was the true reason for a departure from all usage in this proceeding, I know not. Whether Mr. Armstrong thus bought his appointment, I know not. All I know is the fact I have stated, and every one must draw his own inferences.

What an outcry is kept up, Mr. Chairman, by the bank advocates, upon the false allegation that the administration is seeking, by the independent treasury plan, to get the public money into their possession for sinister purposes! Those who are struggling to get the public money for private uses, are clamoring to the skies against those who wish it kept by sworn and bonded officers, subject to heavy penalties, for public purposes only! Let us see what was the practice of these men when in power.

When Mr. Southard was secretary of the navy, he converted the public cannon and cannon-shot into money to the amount of $25,000, and had the money placed to his own credit in the branch bank in this city! But, sir, I will give you particulars. General Mason, who has a foundry near Georgetown, was applied to by some of the South American authorities for a quantity of cannon; but he had none on hand, or not enough to meet the order. So, to enable him to make a good speculation, Mr. Southard lent him a quantity of the public cannon and shot, and, as security for the return of new guns in their place, required him to deposit $25,000, as already stated. It was, I believe, about eighteen months before general Mason completed the deliveries to replace these cannon, and in the mean time the money remained at Mr. Southard's credit, unless he used it, as it was in his power to do. If he did not use it, the bank did, by discounting on it as a deposit.

Now I should like to know what law there was for such a transaction? I should like to know what law authorized Mr. Southard to lend the public property, and receive money into his own pocket, (for that is the amount of it,) as security for its restoration? It is in palpable violation of all law and all propriety. But did the bank advocates ever whisper a word of censure against this illegal conduct of one of their great champions? Not a hiss, sir. All is right because a bank man did it! The public property or money may be lent out and used by banks and their peculiar friends with perfect impunity; and to put a stop to it is a humbug and a crime! But have the gentlemen found a case like this, in which any member of the present administration has put $25,000 of the public money or property into his pocket for a twelvemonth? No, sir, nothing like it. If they could, we should begin to hear, and justly, too, of impeachment by this house. Yes, sir, any public officer who will commit such an outrage, ought to be instantly impeached.

The corruptions and abuses of the Clay-bank administration were manifold and glaring.

The same secretary of the navy, aided the fourth auditor in fraudulently drawing thousands from the treasury, and afterwards attempted to screen him from punishment by withholding important facts, when sworn before a grand jury and petit jury to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

He directed the fourth auditor to settle a claim of Messrs. Allen and Leonard of New York, which was originally about $2,500, as stated by themselves, but had been increased by additional charges, from time to time, until it was swollen to upwards of $10,000, and, under the direction so given, upwards of $11,000 were allowed, $1,000 of which were forthwith lent to the same fourth auditor, and never paid!

He violated the positive laws of the land in multitudes of cases, by causing moneys to be expended for one purpose, when they were appropriated for another.

He made to congress estimates for the service of the navy department which were false, and, year after year, spent, for contingencies, nine to ninety thousand dollars more than was appropriated; taking it out of other appropriations, in violation of law, and concealing the fact from congress.

He made use of a favorite clerk in the fourth auditor's office, at a salary of $1,400, as special agent to make certain payments, and by commissions and a double salary, in violation of law, increased his compensation to upwards of $2,000 a year for a series of years.

But the most obnoxious case remains to be noticed. The navy agent at Boston had made advances on account of the government during the last war with Great Britain, upon which he claimed interest. That claim, amounting to $7,679 64, or thereabouts, was allowed by Smith Thompson, secretary of the navy, in 1819, and passed to the agent's credit. The agent went out of office in 1826, and early in 1828, he made out an account for certain alleged omissions in his former accounts, going back to 1812, upon which he charged interest. This claim was submitted to Mr. Southard, who wrote thus on the voucher with his own hand, viz: "Let him be allowed interest upon the aggregate advance of $3,899 72, in conformity with the decision made by Mr. Secretary Thompson on the former accounts." S. L. S.

8th March, 1828.

Accordingly interest was calculated on the voucher up to the time of settlement in 1819. This shows that Mr. Southard knew the interest account had been settled.

Soon afterwards, the late navy agent trumped up a new interest account upon his war advances, obviously unfounded and false in every particular. This new claim was submitted to Mr. Southard, who wrote a letter to the fourth auditor, as follows, viz:

Navy department, May 21, 1828.

Sir: Having examined the claims of Amos Binney, late navy agent at Boston, as far as the pressure of business during a session of congress will permit, I see no reason to doubt the justice of a claim on his part for losses on treasury notes, &c. But I do not feel at liberty to authorize the allowance of any of the items, except for interest actually paid by him, which you will be pleased to settle.

For the other claims, he will be obliged to address himself to congress, where, I do not doubt that his application will be successful.

I am, respectfully, &c.

SAM'L. L. SOUTHARD.

T. Watkins, esq., fourth auditor.

The auditor took up the case, and passed an account allowing upwards of THIRTY-ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS for interest, when all parties concerned, Mr. Southard, the auditor, and the claimant, KNEW that every cent of just claim for interest had been settled and paid nine years before! Yes, sir, Mr. Southard knew it. I have given an entry of his on a voucher, dated 8th of the preceding March, not three months prior to his letter to the auditor, conclusively proving that he knew it!

But this is not all. This allowance gave Mr. Binney no ready money. It all went as a set off against moneys due from him to the government, leaving him still in debt over $9,000. He could not, therefore, readily pay his corrupt instrument in this and many other gross frauds on the government. But Mr. Southard was kind enough to help him out. Money could not be legally advanced to him out of the treasury, because he was not a disbursing officer, having been two years out of office; but law, or want of law, was no obstacle in those glorious times, which my colleague thinks are soon to be restored. So Mr. Southard advanced to that man, who was officially reported in debt to the government, about $9,000, the comfortable additional sum of $30,000 more out of the treasury! Yes, sir, having allowed a corrupt claim of more than $30,000, he puts the recipient of his bounty in cash by advancing him, in the face of the law, $30,000 more, to be covered by claims equally fraudulent and corrupt; and it was afterwards covered by his friend, the fourth auditor, and the government brought in debt upwards of $49,000, in addition; but the accession of the no-reform administration of general Jackson, prevented the consummation of this last outrage.

What was done with the $30,000 thus advanced in cash? I have heard what became of a part of it, but I cannot prove it. So far, I have not spoken what I believe merely, but what I can prove. In relation to the men and things of that day, I believe many things which I cannot prove. I believe some $10,000 of the $30,000 advanced by Mr. Southard, went directly to men in power, or was applied to promote their designs. A charmingly pure administration that was, when secretaries put the public money in their pockets, $25,000 at a lick, and distributed it gratuitously to their favorites, or investments, $30,000 at a time! Can the impudent assailants of the present administration justly charge it with crimes like these? Yet, they are zealous to thrust out the men who have put a stop to these corruptions, and restore to power those who committed them. What a fourth auditor got fraudulently from the treasury, secretaries guzzled down in wines and meats, and other luxuries at his table, or won of him in gaming. The bank candidate for the presidency has been grossly wronged, if he did not, in the way of brag and other games, profit more by the current frauds on the treasury, than the men who committed them. But that was all pure and right, Mr. Speaker; to put an end to it is no reform, for which Mr. Van Buren ought to be put out, and Mr. Clay put in.

And where now is the man who committed, authorized, or winked at, all these corruptions? Do you find any account of him in my colleague's speech? Not a word, sir. There is too much of a fellow-feeling between them. Mr. Southard, who held the navy department, is now one of the open-mouthed foes to executive corruption and abuse; but, if report speaks true, he profits as much by bank abuses, as he could have formerly done by government abuses. He is president of one of the gambling bank concerns of the day, a particular adjunct and favorite of the Biddle bank, at a salary of $6,000 a year! He holds a public station which gives him $8 per day, and at the same time, I am told, receives his thousands in fees for practising as a lawyer in the supreme court. He is paid as a bank president, a legislator, and a lawyer, all at the same time, and of course, is absent most of his time from his public duties, except when there is a bank question on hand. There is no abuse or corruption in this. To be under pay by a bank, while pretending to serve the people, is no offence in the eyes of those who would pull down this administration. But do you think, sir, the people, when they understand the game, will be content to be governed by bank presidents from New Jersey, and bank attorneys from Ohio? The banks pay better than the people. It is but a small part of $6,000 which a member of congress gets from the people; but the banks can afford to pay thumping salaries and fees, especially to those who are honest enough to represent them in congress instead of their constituents. One Henry Clay, who is looked to as the restorer of the old order of things, is known to have received in fees, from the bank of the United States, upwards of $17,000, and probably $20,000 more from the branches. What a pure government we shall have, when the president, heads of departments, and a majority of congress, shall be presidents, directors, stockholders, debtors, and attorneys of banks! Should not the farmers, mechanics, and all other honest men in the country, be required to lend a hand in putting down the present administration, that they may bring about so glorious a reform?

To bring suspicion on innocent men is one of the arts used by villains to escape detection. Our bank orators and stipendiaries practice upon this principle. Corrupt themselves to the very core, they are eternally bawling corruption against the administration, hoping to gain credence by their impudence and their perseverance. The very men who have practised all sorts of abuse and corruptions at the expense of the people while in power, and are sold, body and soul, to banks, great and small, are now spending their money to disseminate, far and wide, a certain speech, knowing it to be charged with false and libellous imputations from beginning to end. To add the honors of office, and the emoluments of government corruption, to those of bank corruption, which they now enjoy, without regard to honor, justice, decency or truth, is the great end and aim of all this false clamor and mischievous industry.

Let the people not be deceived. Great reform was notoriously accomplished by general Jackson's administration, in expelling from power the direct, profligate, and felonious plunderers of the treasury. Yet it is said there has been no reform! and the people are appealed to to restore the old order of things. Yes, to restore Southard to the navy department, and perchance Watkins to the fourth auditor's office, and Clay, the head man of the whole corrupt gang, not to the state department, but to the presidency de jure, as he once was president de facto. And poor old general Harrison, having, with one White, been used by them until they feel strong, is to be laid on the shelf, and yield all honors to Monsieur Brag, the corruptest of the corrupt. Whether honest men of any party can be so deceived as to relish such reform, remains to be seen.

My colleague has made an attack on the war department, and because there is an increase of clerks and expenditures consequent upon the increase of business and unavoidable duties to more than double of what they were in the times of the economical administration of Messrs. Adams and Clay, and has attempted to impress the public mind that extravagance and profligacy mark this department with the rest, and that reform promised has been neglected in relation to this department.

To ascertain the facts, I called upon Mr. Poinsett, the secretary of war, and presented him a copy of my colleague's speech, with a request that he would furnish me answers to the allegations and charges contained in said speech. In conformity with my request, he has been kind enough to furnish me with the following statements. They are full and complete so far as they go, and will be satisfactory to all who hear or see them. Comment is unnecessary. Time and space have not permitted a further investigation into this and other departments; but I have little doubt that the result, on further investigation, would be the same. I before stated that abuses do exist, always have existed, and always will exist, in this and in the administration of all other governments. It is impossible that this vast political federal fabric can be conducted without some abuses so long as frailty and depravity exist and form a part of the very nature of men, by whom it is governed. But here follows the statement from the war department:

*Paymaster General's office,
Washington, July 5, 1838.*

Sir: In compliance with your instructions to examine Mr. Bond's speech, as published in the National Intelligencer of the 4th and 5th of May last, and report how his statements agree with the facts as they are known to exist in this office, I have the honor to submit the following statement:

Mr. Bond says, "in 1828, the paymaster general employed three clerks, whose united compensation was $3,900."

"In 1838 the salary of the same number of clerks is $4,290, besides the messenger's salary."

The estimates submitted to congress for those years, show that the sums asked for the clerks and messenger in the office of the paymaster general, were as follows:

In 1828.—	Clerks in the office of the paymaster general	$3,900
do	"Messenger	700
		4,600

In 1838.—	"Clerks and messenger in the office of the paymaster general	$6,100

Difference between the two years	$1,500
----------------------------------	---------

Accounted for as follows:

The clerks and messenger in the office of the paymaster general are appointed under the act of the 20th April, 1818, which provides for, viz:

1 chief clerk, at a salary of $1,700	$1,700
1 clerk " " 1,400	1,400
2 clerks " " 1,500 each	2,300
3 clerks " " 1,000 each	3,000
1 clerk " " 800	800
1 messenger " " 700	700
	$9,900

The business of the office has not required, at all times, so many clerks, and they have been reduced accordingly. In 1828, but three were employed, and not all of these at the highest salaries. The numerous volunteers and militia, called into service to suppress Indian hostilities, increased the business so much as to make it indispensable necessary to re-employ one of the five additional clerks to which the office is entitled, and, in order to retain the services of competent persons, to allow to those employed the highest salaries provided by law. This make the difference in the estimates for the two years.

It is still competent for the secretary of war, under the act of the 20th of April, 1818, to appoint for this office three additional clerks, at $1,000 each per annum, and one at $800 per annum.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

N. Towson, P. M. G.

To the hon. J. R. Poinsett, secretary of war.

Comparative statement of the number of persons employed in the quartermaster general's office, in the years 1828 and 1838.

In 1828—3 officers; 2 clerks; 2 sergeants, acting as clerks; 2 sergeants, acting as messengers; total 9.

In 1838—2 officers; 6 clerks; 1 messenger; total 9.

Note. It will be seen that there is no increase in the number of persons employed in the quartermaster general's office, since 1828. The only change is in the substitution of clerks for officers and sergeants then employed. During the last two years the duties of the office have been increased fourfold.

T. Cross, acting Q. G.

*Quartermaster general's office,
Washington city, July 5, 1838.*

Surgeon general's office, July 3, 1838.

Sir: In obedience to your instructions, I have examined the speech of Mr. Bond, of Ohio, so far as it relates to this office, and have the honor to report, that the regular salary of the clerk employed in this office is the same as was received by him in 1828, viz: $1,150 per annum, to which ten per cent. was added during the last year, by an act of congress, making $1,265 per annum, and not $1,266, as stated in the speech referred to; this addition of ten per cent. continues to the adjournment of the present session of congress.

From the organization of this office a sergeant from the army was employed to perform the duties of messenger, until 1836, when, by an act approved on the 4th of July of that year, provision was made for a messenger in lieu of the sergeant, whose salary is $500 per annum, and to which 20 per cent. was added by the act of congress of the 3d of March, 1837, referred to when stating the salary of the clerk, so that the actual difference consists in paying the messenger by specific appropriation, instead of his being paid from the army appropriation, as was the case when the sergeant was employed. I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

BENJAMIN KING,
Acting surgeon general.

Hon. J. R. Poinsett, sec'y of war, Washington.

*Office of the Com. Gen. of Sub.
Washington, July 3, 1838.*

Sir: In compliance with your request of 2d inst. the speech of Mr. Bond of the 4th and 5th May ult. has, as far as regards this office, been examined, and I have the honor to report, that in that speech as published in the "National Intelligencer," it is asserted, that

In 1828, the subsistence department employed four clerks, whose joint compensation was $2,950; and

In 1838, the subsistence department employs four clerks, whose joint compensation is $5,880.

In 1828, the number of clerks permanently employed in the subsistence department was three, and their compensation was, thus:

2 clerks per act, 26th May, 1824	$2,150 00
1 clerk per act, 2d March, 1827	800 00
	$2,950 00

1 clerk temporarily employed by permission of the secretary of war at $25 per month,	300 00
	$3,250 00

At that period, an orderly sergeant was employed as a messenger, who received his compensation from the "pay of the army."

By the 1st section of the act of 9th May, 1836, the employment of non-commissioned officers in any of the offices of the department of war was prohibited; and it became necessary to ask compensation for a messenger to be paid out of the appropriation for the civil list.

In 1838, the compensation of clerks and messengers in the subsistence office is,

1 principal clerk per act, 3d March, 1835,	$1,600 00
1 clerk, " " " " " "	1,200 00
1 do. " " " " " "	1,000 00
	$3,800 00

And the messenger paid by appropriation, 500 00

Aggregate,	$4,300 00
------------	------------

By act 3d March, 1837, congress added ten per centum upon $2,800, of the above salaries, making - - - $280 00
And upon $1,500, including the messenger, twenty per cent. - - - 300 00

Making, - - - - - $580 00
Which added to the above, - - - 4,300 00

Makes, - - - - - $4,880 00
Being $1,000 less paid to clerks permanently employed, than stated by Mr. Bond; but when the resolution of congress of 1st February, 1836, passed, "authorizing the president to furnish rations to certain inhabitants in Florida," the secretary of war directed that a special account should be kept in this office of the issues under that resolution; the permanent force in the office being insufficient for that purpose, in addition to their other duties, it became necessary to employ a clerk to attend especially to that business, whose annual compensation was fixed at $1,000, which, added to the other items, constitutes the amount as stated in the speech.

When the department was rendered permanent by act of 3d March, 1835, the then secretary of war thought that the salary of the clerks in this office, should approximate as nearly as practicable, those of clerks employed in the civil bureau, as he was particularly aware, that the salaries previously paid, were inadequate to the services rendered, and the responsibility attached to the situations; but in every instance where compensation to clerks or messenger in this office has been paid, it has been done invariably under acts passed by congress itself, except in the two instances above mentioned.

Very respectfully,

Your most obedient servant,

GEO. GIBSON, C. G. S.

Hon. J. R. Poinsett, secretary of war.

Indian department.

Assertion No. 1—The business of Indian affairs was discharged by some one or two of the seventeen clerks employed in the war department.

Fact—In 1823, four clerks were engaged in the transaction of this business—Mr. McKenney, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Kurtz and Mr. Miller. The secretary then conducted a much larger portion of the correspondence, and supervised the details far more extensively than now.

Assertion No. 2—In 1823, there was one superintendent of Indian affairs, who was paid $1,500 per annum.

Fact—In 1823, there was one superintendent eo nomine, at $1,500, and three governors of territories, acting as superintendents, one at $1,500, and two at $750. These allowances were made by Mr. Calhoun in 1821, 1822 and 1823; to the governor of Michigan in 1821; (see Mr. C's answer to the resolution of the house of representatives of January 13th, 1832, State Papers, 1st session 17th congress, vol. 6th, Doc. 60;) to the governor of Arkansas in 1822; and to the governor of Florida in 1823; (see extract herewith of letter to governor Duvall of October 25, 1823;) aggregate compensation $4,500.

Extract of a letter from the SECRETARY OF WAR to his excellency WILLIAM P. DUVALL, dated 25th October, 1823.

"Your letter of the 2d ult. was duly received.

"Upon a review of all the circumstances, the following principle has been adopted for the settlement of your claim to compensation as superintendent of Indian affairs in Florida, to wit:

"For the time past when there was no Indian agent for Florida, an allowance will be made to you, as superintendent, at the rate of fifteen hundred dollars per annum, which is the rate of compensation allowed to the Indian agent now authorized by law.

"Since the appointment of an Indian agent for the territory, in virtue of the authority above mentioned, and for the future, an allowance will be made to you at the rate of seven hundred and fifty dollars per annum, which is intended to cover the expense for clerk hire, office rent, and all others necessarily incurred by you in your intercourse with the Indians, that being the same amount as is now allowed to the governor of the Arkansas territory, and is considered a fair compensation for all expenses incurred by him of a similar nature."

Assertion No. 3—In 1833, we find four superintendents of Indian affairs with salaries of $1,500 each.

Fact—In 1833, there is one superintendent at $1,500, and one governor (of Wisconsin) acting as such, whose compensation as governor and superintendent is fixed, by law, at $2,500. Adopting the principle of division established this session, in regard to the governor of Iowa, and his pay as superintendent will be $1,000; aggregate $2,500.

The other two acting superintendents are Indian agents, and receive only the pay of agents, as fixed by the law of 1834. This is stated in a note in the Blue Book, page 91, to which Mr. B. evidently had referred.

Assertion No. 4—In 1823, there were twenty-one Indian Agents, (three at $1,800, six at $1,500, one at $1,400, five at $1,300, six at $1,200; see State Papers, 2d session 20th congress, 3d vol. Doc. 117, page 7,) and twenty-eight sub-agents. In 1833, ten Indian agents at $1,500, and fourteen sub-agents at $750.

Fact—In 1833, there are but eight Indian agents, exclusive of the two acting as superintendents, and whom Mr. B. has counted as such.

In 1823, the appropriations for the superintendents and Indian agents was $31,000—In 1833 it is $16,500.

In 1823, the appropriation for sub-agents was $15,100—In 1833 it is $13,000.

In 1833, the number of interpreters at agencies is eight less than in 1823. The average pay of an interpreter in 1823 was $100 per annum, (see Blue Book for that year,) making the aggregate compensation of the thirty-nine employed in that year $15,600.—Appropriation in 1833, $9,300.

Assertion No. 5—In 1838 we hear of a commissioner whose salary is $3,000, and 12 clerks and two messengers, whose joint compensation is $19,400.

Fact—In 1828, governor Cass, and gen. Clark, at the invitation of the secretary of war, prepared a report, containing among other things, "a code of regulations for the government of the (Indian) department, and for the general administration of its affairs." This was in the form of a bill. The first section provided for the appointment of a commissioner at $3,000; the second prescribed his duties; the third related to the number of clerks; the fourth gave him the franking privilege, and the fifth authorized the employment of a messenger. These five sections are stated to "contain substantially the provisions of a bill reported by the committee on Indian affairs" in the house of representatives, at the first session of the same congress.—(See State Papers 2d session of the 20th congress, vol. 3d, doc. 117, p. 4.) This report was submitted to congress by the secretary of war, "with a respectful but earnest recommendation."

The number of clerks now employed in the Indian office is 12. The number in 1828 was 4. In 1830 1 was added; in 1831 another; and in 1832 a messenger. In the latter year, the business of emigration was committed to the commissary general, who employed 5, and a messenger. In 1836, 2 were authorized by law to be employed on the business of Indian reservations. The increase was occasioned in 1830 and 1831, by the passage of the act of May 28th, 1830, providing for an exchange of lands, and the treaty of September 27th, 1830, with the Choctaws, according to the stipulations of which, their removal was immediately commenced. The provisions in the same treaty, in that with the Creeks of March 24, 1832, and with the Chickasaws in 1832 and 1834, granting reserves to individuals and heads of families, to the number of about 10,000, and which were the first provisions of the kind to any extent, authorized in the judgment of congress the employment of the other two in 1836. The whole number was 13.

The business of emigration has been transferred to the Indian office; the number of clerks is 12, and the number of messengers is 2.

Thus far for the Indian department in the two years specified, independent of treaty stipulations. The expense of superintendents, agents, sub-agents and interpreters. In 1828, was $61,970; in 1838, it is $38,800; less in 1838, $23,170. This is exclusive of the compensation of the acting superintendents, which, as has been shown, is $2,000 less than in 1828; making the entire difference in favor of 1838, $25,170 †

* So, then, it appears that this Indian department, with its commissioner at $3,000, clerks, and messengers, was first proposed by a whig committee, under a whig administration, in the very year 1828, when the business was not more than one-third of what it is in 1838.

† There is also another consideration. The appropriations for the Indian department proper, in 1823, were under four heads—pay of superintendents and agents, pay of sub-agents, presents, and contingencies. The amount under the latter was

We now come to the composition of the Indian department under and by virtue of treaty stipulations.

Mr. Bond enumerates 6 superintendents of emigration, 15 conducting and enrolling agents, 2 valuing agents, 8 collecting agents, 2 issuing agents, 16 assistant agents, 15 physicians, 11 clerks, 14 interpreters, 2 conductors of exploring parties.

Remark—These are all engaged in the business of emigration. As no agents of either of these classes are stated to have been employed in 1828, or prior thereto, the impression will naturally be that none were employed.

Fact—In the treaty with the Creeks of January 24, 1826, were stipulations for the valuation of their improvements; for their removal and subsistence; valuing, collecting, enrolling, conducting, and issuing agents were employed. The number of each class, and the pay of each, cannot be ascertained without reference to the auditor's office, and a long examination; the fact of their employment is proved by the correspondence in the Indian office. Some appointments of the same kind were also made under the treaty with the Choctaws of May 6, 1838.

Remark—The treaty with the Choctaws of September 27, 1830, was the first under which emigration took place extensively; and it was not until the following year that it commenced with much vigor under that with the Choctaws of 1828; and it was in 1831 that, for the first time, regulations were prescribed which gave form and system to the business of removal. These provided for the employment of the different classes of agents above enumerated, and fixed their compensation. These were not only approved by the president, but, slightly revised, have been appended to the reports from the Indian office for the last year.

For the reasonableness of them, consider the number of Indians to be removed, and the stipulations to be fulfilled. Since the beginning of 1828, sixty-four treaties have been made with Indians. Of these, thirty-four provided for the removal of the Indians, the valuation of their improvements, stock, &c. and their subsistence for twelve months at their new homes. Living in different sections of the country, different sets of agents were necessarily employed, the number in each case being graduated with regard to the number of Indians, and the amount of service to be rendered. For the removal of the larger tribes, a general superintendent was essential as the only means of preserving harmony and subordination among the other agents, and among the Indians, and of ensuring unity of action. All responsibility was devolved upon him. To him was committed the selection, in the first instance, of all the other persons to be employed, and also the power to suspend them from duty; and upon his requisitions alone were the disbursing officers, military and civil, to make payments. For this responsibility, and his various and numerous services, $2,000 will not be considered too large a compensation. The six named by Mr. Bond as in the service in 1828, are general Smith, superintending the removal of the Choctaws, numbering 18,000; Maj. Upshur, the removal of the Chickasaws, 5,500; Colonel Pepper, the removal of the Pottawatomies, Ottowas, and Chippewas, 6,700; Colonel Sands, discontinued, and duty transferred to Pepper. There are, then, four, three at $2,000, neither of whom will be in service, probably, at the close of the present year, as all these Indians will be removed. There is one other at five dollars a day, collecting straggling Choctaws in Mississippi, whose employment is temporary, and the sixth, who received the same pay, has been discharged.

Of the fifteen enrolling and conducting agents, five are employed among the Pottawatomies, Ottowas, and Chippewas, five among the Chickasaws, and five among the Choctaws, whose services will terminate before those of the superintendents. The enrolment must exhibit the name of each head of a family, and the number in each family, to be ascertained by personal inquiries through the nation, and it is required to regulate the issues of rations on the route and payment and subsistence after their arrival west. The conductor has charge of the movement of a party, directs the issues of provisions, the transportation of the sick, and of the baggage, &c. and is held accountable for the delivery of the party to the agent of the government west of the Mississippi. The interpreters as necessary in the emigration as at the agencies; their compensation is high, to cover the expenses of travelling. The employment of physicians is required by humanity, and the experience with the earlier emigrants would not justify the government in refusing to employ them, merely to avoid the expense. Four of the physicians enumerated by Mr. Bond are provided for in treaties; so is that with the Winnebagoes, of September, 1832, and two in that with the Ottawas and Chippewas, of March 25, 1836: in both the pay is fixed. Conductors of exploring parties are also employed under treaty stipulations.

$95,000, which was applied at the discretion of the department, and out of it were paid smiths, farmers, interpreters, and any body the department might choose to employ. In 1838, the appropriations are specific, based on laws and treaties, and the estimates for which are minute and full.

Mr. Bond says: "We find thirty-three commissioners and special agents."

Remark. Of the thirty-three, twelve were employed under resolutions or laws of congress, directing negotiations, or the examination of claims; six to execute treaty articles, and one conducted an exploring party, for which the appropriation was made at the suggestion of the committee on Indian affairs in the senate. Of the remaining nineteen, ten were employed by the express requirement of laws or treaties, two to execute treaty articles, one to conciliate the wild tribes of the prairies, and bring deputations of them to Washington; and the last is the district attorney in Florida, charged with temporary duty, having in view the removal of the Apalachicola. Of the thirty-three, there is but one not authorized and required by resolution, law, or treaty, and that one has been employed to preserve the peace of the western frontier. Since the 30th of September, 1837, the late of the report from which Mr. B. quotes, 19 of the 33 have been discontinued. The pay of commissioners was, as far back as 1801, eight dollars per day, from the time they left home, until they returned, and all necessary expenses were reimbursed, (see instructions from general Dearborn to Messrs. Davie, Wilkinson and Hawkins, American State Papers, Indian Affairs, vol. 1, page 650.)

Mr. Bond presents an array of fifty-three blacksmiths, twenty farmers, eighteen teachers, five millers, one surveyor, and five miscellaneous agents. It is enough to say with regard to these, that with the exception of one in the last class, who is a messenger in the office of the acting superintendent at Detroit, performing duty also as a clerk, at $30 per month, (not a very extravagant allowance,) they are all employed in the fulfilment of treaty stipulations, and that when the treaty does not fix their compensation, it is regulated by the 9th section of the act of June 30th, 1834, organizing the department of Indian affairs. Every one conversant with Indian relations, knows that, in every negotiation, the Indians wish provision made for smiths, farmers, and teachers, &c. and the government has always assented, because such measures will conduce to their civilization. The amount set apart for these purposes, forms a part of the consideration paid for the lands ceded by the Indians. If these persons were not employed, so much more money must have been paid to the Indians. But in this case, too, Mr. Bond leaves it to be inferred, that such persons were not in the service in 1823. But from a very hasty examination of the reports from two of the superintendencies, St. Louis and Michigan, it appears that there then were thirty blacksmiths, twenty-two laborers, nine farmers, two teachers, three physicians, and four special agents. And it is probable that most of the treaties under which they were employed, are still in force, and of course these appointments make a part of those enumerated by Mr. Bond.

But, says Mr. B., even this is not all. The commissioner of Indian affairs says the list in the Blue Book is not accurate or complete. He leaves room to add or alter. And why did he not quote the reason assigned by the commissioner?

"It being required that the names of all the persons employed on the 30th September should be given, it is impossible to procure the returns in season for printing the Register. Besides this, many of the agents neglect to make returns, and in other cases it is impracticable, from a variety of causes, to obtain the requisite information. It is believed to be complete and accurate, so far as this office has the means of making it so." Knowing well the provisions in the treaties, the commissioner could not help seeing at once that the returns did not embrace all the persons in the service. Taking only the treaties made since 1828, (sixty-four in number,) he knew that they provided for forty principal smiths, while the list shows only twenty-eight; the residue of the fifty-three named by Mr. B. being assistants; and so with the other classes of persons.

"Here, indeed," exclaims Mr. B. "is a display of patronage." Truly it is a great thing to have the appointment of a smith or a farmer for Indians on the frontier, and hardly within reach of a white settlement. But how has it happened that so much "patronage" rests with the executive? Not by any act primarily, of his own. It is congress that directs a treaty to be made, ratifies it, and makes appropriations to carry it into effect. If the executive, in consequence, possess power, it has been knowingly and deliberately given by congress.

It has been shown that the expenses of superintendents, agents, and interpreters, is twenty-five thousand dollars less now than in 1828. And more than that. In doc. 474, house of representatives, first session, twenty-third congress, page 46, may be found an "organization of the Indian department," proposed by the committee on Indian affairs, the expense of which is a fraction more than the present. This report was prepared by Mr. Everett, of Vermont, who deservedly acquired much credit by it, and the country was congratulated on the reform and retrenchment introduced by the laws then passed, and which were based upon it.

The sum of the matter is this. There having been sixty-four treaties made with Indians since 1823, the states have been slowly and gradually relieved of their Indian population. The tribes have been settled beyond the Mississippi and Missouri, so that intercourse with them is necessarily more expensive than ever. New features have been introduced into treaties. The Indians have not been talked with merely to get their lands, been offered for it only trifling and temporary aid, and left in the neighborhood they were found in. They have had assigned to them a fertile and healthy country, and have been liberally supplied with ploughs, hoes, and axes, for the men, and looms for the women; with mechanics to teach and work for them, and farmers to break up land and plant it for them, and teach them to do likewise. They have ceded to the United States 18,250,000 acres, for which the government has stipulated to give them in land, money, &c. $72,560,056; and it is expected that all this should have been done at no increase of expenditure over that in 1828.

My colleague has recourse to the official statements of the amount received by the Globe office, during the last and present administration, as proof of the extravagance of the republicans, and ground of suspicion against the honesty of the editor. He gives the sum total of the amount paid for printing for congress and the departments, in the Globe office, hunting through the terms of two presidents, at $220,000. I take it for granted, having no opportunity for the examination of the multitude of items of which it is made up, that this sum may have been disbursed through the Globe office for printing and paper, and other materials necessary to this species of work, so absolutely indispensable in the proper discharge of the business of congress and the departments. My colleague will allow that printing must be done for the government. It is looked upon as the glory of our free government, that all its acts are exhibited in print, and full information afforded to an enlightened community of every thing done by its public agents. This is the medium through which the functionaries and representatives of a people overspreading a continent, are held to an accountability, stricter than that which the people of the ancient republics could command in a district of country, not greater than one of our large counties. The only question brought up by my colleague's display of the public printing done by the Globe establishment, are, has it been done well? Has it been done cheaply? Has it been done honestly? By bringing together the labors of a great establishment from its foundation to the present moment, my colleague [Mr. B.] would insinuate an accusation of exorbitant charges against the government on the part of Messrs. Blair and Rives. My colleague showed his caution in thus accusing by innuendo. He was perfectly aware of the unimpeachable honesty of the proprietors of the Globe office, and did not dare to make a single specification against them. But a member from Tennessee, [Mr. Crockett,] in pursuing the game of the opposition in a private letter, charged that three or four hundred thousand dollars of the public money had been paid to the Globe office for printing the speeches of Messrs. Benton and Calhoun in defence of the administration. His colleague, [Mr. Carter,] perceiving that this exceeded by some hundreds of thousands all the public money that passed through the Globe office in payment for work done and materials purchased for all the departments and congress, came to the rescue of his friend [Mr. Crockett] by declaring that a tariff had been laid on the pay of the clerks to make up the sum paid for publication. The moment that the charges appeared, the editor of the Globe, through his paper, challenged an investigation by a committee of congress. The members of congress who made them were told it was their duty to bring the delinquent they denounced to justice. My colleague and his accomplice advisers shrunk from meeting the man they had charged, before a committee of our own body. Mr. Blair then appealed to this house, by petition, to refer the matter to a committee, and have a full scrutiny of all his accounts with the public. The special committee was ordered by this house, and then commenced the chort of the opposition to defeat, by indirection, the inquiry, which they knew would disgrace the persons they had put forward to stigmatize the administration and the official paper by their accusations. Only six weeks of the session remained, and the opposition knew how difficult it would be, when all the business of the session was loaded into this narrow space, to take up a postponed question, especially in regard to a petition which could only come up, by the rule, on the Monday of every ultimate week. And lo! therefore, after the inquiry had been ordered by a special committee, a conservative [Mr. Hopkins, of Virginia] moved a reconsideration. This hung up the decision two weeks, and was, I am afraid, intended for that purpose. When the subject was again taken up, every artifice was resorted to for the purpose of defeating inquiry. It was first proposed to refer it to a standing committee, composed of one of the accusers [Mr. Crockett] and others, making a majority of opposition members who had shown themselves afraid of the investigation. If the case had been referred to the accusers as judges, would not the whole inquiry have been snuffed out, or report as foul and erroneous as the original charges returned by those making them? The accusers [Bond, Crockett, and Carter] exerted themselves in this attempt, but it was voted down by the house. An effort to lay the subject on the table, and so get rid of it, was tried by the same party in vain. At last, after the committee was appointed, and had the instructions of the house to inquire into the whole subject of the public printing, when it came forward and asked the ordinary power of sending for persons and papers to obtain evidence of the facts it was required to report, the opposition opposed this, and moved to discharge the committee altogether from the duty assigned.

This failed, and the committee met and organized for the examination. It opened its sittings almost every morning at 8 o'clock, but not one of the accusing members came forward to make good their charges. At last the committee addressed a note to Mr. Crockett, inviting him to support by evidence, the allegations made by him in the house and his private letters. Mr. Crockett replied, if the investigation was to be confined to the prayer of the petition, to a scrutiny embracing only the accounts of the Globe office with the public departments and congress, he would have nothing to do with it; but if the committee would go out of the instructions of the house, and inquire into the private accounts of the editor of the Globe, he would examine witnesses! How the committee treated this evasion, I am not informed; probably with silent contempt. But I am authorized by Mr. Blair to say that he is willing to submit his private accounts and his private life to the closest scrutiny. The bold assailants in this house skulking thus from the summons, the committee had no alternative but to seek out testimony on the allegations made before the representative body, by interrogating those who, from the nature of the charges, must know their truth or falsehood.

Mr. Crockett's charge, made by him in writing, verified by his signature, and secretly circulated, was couched in these words:

"Hundreds of thousands of Mr. Benton's and Mr. Calhoun's speeches, as I am informed, have been printed gratuitously, and circulated by 'the party' throughout the land."

"My opinion is, honestly, that they are paid for out of the public treasury, and I believe it could be proven to the satisfaction of every unprejudiced mind; at any rate I should like to know how dear Blair, the printer of the Globe, can afford to print so many thousand speeches for nothing, and find himself? No man can believe it who is not as blind with party prejudice as a snake in dog-days. The cost at the ordinary rate cannot, I think, be less than from 3 to $400,000."

As explained by his colleague [Mr. Carter,] in the presence of the house and of Mr. Crockett; and afterwards published by Mr. Carter in the National Intelligencer, it stood thus:

Sir, my colleague did not intend to say that the money was taken directly from the treasury, and applied to these purposes, but he intended to say, and does say, that the public money is indirectly appropriated, and applied to this specific use. Sir, are there no grounds for this opinion? If the salary officers of the government are paid extravagantly, and those salaries made sufficiently high to give the officer a reasonable compensation for his services, after contributing several hundred dollars for party purposes—to pay for these partisan speeches and extra Globes, if you please, which is said to be coerced from them by this party regulation and discipline—I would ask, in the name of common sense, if this is not virtually defraying these expenses out of the public treasury, to all intents and purposes? Sir, it is virtually the same thing, just as much so as if the editor of the Globe was directed by the government to cause to be printed ten thousand copies of that paper every week, and circulated to non-subscribers, and to draw his money directly from the treasury. The effect is the same; the government pays the money in either case, and, in either point of view, improperly. Sir, were not the salaries of these officers increased ten or twenty per cent. just before the last presidential election, upon the recommendation and vote of the party that reigned and ruled in this house so triumphantly—increased just as much as is said to be the tax laid and collected off those officers for party operations?”

This imputation on the government and the editor of the Globe thrown out in secret letters at first, and afterwards promulgated on the floor of this house, for the purpose of giving it the stamp of a congressional impeachment; and which, as I have shown, they attempted to keep pending and unrefuted by an inquiry, until after the elections, was put down by a cloud of witnesses. The committee addressed a note to all the departments, in pursuing the inquiry as to the facts put in issue by Messrs. Crockett and Carter.

It was responded to by all the departments; every one proving that no change in the ordinary price of printing had been made favorable to the Globe office; but on the contrary, the department of state, treasury and post office, point to particular instances of considerable reductions. The clerks of all the departments have, in a body, given written testimony, signed by their names, establishing, in the most explicit manner, the utter want of foundation in truth for the assertion of the members from Tennessee, [Messrs. Crockett and Carter,] that a tariff had been imposed on them to pay for publications at the Globe office. I select the shortest replies as a sample of the whole:

Navy department, July 7, 1838.

Sir: I herewith transmit the answers of myself and clerks, and that of the clerks of the navy commissioners' office, to the queries propounded in your letter of the 3d instant.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

J. K. PAULDING.

Hon. Jas. J. McKay,

Chairman select committee, house of representatives.

District of Columbia, ss.

Personally appeared before me, Robert Getty, one of the justices of the peace for said District, James K. Paulding, secretary of the navy of the United States, and being duly sworn, saith:

1. That he does not know of any instance in which the editors of the "Globe" have been allowed for printing for the navy department a compensation greater than that usually paid to other printers for printing, similar to that required to be done by those editors.

2. That he does not know any instance since he has been at the head of the navy department, in which printing, not properly chargeable to the United States, according to law or the usages of his predecessor, has been ordered and paid for out of the public fund, either to the editors of the Globe or any other printers; and that he does not know of any of the officers of the navy department being tarified or required to raise funds to pay for public documents or speeches to be published at the office of the Globe or elsewhere.

3. That no change as to the mode or prices in the execution of the printing done for the navy department has been introduced since he has been at its head, differing from that customary under his predecessors; and further saith not.

J. K. PAULDING.

Sworn and subscribed this 7th day of June, 1838.

ROBT GETTY, J. P.

Navy department, June 7, 1838.

The undersigned, clerks in the navy department, respectfully state, in answer to an inquiry contained in a letter of the 8d instant, addressed to the secretary of the navy by the hon. James J. McKay, chairman of the select committee of the house of representatives, to which was referred so much of the memorial of F. P. Blair as invites a scrutiny into all his accounts for printing for congress and the public offices, that they have not "been tarified or required to raise funds to pay for public documents and speeches to be published at the office of the Globe, or elsewhere."

(Signed)

JOHN BOYLE,
J. D. SIMMS,
L. B. HARDIN,
T. L. RAGSDALE,
B. M. VOORHEES,
H. STARK,
M. POOR,
A. H. QUINCY,
N. B. BOYLE.

Sworn and subscribed before me, at Washington city, this 7th day of June, 1838.

(Signed)

ROBT GETTY, J. P.

A declaration like the above was sworn to and subscribed by the clerks in the navy commissioners' office, before Chas. W. Goldsborough, J. P. and sent to the committee.

There are 444 clerks in all the departments. Of these a large majority are in opposition to the administration, and to the press which supports it; and yet, with perfect unanimity, they bear unhesitating testimony to the utter groundlessness of the charge made by the members from Tennessee, [Messrs. Crockett and Carter.] It appears there was not the slightest circumstance to countenance it—not a pretence to found it on. It was made on this high authority, was to do mischief to the administration in the approaching elections, under the hope that inquiry might be baffled during the remnant of the session, or that the committee would not be able to examine the whole subject submitted to it; and that as it could not report in full, the evidence would not come out in time to correct what I might call fabrication, until it had done its work for the party. To defeat this iniquitous scheme, I felt myself called on to seek from the same quarter the same evidence which the committee has obtained, and I use it to put in a proper light before the country those who would abuse their high station to destroy the reputations of innocent men for party objects.

It appears from the official and verified statements of the departments, that no increase of price on any jobs executed for them by the Globe office, has in any instance taken place; on the contrary, that great reductions have been made on several; and on inquiry, I learn that the printers and others who appeared before the committee, who measured the work, and made the requisite calculations to ascertain whether it had been well done by the Globe office, and charged for according to law, proved, as far as they progressed, that all was right.

To enable the public to judge of the excess of profits, which my colleague, [Mr. Bond,] by his aggregate of $220,000, would make the impression had been made by the Globe office, I have obtained from Mr. Rives, who has the entire management of the establishment, the following statement:

"The prices which congress pays for its printing were fixed by three disinterested practical printers in 1819, residing in different sections of the union. Two weeks after the Globe office commenced printing for congress, (the 11th December, 1835,) the wages of journeymen printers were raised by the typographical society of this city, 10 per cent. on former prices. That rate has continued ever since; but the price paid by congress has remained unaltered."

The Globe office and materials cost $40,000; the wear and tear of materials is about $5,000 a year; the interest on $40,000 is $2,400; the hands in the Globe office have been paid in six years $140,000; the paper used in printing for the departments and congress, cost $68,000."

It will be seen, therefore, from the foregoing statement, that the actual expenditure of the Globe office, in connection with the public work, is $268,000; a sum greatly exceeding the amount received from the treasury. Yet a reasonable profit has been made upon the public work, because an establishment adequate to its performance in the intervals of public employment, and in association with it, is enabled, by publishing newspapers, speeches for members of Congress, jobs for private individuals, and advertisements, to add largely to its income.

I now turn to the public printing executed at the newspaper offices of the opposition in this city. One would suppose from the outcry that they, at least, had been proscribed, as they pretend the office-holding partisans of federalism have been, and were almost starving for patronage, while the Globe was rioting in an enormous monopoly. My colleague—who has been almost petrified with horror at the extravagance of the administrations which (with the command of the departments and majorities in congress) have, in a course of six years, allowed the only press in this city advocating the republican policy to derive a reasonable profit on work and materials furnished to the amount of $220,000—does not think worth while to mention the trifling amount which has passed through the mills of the Intelligencer and Telegraph during the same six years, and when both were devoted to the cause of the opposition. Every body in Washington knows (it is of record) that the National Intelligencer office, house and lot, types, presses, profits due and to become due, are deeded to the bank of the United States for facilities granted it at various times, amounting to between ninety and one hundred thousand dollars. This is prima facie proof that it has been starved at the treasury during the six years that the Globe has rolled in such abundance. I have looked to the record, and find that the editors of the National Intelligencer have drawn the following sums from the treasury during the six years of long abstinence that the Globe interfered with its income:

Gales and Seaton received during the six years beginning the 1st October, 1831, and ending the 30th September, 1837 - - $432,348 18
Duff Green received - - - 363,293 94

Together,

$795,642 12

For the extra session, in the name of Allen, up to this time (7th July) Gales and Seaton have received for printing to the house - - $120,000 00

In addition to this, is an appropriation of $49,000, which has just passed, for the purchase of Gales and Seaton's Register of debates, (volumes made up from the pages of the Intelligencer) and other books which they have printed and kept on hand for distribution, at the expense of the public, among the members. Of this sum, a few job printers in this city will come in for five or six thousand dollars. Gales and Seaton's part will be at least - - - 43,000 00

For work ordered at this session and not yet paid for, there will be added to the receipts of Gales and Seaton (in the name of Allen) at least - 15,000 00

The sum total already voted by the present house to its printers, is - 178,000 00

If the next session of three months may be calculated upon as the ratio, (and as there is always more work done in the same space of time in the short session than the long one,) it is a fair calculation that one-third of the printing expenditure already incurred by the house, may be set down for the coming short session—that is - - - 59,000 00

The following results are shown by the comparison:

1st. The editors of the Intelligencer will have received for the printing for one branch during the 25th congress, and for old books distributed among the members, seventeen thousand dollars more than the whole amount which my colleague [Mr. Bond] has drawn together for work done by the Globe establishment for all the departments, and for congress, during six years.

2d. It shows that the two leading opposition presses in this city have received about one million dollars, commencing with the period which my colleague [Mr. Bond] has fixed upon as beginning the condemned career of the Globe establishment.

And yet my colleague sees nothing extraordinary in the enormous expenditure on the National Intelligencer, but is shocked at the pampered condition of the Globe.

But if the difference of amounts received by the two establishments is amazing, the mode in which the Intelligencer's receipts have been so swollen is not less astonishing.

Neither branch of congress has ever been solicited by the proprietors of the Globe to print books for distribution among the members; nor have any such publications been voted to be done by the Globe office. Only two works, I understand, have passed through its press—the Diplomatic Correspondence of the United States from 1783 to 1789, and the Commercial Regulations. The former was printed for less than it had been done for previously; and the latter, which had not been printed before, was printed and bound at less than congressional prices.

The enormous sums which have swelled the bloated receipts of the Intelligencer, are made up of books to fill the private libraries of members of congress, being the republication of old state papers and registers of debates, containing the speeches of the members themselves. This system of seducing members of congress, by their private interests and personal vanity, to vote the wagon loads of volumes annually distributed from the Intelligencer office, began before I came here. The old members having obtained their share, the new comers do not refuse what has been previously printed for them: and the old members, as matter of course, vote it, because, if they did not, it would be an acknowledgment that they had taken money from the treasury to make perquisites in books for themselves to which they were not entitled; and so this abuse is handed down from congress to congress by the rump of the old members, who are obliged to give to the new members the douceur of books which they had previously shared among themselves. I voted for this resolution. I regret that I did so. I did not understand, at the time, its full bearing, and the amount it involved; and I now say, that the portion of the books which falls to me, is the property of the government, and at its service, whenever it may be found advantageous to surrender them. The senate have again and again voted down this appropriation; but the majority in the house then tack it on some indispensable appropriation bill, and compel the senate to vote it, and the president to sign it, or else lose the means of supporting some regular establishment of the government, and be compelled to throw the business of the country into confusion, or leave it undone. The forty odd thousand dollars appropriated to the Intelligencer's book contribution, was rejected by the senate at the present session, as heretofore; but it was afterwards coupled by the house with the bill "to provide for the support of the military academy of the United States for the year 1838, and for other purposes," and so forced upon the senate and president. It is in this way, when the federalists have a majority in either branch of Congress, that they compel a democratic administration to submit to the appropriation of unnecessary millions, with which, by log-rolling, they load the bills indispensable to the support of government. Their corrupt appropriations to subserve private, local, and personal interests, are always tacked to a bill which must be passed, or the government be stopped.

But another mode is adopted by the federal party having the majority in either house, to swell the expenses against the wishes of the administration, and then charge the extravagance to it. For example, at the present session, the house printed more than one hundred thousand dollars in documents, many of them not worth the paper (now made waste paper,) on which they are printed. Of this sort is a volume of one hundred and thirty-eight pages, consisting entirely of the cancelled drafts of the treasury which my colleague [Mr. Bond] called for, and had printed. He could have had no motive in calling for this but to make a fat job of rule and figure work for Gales and Seaton. It is just as valuable a work as so many cancelled checks drawn on a bank. In the beginning of the session, Mr. Garland of Virginia, a conservative, called for the correspondence of the treasury with the banks. The house was informed that there were not clerks in the department sufficient to prepare it during the term of the members. It would have made a fat job of at least $50,000, on which the gentleman's friend, Mr. Allen, would have had a per centage, and Gales and Seaton their profits. Another call was made by him for all the documents in regard to the defaulters to the treasury; and this would have been to copy and print the papers of the office of the solicitor of the treasury out and out. This would, besides the expense of copying, cost at least $50,000 more for printing. It was found there were not clerks enough to make the copies, and Mr. Garland moved a resolution to authorize new appointments for this purpose, but it failed. This shows what the conservatives and whigs would have done, by way of bringing grist to Gales and Seaton's press, to afford vast profits to them, and increase the per centage of Allen. What they have done appears from the gross sum of a hundred and twenty thousand dollars for the extra and present session of the house printing, with an arrear of fifteen thousand dollars yet to be received for it, with forty-three thousand dollars for books; and at least fifty-nine thousand dollars to be realized, at the same rate, for the approaching session, showing an aggregate of TWO HUNDRED and THIRTY-SEVEN THOUSAND DOLLARS for one branch of congress for one congressional term; whereas Messrs. Blair and Rives have received, during the six years my colleague, [Mr. Bond,] has scanned their printing, only one hundred and six thousand dollars for congress printing and materials, and one hundred and fourteen thousand from all the departments, for the same time.

But the most scandalous part of this history of the printing of the house is yet to be told. Although Gales and Seaton receive all this money for printing, they were not elected its printers. Allen was elected to perform this confidential trust, although he had only about 21 or 22 votes, in a house of 242 members. Does it not look as though after three days' balloting a corrupt bargain was made, under which it was arranged that Allen was to become nominally the printer to the house, but Gales and Seaton were to do the work and receive the pay? After the caucus was held which consummated the infamous agreement, (if such was the case,) by which it was stipulated that Gales and Seaton's friends would go over to Allen and unite with the conservatives in his election, suspicions were excited by the announcement of this determination; and several of the honest conservatives, whose votes were necessary to the success of Allen, interrogated him as to the supposed intention of transferring the printing to Gales and Seaton. He denied positively that there existed such an engagement, and pledged himself to execute the printing in his own office, declaring that he was making provision for that purpose. That he made the pledge, and forfeited it, it is established by the statement of a member on this floor, (Mr. Snyder, of Illinois.) Their votes were, in effect, sold to Gales and Seaton, although they protested in advance, against being made accessory to such a shameful and corrupt transaction.

Mr. Chairman, a high public trust, personal in its character, has been farmed out in violation of all principle and decency, to individuals to whom it is known a majority of this body, as well as their constituents, were unwilling to confide it; and Allen, in violation of another republican principle, holds a sinecure. Will any one hereafter say, that this house is to be trusted to elect the chief magistrate of this country, when it is found, that in electing a printer, pecuniary considerations, the bases of bargaining between parties, have controlled the result.

Another natural consequence of this bargaining, has been discovered before the committee appointed to investigate the subject. This committee being appointed at the heel of the session, has not yet had time to make full investigation, and report; but I feel at liberty to use the information which I have derived from a witness, sworn before it. A first rate practical printer, called on by that committee to measure the work and calculate the price which it was lawful to charge for it, and compare it with that which Gales and Seaton, in the name of Allen, as printer to this house, had received for it, found that the first document printed for this house at this session, by Gales and Seaton, was fraudulently printed; and that by diminishing the page, and using types different from those authorized by law, they had made an illicit profit, amounting to between thirteen and fourteen hundred dollars. He examined another document, and found a like fraud committed; and an unlawful profit of between 3 and $400 obtained by it. This was but a beginning. The committee had not time to prosecute the inquiry further at this session; and asked leave to continue it at the next, which was granted. I have a statement of these facts, in writing, from the witness, as sworn to by him before the committee. He is a first-rate printer, well acquainted with congressional work, and of unimpeachable character. I have little doubt from this commencement that it will be found in the end, that Gales and Seaton have made as much out of their frauds, as will pay Allen the per centage he required as compensation for the deception practised upon those conservatives whom he betrayed; and to make good to those who acted with him his promise, to convert the consideration he received into the means of supporting the press established in this city for their common benefit. All the legitimate profits upon the public work will thus, probably, be cleared to the Intelligencer; and the aliment of the Madisonian will be derived from the frauds committed by his whig accomplices on the treasury. How characteristic this of the two printing concerns, and the two parties which entered into the vile coalition that gave birth to the bastard Madisonian? Is it not notoriously fed on offal of the foul peculations of the Intelligencer? And this is an earnest of what the federal party will do for the little Spartan band of conservatives, who shall have joined their standard, in the event of success. They will, no doubt, give them a share of the plunder, but not an atom of the power, of the government.

Will not the American people ask, for whose interests the honor of the great representative body of this country has been compromised, and its hall made a market place, in which the votes of members, and a high public trust, have become a subject of mercenary barter between the leaders of two parties assuming to be actuated by lofty political principles? When understood, their principles are like the man for whom they have sacrificed the noble character of the country. He is an Englishman, a perfect prostitute in politics—notoriously the stipendiary of the Bank of the United States—and the ready instrument of every faction, which, in alliance with that institution, would contribute to the overthrow of our republican institutions. He is an alien, too, in all his feelings. He was found the willing organ of Gorostiza in vindicating the cruel and perfidious conduct of Mexico towards our citizens, and its insults to our government. He took the part of France when she shamefully withheld the indemnity she was pledged by treaty to pay, and endeavored to throw the blame on our government, and raise a party for France, in case we were driven to war in defence of our rights. He has encouraged the resistance of the Indians to the policy of the government, and stimulated the feeling which led to the butchery of so many gallant men, the exhaustion of the public treasury, and the ruin of the Indians, whose cause he pretended to espouse. It is on this dishonest fraudulent Englishman, that more than a million of the public money has been lavished from first to last. And yet my colleague, (Mr. Bond,) and the party with which he is associated, think him poorly compensated.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have said, perhaps more than once, that there are existing abuses; and for reasons which I have given, abuses will exist. But if "those who administer this government were as pure as the angels that minister in heaven," there would be lean, lank, hungry, unprincipled hyenas to howl around this capitol, with appetites prepared, not only to devour the reputation of those who live to administer the government, but the grave itself would be insufficient to secure the dead from their blighting and withering howl.

My colleague has finished his speech with a case from the Old Testament Scriptures, illustrative, as he supposes, of the corrupting influence of power upon the democratic party, the total want of analogy between which, in some of its strongest points, may be easily perceived; for while Hazael came to the throne by the murder of his master, that is, through blood and crime, the present and past administrations came into power, not by crime and blood, but by the sullages of a free and independent people; and by the same operation which brought these administrations into power, was a corrupt and usurped administration politically throttled, and its corrupt workers of iniquity thrown into the mud. But, sir, to the Scriptural case. I shall close my remarks by a reference to a case from the same high authority. Sir, the course of the party at present out of power—but earnestly desiring, and sparing no pains, labor, or expense, to get into power—reminds me, and may remind the country forcibly, of the case of the unfortunate Absalom. I refer not to his contriving the death of Amnon, nor his forming a conspiracy with Ahithophel against the administration of the government, but to his ambition, and the means he used with the people to carry his designs.

Being suffered to return from his banishment into the neighborhood of the throne, he lied his political wiles with the unsuspecting people, alleging that justice was not done them, promising if he was put into office, that things should be made better. Thus speaking, and forming a party against the government, we are told that Absalom rose up early, and stood beside the way of the gate, and if any man had a controversy, and came to the king for judgment, then Absalom said "The matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee. O! that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath a suit or cause, might come unto me, and I would do him justice." And it was so that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeisance, he put forth his hand, and took him and kissed him. So Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel. He sent spies throughout the land (political missionaries) to all the tribes of Israel and under pretence of piety towards God, he left Jerusalem for Hebron, where he was to set up his authority. But ere his mad ambition obtained its consummation, the beast which he rode forsook its rider, and Absalom fell by the hand of trusty Joab, who made his grave in a pit.

Absalom went out to war upon a mule—a mongrel beast, half horse, half ass. What kind of a mongrel hobby is the present opposition mounted on? Bank, anti-bank—tariff, anti tariff—masonic, and anti-masonic, &c. &c. They have no opinion in common, except it is hostility to the people's best interests, and a contempt for their understanding, or, in other words, a decided hatred to the simple institutions of democracy. But when the people shall rise in their strength, this modern mule shall forsake its riders, and leave them to the fate of Absalom.

With all the ambition and chicanery of Absalom, backed by the cunning of his counsellor, Ahithophel, the federal party never can again succeed in getting into power. They have been driven into political banishment, from which they never will be permitted to return.

CHRONICLE.

Naval. The U. S. brig Porpoise, lieutenant commodore Ringgold left the Navy Yard at New York, on Sunday evening, and put to sea, for Norfolk, where she joins the exploring squadron. The following is a list of officers:

1 lieutenant commanding—Cadwalader Ringgold.
1st lieutenant—M. G. L. Claiborne.
2d lieutenant—Aug. L. Case.
3d lieutenant and acting master—G. F. Emmons.
Acting surgeon—Charles F. B. Gillon.

The Journal of Commerce says:—"The Porpoise left us amid hearty cheers from the government vessels at this station, and carries with her the best wishes of thousands. We cannot refrain from congratulating the officers upon the change of being toward this long delayed and much abused expedition, not only among the public at large, but more particularly in the navy itself. If in the vast field for hydrographical research and scientific exploration, any thing can be accomplished by activity, perseverance and energy, guided by nautical science, we may surely expect it from this expedition."

The Army and Navy Chronicle mentions as a rumor, that the ship of the line Ohio is to be fitted out for the Mediterranean station, under the command of commodore Hull.

Old Ironsides. The Norfolk Herald of Friday has the following notice of the gallant old ship Constitution, which arrived in Hampton Rhodes on Tuesday the 30th ult.

The Constitution frigate came up on Wednesday afternoon, and anchored off the naval hospital. The steamboat Old Dominion was engaged to assist the stout old warrior into our port—but with a "thank's for nothing." Old Ironsides did not wait to be assisted, but spread her wings and came up alone, before the steamboat had got cleverly under weigh. Nearly the whole crew of the Constitution have run out their term of service, and about two hundred of them demanded their discharge the moment the ship came to anchor, which was granted, and they were as promptly sent on shore. We learn that their behaviour on the occasion did not comport with the character of "Yankee tars," though it must be confessed they had right on their side.

The commodore has not yet left the ship—probably because the condition of the crew requires his presence.

While the ship was being moored, a man fell from the main topgallant yard and was instantly killed. His name was Butler—a foreigner by birth.

This is the first visit we have had from this gallant ship since the late war. She now rides proudly at her moorings abreast of the town, the tout ensemble presenting a most imposing spectacle as viewed from the town. The ships now at the anchorage are five in number, moored in the following order—the Constitution, Peacock, Macedonian, Vincennes, and Relief.

Cotton. The editor of the New York Herald, writing from Liverpool under date of 20th July, says—

During the last few months, since the cotton has been arriving in great quantities from the United States, there has been a great struggle here between the buyers and sellers about the prices. The large holders here have been straining every nerve to hold the cotton in order to keep up the prices—the spinners and manufacturers have been pursuing the opposite policy of taking as little as possible. I think the contest will be governed by the crops in this country and the ability of the bank in the United States—that is to say, it will terminate in a compromise, leaving the prices and demand nearly as they are at present.

For two years to come, the cotton market will not vary much. It will take that time to start in a fresh career under the new impulses now in action. But for the United States Bank, and the other banks of our country that came into the market including also their policy of a suspension of specie payments, the value of our present cotton crop would have been $10,000,000 less than it will fetch. The agents of the United States Bank here, Humphries & Biddle, have an immense stock on hand, and are daily receiving more. Only consider that at this moment there are 120 American ships in this port—in London, only half a dozen. The policy of delaying the resumption of specie payments in the south, whatever be the morals of it, has undoubtedly realized $10,000,000 to the United States that would have been thrown away here.

Escape of Uncles. The New Orleans Picayune of the 21st ultimo, says, that Uncles, who was in jail in that city, charged with stealing the jewels from the bank of the Metropolis, Washington, succeeded in making his escape on the night of the 20th, by cutting his way through a plank partition four inches thick, and then making a hole in the brick wall of sufficient size to let him out.

Health of the cities. In New York last week there were 202 deaths—more than half of which were persons under two years of age. There were two deaths by hydrophobia.

There were 190 deaths in Philadelphia last week, 114 of which were children under two years of age.

In Baltimore last week there were 78 deaths—48 being children under two years of age.

In Cincinnati during the week ending on the 1st, there were 42 interments, of which 23 were children. The Cincinnati Gazette of the 4th remarks:—"Notwithstanding the continuance of warm weather our city still continues healthy for the season. There is considerable sickness among children, but at this season of the year this is the case almost everywhere."

In Washington, forty-one deaths have been reported to the board of health, for the month ending July 31. Of these, there were of the age of two years and under, 25; between 2 and 10, 6; between 10 and 30, 4; between 30 and 50, 4; between 50 and 80, 2.

Diseases.—Summer complaint, 15; scarlet fever, 3; accident, 1; not reported, 3; inflammation of brain, 3; dysentery, 3; intemperance, 2; drinking cold water, 2; consumption, 3; water on the brain, 1; rheumatism, 1; mumps, 1; abscess, 1; killed, 1; still-born, 1.

The Ohio River, is unusually low for the season, there being as we are informed by pilots, less than three feet water in the channel, between Wheeling and Pittsburgh. A number of the lightest boats, are plying regularly from this to Pittsburgh, carrying but a small quantity of freight, although filled with passengers. In consequence of the low stage of the river, freight has advanced to one dollar per hundred from Pittsburgh, and cabin passage to Cincinnati, eighteen dollars.

A number of boats of the second class, continue to run from this city to St. Louis, without much interruption, and with a slight advance on passage and freight. [Cin. Rep. of Aug. 2.]

Charles L. Bonaparte, (prince of Musignano) who distinguished himself in our country by his ornithological researches, particularly by his continuation of Wilson's work, has lately published a geographical and comparative list of the birds of Europe and America.

The New Brunswick Fredonian states that the connecting link between the Trenon and Philadelphia rail road and the New Jersey rail road, which now terminates at New Brunswick, will be completed before the close of the present year, making an uninterrupted line of rail road from Washington to New York.

The British army. Return of the numbers of the descriptions of armed force in the United Kingdom, on 1st January, 1838. "The regular army of all ranks."

	Great Britain.	Ireland.	Total.
Cavalry	*5,601	2,035	7,636
Foot Guards	4,051	635	4,686
Infantry	*14,627	16,629	31,256

Total 24,279 19,309 43,588
*Including the depots of India regiments.
Adjutant general's office, 30th April, 1838.

JOHN MACDONALD, A. G.

Hayti. The schooner Orient, at New York in 15 days from Port au Prince, reports that the new tariff, reducing the import duties, had passed the house of representatives and was sanctioned by the senate, and, it was expected, would be enforced immediately.

Limestone. A gentleman of Genesee, New York, in digging a well, has hit upon a bed of what he supposed at first to be plaster of Paris, but which turns out to be friable limestone, from the application of which to the soil much benefit has been derived. The material is represented to be easily dug with a pick, and productive of great fertilizing effects, as attested by a single years experience. The whole of the country of the old states abounds in one description or other of fertilizing material, which, if properly made use of, will, in the course of a few years, restore our soil to its primitive richness. Farmers, instead of running away to the west, should pay attention to this fact, as in doing so they may rest assured of an ample return for their trouble. [Ball. Ame.]

Most infamous and inhuman conduct. It will be recollected that capt. Davis, of the schooner Henry Cameron, of Philadelphia, rescued a number of the passengers from the ill-fated Pulaski, and carried them into Wilmington, N. C. The Henry Cameron arrived this morning from that port and has furnished us with an account of the following infamous and inexcusable conduct on the part of the captain of a schooner, the name of whom we regret is not recollected. The information was communicated to captain D. by his pilot, and can be implicitly relied upon.

The schooner Merchant, of Elizabeth city N. C. bound to Wilmington, N. C. with a cargo of corn, passed the passengers on the wreck of the Pulaski, heard their desperate cries for aid, saw them struggling with the waves, when even hope had almost forsaken them, and notwithstanding he was distinctly hailed by them he refused to offer them any assistance, and proceeded on his course. The reason which he afterwards assigned for this wanton and murderous neglect of duty was that he feared another vessel bound to the same port as himself, would get in before him.

We trust that the Wilmington, N. C. papers will ascertain the name of this inhuman monster, and publish it in connection with his infamy.

[Philadelphia Exchange Echo.]

It is said that the Great Western made over $40,000 on her two last trips. This may be exaggerated, but her last trip was certainly a very lucrative one. Already several of her births are engaged. Passengers come here from the West India islands, and from Nova Scotia even as well as the N. Canadas. [Nat. Int.]

Benefit to the United States of Atlantic steam navigation. Mr. James R. Wilson, president of the Tioga Navigation company, went out in the Great Western, arrived in London in fourteen days, succeeded in negotiating a loan for the company over which he presides, on very favorable terms; contracted for iron for constructing their rail road; saw the lions of the British metropolis and returned in the Great Western; being absent exactly six weeks. We congratulate the company on the success of their agent, and the country on the advantage which will be derived from the increased introduction of British capital which steam navigation will bring among us. [Philad. U. S. Gazette.]

Rail road safety. In providing against bursting of boilers in steamboats, we are bound to guard against danger on rail roads from an accident terrible in its consequences, when it does happen to reach passengers. We allude to parts of the rail road iron which being insecurely bolted on the stone or wooden foundation, start or roll when the engine passes over. It has been known that a piece of iron thus loosened has shot up through the cars with the velocity of a cannon ball, passing through the top, and fortunately not touching a passenger. Recently in Pennsylvania a piece of iron went through the skirts of a gentleman's coat, and cut the veil of a ladies' bonnet, and passed through without injury.

Great attention and constant examination should be made of the rails, to see on the whole line that they are properly secured. [N. Y. Star.]

Caution. A fly entered the ear of a harvest hand at work in a field in Miami county, and although the insect was soon extracted, the ear continued painful for several days. The person called upon a physician, who on an examination found the fly had left some of her progeny in his ear, which were grown to medium size, from 1-4 to 1-2 inch. The physician succeeded in dislodging 33, which proved to be all that were in the ear.

[Columbus (Ohio) Register.]

The best application is at once to fill the ear with laudanum or brandy, and let it remain in for a short time. It kills the insect nearly as soon as oil, but what is better, allays the spasmodic excitement of the tympanum or drum of the ear, which seems to the patient like the fluttering of the insect, and is worse than the insect's motion itself.

Silk. The Messrs. Cheneys of New Jersey, obtained a hundred bushels of fine cocoons from their first crop of silk worms, whose labors were perfected about a fortnight since, and for which they have already received the state bounty. Great progress is making in this species of culture in every part of the state, as well as in Pennsylvania, Maryland, North Carolina, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and several other states.

[Trenton Emporium.]

On Friday evening the 3d instant, the convention of the Protestant Episcopal church of Maryland, elected to the office of bishop of that diocese, the right reverend Jackson Kemper, at present missionary bishop in the valley of the Mississippi.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 25.—VOL. IV.]

WASHINGTON CITY, AUGUST 18, 1838.

[VOL. LIV.—WHOLE No. 1,403.]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

NEAPOLITAN INDEMNITY. From the Washington Globe, we learn that the 5th instalment of the Neapolitan indemnity has been paid to the agent of the United States in Paris, and is now in the course of transmission to this country in gold.

Notice of the amount and places of payment will be given by the treasury department, as soon as the net proceeds are computed.

MEXICO. The following extract from a speech of the president of Mexico, on the closing of the last session of the National congress, confirms the statement in page 387, that all points in dispute between this country and Mexico are about to be settled by the mediation of a friendly power. Mr. Martinez, the Mexican minister, who has been for sometime in New Orleans, is now in this city. Translated for the Globe, from a speech addressed by the president of Mexico to the National congress on closing its session on the 30th June last.

"You also know that the government of the United States has accepted the offer of arbitration, by a friendly power, made to it on the part of that of Mexico, for the purpose of restoring the good understanding and harmony which have been unfortunately interrupted. While I lamented the unsatisfactory state of our relations, I never doubted that the cabinet of the United States would, in the end, be ready to come to a settlement in a manner reasonable and conformable with the civilization and with the philanthropic sentiments prevailing both in Mexico and the United States. Far, therefore, from repeating the complaints mutually made, the two governments will employ themselves only in obtaining such a definitive and satisfactory arrangement as may cause the differences which have endangered the peace between us and our neighbors, to be forgotten. The law of neutrality lately passed by the congress of the American confederacy, and the assurances given to our minister, should cause us to be content with regard to the sincerity and frankness of their intentions."

CONSPIRACY AT HAVANA. The New Orleans Bulletin of the 10th instant says: A letter received by a commercial house in this city, from a correspondent at Havana, confirms the statement published in the Bulletin of yesterday. The writer says that a Carlist conspiracy had been detected among some of the regiments stationed at Havana, and many arrests and executions had taken place. From this it would appear that we were mistaken as to the cause of the revolt as originating in dissatisfaction with the removal of general Tacón. The object of the conspirators was to wrest the government of Cuba from the queen, and place it in the hands of Don Carlos.

THE CHEROKEES. It is stated in the Alexandria Gazette, that, at the request of the war department, gen. Scott has postponed his visit to the north until the emigration of the Cherokees in September has been completed.

In another page we have published an article stating that the conduct of the Cherokees had been most exemplary, and that they were comparatively free from sickness; but it appears from the following extract of a letter, which we find in the New York Journal of Commerce, that the praiseworthy and humane injunctions of gen. Scott, have been disregarded in the preparations for removal.

"The following is the latest intelligence, from the Cherokee nation. It is dated from 'Prisoner's Camp, Cherokee Nation, July 21, 1838,' and has been handed to us by the gentleman to whom it was addressed.

"The public are either altogether uninformed, or misinformed, with regard to the current state of Cherokee affairs.

"Major general Scott's address of the 10th of May was received by the Cherokees with a dead silence. As the ominous 23d of May approached, all appeared anxious to have their work forward and their crops in good order,—so that in the event of any interruption taking place, they might sustain as little loss as possible.

"On the 24th May the work of capture commenced, and continued, with unfeeling rigor, until the entire rightful and legitimate population of the country were divested of house and home, and reduced to a state of abject poverty. In most cases, Vol. IV.—No. 25.

the humane injunctions of the commanding general were disregarded. The captors sometimes drove the people with whooping and hallowing, like cattle through rivers, allowing them no time even to take off their shoes and stockings. Many, when arrested, were not so much as permitted to gather up their clothes. The scenes of distress exhibited at Ross's Landing defy all description. On the arrival there of the Indians, the horses brought by some of them were demanded by the commissioners of Indian property, to be given up for the purpose of being sold. The owners refusing to give them up,—men, women, children and horses were driven promiscuously into one large pen, and the horses taken out by force, and cried off to the highest bidder, and sold for almost nothing.

"Then came the shipping off to the west. The agent endeavored to induce the people to go into the boats voluntarily; but none would agree to go. The agent then struck a line through the camp;—the soldiers rushed in and drove the devoted victims into the boats, regardless of the cries and agonies of the poor helpless sufferers. In this cruel work, the most painful separations of families occurred.—Children were sent off and parents left, and so of other relations. But I am obliged to break off, or I shall lose the present conveyance. Next mail I will continue."

EXPLORING SQUADRON. The Norfolk Herald of Wednesday, states that the exploring squadron is for ready sea, and will depart with the first fair wind; to-day, if it should offer. The officers are all on board, and in fine spirits, elated with anticipations of the peaceful triumphs, not less worthy of the wreath of fame than those of "grim visaged war," which await the successful results of scientific research, achieved with greater peril and hardship; and admitting the truth of the old adage, that "a bad beginning will have a good ending," they have a glorious prospect of success to their expedition.

The squadron now rides gallantly abreast of Fort Monroe, in the following order: sloop of war Vincennes, lieut. Wilkes, commanding the squadron; ship Relief, lieut. Long; sloop of war Peacock, lieut. Hudson; brig Porpoise, lieut. Ringgold; schr. Flying Fish, passed midshipman Knox; and schr. Sea Gull, passed midshipman Reid. The schrs. are pilot boat built, and of the rise of 100 tons. The sloops of war are nearly on the peace establishment, shewing only eight guns each.

THE FRENCH SHIP ALEXANDRE. We learn officially that the minister of Marine, at Paris, has received by Telegraph at Bordeaux full confirmation of the suspicions entertained towards Marsaud, the soi-disant captain of the ship Alexandre, for the crime of barratry, for which this ship was detained and the captain imprisoned at Newport.

The conduct of the French authorities in the United States in this affair has been fully approved of, and the minister has given his entire assent to the measures taken by the consular agent at Newport to arrest Marsaud, and as an evidence of this approbation has confirmed Mr. Fawcett Genraud in the rank of Vice consul, previously conferred upon him by the consul general, Mr. La Forrest, at New York. [N. Y. Star.]

[We have on file a detailed account of the proceedings at Newport in this case, and will publish it as soon as we can make room for it. Ed. Reg.]

SHAM FIGHT. We learn from the following communication, that there is to be no sham fight between the French vessels of war in the harbor, as was published in the papers.—N. Y. Star.

Translation of a letter from admiral De la Bretonniere, to the consul general of France at New York:

New York, August 18, 1838.

Moniteur Le Consul General: A rumor has been in circulation for some days, that a sham fight would take place on board the Didon frigate on the 16th. I am sorry that publicity has been given to a project, which, from the inconveniences that might result from it, I have thought it advisable to renounce.

The place where the Didon is moored is at the point of intersection where all the lines of communication are constantly taking place between the city and various points of the harbor, and it is in the fear of disturbing or interrupting them, that I have been induced to abandon the intention I had.

I pray you, sir, to give all possible publicity to this determination. Respectfully, &c., (Signed) DE LA BRETONNIERE.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS. The banks represented in the convention held in Philadelphia, on the 23d ult., resumed specie payments on Monday last, the 13th, and their example has been imitated by a number of others. In no instance, we believe, has there been what is called "a run" for specie, and the resumption appears to have occasioned very little excitement. The demands here, as elsewhere, were chiefly for silver change, of which there is now no scarcity. There is now every prospect that business will speedily resume its old channels, so far as the currency is concerned; for it is certain that every solvent bank in the country will pay specie on demand, on or before the 1st day of January next.

The following notices in connection with this subject are interesting:

Resumption in Savannah. From the following official proceedings, it will be seen that the Savannah banks have resolved to resume specie payments on the first of October next. It is believed that all the banks in Georgia will resume on that day. The Georgian says: "We are informed that the banks of Savannah would resume instantly, but that it is deemed an act of courtesy, and sheer justice, to give timely notice to the banks in the interior, of their contemplated movements."

Savannah, 6th August, 1838.

At a meeting of the delegates from the different banks in this city to take into consideration the propriety of an early resumption of specie payments, the following measures were proposed, and unanimously adopted:

The banks of Savannah will resume specie payments on the first day of October next, and invite the banks of the interior to do so likewise.

The banks of Savannah will receive the bills of all the country or interior banks in good credit on deposit, or in payment of debts, but not re-issue them, provided such banks, (except those of Augusta,) agree to redeem their balances in this city, every fortnight, with city or northern funds at par, or specie; and that such agreement shall be consummated by such banks with the banks of the city, on or before the first day of September next.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolutions be furnished to the several banks in this state.

W. B. Bulloch, president Bank of the state of Georgia.

W. W. Gordon, president Central Railroad and Banking company.

John C. Nicoll, pres't pro. tem. Planter's Bank.

P. Houston, president pro. tem. Marine and Fire Insurance Bank.

B. E. Hand, president pro. tem. Branch Bank Darien.

The western banks. The Lexington, Kentucky, Intelligencer of the 7th instant says: "We understand that the Northern bank of Kentucky has held a correspondence with the banks of Kentucky, Ohio, Illinois, and Indiana, on the subject of resuming specie payments. All have been heard from except the banks of Indiana, and all concur in the propriety of resuming on the 18th instant. We further learn that the Northern bank is now prepared to pay all demands against it in specie."

The Louisville Journal of the 8th instant says: "We are authorized to announce, that the banks in this state (Kentucky) will resume specie payments on next Monday, the 18th instant. The banks of Ohio will resume on the same day. Those of Indiana and Illinois will, it is understood, resume on the same day, or in four or five days after. There is no reason to suppose that resumption will produce any pressure in this region. On the other hand there is reason to believe that the measure will bring relief."

Resumption in Ohio. The Cincinnati Whig of the 8th inst. says—All of our city banks commenced paying specie for all their notes, yesterday.

We do not learn that any unusual demand was made for it, or that the resumption created any special excitement in the city. It was effected without any parade, and as a matter of course.

We are truly gratified that Cincinnati has led the way in the west in the resumption, and that our banks prove their ample preparation and ability to pay specie, by anticipating the day agreed upon by the banks in the state, by full a week.

We imagine, now that all the banks pay specie, no one will care to demand it, unless for a special purpose.

Resumption in Philadelphia. The banks in Philadelphia resumed specie payments for all their liabilities on Monday, in due course. Remarking upon the subject, the Philadelphia Herald says: There was nothing like "a run" upon the banks for specie. The calls were most numerous at the U. States Bank. The reason of this is found in the fact that the city certificates of loan—that is, small bills, are now redeemable in specie at that bank. The whole amount drawn out of the bank was about eighteen thousand dollars—about one half of which was for city certificates. One individual drew out one hundred dollars in specie, but finding it heavy and cumbersome, came back before he had got fairly into the street, and asked for a hundred-dollar bill in exchange for it.

Tennessee banks. The Nashville Whig of the 5th instant, announces that the banks of that city will resume on or before the first day of January; and the probability is that that day will be formally fixed upon and officially announced on the return of the presidents of the Planters' and Union Banks from the east.

The District banks resumed payment on Monday.

Boston banks. The Boston papers of Saturday contain the official notification that the banks of that city would resume specie payments in full on Monday, the 18th.

The resumption in Philadelphia is thus noticed in the U. S. Gazette of yesterday:

Specie payments. Yesterday was a memorable day to this city, and perhaps we may say, throughout the union. The resumption of specie payments by the banks was without commotion, without injury to themselves, and without inconvenience to the mercantile part of the community. Much anxiety has been felt as to the effect which the resumption was to have upon the specie funds of the banks, and we accordingly took some pains to ascertain the state of business shortly before the time of closing the banks for the day; and we are happy to state that there was not in any of the banks where we inquired, the least reason for believing that any unkindness of feeling was indulged by the community. The demands for specie were few and light, confined, as it was evident, to the wants which the community felt for change. The bank of the United States, it was thought, would feel the pressure upon the specie the most severely, but even there, nothing was seen to lead any one to believe that a run was attempted. The whole amount of specie paid out was short of seventeen thousand dollars, of which between eight and nine thousand were for corporation notes, principally of the denomination of one dollar. The largest sum demanded was three hundred dollars, and nearly the whole amount paid out was in small sums of from one to ten dollars.

We heard in the course of the morning, that certain persons having a few dollars in U. S. Bank notes, demanded and received specie therefor, which they took to the brokers in the expectation of gaining three per cent., and were mortified and astonished to learn that the very circumstance which enabled them to receive silver for their paper, rendered that paper as valuable as silver. This probably checked a small run.

It was reported yesterday morning, that large demands from New York were to be made upon the Philadelphia banks for specie. The demands came, and the United States Bank, in settlement of balances, gave the New Yorkers a check upon New York for the whole amount, say about half a million—not a dollar of specie changed place. We congratulate the community upon this state of things.

The New York Express, second edition of Monday afternoon, has the following paragraph touching the last new bank:

We stated in yesterday's paper, that Messrs. Alsop & Griswold had made a deposit of stock, in compliance with the new law relative to banking. The facts, to be more explicit, are, that Richard Alsop, of Philadelphia, and George Griswold, of this city, have deposited $200,000 in stock, and taken a certificate from the county clerk, authorizing them to bank under the general banking law, taking the name of the United States bank at New York,—but though the name of the United States Bank is taken, it is stated to us by one of the gentlemen, that it is an individual concern of their own, and that no other persons are interested. The name was considered preferable to any other and therefore was taken. These gentlemen are well known for their wealth, industry, and experience in business—we have no doubt they will conduct their new concern, with skill and advantage to the public, as well as themselves. Thus it appears while companies are forming, two gentlemen have stepped forward and at once commenced operations.

The annexed paragraph on the same subject, from the Journal of Commerce, is rather at variance with the foregoing, on the point of proprietorship:

Mr. Biddle's branch. George Griswold, esq. of this city, and Richard Alsop, esq. of Philadelphia, have deposited in the proper office the requisite certificate for a bank of one hundred thousand dollars capital; not two hundred thousand as reported in some papers. The bank is to be called "The Bank of the United States in New York." This is understood to be only a legal method of introducing the proposed branch of the Pennsylvania bank of the United States. The amount of capital mentioned in the certificate, is of course only suited to accomplish this purpose, and is no indication of the real strength of the institution.

Resumption in Baltimore. From the "Patriot" of Tuesday. As mentioned in our last, the day fixed upon for the formal and general resumption of specie payments, passed in Baltimore almost unnoticed. The call for specie at the banks, very little if at all exceeded the accustomed call for change, in specie paying times, for the ordinary business transactions. A ten or five, and occasionally two or three city corporation dollar bills, presented for the purpose of getting small change, was in a general way the amount of the "offerings" at the several banks, in this city, yesterday. It is in fact altogether probable that the banks in Baltimore will find themselves in possession of a larger amount of coin at the end of the week of resumption, than they had at the beginning—and that, as the public know, was abundant for all useful purposes. It is not anticipated, therefore, that the act of resumption can, in these latitudes, produce any stricture in the money market. Thanks to the past prudence of dealers and bankers, there have been no pretentious expansions with us, and there are therefore no painful contractions necessary.

Resumption in Virginia. The Richmond Whig of the 14th inst. says: "The banks in this city have for some weeks past substantially resumed—paying out whatever specie was called for. There is however, now that it can be had, no extra demand for specie."

IMPORTANT FROM FLORIDA. The following items of painful intelligence reached us by yesterday's southern express mail:

The following letter, from our fellow citizen col. James Gadsden, says the Tallahassee Floridian of the 4th inst. gives an account of another horrid murder committed by savages near Bailey's Mills, a few miles from col. G.'s, entirely within the frontier border. An express to the governor, received on Thursday, states that two Indian arrows were found in the breast of a small girl, one of the victims. One of the arrows was brought up by the express, which we saw. It is about three feet in length—the barb of iron about 2 1/2 inches long and one inch in width, thin and sharp at the point.

Wednesday morning, Aug. 1, 1838.

To the editor of the Floridian:

Sir: The early part of last evening, Mr. Singletary, his wife and two children were shockingly murdered in this neighborhood. But one of the family, a girl about 5 years of age, miraculously escaped, to tell the melancholy tidings of her parents and sisters. She says the deed was perpetrated by Indians, accompanied by one or two colored persons. Major Dearborn, with volunteers from the neighborhood, is in the search for the murderers, but as they had a whole night in advance to escape, it is not probable that their trail can be followed, or the party be overtaken. Comments are unnecessary.

The contest waging in Florida with the Seminoles has assumed so erratic and guerilla a character, as to require the vigilance and activity of every individual to bring it to a close. No one can anticipate whose house or whose family may be the next victims. Yours, JAS. GADSDEN.

From the Jacksonville Courier of the 9th inst. The following is an extract from a letter, to the editor, giving further particulars of the late Indian murders in Georgia, an account of which appeared in our paper of Thursday last.

"Fort Williams, (E. F.) July 31st, 1838. Sir: The express has just arrived from Kittle creek, and it appears that the Indians are commencing their career in Georgia. I have received a letter from an officer of our regiment, who was an eye witness to this melancholy fact."

[EXTRACT.]

"Camp Wilds, (Geo.) July 28d, 1838.

"Forty-five miles northwest of Centerville, on Sunday morning, a man came full speed into camp with the cry of Indians. I asked where. He said about 5 miles off, that he had just removed a family who heard the report of guns and the screams of people. We were in our saddles in a few moments, and under full speed to the spot where the alarm originated; and O, God! of all the scenes I ever saw, or ever wish to see, presented itself to view. On reaching the ground, a man, wife, and four children of his own, and two of his own sister's had fallen by the Indians. Three children of the six were alive when we reached the spot, one about 3 years old had been shot through the abdomen, and lay asleep on the dead mother, another about 10 rods from the mother. But, O, horrid to tell, I found a fine young lady of 18, shot in two places and dirked in another, with about 20 hogs around her, and she yet alive and had her senses perfectly. This was the most trying time I had ever seen. I gave her cold water which she wished much, and remained with her as long as I could, till obliged to go in search of the Indians. We left a guard to protect them, and administer to them all that they could, but all expired in less than twenty minutes after we left.

The Indians scattered in all directions, and it was some time before we could find the trail; we followed them about 25 miles, and until further pursuit could not be had, having then gone into the Okafanoka, as far as white men could well go. We left our horses and waded nearly to our hips in mud for two miles, which was as much as we could stand. We returned that night, found all buried, eight in number, in one grave. We returned to camp, then camp —, but now camp Wilds, that being the name of the murdered family. Two children escaped—one of them says a white man was with the Indians, and caught him—asked him why he did not run; the boy told him he would, if he would let him go—which the man did. Said now damn you, run, and so he escaped. On our return we found all the families had removed to our encampment.

We are making arrangements to scour the country about Fort Fanning and its vicinity. In haste, the express waiting, with respect, your obedient servant, N. DARLING, lieut. 2d dragons.

To the editor of the Courier.

Correspondence N. Y. American. Camp in E. Florida, July 19th, 1838.

Sir: Unfortunate Florida has again become the scene of those perilous excitements, by which, for so long a period, her citizens have been agitated. It would seem that the Seminoles, in whatever degree diminished in number, or humbled in pride, are far from being conquered. The citizens in the vicinity of the Santa Fee and Suwanee are under the necessity of abandoning their crops and retiring to the forts, or of incurring the imminent risk of being murdered on their plantations. The son of a Mr. Gwinn came recently into camp saying, that the Indians had attacked his father's house, and he had "left father fighting them." Capt. Dade, with his company of the 2d dragons, immediately galloped to the spot, which was but a few miles above, on the bank of the Santa Fee; but on arriving there, the warfare, such as it had been, was over. The house was deserted. A trail of blood, leading from the yard to a neighboring field, was pursued, and, after passing over a fence, the father was discovered lying dead a few paces beyond. This fence he must have climbed after he was wounded, as the marks of blood upon it corresponded with two wounds which he had received in each thigh. The Indians evidently pursued him to the fence, and from there fired on him again, since, from the nature of a third and fatal wound, he must have fallen upon the spot where it was received.

On examining the premises further, the lifeless and disfigured remains of Mrs. Gwinn were discovered contiguous to those of her husband. She was not scalped, but was made the victim of a cruelty deeper and more refined. The wretches had dashed out the brains of her infant, and placed the mangled innocent in its mother's arms. There she lay, the murdered mother, fondling with the icy embrace of death her murdered child.

The remains of these unfortunate victims of savage cruelty were hastily collected and deposited in a common grave, after which capt. D. resumed a line of march, pursuing the trail of the relentless and flying foe. Success seemed to smile upon the efforts of himself and men, until they had traversed the distance of twelve miles, when every vestige of the trail suddenly disappeared. It was vain that the horsemen rode around the spot which bore the last impression of the moccasins; the instinct of the red man once more proved a successful antagonist to the education of the white. From this spot, as a centre, the hostiles had separated along the different radii of a circle, whose circumference was the surrounding hammock, and the pursuers were under the necessity of returning to camp, bringing with them nothing but the detail of their melancholy and unsuccessful mission.

Yours, &c.

MOUNTED VOLUNTEER.

"The war nearly ended." Within the last ten days we have heard of the murder of not less than half a dozen of our citizens by the Indians, and yet we are told "the war is nearly ended." It is true a number of the hostiles have been captured and removed out of the country, but there are numbers yet left sufficient to baffle all the efforts of our troops. Our citizens have no security on the frontier, and they are either compelled to abandon their homes, and suffer starvation, or remain with almost certainty of being massacred by the savages. Many of our frontier settlers would gladly avail themselves of the scanty pittance for their families which would be received by volunteer service in the army, but their propositions are met with the reply that there are troops in service already sufficient. The best evidence we have to disprove this, the fact of the frequent depredations and murders committed by the savages, and is, we think, sufficiently conclusive. The government have mostly withdrawn their supplies, and commenced calculating the expense of protecting the defenceless citizen, as though the value of human life could be estimated by the pitiful calculation of dollars and cents. For the honor of our country and the cause of humanity, it is time this course was abandoned.

In relation to the fugitive Creeks, it is true several companies of regular troops have been in constant service since their escape; neither have they their officers lacked energy or industry—they are scouring the country on foot, carrying their provisions on their backs, till they have worn out their clothing and almost their persons—and failed nearly two months in discovering scarcely any trace of the runaways. Their recent discovery, on the banks of the Ocklocknee, prove, however, that the Indians have been in the country, from which nothing but a very superior force to that now in the field will be successful in dislodging them. We receive such policy to be most wretched and certainly most expensive. The war is protracted; the country laid waste—our citizens murdered, and their property scattered to the four winds of heaven—our national character disgraced at home and abroad, and our whole army successfully foiled in all its attempts to remove the most worthless of all the Indian tribes from one of her territories. How long such a state of affairs will continue, heaven only knows. [Tallahassee Floridian of July 13.]

FROM THE CHEROKEE COUNTRY. Athens, Tennessee, July 25. General Scott and colonel Whiting visited our town last week, and we had the pleasure of an interesting interview with the general. He contradicts the rumors that have been put in circulation of the great sickness and mortality amongst the Indians. There is not more sickness amongst the Indians than might ordinarily take place amongst any other people under the same circumstances. The Indians are encamped over a space of about forty square miles; are well provided for, with wholesome provisions, good physicians and medicines, and conduct themselves very discreetly. A few of the North Carolina Indians at first concealed themselves in the mountains, but they are now all coming in. The general speaks well of the chiefs. He says they have used their influence in procuring the Indians to come in and submit peaceably to the terms of the treaty, and have also aided him in maintaining good order in the encampments. [Journal.]

TREASURY CIRCULAR.

To collectors and receivers of public money.

Treasury department, July 14, 1838.

Congress having adjourned without making any additional provisions for the security or safe keeping of the public money, it is obvious that in the present state of the laws and the banks, an unusual responsibility devolves upon those who collect the revenues of the general government. The difficulty in obtaining suitable depositories for it, as well as in transferring or paying it out conveniently, without the aid of that further legislation, the necessity and character of which have been fully explained in public communications from this department, imposed on all collectors and receivers the duty of extraordinary vigilance and care.

The president expects that exertions corresponding to the occasion will cheerfully be made by every officer, and that no effort will be spared to have all the laws, as well as the regulations and instructions of the treasury department, scrupulously enforced. Accuracy in your accounts; punctuality in returns; promptness in your deposits and payments, and entire forbearance to use any part of the public funds for private purposes, will, it is hoped, characterize the whole class of collecting officers hereafter. In the present condition of things, if any departure should unfortunately occur, it will be much regretted; and however unpleasant the task, an exemplary and severe notice of the irregularity will become necessary, in order to secure the great public interests involved in the subject. The duty on the part of the public officers to abstain from the employment of the public money for private advantage is so apparent, that no excuse whatever for it can be deemed admissible.

Respectfully yours,

LEVI WOODBURY,
Secretary of the treasury.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO. It is stated that Mr. Martinez, the Mexican minister, has been detained at New Orleans, waiting for full powers from his government to negotiate with ours, concerning a settlement of all points in dispute, by mediation. It is only within a few days that the credentials were received. The minister is expected forthwith at Washington. The king of Prussia, it is said, has been thought of as mediator.

NEW GRANADA. From the Journal of Commerce. Gen. Francisco de Paula Santander, ex-president of New Granada, is now a member of the house of representatives of the same republic, and occupies the station of speaker.

The commission appointed to carry into effect the objects of the convention of 23d December, 1834, for a division of the national debt of the old republic of Colombia, was installed at Bogota on the 25th of April. It consists of Sr. Santos Michelena on the part of Venezuela, Sr. Francisco Marcos on the part of Ecuador, and Sr. Rufino Cuervo on the part of New Granada; these three republics being the fragments into which the old republic of Colombia, after contracting the debt, was divided.

A decree was issued at Bogota on the 25th of April, granting a full and free pardon to all persons who, since the publication of the constitution, and prior to the 1st of January last, were implicated in any conspiracy, treason, or sedition; and this without reference to the question whether they had left the country, or were in process of trial, or actually suffering the penalties of condemnation. The same pardon is extended to deserters from the army and navy. In order to avail themselves of this pardon, however, the parties interested, if within the limits of the republic, were required to present themselves to the governor of the province in which they were, within 40 days after the publication of the decree in said province; and if out of the republic, within six months from the 26th of April, to the governor of the province in which they should first land on returning to their country.

COURT OF INQUIRY. Maj. gen. Gaines has assembled a court of inquiry, by request of maj. Crossman, at St. Louis, to enquire into some alleged misconduct of the last named gentleman. On the 13th ult. the court met, but adjourned over to the 31st, in consequence of a dispute as to rank between majors Hitchcock and Noel, who were to compose a part of the court.

St. Louis, August 2. Owing to the personal difficulty which occurred on the 31st ult. and mentioned in our paper of yesterday, as having transpired at the adjournment of the court, major Crossman was considered as under an arrest, and until this is disposed of by a court-martial, no further proceedings can be had in the court of inquiry. The court, therefore, adjourned over to some future day. [Rep.]

PROMOTIONS IN THE BRITISH ARMY AND NAVY. From the Army and Navy Chronicle. The accession of a sovereign to the throne in any of the governments of Europe, is usually attended with the creation of a number of new peers, and the promotion of officers in the army and navy. Thus we see, that after the coronation of queen Victoria, this custom was not forgotten. Besides the knights, baronets, earls and dukes, in whom our readers take little interest, the promotions in the army and navy were almost as numerous as the aggregate of similar ranks (where we have similar ranks) in our service.

BREVET PROMOTIONS IN THE BRITISH ARMY. (Including the royal marines and engineers)

	Army.	R. Eng.	Marines.
Captains to be majors,	80	27	2
Majors to be lieut. colonels,	80	1	0
Lieut. col's to be colonels,	46	4	0
Colonels to be maj. generals,	16	5	0
Maj. gen's to be lt. gen's,*	42	5	0
Lt. generals to be generals,	17	2	2

Total, 121 44 4

*Among these were Sir John Macdonald, K. C. B., adjutant general of the British army, and Sir John Colbourne, G. C. B., commander-in-chief of the military forces in Canada.

PROMOTIONS IN THE BRITISH NAVY.

Mates to be lieutenants,	60
Lieutenants to be commanders,	50
Commanders to be captains,	35
Captains to be rear admirals of the blue,	12
R. admirals of the blue to be R. A. of the white,	10
R. admirals of the white to be R. A. of the red,	6
R. admirals of the red to be vice A. of the blue,	4
V. admirals of the blue to be V. A. of the white,	4
V. admirals of the white to be V. A. of the red,	4
V. admirals of the red to be admirals of the blue,	3

Total number promoted, 183

Some of the captains in the royal marines, it is said, have served from 33 to 37 years! Hopeful chances for their reaching the highest grades.

THE POTTAWATTAMIES. An Indian council with the Pottawattamies of the Wabash, was held by colonel Pepper at Plymouth, Indiana, July 17th. Sangoaw, the chief, expressed, in very explicit terms, their unwillingness to quit for the west. Sangoaw said:

My chiefs have all heard and considered upon what you told us, and you shall hear what they now say. When you asked my chiefs an expression of their opinion relative to removal, they were glad, and appointed this day to give you an answer.

My father—You have asked my chiefs and all present to go west of the Mississippi—they have all told me to say they would not go. The Great Spirit desires us to live in peace with all men. We want the United States to pay us our annuity, and we don't know but that we will get our land back again, and this is the reason my chiefs are not willing to go west of the Mississippi. We were glad when you mentioned our great father the president. He does not wish to be at variance with any one, and neither do we.

My father—We heard what you said yesterday, and you have heard what we have just said. We do not want you to say any more on the subject, for if you do, we will not listen to it.

The Indians then immediately arose and departed from the council.

BLACK HAWK. The fourth of July was celebrated at Fort Madison, (Iowa.) Among the invited guests, says the Fort Madison Patriot, the old Indian chieftain, Black Hawk, stood pre-eminent. He was decently clothed in citizen's dress, and we have never seen him show to better advantage. During the interview he made a short speech, which will be found below. Messrs. Hall and Brierly, two good interpreters, were present and took notes. By their politeness we are enabled to lay before our readers this speech, which is a correct translation, verbatim et literatim.

After the regular toasts were drank, the following was offered by one of the company:

Our illustrious guest, Black Hawk—May his declining years be as calm and serene as his previous life has been boisterous and full of warlike incidents. His attachment and present friendship to his white brethren fully entitle him to a seat at our festive board.

After the above toast was drank Black Hawk arose and made the following remarks:

Black Hawk's speech. It has pleased the Great Spirit that I am here to-day—I have eaten with my white friends. The earth is our mother—we are now on it—with the Great Spirit above us—It is good. I hope we are all friends here. A few winters ago I was fighting against you—I did wrong perhaps, but that is past—it is buried—let it be forgotten.

Rock river was a beautiful country—I liked my towns, my cornfields and the home of my people. I fought for it. It is now yours—keep it as we did—it will produce you good crops.

I thank the Great Spirit that I am now friendly with my white brethren—we are together—we have eaten together—we are friends—it is his wish and mine. For your friendship I thank you.

I was once a great warrior—I am now poor. Ke-o-kuk has been the cause of my present situation—but I do not attach blame to him. I am now old. I have looked upon the Mississippi since I have been a child. I love the great river. I have dwelt upon its banks from the time I was an infant. I look upon it now. I shake hands with you, and as it is my wish, I hope you are my friends.

SIoux AND CHIPPEWAS. The Detroit Daily Advertiser of the 4th inst., mentions that a letter from Fort Snelling to a gentleman in that city, dated July 12th, states that the Chippewas and Sioux had a brush quite recently on the Chippewa river, which terminated in the death of one Sioux and five Chippewas. One of the latter was roasted and eaten by the former. The above letter also observes that a severe thunder storm occurred at Fort Snelling on the 9th, in which a man (name not given) was killed. The rain fell over five inches on the level.

LIGHT HOUSES, &c. From the Army and Navy Chronicle. Under the provisions of the act, approved July 7, 1838, "making appropriations for building light houses, light boats, beacon lights, buoys, and making surveys, for the year 1838," the coast of the United States has been divided into eight districts, and the following named officers of the navy assigned to the duty of making the necessary examinations, surveys, and reports:

Capt. L. Rousseau, from Sabine river to Key West.
Com. E. P. Kennedy, from Key West to Norfolk.
Lieut. W. D. Porter, from Norfolk to New York.
Lieut. G. M. Bache, from New York to Newport.
Lieut. E. W. Carpenter, from Newport to Boston.
Lieut. T. J. Manning, from Boston to Eastport.
Lieut. C. T. Platt, northern lake boundary, east of Detroit.
Lieut. J. T. Homans, do do west of Detroit.

GOVERNOR KENT AND THE BOUNDARY. The Bangor Whig brings us the following important information relative to the intentions of the governor of Maine. Mr. Kent is in earnest, and the bitterest of his opponents will by and by be compelled to do justice both to the wisdom and policy of his administration. "We understand," says the Whig, "that the executive government of the state are taking measures to have every thing in readiness to run the north-east boundary line, according to the treaty of '38, on the first of next month. We suppose the course taken will be, to appoint commissioners to proceed to run the line. If they meet with no resistance from the provincial authorities, well and good; if they do, measures will be taken to protect the commissioners by a competent military force. Already the attention of the adjutant general has been invited to the subject."

[Boston Atlas.]

GAMBLING ON THE WESTERN WATERS. This is a most important as well as a most alarming subject; and we trust the authorities of Illinois and other western states will enact such laws as shall suppress a demoralizing vice, which, as will be seen, too often leads to assassination and murder. The Grafton (Ill.) Backwoodsman, has an article on the prevalence of gambling on board the steamers in the western rivers. It records the death of several individuals in an unaccountable manner, and the following extract shows a state of morals almost too depraved for belief.

"Numbers have come to the west, taken passage on board of a boat, and never been heard of again. In repeated instances within the last few years, letters have been addressed to us from a distance, with anxious inquiries for a friend, from whom no tidings had come since he was on the point of embarking on board of a boat. It was feared that he had fallen overboard, or died on the passage, and we were implored in the most affecting terms to seek intelligence of his fate. Our earnest endeavors in most instances have proved unavailing. Could the deep and turbid waters of our rivers reveal their secrets, they would tell but too often the long silence of those absent friends. The midnight gambling, the fierce quarrel, the dirk, the sullen plunge of the ghastly corse, with heavy weights attached, all follow in quick succession, and with the unerring certainty that effect follows cause." [Phil. Inq.]

LIBERIA. We copy the following contradiction, from the Liberia Herald, of a story that has been industriously circulated in the country, by the enemies of colonization, causing the impression that the race of color from America soon become extinct in Africa:

[Nat. Intel.]

"We hear that a report is circulating in America that there are very few children born here, and of the few that are born, none live. Now, this stale, worn-out, hackneyed, barefaced, up and down lie, which was first broached by an American ship captain who never told truth, but by mistake, we supposed had ceased to be circulated. But it appears we were mistaken. It is yet said that the former habits of the people were so licentious that none of their children live. This falsehood is too gross and unreasonable to require a serious refutation. If it were necessary, an accurate classification of the ages of the inhabitants of the colony would give as large a number of living children born in the colony, as perhaps any population in the world, of equal number. The rice tub of many a father declares, in language the most unequivocal, that the above is the grossest slander. The first child that was born here is now alive, and James Branden is his name, and sixteen years is his age, and a sturdier little urchin there is not to be found. How abashed would the slanderer be, if he is capable of blushing, if he could only see the said James Branden baring his head to the scorching rays of a vertical sun, and throwing off the heat as indignantly as we do the slanders, back in the teeth of those that attempt to heap them upon him."

STEAMBOAT RACING. The Cleveland Herald of the 31st ultimo, has the following statement respecting a recent steamboat race on Lake Erie. We publish it in order that travellers may avoid taking passage in boats the commanders of which are so reckless of human life.

*American House,
Cleveland, July 31, 1838.*

Messrs. Editors: I wish to avail myself of the columns of your paper, for a word of caution to the travelling public.

After the many and melancholy disasters that have of late occurred in our steamboat navigation, I should suppose that respect for their own reputation, would be a sufficient guarantee for the future discreet conduct of the officers of our steamboats.

But not so. The steamers Buffalo, captain Allen, and Erie, captain Titus, left Buffalo, yesterday morning, about 10 o'clock, the Erie ahead. The Buffalo soon overtook her, and the two boats ran side and side for some time, and the officers of the Erie all the while changing baggage, ordering the passengers hither and thither to trim the boat—consuming pitch, and afterwards grease, and making every possible effort to keep ahead of the Buffalo, but without success.

Again at Erie, the two boats started bow and bow. The Erie got aground in coming out, and the Buffalo kept ahead until dark, when the Erie again came up, and the boats continued side by side for another hour. The Erie passed while the Buffalo stopped at Grand River to wood, and in order to save time, captain Titus of the Erie landed the passengers for Cleveland at two o'clock this morning at the Beacon light on the end of the pier! Men, women, and children were put off at the end of a narrow pier, 1,200 feet from land—surf breaking over its entire length, and this in the darkness of two o'clock at night! One passenger, an invalid on crutches, was obliged to wait there until morning because unable to hobble over the slippery planking, the pier being too narrow to admit of a carriage taking him away.

Such conduct on the part of the captain of any boat is highly reprehensible, and the public ought to be cautioned to avoid such boats and officers as show themselves so reckless of life, and regardless of public sentiment.

Yours, respectfully,

C. A. LORD,

Of N. Y. city, and passenger on board the Erie.

PENAL SYSTEM OF PENNSYLVANIA. The advantages of the system of punishment adopted in Pennsylvania, of combining solitary confinement with labor, are thus set forth by the editor of the Philadelphia Gazette.

We stated the other day, that we believed this system to be the best in the world, in all its main features—best not for the body only, but for the purification of heart and spirit, through "the castigation and severe reproof," of repentant thoughts. The views of Dr. Leibniz on this matter are written with a knowing hand. With him, we conceive uninterrupted solitude and labor of equal importance for the following reasons, among others, to which we should be pleased to see awarded the widest currency and acceptance.

1. It prevents effectually contamination, and it alone can effectually prevent it. It allows, therefore, the offender, at any rate, not to grow worse.

2. It is essentially both a stern and a humane punishment; stern, because solitude is stern in its character and especially so to men, who nearly without exception have spent their lives in boisterous intercourse with fellow criminals; and humane, because it is a privation rather than an infliction. It is mild, and acknowledged as such by the offenders themselves after the first irksomeness of solitude has passed, especially if they have passed previously through several other prisons or penitentiaries. Solitary confinement at labor is decidedly a calm punishment.

3. It is emphatically graduable and accommodable as no other species of punishment. The offender, undisturbed by others, or by new indications of punishment, receives from solitude just that impression which his peculiar case or disposition calls for or is capable of.

4. Advice and exhortation can be adopted to each single case in no other punishment, so precisely and justly like moral medicine, as in solitary confinement. The religious adviser, assistant and comforter can enter the solitary cell at any time, and, as all religious conversations with a convict must have much of the character of a confession, the undisturbed cell, overheard by no one, is the very place for this converse. In no other penitentiaries can this religious instruction be given effectually.

5. Solitude is the weightiest moral agent to make the thoughtless thoughtful—to reflect, and the only one sufficiently powerful for the criminally thoughtless. Solitude has been sought by the wisest and best of mankind, to prepare themselves for great moral tasks; it is the only means to bring the offender to a more rational course. Labor united with solitude gives steadiness to the thought, and makes it possible to support solitude with ease for those who have not been accustomed to abstract reflection before.

6. It is the only punishment known, which does not irritate anew, does not challenge opposition in mind or body; for it is the only punishment which can dispense with the whip or other means of coercing to obedience, because it takes away the opportunity of offending anew, with the exception of such offences as destroying instruments or materials, for which again the more negative disciplinary means of withholding labor or diminishing rations are sufficient.

7. It makes the lonely prisoner love labor as faithfully as the dearest companion—a companion who will be with him for life.

8. It does not deaden shame by exposure; on the contrary, it shames many into repentance by its absence of all harshness, as is frequently found. It does not inflict on those who have a strong sense of shame, the additional punishment of exposure.

9. It does not expose the convict to acquaintance, even by night, with other criminals, who out of the prison form a very compact fraternity, to escape from the clutches of which form the most difficult obstacle in the way of resuming an honest life. The history of innumerable convicts proves this. When ever re-committed convicts are asked, why, simply on the score of worldly prudence, they had not abstained from a second crime, they invariably answer: "You do not know these things; a man leaving the prison, very often thinks, you shall not catch me again. He begins to work, when old acquaintances will come, induce one to drink and talk, and all will end by agreeing upon a new job. If one resists, he is ridiculed or threatened with exposure." No tiger's fang is so firmly buried in his victims flesh, as that of criminal acquaintance in the life of an offender.

10. It contradicts for the first time, by irresistible fact, the convicts in their belief that society is at war with them, in which they please themselves so much, that frequently they argue as if they were the hunted, the pursued, the injured.

11. The punishment has, therefore, an elevating character. It touches the man in the convict, not the brute. The convict sees himself treated as one on whom far different things than stripes can have an effect.

12. It is, perhaps, the only punishment which allows us to select men for superintendents of prisons in whom sternness does not overbalance kindness.

13. It trains the convict in cleanliness, and paying attention to the neatness of his dwelling; it imparts an attention to the room, which becomes the incipient stage of love of home, with those who have lived in slouchy disregard of it. It is an old English saying, full of meaning, "cleanliness is next to godliness." A strictly cleanly man of the laboring classes will never be much exposed to offend against the laws, as a disorderly, dirty person. Cleanliness, a highly important ingredient of national civilization, is equally such in political reform.

OHIO CANAL COMMERCE. The editor of the Cleveland Herald has been politely favored with the following exhibit of the canal business at Cleveland for the month of July.

Collector's office, Cleveland, Aug. 2, 1838.

Of property on which toll is charged by weight, there arrived at Cleveland, by way of the canal, during the past month, 27,124,725 lbs. During the corresponding month last year, there arrived 25,164,342 lbs.

The following comprise the chief articles of property that arrived during the month, viz:

196,280 bushels	Wheat
31,418 do	Corn
9,938 do	Oats
42,303 barrels	Flour
3,152 do	Pork
937 do	Whiskey
21,648 pounds	Butter
39,349 do	Lard
243,689 do	Bacon
93 hhd.	Tobacco

Of property on which toll is charged by weight, there were cleared from Cleveland, by way of the canal, during the past month, 5,389,683 lbs. During the corresponding month last year, there were cleared 5,203,773 lbs.

11,107 barrels	Salt
1,278 do	Lake Fish
883,126 pounds	Merchandise
208,522 do	Furniture
101,633 do	Gypsum
818,830 feet	Lumber
670 M.	Shingles

The amount of toll received at this office during the past month is $12,249 84. During the corresponding month last year it was $10,136 87.

D. H. BEARDSLEY, collector.

BEAVER IN VIRGINIA. To the editor of the Richmond Enquirer: As you have obliged me in every request I have made of you, I feel it but an act of justice and courtesy, to give you the information you seem to desire (in a paragraph in your paper of the 8th inst.,) relative to the appearance of the beaver, in the county of Surry, Va. It has long been known that these animals, to some extent, remain in this part of the country—for instance, in 1832 or 3, I was on a visit to my only brother, in the county of Sussex, residing contiguous to the Nottoway river, on the south side. In that year, he had joined a neighbor of his in the cultivation of a part of the estate of the late Dr. Downman of that county. He invited me, upon that occasion, on a particular day, to accompany him to that part of his then growing crop, which was chiefly corn; and upon arriving on the banks of the river aforesaid, he showed me the most ample proof of the existence of the beaver in that water, and innumerable instances of the most perfect paths at which they would come up the bank, pass through the fence, (always at the same place,) and oftentimes penetrate the fields for a quarter of a mile or more. I remember distinctly, that he told me he had several times tried to stop the gap, which he found they passed in at, but never could; although he had been so particular as to have mangled, for that special purpose, hickory rails, and never had known them to fail of being cut in two in the course of two or three nights—particularly, at particular seasons of the year; and "loud and long," I remember, were his complaints of the ravages committed on his corn, at all stages of its growth, by this wonderfully mischievous and subtle animal; for, as he informed me, with all the pains he had taken, in which he had killed several otters and many muskrats, as yet, he had never been able to get a shot at a beaver, though they had been frequently seen. Well, in February of this year, my brother visited me, and I asked him if he had ever killed a beaver? to which, he replied no—but informed me, that a man, a blacksmith by profession, and a "yankee," had removed to the county and settled on the identical land that he then cultivated, and that he had constructed steel traps of his own make, in which he had, up to that time, caught 3 or 4—two of which were of considerable size, much to the gratification of the neighboring farmers. For, to use his own remark, these animals were more dreaded by the neighborhood, near the bank of this river, than was ever the blue-tail hawk by the fond dunghill hen with a brood of chickens. For myself, sir, I am of the opinion that these animals are to be found in many sections of Virginia at this day. New Kent, my native place, for instance, has a bold run a few miles below the court-house, to all time known as the Beaver Dam run—So, also, Goochland and many other of the counties in Virginia, have places thus named. One thing, I assure you, I never passed the point named, in New Kent, since it was first shown me, now 30 odd years, but I thought, if I examined it at all, that I saw signs of the beaver. If therefore, these additional proofs of the existence of that animal, be thought of any service to you, you are at liberty to use them in any way you may see fit—however desultory and crude they may appear. I have but little doubt, that scientific "Benefactor," the editor of the Farmers' Register, Mr. Ruffin, could, if his leisure would permit him, give you many valuable proofs in confirmation of the fact of the existence of the beaver in the "Old Dominion." Yours, very truly,

B. GRAVES.

Richmond, May 9, 1838.

NEW YORK AUCTION DUTIES. The sum paid into the treasury on account of auction duties for the quarter ending June 30, for each of the three last years, has been as follows, viz:

In 1836	$58,948 77
In 1837	22,155 17
In 1838	46,546 77

The duties paid this year are less by $12,402 than in 1836, and greater by $24,391 60 than in 1837, or an increase of 110 per cent.

While the merchandize going up the canals has increased 18 per cent. the duties paid on merchandize sold at auction are greater by 110 per cent. than in 1837, and only 26 per cent. less than in 1836. And while the merchandize sold at auction this year is 26 per cent. less than in 1836, the merchandize going from tide water on the canals is only 5 per cent. less than in 1836. [Argus.]

APPLICATION OF STEAM TO TRADING SHIPS. Mr. Ogden, the American consul at Liverpool, has expressed his conviction, in a letter to a friend in Baltimore, (an extract of which has already appeared in the papers,) that he could place an engine on board of the ship Star, weighing, together with the boilers, from eight to ten tons, propelling the ship at the rate of six knots per hour, with paddle wheels of six feet in diameter, and using not to exceed three tons of coal each day. The expediency of such an application of steam could be better determined by those disposed to examine the subject, by seeing the vessel and knowing the position on board ship, in which Mr. Ogden has proposed to place the machinery.

The ship Star is 600 tons burthen, commanded by captain E. Glover, so long and favorably known to the commercial and travelling community, is lying at the foot of Pine street, now loading to take her departure for New Orleans. She is a noble specimen of the great strength, beauty of construction, and perfection of ship building in this country—the accommodation for passengers offering every inducement of the most luxuriously provided packets. [N. Y. Evening Post.]

FROM THE PACIFIC. The editors of the New York Journal of Commerce have received, by way of Jamaica, Panama papers and letters to the 18th of June, containing advices from Callao to May 9th, and from Mazatlan to April 22d. Lima papers are only to the end of April. From a Panama paper of June 15th, the editors translate the following paragraph:

Panama, June 15th. Near the end of April, the Chilean squadron arrived before Callao, to carry into effect the blockade of that port, as well as Chorrillos and Ancon. The diplomatic agents were notified of the same on the 26th. Up to the 9th of May, the blockading force consisted only of the corvettes Libertad and Valparaiso, the brigs Aguiles and Arequipeno, and two other vessels, whose names we have not yet learned. It was said they were to be reinforced by the Monteagudo and three other vessels. The transports Orbegoso, Hope, Hemosachilena, and an Austrian brig, brought 1000 men, who, it seems, are destined to the department of La Libertad. At what point the rest of the expedition, consisting of 4,000 men are to disembark, is not known. The command of it had been confided to general Bulnes, who was accompanied by the Peruvian generals Gamarra and Lafuente.

It was reported at Lima that the English admiral Ross, who arrived at Valparaiso on the 13th of April, with the ships of the Pacific station, would interpose his good offices to bring about a peace. It was even believed that the British minister, Mr. Menville, and a mission sent from Buenos Ayres, headed by general Guido, were co-operating for the same result.

Correspondence of the Journal of Commerce.

Panama, 18th June.

We have no very fresh news from the south. Our last accounts are the 16th of April from Valparaiso, and 28th from Lima. Callao was blockaded by the Chilean squadron, and preparations were making in Chili to send a strong expedition of about 5,000 men against Peru. It seems that the two republics, Buenos Ayres and Chili, are determined to crush the great power of Santa Cruz—who is represented to have some inclination to make himself emperor. Money was very scarce, and business very dull, both in Lima and Chili, in consequence of the unsettled state of the country.

The British admiral Ross has been appointed to the Pacific station. He arrived at Valparaiso on the 13th, with several commissioners from Buenos Ayres. It is said that he intends to use all his influence to effect some peaceable arrangement between the three governments.

The U. S. schooner Boxer, lieut. Nicholson, arrived here on the 1st from Mazatlan, San Blas, and Acapulco. The Boxer, made a long stay on that coast, to protect American property. She sailed about 22d April from Mazatlan, and saw the American ship congress, of New York, clear out, bound for New York via Valparaiso, where she was to land the supercargo, a Mr. Comstock. She had upwards of two hundred thousand dollars on board. Mazatlan was in a very disturbed state on account of the civil war. The port was blockaded by a small Mexican brig.

The Boxer left at San Blas H. B. M. ship Cleopatra, hon. capt. George Grey. She was to sail about the middle of May, with upwards of three million dollars, for England, via Valparaiso.

United States ship North Carolina was at Callao, where she arrived on the 12th of April from Valparaiso. The Falmouth had sailed for the Intermedios, with Mr. Hodgson, bearer of our treaty.

IMPORTANT DECISION. The Natchez Courier of the 13th July has the following notice of some important legal decisions which have just been made there in the U. S. circuit court.

Two motions for new trials came up to-day before judge Coalter presiding in the circuit court here, and were argued upon the following points.

There were suits brought by the Planters' Bank against separate individuals, endorsers upon promissory notes, discounted, the one by the Planters' bank and the other by the United States branch bank at this place and transferred to the former. The defence set up on the trial at the last term of the court was, that the contracts were void, inasmuch as the banks in discontinuing the notes calculated interest by "Rowlett's interest tables" which divided the year into 12 months of 30 days each, giving it but 360 days, which necessarily gave more interest than the laws allow per annum." That it was therefore a corrupt agreement and the contract consequently void. The plaintiffs' attorney urged that this was the general custom, adopted for mere convenience—that the contract was not intentionally corrupt, but was made in good faith and valid. That moreover the law fixing the rate of interest attached no penalty in case of excess being taken, and that therefore the objection could not extend further than the actual excess, whatever it might be. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the plaintiff.

The motion made for the new trial by judge Montgomery who defended the suits, was simply that the verdicts were "contrary to law and evidence," and he waived an argument on the subject. S. S. Boyd, esq., the attorney for the plaintiffs urged at considerable length before the court this morning, that the verdicts ought not to be set aside.

Judge Coalter sustained the motion, and set aside the judgments upon the ground that the evidence was clear that the interest calculated upon the notes was done by the plaintiffs, knowing that that mode of calculation would give them a fraction over the stipulated terms of interest, allowing the year to contain 365 days. That it was therefore "corrupt" and that the court could not interfere to enforce the conditions of an illegal contract.

The question will, I presume, go to the high court of errors and appeals before a final termination.

THE SACRAMENT NEAR THE HERMITAGE. From the American Presbyterian. Agreeably to the notice previously given, the senior editor of this paper, together with the rev. Mr. Smith, administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, last Sabbath, in the church near the Hermitage.

This church is known, on our Presbyterian records, by the name of Ephesus, and was erected many years since on the domain appertaining to the Hermitage, principally by its venerable proprietor, the ex-president of the United States. It is beautifully located, and though not spacious, or even finished, yet it is a delightful summer temple for the calm and pure worship of God. Such, at least, it seemed to us during the services of the late solemnity. While such seasons are generally the most joyous and elevating which believers can enjoy on earth, the one to which we have alluded afforded more than ordinary interest, because among several interesting accessions to the church, was numbered one peculiarly interesting—we mean the ex-president himself.

It may well be imagined that the scene was thrilling, when this veteran in years, and in the service of his country, professed allegiance to the Sovereign of all worlds, and promised eternal fidelity to Him who demands the homage of all created intelligences. How could it be otherwise? A form of no common appearance for inspiring veneration, was standing before the assembly. It was the form of one who had been long known as amongst the most distinguished of his country's generals—who had often perilled his life in her defence, and who, under God, had achieved one of the most memorable victories recorded in the annals of modern warfare. Nor is this all. The same venerable form had filled, as a statesman, the highest seat in the government of his country, and had been clothed with the highest civic honors which that country, in all its unequalled freedom and independence, could bestow.

He had passed through a life of most eventful scenes—he had returned to his own Hermitage—to the tomb of his beloved consort—to the few remaining friends of his former days—to some of the surviving children of these friends, and in their view was about to pledge himself to become a soldier in a new army, and to engage in the performance of duties of higher importance than ever commanded the attention of earthly thrones or confederated states. And to add, if possible to the impressiveness of the scene, the partner of his adopted son, dear to him, indeed, as a daughter, together with a beloved niece, were also about to seal with him their covenant, for the first time, to be followers of the Prince of Peace. The whole of the preparatory service was deeply interesting; but when the time arrived for him and his relatives, and friends, to arise and take their seats at the table of their ascended Redeemer, a scene of weeping gratitude and joy, seemed to pervade the whole congregation.

To see this aged veteran, whose head had stood erect in battle and through scenes of fearful bearing, bending that head in humble and adoring reverence at the table of his Divine Master, while tears of penitence and joy trickled down his care-worn cheeks, was indeed a spectacle of most intense moral interest. No one, indeed, could question the sincerity of his profession of faith in the Son of God. The whole world acquainted with him, whether friend or foe, must acknowledge that his lips have spoken in all his varied difficulties the meaning of his heart, and that his actions have always corresponded with his sentiments.

May God bless and uphold him in his last days, and make them his most comfortable and happy days. And when the time of his departure shall arrive, may he come to his grave, not only full of years, but full of peace, joy, and holy triumph.

In all real conversions to God, let us ever remember, that "it is not by might or power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." To his grace then be all the glory.

P. S. The health of the general has been generally comfortable during the season.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT. At a meeting of the board of managers of the Washington National Monument society, held on the 19th ult., the following letter was received from Mr. J. Kedgley, offering the choice of three lots of ground in this city, for a site of the Washington monument:

Geo. WATTERSTON, sec'y.

July 18, 1838.

"Gentlemen: I regret to learn, for the honor of the nation, that the senate of the United States have refused to grant a small piece of the public ground, within the city of Washington, for a site on which to build the national monument to the memory of the good; the great, and noble Washington—a name which has always appeared to me in the boldest relief, and with which my feelings are so strongly identified, a monument to his memory has engaged my mind for many years. Influenced by these feelings, I, therefore, respectfully tender to the board of managers a choice of lots in three of the most elevated and perhaps most eligible situations in the city for that purpose; the summit level of each being as high as the site of the capitol, and of unshifting ground. Either of these, if the board approve, I shall be proud to grant, and glory in the deed. I have uniformly supported the society, having attended the original meetings tending towards its creation, and will go heart and hand to promote the object, while I have the pleasure to be,

Very respectfully,

Your most obedient servant,
JOHN KEDGLIE.

In consideration of the above letter, by the board of managers, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the thanks of this board be presented to Mr. J. Kedgley, for his liberal and patriotic offer of a portion of ground for a site for the monument to Washington.

Note. I am gratified to be able also to state that a similar offer has been made to the board by Mr. Kinslay, another patriotic citizen of Washington, and that the refusal of the senate of the United States to allow the monument to Washington to be erected on public ground has had the tendency to call out the patriotism and liberality of even adopted citizens. The contrast is certainly mortifying.

G. W.

RESIGNATION OF MR. WHITTLESEY. From the note below addressed to the electors of this congressional district, it will be seen that Mr. Whittlesey has resigned his seat in congress. This information will be received by his friends with less surprise than regret; for it is known to many of them that, for the last two elections, he would have declined a poll for the same reason assigned for his resignation, but for the most earnest solicitation.—Mr. Whittlesey was first elected to congress in the fall of 1822, and for fifteen years in succession has represented this district, and discharged the incumbent duties of his office with a fidelity and devotedness not surpassed by the representative of any district in the union. His services were by no means confined to the interests of his immediate constituents, but were of an extended and general nature. And there is not a member of that distinguished body, we are bold to say, whose loss would be more generally felt and sincerely regretted than that of Mr. Whittlesey. [Western Reserve Chronicle.]

Canfield, July 20, 1838.

To the electors of the 16th congressional district in the state of Ohio.

I resign to you the unexpired term that you elected me to serve in the 25th congress. If this measure shall not be approved by all of you, I offer, in my justification, my long absence from home, the derangement of my private business, and the neglect of parental responsibilities.

Many esteemed friends in different parts of the district have requested me to be a candidate for the 25th congress. The causes that led me to resign my present appointment control me in declining to be a candidate.

Your fellow citizen,

E. WHITTLESEY.

AFFAIRS IN CANADA.

Correspondence of the New York Commercial.

Toronto, (U. C.) August 6, 1838.

Previous to the departure of the boat on Saturday from Niagara, I had barely time to inform you that sixteen of the state prisoners had been that morning sentenced to death; four are Americans and twelve are subjects of the queen.

On Friday several pleaded guilty, and William Yerks was tried and acquitted. On Saturday, William S. Wilson was tried and acquitted. The law of England, for high treason, requires that when a bill of indictment is found, the prisoner must be furnished with a copy of the bill, and with a list of all the jury that have been summoned to attend, and ten days must elapse before the trial can be brought on.

A bill of indictment for high treason having been found, at the close of the week, against Jacob Beamer, of whom I have before spoken, he could not be tried forthwith, consequently the court determined to adjourn over for the coming ten days, and to postpone the farther trials until Beamer's case could be brought on. They therefore gave notice that the prisoners who had been tried should be brought up for sentence, together with those who had pleaded guilty.

About 1 o'clock the jury which had been out with the case of Wilson, returned with a verdict of not guilty. The court then directed the sheriff to bring in those sixteen prisoners who were to be sentenced. The sheriff expressed some doubts of the propriety of bringing in so large a number at once. The judge very properly remarked that there was no danger, that if the civil force was not sufficient, a detachment of the military were at hand. About half past 1 o'clock, the prisoners came in, attended by a military and civil guard, and were seated in the jury box.

I was favored with a very eligible seat, being close both to the bench and prisoners. I was surprised to find so many of the prisoners very young men—and two or three looked more deserving the ordinary chastisement of a parent, than the heavy penalty about to be adjudged them. Two or three are handsome, and with a few exceptions, nothing unfavorable could be drawn from their appearance. They were all well dressed—Miller in a suit of black. He had been, you will recollect, a law student at Maysville, in Chatauque county, and would probably have defended himself, had not his counsel offered, at the outset, a plea of insanity.

After the crier had made proclamation for 'all persons to keep silence while his lordship, the queen's justice, pronounced the sentence of death,' Mr. Justice Jones called over the names of four American citizens who had been tried under the act of the last session of the provincial parliament. The first was Linus Wilson Miller. After a brief recapitulation of the evidence, he asked whether he had any thing to say why sentence of death should not be pronounced on him. After pausing a few moments he spoke, in a fine melodious voice, in substance as follows:

"My Lord: Your lordship has asked whether I have any thing to offer why sentence of death should not be pronounced against me. I shall, with the permission of your lordship, offer a few remarks, not, however, with a belief that I shall be able, by any thing that I might say, to turn aside the impending fate that awaits me.

"In reference to the statute under which I have been tried, I am under the full conviction that it is unconstitutional, and in this opinion I believe I am sustained by some of the legal gentlemen now present. I am of opinion that no statute affecting the life of an individual, whether a subject or not, can be considered the law of the land until it shall have received the sanction of the sovereign. I know, my lord, that under this act others have suffered, and I have no reason to suppose that my pleading its unconstitutionality will be any bar to the awful fiat which is about to fall from the lips of your lordships.

"I am indeed asked why sentence of death shall not be passed upon me. If I had done a deed worthy of death I would say let it come; but I declare to your lordship, that according to the dictates of my own judgment, I deserve neither death nor bonds.

"I have not been guilty of the death of any one. I have taken from no one that which was not my own. I came not into your country to destroy its form of government. I came not upon its borders with arms in my hands. Young and inexperienced as I am, I was led into the error, for which I now stand convicted, by the advice of others. Had truth and justice prevailed, I should not now be called to stand before your lordships in peril of my life.

"I say I stand convicted—but on what evidence has my conviction been obtained? Upon that of the perjured Doan, who has become an evidence for the crown to save his own life. True, there has been some other evidence against me, from persons who I believe intended to speak the truth, but they were in error. No doubt they were led astray from the necessary confusion of the moment.

"When I became sensible of my error—when I found that it was better for me to return to my home—I was told that the lines could not be passed, and that if I forsook my party death would be my portion. Thus situated, what way was there for my escape?

I appeal, my lord, to the lancers, whether I did not use my best exertion to stay the hand of the assassin. I appeal to every individual who was present at the attack upon the lancers, to say whether I did not do every thing in my power to prevent the death of any one, or the loss of any property.

"I am here, before your lordship, convicted as a felon; but appealing to my own conscience, I avow to your lordship and to this whole court, that I cannot consider myself guilty of a felonious act—yet if it is my fate to suffer death, I must bow to the mandate that decrees it."

The judge asked the other three the usual question, and nothing being said, he proceeded to pronounce the sentence, prefacing it with some pertinent remarks, particularly addressing himself to Miller. He said it was apparent that his education should have led him to a different course than to be found with a band of individuals, and with arms too, whose aim was to subvert the government of a country with which he was not connected, and one which was at peace with the United States, of which he was a citizen—that the view he had taken of the constitutionality of the law he had transgressed, was not sound, and that it was as much the law of the land as any under which the province was governed.

The judge then ordered Linus Wilson Miller, George Cooley, Norman Mallory, and William Reynolds, to be taken to the jail whence they came, and that on Saturday, the 25th day of August, they be taken to the place of execution, and there be hanged by the neck until they are dead.

Mr. Solicitor General Draper then moved the court that sentence be passed upon the following persons, convicted of high treason: Samuel Chandler, Benjamin Wait, James Gamble, John Grant, Murdock McFaddon, John James McNulty, George Buck, David Taylor, James Wagoner, Garret Van Camp, John Vernon, and Alexander McLeod.

These persons were separately asked whether they had any thing to say why the sentence of the law should not be pronounced against them.

In the case of Benjamin Wait, his counsel moved that the verdict be set aside, on the ground that Mr. Wagstaff, one of the jury, was not a liege subject, but a citizen of the United States. After a few remarks from the solicitor general, the court decided that it was now too late to interpose that plea. One or two others made a few brief remarks, when the judge proceeded to his painful task.

He told them that in all probability mercy would be extended to some of them, but to whom no one then knew; that the jury by which they had been tried had recommended some of them to mercy, which, of course, would be represented in the proper quarter.

He urged upon them all the importance of preparation for another world, and then pronounced the following sentence, (after calling each by name:)—“That you, and each of you, be taken to the jail from whence you came, and that on the 25th day of the present month of August, you and each of you be drawn on a hurdle to the place of execution, and that you be there hanged by the neck until you are dead; then your bodies are to be quartered: and then may God have mercy on your souls.”

To this last expression, there were several who responded “Amen.” One of the bailiffs, a stout fellow, who stood close to me leaning on his staff, burst into a flood of tears, and I assure you this soon became contagious.

It was a scene I pray I may never again be called to look upon—sixteen fellow beings whom an earthly judge had limited to a life of three weeks! and these men in the prime of life, many of them with the blood of youth coursing in their veins—their average, I think, is not more than twenty-five.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT.

District of Kensington, County of Philadelphia, June, 1838.

To the hon. Richard M. Johnson,
Vice-president of the United States:

VENERABLE COLONEL: The undersigned, a deputation of your numerous friends in this district, have heard with great delight, that you purpose returning home, after the close of the present session of congress, by way of Philadelphia, and avail themselves of the opportunity to tender you a hearty and cordial invitation to gratify the general desire that prevails in our good old democratic district, of manifesting our respect and veneration for the favorite son of the west, who has always bravely, in the battle field and in the councils of the nation, fearlessly and faithfully supported the principles of '76, and the just and equal rights of “the land of the free, and the home of the brave.”

With sentiments of the highest regard and esteem, we are your most obedient servants,

Peter Rambo, John A. Klufkee,
Richard Bacon, John Kelled,
Jacob Collar, Joseph Town;
John Fullerton, Jacob Funke,
John C. Brown, Andrew Hague,
Peter Deal, Thos. H. Brittain,
Isaac Smith, Jacob Robson,
William Baldt, Wm. Robson,
David Clayton, Wm. Fans,
Jos. M. Riterson, Wm. C. Rohrman.
Daniel Dickes,

Washington, July 16th, 1838.

GENTLEMEN: Your communication is received, inviting me to visit you, together with your fellow citizens generally in the “good old democratic district” of Kensington. For the honor in which you do me in this “cordial invitation,” please accept the tender of my grateful acknowledgments. It had been my intention to visit Philadelphia on my return to Kentucky, had the session of congress terminated at an earlier day; but my long absence from home, renders it necessary for me to forego my inclination and to make no delay in returning.

Under other circumstances, it would be highly gratifying to repeat the salutations, which, on a former occasion, were so kindly reciprocated by the republican citizens of your district; the recollections of which, are always associated with agreeable sensations. The site of Philadelphia, with all its environs, never fails to bring to the mind a train of interesting reflections. Consecrated by the landing of the immortal William Penn—the sublime spectacle of harmonious intercourse and mutual good will between the civilized and the savage—the principles of justice and peace, established upon the basis of equal rights, growing from infancy to maturity; justifying the characteristic appellation of the city and county of fraternal affection, and eventually becoming the birth-place of the happiest nation the world ever contained—are circumstances which must always render a visit to that vicinity grateful to an American. But the interest is greatly heightened, from the consideration, that the enlightened citizens of Kensington have continued unshaken in their principles; and in all the revolutions of parties, and the changes which time and circumstances often effect, they have uniformly sustained the great and good cause of democracy, the foundation on which the prosperity and happiness of our country must forever stand. The confidence of such a community is the highest honor to which my ambition would aspire; and its enjoyment constitutes my richest reward. I have the honor to be, &c.

RH. M. JOHNSON.

To John C. Brown, Jacob Collar, Peter Rambo, John Fullerton, Richard Bacon, Peter Deal, and others.

MR. PRENTISS OF MISSISSIPPI.

From the Portland Advertiser.

Correspondence between the hon. S. S. Prentiss and a committee of the whigs of Portland.

The following is the copy of a letter addressed to the hon. S. S. Prentiss, inviting him to partake of a public dinner, with the whigs of Portland, and his answer to the invitation.

Portland, July 23, 1838.

Hon. S. S. Prentiss.

DEAR SIR: A very large number of the citizens of Portland are desirous of tendering to you in a public manner a hearty welcome to this your native place. Located as you are at quite a distance from us, among a high-minded and generous people, we beg of you to be assured, that we have not been unmindful of the valuable service you have rendered to your country, in sustaining with success, and an uncompromising integrity of purpose, the sacred rights, and privileges of the citizens of Mississippi, and in maintaining at a very early period after taking your seat in congress, the great principles of the whig party, on the success of which, the prosperity of this country and the happiness of its citizens so mainly depend. The bold and daring attempt to shut out Mississippi and prevent her citizens from being heard in the councils of the nation, was well put down and nobly destroyed by your untiring exertions, and we trust that the chivalrous spirit of the citizens of that state, will long remember the zeal and noble efforts exhibited by you, which broke up a corrupt combination and gave to Mississippi her rights, as one of the most valuable states in the union. The wicked spirit and party manœuvring so evident in that high handed measure, is seen and felt in almost every public act of congress, producing the most destructive effects, which is testified to, by almost every individual in the community. The wild and visionary speculations of the past and present administration, are ill suited to a republican form of government and the recent indications of elections throughout the United States, give high and cheering hopes, that those who are now in power will have to quit their places, for others who will devote their talents to the best interests of the people. To the whig members of congress the eyes of the whole American people have been turned and will continue so to look, and the people have every assurance that a cause so holy and just, as that advocated by them will finally be triumphant. Their reward will be the gratitude of a free people, which is more durable and honorable than any monument that can be erected by man. We have been requested to earnestly solicit you to accept of a public dinner at such a time as may be most convenient for you, when your fellow townsmen and citizens of this city, will have an opportunity of manifesting to you the feelings which warm and animate their hearts.

We are very happy of being the organ of this communication and beg leave to subscribe ourselves,

Your obedient servants,

John D. Kinsman, John L. Meserve, Noah Hinkley, James Furber, R. W. Lincoln, James L. Merrill, O. B. Dorrance, George Jewett, John Neal, Luther Jewett, Andrew T. Dole, Stephen Waite, Jr. Aloah Sweetser, Oliver Gerrish, S. B. Beckell, E. D. Preble, S. Longfellow, Jr., Geo. Warren.

Portland, August 6, 1838.

GENTLEMEN: I received some days since, your favor of the 23d inst. inviting me to partake of a public dinner with a portion of my fellow citizens and townsmen of the city of Portland. Absence, from the city since the moment of its receipt, has prevented my answering it at an earlier period, and will I trust, be accepted as an excuse for my apparent neglect.

I assure you gentlemen, that the kind sentiments you have expressed towards my adopted state, as well as towards myself, personally, have awakened in my breast feelings of the deepest gratification; most cordially and fully are they reciprocated,—and should the hand of corrupt and arbitrary power even fall heavily upon your own beloved state, I feel assured a sympathy as warm will be felt for you upon the banks of the Mississippi, as that which you have so generously expressed for the violated rights of your southern sister. I need not say that your partiality has done me honor overmuch, in relation to the humble part which it was my lot to act in this matter, as well as the more general political questions of the day. Without fear or favor have I attempted to perform my duty. I certainly claim no credit for pursuing the only course which was consistent with my notions of honor, principle, and obligation to the country; your approbation of that course, is exceedingly gratifying, as an additional assurance of its propriety. I regret that it does not fall within the scope of the short and flying visit I am making to my relatives, to accept of honor, such as you have so politely tendered me. A long absence from home, and too great neglect of my private affairs, renders it imperative upon me to return forthwith to Mississippi. Permit me therefore, most respectfully, to decline your proffered hospitality, with the assurance that the remembrance of the kindness which dictated it, will ever be cherished by me with the most grateful emotions, and will add another link to the chain which binds me to the place of my nativity. Accept, gentlemen, for yourselves, and those whom you represent, my thanks for your flattering intentions—and my warmest wishes for your individual health, and prosperity.

I am, with high respect,

your friend, and ob't servant,

S. S. PRENTISS

Messrs. John D. Kinsman, John Neal, and others, committee.

HON. HENRY A. WISE.

From the Petersburg Intelligencer.

This gentleman paid our town a short visit on his way to the Virginia springs. He left Petersburg on Saturday; during his stay he was called on by a number of our citizens, and was tendered the compliment of a public dinner, as will be seen by the following correspondence:

Petersburg, August 3, 1838.

Dear Sir: The whigs of Petersburg have heard of your arrival in their borough with unmingled satisfaction. They seize the occasion as a fit opportunity to carry into execution an intention long entertained of paying you the compliment of a public dinner, as a slight testimonial of respect for your talents and approbation of your course in the national legislature. The undersigned, a committee on behalf of a large number of your political friends in Petersburg, therefore request the pleasure of your company to a public dinner to be given on any day convenient to yourself.

We have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, your ob't serv'ts,

JOHN D. TOWNES,

P. DURKIN,

JOHN BRAGG,

WM. ROBERTSON,

JABEZ SMITH.

To the hon. Henry A. Wise, Battersea

Battersea, August 3rd, 1838.

Gentlemen: I have to return you my most grateful acknowledgments for the invitation, in behalf of the whigs of Petersburg, “to a public dinner to be given on any day convenient to myself, which you did me the honor to present in person this morning.”

I arrived here a few days since, and have been delayed in passing to the White Sulphur springs by the kindness of friends, without the least expectation of this manifestation of regard, or a greeting like this in a land of strangers. But whigs know each other by the instincts of gentlemen and of patriots, and under ordinary circumstances I should be tempted to obey your request; especially when I find myself assured that you have seized on the occasion of my casual visit here to execute a design long entertained of paying me the compliment of a public dinner as a testimonial of your respect and approbation. I hardly dare decline to name a day for the cloth to be spread around whose board we should learn to know each other better, and pledge to be better whigs than we now are, even in the day of our country's trial, and it may be our country's triumph too.

But, gentlemen, I regret to add that a severe attack of disease, which commenced before I left home, and prostrated me quite by the time I reached the hospitable mansion of your neighbour, Judge May, has deprived me of the bodily strength to do the duty of "table-talk" or any other kind of dinner service; and an appointment to start on my journey to-morrow morning, will compel me to decline your invitation.

A better day, however, is coming, I hope, for us and all the whigs of the union. I hope I shall soon be re-invigorated by the genial air and waters of our own native mountains, and, if God spares me even to return this way home, I will tell you when I can meet you. Cordially meet you as brethren of the same faith and the same fathers, in the meat and the drink of a whig dinner, to gather new strength and catch new inspiration in a cause of which every patriot should be proud, and in which every Virginian should never tire.

May the genius of our country, whose is that cause, and the avengers of her wrongs, and the people are they, conspire to keep Petersburg an asylum of the thrifty free and a holy abiding place of their principles and their house-hold Gods.

I am, gentlemen,

Gratefully yours,

HENRY A. WISE.

To Messrs. J. D. Townes, P. Burkin, John Bragg, P. C. Spencer, Wm. Robertson, and Jabez Smith, committee.

THE PRESTON BARBECUE.

From the Columbia Telescope.

The barbecue dinner advertised for last Saturday, the 4th instant, took place according to appointment, and was attended by the largest and most respectable collection of citizens that we have seen in this place for some years. About 12 o'clock the company assembled in a shady lot at the upper end of the town, and partook of iced drinks of various kinds until 1, when they sat down to a sumptuous dinner, laid upon five long ranges of tables, conspicuous alike for the excellence of the materials and the handsome style in which it was prepared. Much credit is due to the committee of arrangements for the judicious manner in which the proceedings were conducted; and also to Mr. C. Neuffer, under whose direction the dinner was prepared. Chancellor David Johnson acted as president, and colonel A. Blanding, doctor Robert Henry, and Joel Adams, esq., as vice presidents.

REGULAR TOASTS.

1. The state of South Carolina—She cannot join at present in the pitiful scramble for office, without dishonoring herself in the eyes of the world and degrading herself in her own estimation.

2. Governor P. M. Butler—The gallant soldier; the vigilant commander; the careful magistrate—whether called on to defend the frontiers of his invaded country, or to devise means of rebuilding a prostrate city—he has shown himself willing, prompt, and efficient.

3. The speedy and firm union of Texas with the United States—A measure of vital importance to the south; and in comparison with which the sub-treasury and United States bank sink into insignificance; we must be united.

4. The Louisville, Cincinnati, and Charleston rail road—An enterprise worthy of the devotion of such a man as Robert Y. Hayne; a man calculated to grapple with and overcome every difficulty in the way of its triumphant and final accomplishment.

5. General James Hamilton—The south rely on his talent, zeal, and enterprise in securing for her a direct foreign trade.

6. John C. Calhoun—A Carolinian and an able senator. May he live to be president of the United States.

7. F. H. Ebnore—A worthy son of South Carolina—We esteem him too highly to proscribe him for honestly differing from some of us on a matter of doubtful policy.

8. Hugh S. Legare—The ripe scholar, the honest statesman, and the uncompromising patriot. May he continue to enjoy the rightful exercise of his own clear judgment upon all questions where-in South Carolina may have an interest.

9. Henry Clay and Martin Van Buren—par nobis fratrum. If South Carolina is true to herself, or has the least regard for consistency, she can give her vote for neither of them—she cannot, nor will not be drawn into a choice of evils.

10. Our distinguished senators and representatives in congress—South Carolina values them too highly to sacrifice any of them to the blind zeal of party or the malignant envy of demagogues.

11. The fair of South Carolina—Their smiles are only for freemen.

12. Wm. C. Preston—An early, able, and consistent supporter of state rights—a fearless and eloquent advocate of southern principles—a determined enemy of tyranny and usurpation—while there remains a single heart in Carolina alive to the dictates of honorable feeling, or a tongue that dare utter the words of truth, his services cannot be forgotten or go unrewarded.

On the reading of the last toast, Mr. Preston came forward, most heartily and affectionately greeted by the assembly, and addressed them in a speech of very great eloquence, in relation to his own public course, and the political questions now before the country. The committees, we understand, have requested a copy for publication, but severe illness in his family has thus far prevented the eloquent senator from furnishing it.

[We will publish Mr. P.'s address as soon as a copy of it is received.]

A number of volunteer toasts were also given, and the following letter from the honorable Waddy Thompson read by one of the committee.

Greenville, July 22, 1838.

Gentlemen: I regret that it will not be in my power to accept your kind invitation to a dinner to be given to the honorable Mr. Preston on the 28th inst. Concurring as I do entirely with that gentleman upon the currency question which now agitates the state, added to every consideration of a personal character, would have made it agreeable to me to have been with you; but I cannot.

I have lived too long, and seen too much of the fickleness of public opinion, and the instability of personal popularity, to be much surprised at any thing of that sort. But I confess that there is something which I am at a loss to account for in the violence, denunciation and proscription, with which three of us are treated: who hold and express opinions, which, twelve months ago, were held by nine-tenths of those who now denounce us. Two years since, colonel Benton proposed a measure for the gradual collection of the dues of the government in gold and silver only. His measure provided for the infusion of specie into the circulation, by driving out by degrees all bank notes under twenty dollars; and in this particular was certainly a wiser measure than the late sub-treasury bill. It was not supported, as far as I know, by a single newspaper or politician of any party in the state, and was ridiculed and scoffed at by the opposition party without one exception; if there was an exception it has escaped my notice and may be shown.

It cannot be forgotten that less than a year ago, when the reverend Mr. Fisk rose to address a public meeting in Charleston, in favor of these anti-bank opinions now so prevalent, even the sanctity of his robes did not protect him, and he was knocked down. It was regarded as a sort of political blasphemy. Now, I do not object to gentlemen changing their opinions; but I do think that we, who now hold opinions which one short year past were the opinions of the whole state, have a right to ask some little toleration, and that, in despite of some evidences heretofore given of devotion to the state, we should not be denounced as traitors. It was an administration measure, and it is therefore not to be wondered at, that the great mass of the administration party should support it. It has the support of a distinguished individual, who has long enjoyed, above all others, the confidence of the nullifiers, and it is, therefore, not to be wondered at, that the state should be carried in its support; but that it should be regarded as a question so clear, that honest men may not differ about it, and so vitally important as to supersede all past ties, personal as well as political, and a sufficient reason for again blowing up the angry flame of party spirit, and dividing and weakening the south, which has so many reasons for being united—I confess, exceeds my comprehension.

I send you the following sentiment,

And have the honor to be,

Gentlemen, respectfully,

Your friend and ob't servant,

W. THOMPSON, jr.

Public office—Not to be desired by an honorable man, when held upon the tenure of one man's will, and at the sacrifice of opinions honestly entertained.

COMPLIMENT TO MR. PRESTON.

From the Petersburg Intelligencer.

Read the following interesting correspondence between Mr. Preston and a committee of Halifax whigs. The compliment whether considered in reference to the terms of the invitation, or the signatures attached, is one of which any man may be proud. The committee was composed of gentlemen, who, for intelligence and sterling republicanism, are surpassed by none in the commonwealth. Many of them, we know, have seen the day when they delighted to do honor to Mr. Calhoun, and they, no doubt, now regret that that day has probably passed forever; but his colleague is now attracting the sympathy and the admiration of all in the land, whose sympathy and admiration are worthy the regard of a noble soul; and they indicate not only their own feelings, but those of the state rights party generally, in declaring that this is the worst administration that ever cursed a free country, and merits unabated hostility. Mr. Preston only echoed the universal whig sentiment on this point, in saying, "that the Stuarts must be driven out, whoever else may succeed." It is the settled conviction of the opposition, that the reigning dynasty have perpetrated enormities which the people of this country can never forgive, if they wish to preserve the public liberty and public morals, and it is their settled determination to exert whatever abilities they may possess to expel these miscreants from office. Even if they had not sinned beyond forgiveness, the character of their offences is such as to assure us that we cannot, without being treacherous to ourselves and country, repose the slightest confidence in any of their promises of amendment. [Richmond Whig.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Halifax court house, Va., July 24, 1838.

Dear Sir: At a meeting of many of the whigs of Halifax, convened for the purpose, we were appointed a committee to invite you, in their name, to visit their county on your return to your home in South Carolina, and to dine with them at their court house on such day as may suit your convenience.

We give but a feeble expression to their sentiments, when we declare to you that your steady devotion to and able support of, principles dear to all true whigs—your constant, unwearied and eloquent defence of the constitution when attacked by many and defended by few—your efficient and manly resistance to the tyranny and corruption of the most dangerous administration which this or any other country has ever been cursed with, have called up feelings of gratitude and respect which they would be delighted to have an opportunity personally to express to you.

At a time like the present, when they find many of those whom Virginia has been pleased to honor and to trust, falling one by one from the faith of our fathers, they turn with an honest pride to a native born Virginian, who, in another land, illustrates, by his life and his character, the political creed of the Old Dominion as she once was. We feel that we do no injustice to the sentiments of the meeting, when we say that it is their earnest desire to accord to you a yet more decided and unequivocal mark of the high estimation which they place on your character and services. We cannot permit this opportunity to escape without expressing to you our individual concurrence in these sentiments. While the south, now the weaker portion of the confederacy, finds herself on every side assailed in her dearest rights, it is a source of much satisfaction to know that we have such a champion as yourself on our side. We have the triple security of talent, integrity, and a common interest.

Hoping that we may be permitted to return to the meeting whose organ we are, an affirmative response from you, we are, with sentiments of distinguished consideration,

Your most obedient servants,

James C. Bruce,	Thomas S. Flournoy,
Wm. B. Banks,	E. Barksdale, jr.
Thomas J. Green,	Thomas Leigh,
John S. Lewellen,	Wm. Holt,
Wm. Bailey,	P. H. Gilmer,
T. Baker,	Wm. D. Sims,

Thomas Davenport,
Committee to correspond.

Columbia, July 14, 1838.

Gentlemen: I have had the honor of receiving from you, a committee of the whigs of Halifax, an invitation to a dinner at your court house. Your letter was received at the very instant I was quitting Washington, and not read until I was on board the boat. Travelling with the mail, there was no moment at which I could acknowledge and thank you for this flattering testimonial, elicited, I doubt not, more by the kindness with which you have regarded my wishes and purposes to do good, than by a just consideration of the efficiency with which I have prosecuted them.

I came into the senate, gentlemen, at the moment when the unparalleled usurpations of the executive, consummated by the seizure and detention of the public treasure, brought into existence the whig party, composed of all those who struggle to preserve the constitutional limitations of power, or the principles of free government. Against those usurpations, so utterly destructive of every thing that the revolution won and sanctified, we have continued to struggle, with a zeal which thus far has not been rewarded by a proportionate success.

In 1833, the public money was found in the hands of the executive, unregulated by law; but even gen. Jackson was unwilling that it should continue thus, and earnestly recommended that the dangerous trust should be taken from his hand, and placed in the custody of the law—now in 1833, a willing senate proposes to place in the hands of this president, exempted from legal restrictions, the funds his predecessor seized. If there were no other indications of the progress of right principles, the patriot whig might be disposed to surrender in despair—but recent events administer consolation, and teach us confidence in the permanence of our free institutions. The power and patronage party has been rebuked by the house of representatives at each appeal made to it, by a stronger and stronger voice.—The people are coming—have come—to the rescue of the constitution. The mad and wild projects of a paupered and reckless party are and will be defeated.

But, at the same time, it is my deliberate conclusion, painfully and reluctantly arrived at, that no defeat, however disgraceful; no warning, however solemn; no experience, however disastrous, will turn the party in power from the error of its ways. Its whole organization, principles and practices are wrong, essentially immoral and revolutionary. As long as it is in power, the country will be tossed with violent agitations, harassed by sudden changes, subjected to rapid alternations of facitious prosperity and real disaster, be divided into sections and classes, in bitter hostility to each other—while a general uncertainty, confusion and anxiety, will pervade the public mind. These are the necessary and inevitable consequences of the domination of such a party as now govern the country—our only hopes are in a change of the dynasty. Let us expel the Stuarts whoever may replace them.

Is there any man who will look back upon the history of the last eight years, and believe it possible that our country can produce any other party or set of men who in the same space can do as much mischief?

The kind temper in which my fellow citizens of the whig party of Halifax have been pleased to regard my humble efforts, will be a stimulus to increased exertions in the common cause of the whigs and the constitution.

For the favorable terms, gentlemen, in which you have been pleased to couch your communication, I beg you to accept my sincere thanks, and that you will be assured of the high respect and consideration with which

I am your obedient servant,

W. C. PRESTON.

To Messrs. J. C. Bruce, Wm. B. Banks, Thomas J. Green, Wm. Bailey, John S. Lewellen, T. Baker, Thomas S. Flournoy, E. Barksdale, Jr., Thos. Leigh, Wm. Holt, P. H. Gilmer, Wm. D. Sims, Thomas Duxenport, committee.

AFFAIR BETWEEN MESSRS. SEGAR AND SAVAGE.

Having published the card of Messrs. Huston and Martin, (see page 323) in justice to the parties concerned, we give place to the following:

From the Norfolk Herald.

To prevent all misapprehension and misrepresentation of the recent affair of honor between Mr. Segar and Mr. Savage, we are requested to give an immediate publication to the following letters;

Washington, June 24th, 1838.

GENTLEMEN: The affair of honor in which you have been involved is now terminated, and I think it due and just to you both, that I should furnish a statement of the facts of the mediation by which I have the consolation to believe, your differences were honorable adjusted, and their trial by arms peacefully prevented.

Mr. Savage arrived in Washington, Thursday, the 14th inst., and called upon me immediately at the house of representatives. He informed me that he was challenged by Mr. Segar, gave me a detailed account of the causes, showed me the correspondence, and applied to me to be his second, assigning among other apologies for calling on me, that he could not permit several of his friends in Norfolk, who were ready and willing to serve him, to be disfranchised.

I declined to act as his second on the instant, but promised to procure for him a friend with whom his life and his honor should be safe; determining to reserve myself in a position where I could render him and his antagonist a much more essential and grateful service than it is ever in the power of seconds so effectually to render their principals, whatever may be their dispositions or address.

With care and deliberation I reflected and concluded upon the course to be pursued. On Friday morning, I advised Mr. Savage to address to Mr. Segar a letter, that of the 15th, to invite him to this place, and inclosed it myself in a letter which I addressed to Mr. Whiting, accounting for all informalities, and disclosing to him the character which I had assumed.

After despatching these communications, I sought a second for Mr. Savage. Fortunately, I thought of a gentleman and a soldier in the city, general Felix Huston, whose character in private life, and in command of the army of the republic of Texas, has been no less distinguished for sagacity and humanity, than for firmness and chivalry; and on the morning of Saturday, the 19th, I procured his services. He found Mr. Savage unused to arms, and undecided as to the terms of a meeting. He caused him to decide immediately upon the weapon and distance, and despatched a communication forthwith to Mr. Segar's friend, leaving further preliminaries as to the time, place and position to be agreed upon when they should arrive in this city.

Wednesday, the 20th, at midnight, I was visited by my friend and colleague Mr. Hunter, at my room. He said he had important information to give me on a delicate subject, but before he could proceed, he must exact a promise that I would not act upon it under any contingency. Extracting the promise, he told me Mr. Key, the district attorney, had just received information from bishop Meade, that this duel was in prospect, urging his interposition and mine to arrest the parties on the event. I had an interview with Mr. Key myself, immediately, and promised him secrecy on my part, though I could not promise any direct co-operation. The warrant, then, had already been issued. The next evening, on Thursday, the 21st, general Huston came to my room and informed me that he had just been dining with judge Thurston, and heard him say he had issued a warrant for the apprehension of Mr. Savage. His first impulse was, of course, to inform his principal, but I found no difficulty in prevailing on him to assume the responsibility of keeping the information secret from Mr. Savage, and of allowing the opportunity to arrest him. I took care, however, to consult with Mr. Allmand, of Norfolk, upon the propriety of general Huston's acting upon the information he had received at judge Thurston's table, and he, with a due sense of the risk and the responsibility, approved of the course of secrecy towards Mr. Savage. He was therefore kept in ignorance of the danger of arrest until late on Friday evening, when he received a letter from Mr. Segar, through me, complaining of procrastination, intimating the probability thereof of arrest, and excepting strongly in other respects to Mr. Savage's course. As soon as general Huston saw this note, he could no longer withhold from Mr. Savage that it was imperiously necessary then that he should forthwith leave the District. He advised him to keep close quarters for that night, and to depart early the next morning. Friday, the 22d, at about four o'clock, P. M., Mr. Segar arrived, and forthwith despatched Dr. Martin, his friend, in search of Mr. Savage. At about 10 o'clock at night, Mr. Savage was apprised of Mr. Segar's arrival. I was informed of it by Robt. E. Taylor, esq. early the next morning. Mr. Savage's departure was of course, delayed, and he was properly concealed from the peace officers.

As soon as I ate my breakfast, I visited Mr. Segar in company with the hon. F. W. Pickens and my colleague, Mr. Hunter. He met the interview in all respects as became him. I told him my relations public and private to him and to Mr. Savage entitled and commanded me to take them under my jurisdiction as a mediator; that his challenge was informal and irregular, and his letter of the 20th, complaining of Mr. Savage's course since the acceptance, was founded, I knew, and vouched, upon a mistake on his part; and that both the letter and challenge must, upon my authority be withdrawn. He replied very properly, that he was ready to correct any mistake he had made in his letter; that he knew nothing of the etiquette of such affairs, was willing to correct any informality in the challenge, and cared nothing for forms, only for substance; that all matter of form was in the hands of his second, but that he could not consent for him to withdraw the challenge for any other purpose than to make it conformable to the rule of propriety, and to the code under which he sought redress; and when reformed and corrected, it should be renewed immediately. We assured him his second should and would do nothing more than his duty, and left him to seek the seconds, Dr. Martin and general Huston. I informed Mr. Pickens of my course; that he must no longer advise; as he was to be, if I succeeded, a referee, and to leave the rest to Mr. Hunter and myself.

Mr. Hunter and I found the two seconds arranging the terms of the meeting. After some conversation with them, in which Mr. Hunter and myself announced our object in calling, I retired apart with Dr. Martin, who said he saw with pleasure from my letter to Mr. Whiting, that I had manifested a desire the affair should be amicably adjusted, inquired as to the mode and terms in which I conceived the controversy might be settled with due regard to the honor and character of the parties, and presented me with a note he had prepared to that effect, endorsed "INFORMAL," and with the express understanding that it was not written by him as the second of Mr. Segar, or with his knowledge or consent, but solely upon his own individual responsibility, dictated by his own willingness to hear any proposition for peace, and induced by my letter to Mr. Whiting, Mr. Segar's second in the first instance.

I immediately required that Mr. Segar's letter of the 20th should, on my authority for the fact that it was written under a mistake, and because it was an offence subsequent to the challenge (in no case allowable) be withdrawn, and that the challenge and acceptance should both be withdrawn; and I pledged myself then to both seconds, in case of such withdrawal, to propose a mode of adjustment to which neither party could justly except. Mr. Hunter approved the justness and reasonableness of this course; and the seconds were both compelled to accede to the withdrawal of the three papers. I then named the hon. F. W. Pickens and the hon. S. S. Prentiss as referees, with power to call in an umpire to adjust all points of honor and dispute in difference between the parties, and to make their decision final and conclusive, required the seconds to lay before them all the publications and correspondence, and denied to the principals the right of communicating with the referees or of appearing before them. The seconds accepted in due form the proposition of reference, without consultation by either with either principal; and without the knowledge or consent of either. The referees sat immediately, disagreed in no particular, and decided and adjusted the affair by a written award, which I approved, and I believe every man of chivalry will approve, as equally honorable to the board and to the gentlemen whose case they adjudged. The seconds could not withhold their approbation, and thus happily terminated the affair.

My object in addressing you this letter—to state, fairly and fully all the facts in such manner as to hush and silence beyond all cavil or contradiction forever, every whisper or suspicion against the conduct and bearing of either of you in the adjustment of your affair of honor without a meeting in the field—is now attained.

In conclusion, permit me to assure you both that you owe much to the excellent friends Dr. Martin and gen. Huston whom you selected as your seconds. Their conduct has been closely under my inspection, and I am proud to bear testimony that to their prudence, discretion, and nerve in assuming responsibility, you owe the good fortune that one or both of you are not now numbered with the wounded or the dead.

They both have acted as jealous and watchful guardians of your honor, and at the same time, as generous and magnanimous friends of humanity and of your everlasting peace of mind. They have saved your consciences from bloodshed and your characters from all reproach. It is enough to say of the gentlemen who kindly served as referees, that their names are vouchers to a nation, and their decision needs not the authority of their names.

As to my friend Mr. Hunter and myself, we were volunteers, and claim but one obligation to us, which we now enjoin, that you shall both "forget and forgive" the past—meet as if you had always been in peace with each other, and when you return to your homes and your families, afflicted to mourning by the threatening of your recent hostility, you shall earnestly co-operate to appease the excitement of your numerous partizans and friends, and endeavor to restore tranquility to a county which has bestowed upon you both the highest honors and confidence in the gift of its people, who have been agitated and disturbed by your differences and feuds. We are confident you both know how to display courtesy in conciliation, as we are sure you would have stood the severest test of courage in combat.

For myself, permit me to say that I shall ever count it a consolation for the character of "duelist," which I despise, which I thought had nothing to recommend it, but which has undeservedly in the estimation of some attached to me, that it had an influence, perhaps, in drawing your affair of honor within the control of a disposition I have ever felt and manifested on every occasion of the kind.

interpose my mediation for an amicable and honorable adjustment.

You both have my good wishes, as you have had my kindest offices, and, gentlemen,

I am your obedient servant.

HENRY A. WISE.

To Joseph Segar and Wm. Lytt Savage, esqrs.

Washington, 26th June, 1838.

DEAR SIR: Having read, at your request, the statement of Mr. Wise, I am happy to express my warm admiration of its tone and spirit, as well as my acknowledgment of its general accuracy. I would take the liberty of suggesting the introduction of the circumstance that I had called on Mr. Savage on Friday twice before I succeeded in finding him—once early, and again later in the evening. I think it would be well to mention also, that gen. Huston and myself had, before the appearance of Messrs. Wise and Hunter the next morning, promptly agreed that a meeting should take place on that day. But there is one fact which, in justice to my character and feelings, and as well as your own, should certainly not be omitted. I allude to the resistance which I manifested for a considerable space to all overtures of pacific arrangement. This I did, not from a spirit of bravado or from obstinacy, but from a sensitiveness to your honor, and also from that want of confidence in my opinions, however decided, which can only be derived from inexperience in such matters. I solemnly declare that I would a thousand times rather have accompanied you to the field, than enter into a compromise without a positive conviction that its result would leave your honor without a stain. Mr. Wise will recollect that his appeals to me and those of his colleague, were most earnest for a long time, in the presence of general Huston until I thought it indelicate to protract the discussion in the hearing of the latter, and I accordingly requested Mr. Wise to step with me into the next room. I there exhibited to him a letter, which I had previously prepared, in which I suggested the terms upon which alone an arrangement could be effected. This letter contained a solemn declaration, that my act was without the knowledge of Mr. Segar; not in my character of second; not designed for the ear of the opposite party, and upon my sole and serious responsibility. Mr. Wise at once approved of its spirit, but objected to the stipulation of conditions, as incompatible with his plan of arrangement, and desired me to address him a note, simply requesting him to suggest his views in reference to an amicable and honorable adjustment. This I did, in a letter marked "informal and confidential," which bears date, half past ten A. M. whereas the last paper drawn up between gen. Huston and myself is dated nine A. M., proving that considerably more than an hour had elapsed from the interruption of our preliminaries, until I wrote my note in accordance with the suggestion of Mr. Wise. Upon examining Mr. Wise's statement, it will be seen that he has inadvertently confounded my two letters, as he speaks of the one last described, as already prepared, and having been immediately shown to him. Those facts are important, because I had fully made up my mind, much as I desired in my heart a pacific termination, to listen to no terms* until I had positively convinced myself that they would result in an arrangement which ought to prove entirely satisfactory to my principal. In a later stage of the proceedings, I had great scruples about the right or propriety of binding my principal by the decision of the referees, and this again was the subject of a protracted resistance on my part, nor did I yield my scruples, until I had obtained the approval of Dr. Linn of the senate, in whose judgment I had the most perfect confidence.

I omit other particulars as not being to the present purpose, but will merely observe, that after the reference had been made, I deemed it necessary to excuse myself to Mr. Hunter and others, for my apparent pertinacity, by attributing it to the hesitation naturally springing up from a want of confidence, on account of inexperience in such matters. I had gone, however, into the business, with the principles upon which I should act, fully matured; yet I wished myself sustained by the judgment of others of more authority, not so much for my own satisfaction, as for that of my principal. Anxious as I was for arrangement honorable to both parties, (for it would have been no gratification to me to obtain the slightest triumph over your adversary,) no danger, no obloquy, no tenderness of feeling, no appeal, however earnest or eloquent, could have induced me to compromise in the smallest measure, the character or feelings of my friend. I repeat it—I do full justice to the spirit, the fairness, the eloquence, the general accuracy of Mr. Wise's statement; and yet the reader, uninformed of all the circumstances, might infer, not only that I, representing the challenging party, had yielded too promptly and easily, but that I had even volunteered upon the spot, overtures, which would have been in direct opposition to the known determination of my friend, and to my own ideas of duty and propriety. With the warmest admiration for the course of Mr. Wise, and the fullest confidence in the justice of his intentions and the generosity of his feelings, I request that you will bring this letter under his eye, without delay. Truly your friend,

J. L. MARTIN.

Jos. Segar, esq.

House of representatives,
June 26th, 12 o'clock, M. 1838.

DEAR SIR: I have just read the foregoing letter, and certainly can corroborate its statements, as I do fully, and meant to do in my letter to you, so far as the facts were within my knowledge, and they all generally were. Dr. Martin's statement as to his first letter to me, particularly, is true, and I omitted what he supplies, only from the impression that it was an unnecessary particular. He was assuredly, jealously cautious in every step he took, and I could not prevail on him until he left me to advise with Dr. Linn. I approved of Dr. M's course in every respect. Yours, &c. &c.

H. A. WISE.

Jos. Segar, esq.

DEATH OF PETER W. GRAYSON, ESQ. OF TEXAS.

From the New York Evening Star.

We have the melancholy satisfaction of laying before our readers the authentic details of the late suicide of Mr. Grayson, which has occasioned so much remark throughout the United States. They have been politely furnished us by John G. Tod, esq. of Texas, his friend and associate in the commission appointed by the Texan government to purchase vessels of war in this country. Mr. Tod left Texas two weeks after col. Grayson, and arrived at Lexington July 14th, and, two days after that, received the unexpected and distressing intelligence of the death of his friend, which took place at Bean's Station, a town in the Cumberland mountains of Tennessee.

His own last memorial of himself, supported as it is by the concurrent testimony of those who have known him from youth, prove that he has fallen a victim to a morbid melancholy, which, without any special cause, has preyed upon his existence for many years. And here it is important to premise, that a more temperate person, considering the exciting situations into which his career has thrown him during several years past, has rarely existed.

PARTICULARS OF HIS DEATH. The following is the memorandum taken by Mr. Tod from Mr. Mays, the landlord of the inn at Bean's Station, where col. Grayson committed the fatal deed.

Wythe Court House, (Va.) July 28, 1838.

MY DEAR POTTER: I wrote you last from Harrodsburg, as I was on my way to Barboursville and Bean's Station. When I got to Barboursville, I found that col. Love had been over there, and got all the effects belonging to our much-lamented friend Grayson. He gave me all the papers relating to our mission, and a copy of the two communications which I herewith send you. I only remained there until the next stage, and then went to Bean's station, where I intended to communicate with our government, as well as with my friends McKinney, col. Hill, and many others, who will expect, and think it strange, if I do not give them a full and early account of this distressing and heart-rending occurrence. While at Bean's Station I felt too sensibly that it was useless for me to undertake to write any thing, for there was such a feeling of gloom and distressing reminiscences connected with the place, and I decided to leave there at once for Baltimore. I find myself compelled to remain here until to-morrow, hoping that I will be well enough to prosecute my journey. But I am digressing. Probably it will be better for me to give a kind of preface here of what occurred before he committed the deplorable event. I noted it down from the landlord's own lips.

"Mr. Grayson arrived at Bean's Station on the 8th inst. from Knoxville; appeared restless and impatient, as he asked two or three times for a room before he was showed one. Came down to dinner, but ate nothing; requested a cup of tea to be sent to his room. In the evening he came down, and conversed with Mrs. Mays, and appeared composed. He had complained of a pain over his eyes, and Mr. Mays recommended him to make use of a sulphur spring in the neighborhood. He appeared anxious to do so at first, but finally declined, stating that he would not be able to rise early. He retired to rest at the usual hour, carrying a short piece of candle to his room, and let it burn out. The next morning the boy went into his room: with a towel and water to wash with. He directed the servant to clean his boots, which was done; and when the boy took them up, he told him he had no further use for him. The boy immediately left the room, and in eight or ten minutes afterwards the report of a pistol was heard, though it was thought by the inmates of the house below to have been a gun fired off out of doors. The hour for breakfast arrived, and the girl carried it up to his room. She found him dead."

A phial of laudanum, about half full, was found on the table. It is supposed that he drank too little of it, which, with the excitement, &c. failed to accomplish his object. The boy said he found him lying on the top of the bed clothes, and looked out of his eyes as if he was very sleepy. There were two beds in the room, and it is thought that he was sitting on the one which he occupied, with his body inclined towards the other, where he shot himself; the other was directly opposite, and he was found half way under it. No blood was found on the bedding, though a piece of the skull bone was found lying there. The brains were thrown about the room, though very little blood. The pistol must have been placed a little below the right temple, as all the upper part of that side of his head was blown entirely off. The following lines were addressed to the landlord, and left on the table in such a position that the eye would discover them immediately on entering the room.

Mr. Mays. I pray you pardon the frightful scene I have made in your house.

You will, ere long, learn that I have not been wholly an unworthy man.

I have to request you to write to colonel James Love, formerly a resident of Bartonville, Ky., who, I think, is there at this time, though intending to remove with his family, in the fall, for Texas, informing him of what has occurred here, and of my wish that he would be good enough to come to this point, and take charge of my baggage, examine, and do with it what he will see is proper. In the meanwhile, I hope the best care will be taken of it.

You will find money in my pocket-book to defray all my necessary expenses.

I beseech you again to pardon the trouble I give you.

P. W. GRAYSON, of Texas.

The following is a copy that he left for his friends:

To my friends. I go to my grave for the quiet the world can never give me.

The fiend that pursued me for a long time previous to 1830, and then let me rest, ('twas when I went to Texas,) has started on me again with redoubled fury. To save myself from the horrors of a mad-house, I go into my grave. Farewell! To you and the few kindred of my particular affections I yield the last pulsations of my heart.

P. W. G.

I have no doubt but the following lines are the last he ever wrote. They were written with a pencil on about a page and a half of blank paper contained in his will, folded up with the above letter and some others papers, and endorsed "important papers, &c." I copied them myself from the will, although the latter was dated "Galveston Island, 10th June, 1838;" yet, as a pencil was found lying on the table, and it appeared as if it had lately been employed, I am pretty certain they are the last lines he ever wrote, and contain the last troubled ideas of the closing scene. I give them to you "verbatim," underscored, &c., as he left them:

"It is necessary to my poor shattered name for me now to confess that at least ten years of my life I have been a partially deranged man.

"I have always kept this a profound secret, from an indescribable horror I have ever felt at the idea of divulging it. A rueful scepticism was at the bottom of all. The period of my suffering in this state was from 1820 to 1830. In this mood so disqualifying and adverse to mental exertion of any kind, I actually wrote a sort of essay upon the influence of law, &c. Went to—, and published it off hand, without examining proof, or correcting it in any way. This I did for excitement alone, with a view and hope of bringing my mind back to something like sanity again by a strong desperate effort at mental energy.

*To prevent all possibility of misapprehension, I will state, that when I speak of terms or overtures, I allude to those proceeding from the mediating friends. The attitude of gen. Huston, as representing the challenged party, was one of decorous reserve, until his reception of my first note.

J. L. M.

"The printer, silly man, made more blunders in the type than I had myself made in the manuscript, and, worst of all, put my name in the title page against my express orders—awful exposure of my weakness, which I have ever hoped, however, was confined to a few persons only, who might, by accident, have picked up the strangely contrived, ill-written, crazy production, which contains a good many thoughts that I approve even yet.

"This I write in my last hours of existence. I sincerely think as a sane or living man. Whether I shall be in Bedlam or my grave soon, I know not; I am in the hands of malignant fate, and the worst that can befall me will, I am sure.

"P. W. G.

"The last trap to catch my soul, and send it to a very hell of torture, was the good feeling of my friends, urging me and prevailing on me to be a candidate for the presidency of Texas! Oh, God!!"

In reviewing all the facts connected with this distressing and lamentable occurrence, I think we may safely say he has fallen a victim to his own morbid feelings, produced by the slang and calumny of those opposed to him in Texas for the presidency. His ardent friends pressed this thing upon him contrary to his own convictions, and he has fallen a sacrifice.

TOLLS AND TRADE OF THE NEW YORK CANALS.

From the Albany Argus of the 6th inst.

Tolls on the several canals for the last week in July, 1837 and 1838, viz:

1838	$45,963 97
1837	36,603 45

Increase $9,360 52

The whole sum received for tolls on all the state canals from the opening of navigation to the close of July, for 1837 and 1838, is as follows, viz:

1838	$677,351 95
1837	526,768

Increase $150,583 95

The merchandize cleared from tide water, from the opening of navigation to the close of July, for three years, is as follows, viz:

	1836.	1837.	1838.
Merchandize	46,679 tons.	37,558 tons.	44,383 tons.
The merchandize cleared this year is less by 2,296 tons than in 1836, and greater by 6,825 tons than in 1837. The average for the three years is 42,873 tons. Excess this year beyond the average for three years, 1,510 tons.

The wheat and flour arriving at tide water to the close of July, in 1837 and 1838, is as follows, viz:

	bushels wheat.	bbls. flour.
In 1837	39,477	282,068
In 1838	236,050	386,896

Increase in 1838 196,573 154,818

Estimating a barrel of flour equal to 5 bushels of wheat, and the quantity for each year will stand as follows, viz:

	2,170,480 bushels
In 1838
In 1837	1,160,340 "

Increase in 1838 1,010,140 "

The foregoing statements show an increase comparing this year with last, of 18 per cent. in the quantity of merchandize transported on the canals; an increase of nearly 30 per cent. in the amount of tolls, and an increase of 87 per cent. in the aggregate quantity of wheat and flour brought to tide water.

The quantity of flour and wheat shipped at Buffalo from the opening of canal navigation to the 31st July, for the years 1836, 1837 and 1838, was as follows:

	bbls. flour.	bush. wheat.	equal to bbls. flour.
In 1836	73,079	20,592	77,197
In 1837	40,709	264,892	93,687
In 1838	153,940	463,188	246,577

The increase of wheat and flour cleared at Buffalo, comparing this year with last, is equal to 163 per cent. in favor of 1838.

The tolls received at Buffalo from the opening of canal navigation to the 31st July, for 3 years, were as follows:

In 1836	$68,428 47
In 1837	57,296 43
In 1838	106,142 83

Increase this year over 1836, $37,714; and over 1837, $48,906, or nearly 85 1-2 per cent.

The condition of things in Canada has essentially increased the quantity of wheat cleared at Buffalo, a portion of which ordinarily would pass through the Welland canal to Oswego. The wheat which is floured at Black Rock, in most cases, is first cleared at Buffalo and pays toll as wheat to Black Rock, and after being floured is cleared at Buffalo as flour, and the toll may be paid at that place to Troy or Albany. To a limited extent, therefore, the quantity of wheat, and flour made from the same wheat, are both reckoned in the foregoing estimate of wheat and flour. The amount of toll paid is, therefore, the fairest test of the increase of business at Buffalo, and this shows an increase of 85 1-2 per cent.

THE RISE OF WATERS.

The Toledo Blade has the following interesting article on the subject of the rise of the waters of the great lakes. The fact here mentioned, as accounting for the rise, now meets our eye for the first time, and furnishes a plausible reason for the phenomenon:

The unprecedented rise of the waters of the great lakes from the head of Lake Superior even to where they meet the waters of the Atlantic in the river St. Lawrence, has seemed to baffle all speculation as to its cause. It is beyond dispute that whole farms have been submerged, that harvests and streets have been rendered useless. From all accounts we have seen, we are inclined to think that the rise since 1835 has been between three and a half and four feet. An old and intelligent settler of Cleveland declares that he has seen the level of the water seven feet lower than it now is. This was probably during a season of extraordinary depression. The pier at Monroe was six feet out of water when first completed. It is now nearly immersed.

We have heard several explanations, some of which were ridiculous; some were surmises unsupported by a single fact; and some at war with established facts. The latest explanation, however, is founded in good sense, and traces the phenomena to a direct natural cause. It is said that a large river which has hitherto discharged itself into Hudson's bay, has been from year to year impeded in its course by the accumulation of drift wood, stumps, &c. similar to that of the great raft of the Red river, till finally it has become completely dammed, and has cut out for itself a new channel into some one of the great tributaries to Lake Superior. The account comes, we believe, through the fur traders, who have traversed those remote regions. If this single fact is satisfactorily established, the explanation becomes a truth. It receives confirmation from the assertion that the waters of Lake Michigan have not risen to the same height as the waters of the other lakes. This lake is linked with Lake Huron by a channel distinct from that by which Lake Superior is connected. There would therefore naturally be only that rise in Michigan which would be caused by the setting back of the waters, if this great accession, this threatening deluge owes its origin to the feeders of Lake Superior. We are not well informed as to the comparative level of Lake Michigan, though we have understood repeatedly that it had not risen in so extraordinary a manner as the other lakes. Can it not be possible that the fluctuations for the last twenty years may have arisen from the alternate rising and falling of the great northern flood alluded to, in dry seasons finding vent through its accustomed channel, but occasionally becoming dammed and discharging portions of its accretions this way, till finally it has burst all barriers, and turned its course hitherward, and caused a more sudden, more permanent inundation than before?

We call the attention of publishers and scientific men on Lake Michigan to an accurate comparison of the rise of waters of Lake Michigan with that of other lakes, and all those of the northwest interested in the investigation of so curious and unaccountable a phenomenon, to throw light upon the subject.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

Entertainment at Guildhall. The grand city banquet to the ambassadors and foreign princes now in London took place on Friday, and it was beyond every other consideration which the extraordinary and magnificent scene awakened, a truly ennobling and touching thing to behold the veteran heroes—Soul and Wellington—the opponent chiefs of a long warfare, vying with one another in reciprocating the warmest testimony not to their individual merits as generals (for that were a theme which either of them would almost disdain,) but to the bravery, the moral valor, and the high-mindedness which characterise the two great nations whose troops they so many years commanded; and re-echoing the assurance of the cordial sentiments of friendship and respect which now exist between these two great nations. The preparation for the august occasion were on the same scale of splendour as that which was exhibited on the occasion of the late visit of her most gracious majesty to the city. There was even an addition to the splendour, as the wall around the chief table was ornamented with richly emblazoned shields, of several foreign kingdoms, and states, whose ambassadors extraordinary attended at the coronation of her majesty, and who were seated at the table beneath. We need not describe the splendid aspect of the hall, the number or rank of the illustrious visitors, or the gorgeous munificence of the dinner. The latter was indeed served in the most profused and sumptuous style; to reverse a well-known, ill-natured criticism, the turtle and venison were hot, the wines were deliciously cooled. At about half past eight o'clock, grace was said, and then the crier, according to good old custom, announced that the lord mayor drank "A hearty welcome in a loving cup" to all his royal and distinguished guests, who were enumerated in classes, according to their style and decrees. This announcement was received with loud cheering, and the cup went round the table and was highly relished as well as the good old chivalrous formalities with which its contents are received. On the toast of the queen's health, extraordinary enthusiasm was manifested, and on coupling the duke of Sussex's health with that of the rest of the royal family, that illustrious duke observed, in a short and elegant speech, that there were so many distinguished statesmen from all parts of Europe about him to-day, that it was very possible they might not all agree with him or amongst themselves upon some matters of opinion; but in one common object they were all united, namely in paying respect and homage to the distinguished lady who held the sovereign sway of these realms.—(Cheers.) He congratulated the country that the distinguished foreigners who graced the present happy occasion with their presence had had, during their short sojourn in this country, ample means of seeing that the people of this country had loyalty in their hearts and freedom in their breasts. (Loud cheers.) They would see that in England every man showed respect and honor with willingness where it was due. They were all subjects—he was a fellow subject with them all—and ready, at all times, to give allegiance to his sovereign cheerfully, because he knew that in so doing he and all of them secured their independence and honour.

The lord mayor then gave, "The sovereigns and states whose representatives have honored the city with their presence this day." (Three times three and cheers,) prince Esterhazy returned thanks. The lord mayor then gave, "The health of the foreign princes who have honored the city with their presence this day." (Three times three.) The duke de Nemours returned thanks, and was received with loud cheering.

The toast of "her majesty's ministers" was received with marked cheering from all parts of the hall, on which viscount Melbourne rose and thanked the company cordially, confidently trusting, as he said, that the good feeling which now existed between this country and all the great states represented by the distinguished men then present, was a guarantee that unanimity, peace and concord, would long, very long, reign amongst us—say, to a period very far remote from the present day; a happy state of things, which could not but strengthen the prosperity and promote the welfare of the whole civilized world. (Loud cheers.)

The next toast proposed was "Field marshal the duke of Wellington, and marshal Soult, duke of Dalmatia," tremendous cheers; in the midst of which, a great portion of the company stood on chairs to catch a glimpse of the two warriors, who had risen in acknowledgment of the compliment.

The duke of Wellington said he entertained a high sense of the honor of being associated with so illustrious an individual as him whose name had been given in company with his own on the present occasion. He was glad to find that the merits and services of the illustrious stranger who was now amongst them, had been properly appreciated by the people of this country. (Cheers.) And he had no doubt that the illustrious guest of the corporation must fully appreciate the cordial feelings which had been manifested towards him, not only on the present occasion, but on every other occasion when he had presented himself to the public. He (the duke of Wellington) was delighted that the king of the French had chosen so distinguished an individual to represent him on the occasion of the coronation of their illustrious sovereign. The conclusion of the noble duke's observation were completely drowned with cheers. The duke of Dalmatia, who sat about twelve seats away from his grace, seemed to pay great attention to what fell from him, with the assistance apparently of a gentleman who stood by him, and interpreted what the noble duke said.

The duke of Dalmatia then proceeded, amidst reiterated cheers, to address the company in the French language. He spoke with great feeling, but not with a powerful voice. He commenced by observing that the expressions made use of by the duke of Wellington, had entered into his very heart. Never had there lived a nobler-minded, a braver, or a more honorable man than that illustrious general. The French tion had learned to appreciate the worth of the English army; its value was known and appreciated all over Europe. Now, however, they had no further resort to arms. Between France and England there should now exist a perpetual alliance.—(The illustrious duke laid an emphasis upon the words "alliance perpetuelle," which brought down a thunder of applause.) After some few further observations, the noble duke, alluding, as we imagined, to the hospitality with which he was at that moment treated in company with the duke of Wellington, said that he hoped yet, one of these days, to take his revenge (revanche) of the noble duke in France. The illustrious and gallant duke sat down, after drinking, "The health of the British army, and more particular of its great general, the duke of Wellington." (Thunders of applause.)

The duke of Wellington returned thanks for this, also, with much feeling; some necessary toasts followed, and the illustrious company separated before 12 o'clock.

The numbers present at this entertainment may be judged of by the following bill of fare:

120 tureens of turtle, of five pints each; 17 dishes of fish, consisting of salmon, turbot, whiting, fench, and eels; 40 haunches of venison; 80 dishes of fowls, capons, and pullets; 40 cherry, gooseberry, and currant tarts; 30 strawberry tarts, 40 dishes of potatoes, 60 dishes of French beans, 30 French pies, 30 pigeon pies, 30 hams, 30 tongues, 2 barons of beef, 37 Chianti baskets, 80 dishes of peas: 10 sirloins, ribs, and rumps of beef; 45 dishes of shellfish; 30 ribs, chins, and legs of lamb; 40 dishes of ducklings, 20 turkey poult, 80 jellies, 20 creams, 40 salads and cucumber, 20 dishes of cauliflowers.

Desert—75 pine apples of 2 lbs. each, 100 dishes of hothouse grapes, 20 melons, 30 dishes of cherries, 100 dishes of strawberries, 40 dishes of currants and gooseberries, 120 creams and water ices, various; 40 dishes of dried fruit, 35 ornamented Savoy cakes, 80 dishes of preserves, biscuits and olives.

Wines of every kind ad infinitum.

John Van Buren, the son of the president, is feted in common with the duke de Nemours, prince Esterhazy, prince Schwartzberg, the dukes of Dalmatia, Wellington, and others. At the grand entertainment to the ambassadors at Guildhall, by the corporation of London, John is set down among the very chosen few on the right hand of the lord mayor.

Marshal Soult has been feted in great style.

He wrote to a friend in Paris, that as the representative of France, he had "met with a reception equally sincere on the part of the government and of the people. The homage which has been paid to me has filled me with the deepest emotion. I have met with a number of general officers to whom I was once opposed in the field, and by them and every body else in England I have been greeted with a welcome, the honor of which I must attribute to my king and my country."

With regard to the reception the marshal has met with in England, one portion of the press of Paris is in extacies, while the other portion attempts to account for it in a variety of ways, as amusing as they are inconsistent.

The Poles. A fete called "the Polish fete," was given near London on the 13th ult., at which it is said there were not less than 10,000 persons present. It was got up for the immediate relief of the distressed Poles in and about London, and it was expected that it would result favorably.

The Polish fete. The expectations of those by whom this fete was got up have not been disappointed. The gardens at Beulah Spa—large as they are—were yesterday literally crowded with company, there not being less than 10,000 persons present. The arrangements for the musical performances were of the first order. Orchestras were erected on each side of the lawn, in one of which Strauss' band performed, while in the other was placed all the vocal and instrumental strength of the Italian opera.

Marshal Soult was among those present. His excellency was dressed in a plain suit of black clothes, and for a long time passed unnoticed, because unknown, by the company; no sooner, however, was he recognized, than all persons were eager to gain a sight of him, and to express their satisfaction at his presence. The marshal was accompanied by a numerous suite of attendants, and for some time promenaded the grounds, arm in arm, with the duchess of Somerset. He retired shortly after four o'clock, to be present at the civic banquet, and on leaving the gardens was loudly cheered by the assembled thousands both within and without the gates.

Since these gardens have been cleared and planted, there has never been so gay, so fashionable, and so numerous an attendance of visitors as on yesterday, and it is ardently to be hoped that the result of the fete will prove beneficial to those for whose immediate relief it has been got up. It has shown that a proper appeal in a righteous cause is never made in vain to the feelings of Englishmen, and, we trust, it will prove but the precursor to efforts still more strenuous in their favor, and that a momentum so favorably given to benevolence and patriotism will not be suffered to subside.

Dreadful thunder storm—twenty-six lives lost. On Thursday afternoon the small village of Silkstone, near Barnsley, in Yorkshire, and its immediate neighborhood, were visited by a thunder storm of the most terrible character, and which was attended by a truly appalling loss of life and property. It commenced between two and three o'clock, and continued for about two hours, its direction apparently being from north-west to south-east. The lightning was exceedingly vivid, and the peals of thunder loud; the rain and hail descended in torrents, and the consequence was that the surrounding country was completely inundated. The banks of the small river which passes through the town presently overflowed, and the resistless torrent in its course tore up large trees by the roots, broke the branches of others, washed away walls, and blew up several roads and bridges.

Adjoining the colliery of Mr. Clarke is a small stream, which during eight months of the year is completely dried up. On the banks of the river being overflowed, the water commenced running in at the day hole, of what is termed the Husker-pit, and twenty-six boys and girls employed in that and the neighboring pits, from eight and nine to seventeen years of age, were unfortunately drowned as they were ascending the day hole. Inquests were held on the bodies on the following day, when verdicts of accidental death were found in all the cases. This storm appears to have been very general throughout the north of England, and to have done considerable injury. Accounts from the more western districts state that its effects were also felt there, although in a less degree.

Lamentable accident. On the 11th a company of licensed players, at the Hay, were about to commence performing to a very full house, when a gun loaded with powder was accidentally struck down, the charge exploded, and the wadding entered the foot of Mr. Westley, the manager. The wound was very severe, and Mr. Westley was conveyed to his lodgings. He was attended by two surgeons, and appeared to be going on well till Friday, when a change for the worse appeared, notwithstanding the unceasing attentions of the medical gentlemen, he died on the following Sunday.

We notice with regret the death of captain Morris, the well known song-writer, which took place on Wednesday morning, at Brookham Lodge, near Dorking, in Surrey. He was in his ninety-third year, and had for four years past lived in retirement; his illness, which was only of four days duration, was internal inflammation.

The Siecle notices the following story, as circulating in the various drawing rooms at Paris: One of the principal conditions imposed by marshal Soult, on accepting the embassy to London, was, that he should demand the remains of Napoleon. The duke of Wellington has hastened to back the application of his old opponent, and it is affirmed that the governor of St. Helena has been ordered to let the coffin of Napoleon be removed, and all due honours be paid to his glorious memory. The prince de Joinville is, for the first time, to assume the command of a frigate, and to repair to St. Helena, in order to convey back to France the remains of the emperor. The young prince is to be accompanied in his pious voyage, by a soldier from every regiment in the French army. Napoleon's remains are to be deposited under the Place Vendôme Column, when a religious ceremony is to take place, and to afford Louis Philippe an opportunity of receiving, in a worthy manner, those who received his son in Germany. It is said that the duke of Wellington will be invited to the ceremony, as well as one of the king of Prussia's sons.

The emperor of Russia arrived at Warsaw, on his return to Russia, at midnight of June 29, and found the city splendidly illuminated. The director of public instruction in the kingdom of Poland has issued an ordinance containing the following, among other provisions. That in the primary schools of all the parishes, there shall be a professor of the Russian language—that the children of the parishes of every rank shall frequent the primary schools, and shall learn the Russian language—that every child who shall refuse to learn the language, shall be chastised, and his relatives shall be fined for the first offence 50 roubles, for the second 100, for the third 300; and for the fourth they shall be adjudged and punished as having disobeyed the orders of the authority. No person shall hold any civil or military employment who does not speak the Russian language.

According to a report of the minister of public instruction in France, of the number of 85,280 communes in the year 1837, 29,613 were provided with schools, being 3,774 more schools than in 1834, and 8,563 more than in 1829. Of the communal schools, 26,370 are devoted to Catholics, 563 to Protestants, 23 to Israelites, and 2,852 receive children of different forms of worship.

The number of pupils, male and female, admitted into primary schools under the care of male instructors, in 1829, was 969,340; in 1832, it was 1,200,715; and in 1837, 1,949,830. That is the number of pupils to whom the benefits of instruction in these schools were afforded, was doubled in the space of eight years. This is exclusive of the number who receive instruction from female teachers.

Mr. Agnado, who had built a fine bridge over the Seine, at Ris Orangis, near Paris, at an expense of 700,000 francs, on which he was authorized to receive a toll until the year 1921, has generously made the passage gratuitous, and surrendered the bridge to the administration of bridges and highways. On the report of the minister of public works, a royal ordinance has been published, recognizing the name of Agnado bridge, which had been spontaneously awarded to it by the inhabitants who are benefited by it.

At the coronation of Edward I, the price of a seat was half a farthing; the price gradually rose, till at the coronation of Elizabeth I, it was sixpence; of James I, a shilling; Charles I, the same; of Charles II, James II, and William and Anne, half a crown; of George I, five shillings; of George II, half a guinea; of George III, ten guineas; of George IV, twenty guineas.

THE COLONIES OF BRITAIN.

From Tait's Edinburgh Magazine for July.

THE COLONIES. The recent revolt in Canada has had the good effect of directing public attention to our colonial system, and to the enormous expense it entails upon the people of Britain. Here, for example, is a table which professes to show the expenditures for the military alone:

Abstract of the commissaries' accounts of the payments from the several military chests in the following colonies, from April 1, 1836, to March 31, 1837.

P. P. No. 361, 1828.	Total payments.
Canada	£219,718
Nova Scotia and New Brunswick	139,664
Newfoundland	17,317
Bermuda	48,724
Bahamas	22,330
West Indies	286,972
Jamaica	423,231
Honduras	16,910
Gibraltar	116,988
Malta	167,671
Ionian Islands	182,104
Cape of Good Hope	313,410
Mauritius	97,410
Sierra Leone	46,269
Gambia	10,171
Ceylon	94,184
New South Wales	328,318
Van Diemen's Land	167,607
Western Australia	17,112
St. Helena	51,893
	£2,727,923

Estimated amount of payments at Western Australia, quarter ending March 31, 1837 - 5,705

Total payments £2,733,627
But it is easy to show that the expenditure is much greater than shown in this return; for the following was the distribution of our army on the 1st of January last:

Great Britain	22,579
Ireland	19,766
India	18,894
Other colonies	34,460
	95,989

Deducting the army in India, which is paid by the East India Company, nearly one-half of our army is stationed in our colonies. If we consider the great expense their conveyance to and from and the great mortality, we may be sure that the 52,000 men in the United Kingdom are maintained at less expense than the 34,000 in the colonies. Now, the total cost of the army, including the ordnance, is eight millions; so that, instead of less than three, the military protection of the colonies must cost four millions. During the war, our navy cost annually about twenty millions, the greater proportion of the ships being employed in defending the colonies, and, since the peace in 1815, the expenditure has varied from nine to about four and a half millions. We may therefore add two millions more for this head, and at least another million for the maintenance of the civil establishment; so that the people of this country are annually taxed seven millions for the support of our colonies. Were war to break out, (and colonies have always been the most fertile source of wars,) that expenditure would unquestionably be doubled. The average produce of the revenue of late years, after deducting the interest of the debt, has been about fifteen millions, one-half of which is expended on our colonies. This is surely a state of matters which cannot long be submitted to.

EMANCIPATION IN THE WEST INDIES.

The following is the proclamation, issued by sir Lionel Smith, to which we alluded in the last "REGISTER."

JAMAICA, &c.

A PROCLAMATION.

By his excellency sir Lionel Smith, knight commander of the most honorable military order of the bath, knight grand cross in the royal Hanoverian order, a lieutenant general of her majesty's land forces, and colonel of the fortieth regiment of foot, captain general, governor-in-chief and commander of the forces in and over her majesty's island of Jamaica, and the other territories thereon depending in America, vice chancellor and admiral of the same prædial apprentices.

In a few days more you will all become free laborers—the legislature of the island having relinquished the remaining two years of your apprenticeship.

The first of August next is the happy day when you will become free—under the same laws as other freemen whether white, black or colored.

I, your governor, give you joy on this great blessing.

Remember that in freedom you will have to depend on your own exertions for your livelihood, and to maintain and to bring up your families. You will work for such wages as you can agree upon with your employers.

It is their interest to treat you fairly.

It is your interest to be civil, respectful and industrious.

Where you can agree and continue happy with your old masters, I strongly recommend you to remain on those properties on which you have been born, and where your parents are buried.

But you must not mistake, in supposing that your present houses, gardens or provision grounds, are your own property.

They belong to the proprietors of the estates, and you will have to pay rent for them in money or labor, according as you and your employers may agree together.

Idle people who will not take employment, but go wandering about the country, will be taken up as vagrants, and punished in the same manner as they are in England.

The ministers of religion have been kind friends to you—listen to them—they will keep you out of trouble and difficulties.

Recollect what is expected of you by the people of England, who have paid such a large price for your liberty.

They not only expect that you will behave yourselves as the queen's good subjects, by obeying the laws, as I am happy to say you always have done as apprentices; but that the prosperity of the island will be increased by your willing labor, greatly beyond what it ever was in slavery. Be honest towards all men—be kind to your wives and children—spare your wives from heavy field work, as much as you can—make them attend to their duties at home, in bringing up your children, and in taking care of your stock—above all, make your children attend divine service and school.

If you follow up this advice, you will, under God's blessing, be happy and prosperous.

Given under my hand and seal at arms, at St. Jago de la Vega, this 9th day of July, in the first year of her majesty's reign Annoque Domini, 1838.

LIONEL SMITH.

By his excellency's command,

C. H. DARLING, secretary.

The Massachusetts anti-slavery society held a meeting on Wednesday afternoon, the 1st inst. at the Marlborough chapel, in commemoration of the final emancipation of the slaves in the British West India islands. The following honest and manly letter from John Quincy Adams, was read to the meeting.

Quincy, 28th July, 1838.

Edmund Quincy, esq., Boston:

Dear Sir: I have received your kind invitation in behalf of the committee of arrangements of the Massachusetts anti-slavery society, to attend their celebration of the anniversary of the day upon which slavery was abolished in the colonial possessions of Great Britain.

It would give me pleasure to comply with the invitation; but my health is not very firm; my voice has been affected by the intense heat of the season, and a multiplicity of applications from societies, political and literary, to attend and address their meetings, have imposed upon me the necessity of pleading the privilege of my years, and declining them all.

I rejoice that the defence of the cause of human freedom is falling into younger and more vigorous hands. That in three-score years from the day of the Declaration of Independence, its self-evident truths should be yet struggling for existence against the degeneracy of an age pampered with prosperity and languishing into servitude, is a melancholy truth, from which I should in vain attempt to shut my eyes. But the summons has gone forth. The youthful champions of the rights of human nature have buckled and are buckling on their armor, and the scouring overseer and the lynching lawyer, and the servile sophist, and the faithless scribe, and the priestly parasite, will vanish before them like satin touched with the spear of Ithuriel. I live in the faith and hope of the progressive advancement of Christian liberty, and expect to abide by the same in death. You have a glorious and arduous career before you, and it is among the consolations of my last days, that I am able to cheer you in the pursuit, and exhort you to be steadfast and immovable in it. So shall you not fail, whatever may betide, to reap a rich reward in the blessings of him that is ready to perish, upon your soul.

I am, dear sir, faithfully your friend and servant,

J. Q. ADAMS.

LAW CASE.

PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The commonwealth of Pennsylvania, At the suggestion of the hon. JAMES TODD and others.

vs. The reverend ASHBEL GREEN, D. D. and others.

In the supreme court of Pennsylvania, E. D. March term, 1838. No. 60.

Writ of quo warranto, issued the 2d of June, 1838, returnable the first Monday in July, 1838.

The above case involves the legality of the proceedings of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States, held in this city in the month of May last. Rules had been entered by the relators on the defendants to plead preparatory to a trial.

The supreme court held their annual session on the last Monday (30th) in July, and Mr. justice Kennedy presided.

Kane, (with whom were Chauncey and Bradford) moved the court for a rule to show cause why the writ in this case should not be set aside as having been obtained improvidently, inasmuch 1st, As it is made returnable in vacation; 2d, As the suggestion filed is insufficient—and for an order, that the rules entered by the relators be in the meantime suspended.

Mr. Kane proceeded to examine the different acts of assembly, and the authorities on his first ground, and argued that the suggestion did not state that the relators were elected in the place of the defendants.

Mr. Meredith, on the part of the relators, replied to Mr. Kane, showing that the writ in this case had been granted by chief justice Gibson, while sitting at Harrisburg, with the approbation of the whole court, that a writ of quo warranto had issued in the same form in the case of the fourth Presbyterian church, that the law, and practice under it, sanctioned this mode of proceeding; that even if it had been irregular, it was waived by the appearance of the defendants, and could not now avail them.

On the 2d ground, Mr. Meredith replied, that the suggestion was in the usual form; that the title of the relators was only stated to show their interest in the subject matter, and that, though the fact were otherwise, it might be assumed for the purposes of this argument, that the relators were not elected in the place of the defendants.

Randall (on the same side) commenced by stating, that they had no right to inquire into the motives of those who made this motion; but its practical effect was delay—if successful, it would only postpone the issuing of the writ until next December. He had indulged the hope that both parties would unite in a prompt and speedy termination of this unhappy controversy—all such expectation he now abandoned—Mr. Randall was then proceeding to cite authorities, when he was stopped by the court, who directed the other side to proceed.

Mr. Bradford then addressed the court on all the grounds, and to the suggestion of delay replied, that the defendants were ready to meet the case, but would insist on its being done in a legal manner; if the proceedings were irregular, they ought not to waive any advantage it might afford them; that there was great justice in the science of special pleading, and if they could, they would in this case invoke its aid.

The case was continued until a late hour in the day, when the court refused the motion on all the grounds taken by the defendants.

Mr. Kane then stated, that the rule to plead would expire on the next day, (the 31st inst.) and successively asked the court to enlarge the rule, till the second Monday in December and the first Monday in September next, both of which motions were also refused in the order in which they were made.

We are informed that the defendants have since filed their plea, and that the cause will be set down for trial at the next November nisi prius for the city and county of Philadelphia.

[Thus it appears that one material point in the case is decided, viz:—that the case comes within the purview of the civil law, and it is ordered for a hearing in December next.]

GENERAL HARRISON.

General Harrison recently made a tour through a part of the states of Ohio and Indiana, and was everywhere greeted with extraordinary marks of distinction. A dinner was given to him at Massillon, where the following toast, the seventh of the regular series, was received with great enthusiasm:

William Henry Harrison,—Inheriting from his birth the virtues and principles of revolutionary times, well has he illustrated them in a life of uncommon devotedness and fidelity in the public service. His name is enshrined in millions of hearts, and when the waves of party shall cease to beat upon it, posterity will do ample justice to that character whose history will occupy one of the brightest pages in American annals.

Upon the reading of the toast, George Kirkum, esq., vice president of the day, tendered to gen. Harrison, in behalf of the citizens of Portage, "a cordial welcome to the county, and the simple hospitalities which a brief period of preparation had enabled them to offer."

"We honor you," said Mr. Kirkum, "not only for your personal services in the maintenance of our rights and institutions in the civil council, and in the battle field, but also as one of the distinguished men on whom we look as standard bearers of our political faith in the momentous conflict now waging between the political parties of the United States. And although among us there are various predilections and partialities for the several individuals proposed for the presidency, by different portions of the whig party, we all recognize in you a candidate for that office, for whom we shall most cheerfully cast our votes in case you shall be the nominee of the national convention of whigs, and more so, because we perceive in the submission of your claims to the arbitrament of that convention, (when so many ardent and influential friends were resolved to make no terms with your competitors,) another evidence, that under whatever circumstances, or in whatever station you might be placed, you would be actuated by a desire to promote the welfare of your country, and not by a lust of personal aggrandizement, or an obstinate will that would set at defiance the acts of our representatives in congress, and the sober councils of the wise men who might be associated with you in the various departments of the government.

"Entertaining and honoring you, then, as the hero and statesman of by-gone days, and as the Cincinnati who may, by our suffrages, be again called from the plough to hold the reins of state, we invite you to enter, without fear of being regarded as either egotistical or opinative, into free discourse to these veterans of the revolution, these co-workers with you in later wars and councils, these admiring ladies, and these ardent youth who have come up to see and hear you on the interesting events in your own life, so closely interwoven with the history of the west; and on the great political questions and public acts, which distract our country at the present day."

The following extracts are from general Harrison's reply, according to the sketch of it contained in the Ohio Star.

"In relation to the allusion which had been made to the situation in which he stood before the people of the United States, he must be permitted to say, that he was not personally responsible for having been placed in that position. There was not a man in the nation who could with truth say, that any suggestion which had the least tendency towards the expression of a wish to become a candidate for the presidency ever came from his lips or his pen."

And yet he certainly had friends to whom such a suggestion might have been safely made. Could it be supposed that he was ignorant of the fact that at least in four states of the union from the decisive manifestations of attachment to him, frequently made by large bodies of their citizens, he might have entered upon the canvasses under auspices by no means unpromising? Could it be supposed, too, that he did not know that "the thousand and one" calumnies which had been for twenty-five years so industriously circulated against him could be easily refuted? The very fact that he had never before visited this interesting portion of a state of which he had for so many years been a citizen, that (excepting the remnant of those gallant bands whom he had the honor to command in the second war of independence,) he was here in the midst of strangers, afforded sufficient evidence that he never sought the means of placing himself in the situation of competitor to the distinguished men who have from time to time been brought forward as candidates for the highest office in the gift of the people! His ambition had been limited to the faithful discharge of the duties of the more humble offices which the confidence of his fellow citizens or of their government had conferred upon him. Indeed, at the period of his first nomination by a portion of the people of that magnanimous state which upon every occasion has manifested the purity of her patriotism by the disinterestedness of her course, he had supposed that his political career was forever ended. It was the voice of the people which induced him to change the peaceful, and to him most delightful occupation of the husbandmen for the troubles and mortifications incident to the situation in which they placed him. It was the same voice which had again elevated him to an equality in claims for the most exalted office not only in this nation but in the world, with the two most distinguished citizens of our country. And however willing he might be as an individual to acknowledge their superior attainments in the science of government, he could not and would not bring himself to a level below that upon which so many honest, intelligent and patriotic citizens had placed him. The exalted opinion, which he had of the two statesmen to whom he had alluded was well known. One of them, Mr. Clay, he had ever supported with the most ardent zeal whenever an opportunity offered. His claims to rank amongst the most able statesmen none could deny, and he took a great pleasure in stating, that after having enjoyed (as he believed) his unlimited confidence for years, in power, and out of power, he had never formed an idea that Greece or Rome, ever possessed a purer patriot. His distinguished rival in forensic attainments was every way his equal, and he should possess the sympathy of every honest man, for the unjust prejudices which are entertained against him. Daniel Webster was never otherwise than a patriot. All his thoughts, all his wishes, all his aspirations have been for the honor and glory of his country. How unjust, then, to attach to him sentiments he never entertained—conduct which his soul would have abhorred! He had not time to go into particulars, but he appealed to the known generosity of western bosoms to lay aside their unfounded prejudices against a man to whose enlarged and disinterested course they have been so much indebted.

He had not given to these men, the high character which he had ascribed to them for the purpose of deriving advantage from the partiality of his fellow citizens, who had placed him by their side. By no means. If he should be obliged to state his own pretensions, he could only claim the merit of being, "if not an equal," "an older" statesman, always the ardent supporter of the rights of the people, in the councils of the nation, and in the field their faithful and devoted soldier.

He went at length into the subject of the currency.

He spoke of the banks; of the senseless cry raised against them, that their tendency was not as had been pretended, to make the rich, richer, and the poor, poorer. Their tendency might be to make the rich, richer, but he denied their tendency was to make the poor, poorer. They were the means of opening facilities for the poor man to become rich. By increasing the capabilities of men of wealth to embark in enterprises useful to the country—in schemes of internal improvement, in manufacturing, in building, &c., the laboring, the industrious part of the community are vastly benefited, by thus having the means of accumulating fortunes for themselves, scattered abroad among them. He had no interest in any bank—never had but once, and then lost all his stock. But he was a bank man, and in favor of the credit system, and he was so, because he was a democrat. He had been in a country (Colombia) where they had no credit system—where they had purely a metallic currency. That country was called a republic; but little evidence of a free republic was to be seen. No works of internal improvement, no public enterprises, no manufacturing establishments, nothing that indicated among the people, industry, prosperity or happiness. In that country were the rich living in their splendid palaces, and the poor were poor indeed. So you will find it in all the despotisms of the old world—so you will find it wherever the credit system is abolished or unknown."

After gen. Harrison had concluded, the following toast was received with great applause:

William Henry Harrison, Henry Clay and Daniel Webster—Three distinguished citizens of the republic whom the people delight to honor. Their names will be transmitted to posterity with undiminished lustre, when the memory of their revilers shall have passed from the earth.

MR. DUNCAN'S SPEECH.

LETTER FROM THE HON. JAMES GARLAND.

From the Madisonian of the 4th inst.

The "Washington Globe" of the 18th inst., contains a speech of the hon. Mr. Duncan, of Ohio, partly delivered in the house of representatives, and partly written out, but not delivered during the late session of congress. In that part of the speech not delivered, is the following paragraph:

"But another mode is adopted by the federal party having the majority in either house, to swell the expenses against the wishes of the administration, and then charge the extravagance to it. For example, at the present session, the house printed more than one hundred thousand dollars in documents, many of them not worth the paper (now made waste paper,) on which they are printed. Of this sort is a volume of one hundred and thirty-eight pages, consisting entirely of the cancelled drafts of the treasury which my colleague [Mr. Bond] called for, and had printed. He could have had no motive in calling for this but to make a fat job of rule and figure work for Gales and Seaton. It is just as valuable a work as so many cancelled checks drawn on a bank. In the beginning of the session, Mr. Garland of Virginia, a conservative, called for the correspondence of the treasury with the banks. The house was informed that there were not clerks in the department sufficient to prepare it during the term of the members. It would have made a fat job of at least $50,000, on which the gentleman's friend, Mr. Allen, would have had a per centage, and Gales and Seaton their profits. Another call was made by him for all the documents in regard to the defaulters to the treasury; and this would have been to copy and print the papers of the office of the solicitor of the treasury out and out. This would, besides the expense of copying, cost at least $50,000 more for printing. It was found there were not clerks enough to make the copies, and Mr. Garland moved a resolution to authorize new appointments for this purpose, but it failed. This shows what the conservatives and whigs would have done, by way of bringing grist to Gales and Seaton's press, to afford vast profits to them, and increase the per centage of Allen. What they have done appears from the gross sum of a hundred and twenty thousand dollars for the extra and present session of the house printing, with an arrear of fifteen thousand dollars yet to be received for it, with forty-three thousand dollars for books, and at least fifty-nine thousand dollars to be realized, at the same rate, for the approaching session, showing an aggregate of TWO HUNDRED and THIRTY-SEVEN THOUSAND DOLLARS for one branch of congress for one congressional term; whereas Messrs. Blair and Rives have received, during the six years my colleague, [Mr. Bond,] has scanned their printing, only one hundred and sixty thousand dollars for congress printing and materials, and one hundred and fourteen thousand from all the departments, for the same time."

This paragraph contains two charges against me: the first, that in the beginning of the late session of congress, I made a call for "the correspondence of the treasury with the banks"—the second is, that I made another call for "all the documents in regard to the defaulters of the treasury"—each of which documents it is said would have cost the government $50,000. The Globe of the 20th inst. repeats the charge in the following terms:—"He (speaking of Mr. Bond and his speech) could join Mr. Garland in calling for the BANK CORRESPONDENCE FOR YEARS BACK, which would have made volumes as large as the old documents on which Gales & Seaton received $100,000." If I made any such calls, I do not recollect them; if I did, I am ready to admit that they were not necessary, and that I am justly censurable; but I am well satisfied that Mr. Duncan has been misled upon this subject, and that upon an examination of the journals, he will find that he is mistaken both as to the date and the scope of the resolutions which I offered.

The resolution to which I have no doubt Mr. Duncan refers, was not offered in the beginning of the late session, but was offered on the 12th day of October last, four days before the close of the extra session. The call was not for "all the correspondence of the treasury with the banks," but for the names of all receivers, collectors, or depositors of the public money, who were in default to the government; the amount of such default, the length of time due, the security given, if any, and how much had been, or would likely be lost, together with all correspondence upon the subject, from the 1st day of January, 1834, to that time; a call confined in its scope entirely to existing defaulters, and in the correspondence to a period of four years only. The following is a true copy of the resolution:

"Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury communicate to this house, as early in the next session as practicable, the names of all receivers, collectors, or depositors of the public money, who ARE IN DEFAULT to the government, the amount of such default, the length of time due, the security given, if any, or how much has been, or will likely be lost, together with a copy of all correspondence upon the subject, from the 1st day of January, 1834, to this time."

This resolution was read in the hearing of the house before it was offered; and it was then offered and taken up by the unanimous consent of the house, and adopted without a single dissentient, as well as I recollect. This call, which was made on the 12th day of October, was not answered until the 17th day of January following, and then only in part. The report of the 17th of January, contained a list of the deposit banks, and the names of the collectors and receivers in default, together with the amounts due, the character of the security given with explanatory notes; in fact the whole resolution was answered, except the copies of the correspondence called for. Appended to this report was a letter of the secretary of the treasury, accompanied with one from the solicitor of the treasury, to him in these words:

*Office of the solicitor of the treasury,
January 15, 1838.*

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the statement of the first comptroller of the treasury of the amounts due from certain collectors of the customs which was referred by you to this office on the 6th December, 1837; and also the statement of the same officer of the amounts due from certain receivers of public moneys, which was referred by you to this office on the 25th December, 1837. I transmit herewith an abstract of the information which is furnished by the records and correspondence of this office relative to each of the cases in these statements. It is impossible in this office to give any thing like an accurate summary of "the amount that has been or is likely to be lost;" nor can any opinion be here formed on the subject, except mere conjecture, further than it is to be derived from the notes and abstracts now annexed to each particular case. It will, however, be seen from these that, in all probability, some of the largest balances will be entirely paid, and that many others will be greatly reduced.

In addition to the statements received from the comptroller, I transmit a statement of balances due from the late deposit banks, which have failed to meet the requisitions of the secretary of the treasury under the act of 16th October last; and also a statement of balances due from banks, formerly depositaries of the public money, which are unavailable, together with similar notes and abstracts of the information that can be furnished from the records and correspondence of this office.

H. D. GILPIN, solicitor of the treasury.

Th the hon. Levi Woodbury, secretary of the treasury.

From a fair interpretation of the resolution, it is manifest that the solicitor of the treasury had misapprehended the scope of the resolution, and regarded it as requiring an extent of correspondence which it did not require. Some few days after this report came in, believing the correspondence called for by the resolution necessary to the just decision of the important financial question then depending before congress, I offered a resolution authorizing the secretary of the treasury to employ such temporary aid as would, with a due regard to the other important business of the department, enable him to report the correspondence in time to avail in the final disposition of that question. When I offered this resolution, various other amendments were offered, which I thought would only embarrass it. Before, however, it was disposed of, I offered another resolution, calling for the correspondence of the treasury department alone, with the defaulters, thereby superseding the correspondence called for by the resolution of the 12th of October, and greatly lessening its volume, which was adopted without any objection that I heard. Shortly after this resolution was adopted, the report came in, and when my resolution to authorize the employment of such aid as might be deemed necessary by the secretary of the treasury came up, instead of its failing, as charged by Mr. Duncan, it was laid on the table on my own motion, for the simple reason that the resolution had been answered as far as was necessary. To prove that the delay in communicating the correspondence called for in my resolution of the 12th of October, was not caused by the volume of that correspondence, I will state the fact that after the resolution, as subsequently restricted, was responded to, a bill was reported by the judiciary committee, to authorize the employment of an additional permanent clerk, in the office of the solicitor of the treasury, at the earnest solicitation of that officer, on account of the great increase of the business of that office.

The foregoing statement of facts, and for their truth, I refer to the journals of the house of representatives, do not justify the charge that I made the undefined, and unlimited calls for the correspondence of the treasury with the banks, and all the documents in relation to defaulters, as charged by Mr. Duncan, and repeated by the Globe; but that the call was specific and limited, seeking the names of defaulters, the amounts of defalcation, the security held by the government, and the correspondence for the four preceding years in relation to these defaults only. Was there anything in this call unimportant or unnecessary? A day or two before it was made, the agitating, the important and all-absorbing sub-treasury bill, had been laid upon the table in the house of representatives. It was well known that it was again to be taken up at the succeeding session, to be discussed and decided on. The question was a vital one, and I feel confident in the assertion that nothing could more successfully elucidate it, than by laying before congress and the country, what had been the experience of the country in the safe keeping of its revenues by banks and individual agents. The call which I made embraced the results of both systems, and could not do otherwise than aid every member in coming to a just conclusion upon the subject. With this view, and this only, I offered that resolution. I did not know what would be the volume of the correspondence, or what would be the cost of printing; about this I knew nothing. I only looked to the value of the document in aiding the deliberations of congress, and enlightening the people upon a subject involving their dearest and most important interests. But what is the cost of the two documents that came? The first is a small document of 53 pages, and I understand cost, for the usual number, $172 69; subsequently, however, 5,000 extra copies were ordered, costing $498 42. The second is a larger document, of 400 pages, and cost, as I understand, $1,074 83. This is very, very far short of the $100,000, at which the cost has been computed. If the first call would have cost $100,000, then it was reduced to the actual cost on my own motion. If I offered any other resolutions than those which I have stated, they were either adopted, rejected, or remain undisposed of. If adopted, they are either answered, or remain unanswered. If answered, I have stated the cost. If unanswered, the cost will be ascertained when the reports come in; but there are none unanswered. If I offered any calls which were rejected, will my accusers point them out? If any, which remain undisposed of, what are they, and when were they offered? I have not the most instant idea that any report within the legitimate range of the resolution which I offered would have cost for the printing $5,000, much more $100,000. I have no practical knowledge upon the subject, at such is my opinion. For I do not believe that there is as much correspondence behind, as that which was reported, and which cost only $1,074 83. I suppose it had cost all that is charged, what of it? Does not every man perceive the value of the document in reference to the great question depending before the country, and should it have been withheld for fear of spending fifty or even a hundred thousand dollars? Every patriot will answer no—let us have the light!!

If this correspondence, in relation to defaulters, is very voluminous, it speaks in a voice of thunder to the American people, whether it embraces banks or individual agents; and every man who loves his country, and values the purity of her institutions, should unite in a general demand to bring forth, and expose it to the public gaze, naked and unadorned. For in ascertaining the utmost extent of these defalcations, the people are deeply and vitally interested; and whether it affects mostly the banks, or individual agents, let it come forth—let the truth be known to its utmost extent, that the country may act in reference to this great question from the unobscured and unhidden light of experience. I do not repent of the call which I made, and should not, if it had cost $200,000, so important do I deem the information which it produced. As to the insinuation, that I was actuated by paltry and unworthy motive of benefiting Gales & Seaton, and Thomas Allen, I have no reply to make—none whatever. Nor have I any to make to the insinuation of "The Globe," that I was acting in concert with Mr. Bond, or he with me, in offering my resolution. I had never interchanged one word with Mr. Bond as to the resolution which I offered; nor as to any which he offered. The imputation is entirely gratuitous and unfounded.

I believe I might safely challenge a comparison of my votes with that of the most fastidious economist in the house, either as it relates to public printing, or any other branch of the public service, in appropriating the public money. And as to the books spoken of by Mr. Duncan, if I am not egregiously mistaken, my name is recorded against all appropriations for the purchase of books for the members.

As to the corrupt bargain of which Mr. Duncan speaks between the friends of Gales & Seaton and the friends of Allen, I have only to say that I saw none, heard of none, and was privy to none. I was not at the caucus of which he speaks, and had nothing to do with it. I had determined, before I left home, (whether properly or not I will not discuss) not to vote for Gales & Seaton, or Blair & Rives. And if Allen had not been run, I should have cast a blank vote. During the progress of the ballot, several gentlemen asked me if Allen failed, whether I would not vote for Gales & Seaton; I told them no. Others asked me if Allen failed whether I would not go for Blair & Rives; I told them no, I would not. I did not know Allen when the ballots were going on. I voted for him upon the recommendation of others. I defy the production of a single man, to whom I made any proposition, or who made one to me.

I have no other object in making this communication than to correct the errors into which Mr. Duncan has fallen, as to the character and scope of the resolutions which I had offered. When a copy of the Journal of the house shall have reached me, I shall, if I find it necessary, place my conduct upon this occasion beyond the reach of censure. I am not unapprized of the hostility which I have provoked on the part of some of the friends of the administration, and the press in its support for the cause which my own sense of duty and obedience to the wishes of a large majority of my constituents has compelled me to take upon the all-absorbing question of the day. While I have done nothing to provoke hostility, I have no disposition to deprecate it, but will abide all the consequences which may result from it. I shall continue to do my duty according to the dictates of my own conscience, in despite of denunciation or abuse; and shall only feel myself recreant to my trust, when I can be brought to disregard my own conscientious opinions and act upon the principle that party considerations constitutes the first and most important objects of representative duty. I have not so learned my duty, nor shall I so perform it.

Your obedient servant,

J. GARLAND.

From the National Intelligencer of the 14th ult.

Messrs. GALE & SEATON: In the "Globe" newspaper of the 13th instant is a speech of the honorable Mr. Duncan, of Ohio, from which I have extracted the following paragraph in relation to the public printing of which I am superintendent or manager, for the proprietors, viz:

After discoursing about some supposed bargaining in obtaining the printing, Mr. D. speaks as follows:

"Another natural consequence of this bargaining has been discovered before the committee appointed at the heel of the session, has not yet had time to make full investigation, and report; but I feel at liberty to use the information which I have derived from a witness, sworn before it. A first rate practical printer, called on by that committee to measure the work, and calculate the price which it was lawful to charge for it, and compare it with that which Gales & Seaton, in the name of Allen, as printer to this house, had received for it, found that the first document printed for this house at this session, by Gales & Seaton, was fraudulently printed; and that, by diminishing the page and using types different from those authorized by law, they had made an illicit profit amounting to between thirteen and fourteen hundred dollars."

Now, gentlemen, there is not one word of truth in the above paragraph. The honorable gentleman has been imposed upon by some ignoramus, probably, to use no harsher epithet. I assure, gentlemen, there was no "fraud" practised in printing the document referred to. The size of the page was not "diminished." No "types were used different from those authorized by law."

I quote the law itself to prove the fact. I have never violated it since I have had the management of the public printing, some sixteen years or so.

EXTRACT FROM THE LAW.

"Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the United States in congress assembled, That the printing of congress, unless when otherwise specially ordered, shall be done in the following form and manner, viz:

"Bill," as heretofore, with English type, on foolscap paper.

"Rule, or table work, in royal octavo size, where it can be brought into that size by any type not smaller than brevier; and, where it cannot in such form as to fold conveniently into the volume.

"All other printing with a small pica type, on royal paper, in pages of the same size as those of the last edition of the laws of the United States."

There is nothing said here about ems. The congress pages, however, are of the same size as the laws referred to—they are 55 lines long, and 81 in width, and contain as many small pica ems as a page of the laws. I was employed upon the laws, both in composition and proof-reading, during their publication in 1814, by Mr. Weightman, then printer to congress. So, I may be presumed to know something about them.

As to the same document, printed at the Globe office, making fifty-six pages less than that printed by Mr. Allen, it can be easily and readily accounted for by practical printers, without resorting to an allegation of fraud.

The small pica type, on which the house document is printed, drives out about a page in every twenty; while that used on the senate document takes in an equal amount. Both sorts of type are "small pica," conformable to law, for the current printing. Some of the tables in the house document are put in small pica, while in the senate document they are put in brevier; reducing, of course, a considerable quantity of press work. I do not think that any tabular statements should be put in brevier when they can be brought into small pica, as, in short numbers, it increases the expense.

Indeed, there are no two printers, probably, unless by an extraordinary accident, who would arrive at the same result in printing a mass of MS., interspersed with tabular statements, equal to one thousand pages.

Very respectfully, I am, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,
GEO. M. GROUARD.

From the National Intelligencer of the 15th ult.

Messrs. GALE & SEATON: A writer in the "Globe" of this morning attempts to explain away or invalidate what I said in yesterday's Intelligencer in relation to the public printing. I have no disposition for a newspaper war of words about en quads. Truth is not likely to be elicited by such a discussion. When the committee shall pursue their investigation again, disinterested testimony will be had before it, when the application of the law and the practices and usages of the profession can be given in evidence by competent and skilful printers, and all cavil and equivocation be put to rest.

With regard to the printing of extra numbers of documents, which the house has not ordered, (as the writer in the "Globe" charges,) it demands no other reply than that I am merely an executive officer (standing in my employer's place,) to carry into effect such orders as I may receive. I do not ransack the journals to see what has been done or what has been left undone. Nor have I any access to the vouchers in the fire-proof building of the treasury department to enable me to throw any light upon the charge. It is no part of my business. Nothing, however, is printed by me for the public without instructions from the house of representatives.

For myself, I can have no motive for misrepresentation, much less for fraud in the matter—having every thing to risk and nothing to gain. I have endeavored always to discharge my duty to the extent of my ability, with perfect good faith and justice both to the United States and to my employer. If I shall be found to have committed any error of judgment in the execution of the printing, of which I am not conscious, the correction or the remedy can be readily applied.

Respectfully, &c.

GEO. M. GROUARD.

Expedition trip. From the Petersburg, (Va.) Intelligencer of the 7th inst. A gentleman of this town has just made the trip from this place to Philadelphia and back in three days and a half; having spent six hours in Richmond, eight in Philadelphia, and on his return, twelve in Baltimore, and nine and a half in Washington city. He has favored us with the following memorandum of the trip:

"I left Petersburg in the cars for Richmond on Wednesday night, at 8 o'clock, reached Richmond at 1-2 past 9; went to bed at 10, and left in the cars for Fredericksburg, Thursday morning at 4; arrived in Philadelphia, via Frenchtown and Newcastle, Friday morning at about 4—at 6 dressed and went up to the hotel in the city, where, after dressing and breakfasting, I transacted my business and left at 2 P. M. for Baltimore. Reached Baltimore at 1-2 past 9, same evening; lodged at the new Exchange hotel, (which for attention, neatness and comfort, may be classed with the Tremont-house of Boston, and Mansion-house of Philadelphia and French's hotel of Norfolk,) left that city at 9 Saturday morning; arrived at Washington at 1-2 past 11; remained until 9 that night, when I left in the Potomac boat for Fredericksburg, and reached Petersburg at 1-2 past 11 Sunday morning, without much fatigue or loss of sleep."

A western monster. The famed sea serpent of the Atlantic has not, as heretofore, been rusticated off Nahant this season. The lovers of marvel have not therefore been set agape, as usual, by the wonderful stories respecting that father of snakes.

But we have tidings of a western serpent, which will supply, measurably, the place of his mammoth prototype. It is termed "The Monster of Devil Lake." A correspondent of the Logansport, (Ia.) Telegraph says it was discovered by some men of the name of Robinson, in a small lake, about two miles in length, and one half mile in breadth, and of unknown depth, in the vicinity of Rochester, in that state. The serpent is said to be sixty feet in length. One person, Mr. Lindsay, who saw the animal, describes the head as being three feet across the frontal bone, and having something of the contour of a beef's head, but the neck tapering and having the character of the serpent, color dingy, with large bright yellow spots. The Indians who live in the vicinity of the lake never venture upon it for the purpose of fishing or bathing. They have long known it by the name of "Lake Man-i-too," or devil lake, on account of the serpent, or Man-i-too, [devil,] as they call it, that lives in it.

[Buffalo Commercial.]

Our fishermen on the Nova Scotia and Newfoundland shore are getting into trouble. The Halifax Recorder gives an account of a New Bedford vessel that maltreated one of the inhabitants of Canaan, whose master was taken prisoner and punished. At the Magdalen Islands, a boat's crew of one of her majesty's ships went on board another American fishing vessel, and threw all the fish she had taken overboard.

Three Indian bodies in a remarkable state of preservation, as unaltered in their terrific features expressing agonies of death, as if buried yesterday, were recently disinterred from a ditch in a turf meadow at Sudbury, Mass. There was a light covering of something like ashes over them, and when the air was admitted they crumbled, as usually happens.

Ship canal from Lake Erie to the sea. The Cleveland Herald of the 4th inst. contains a letter, dated "Toronto, 21st July," and addressed to Messrs. Bronson and Crocker, which says that capt. M'Anly, the head of the engineer department, informed the writer of the letter, that "Lord Durham is determined to make a ship canal to Lake Erie from the sea, and that the navigation of the Welland canal will not be impeded by the construction of the new canal."

Fire in the pines. From the Trenton Gazette. A great conflagration is now sweeping through the New Jersey pines; and the extreme dryness of the timber fearfully augments it. It broke out, as we learn from the Burlington Herald, in that county, on the Martha Furnace tract. While on Long Beach, last week, the editor saw the destroying element, at the distance of many miles, casting a light as though a city were in flames. Owners of timber lands are busily employed firing against the consuming enemy. It is the greatest calamity of the kind ever known there. From the neighborhood of Tuckerton to Burr's mill, the country has been over-run. The loss is at least $100,000. We learn from another source, that one single proprietor has lost $20,000. The fire sweeps on, in its devastating progress, in a broad column, twelve miles wide. It sports with man, too, even as with the dry twig, and consumes whole families, in its course.

Health of New Orleans. The following is a copy of a letter from the mayor of New Orleans to the mayor of New York:

New Orleans, 29th July, 1838.

Dear sir: Your letter, requesting information in relation to the existence of the yellow fever in this city, has duly come to hand. In answer thereto, I have the satisfaction to state that there has been among us, so far, no appearance of that malady this season. The condition and prospect of this city are such, at present, as to induce the belief that we shall continue to be exempt from it for the future. It is also the opinion of several of our physicians whom I consulted on the subject.

Any information you may stand in need of from this place will at all times be cheerfully communicated.

It is not true that John Jacob Astor of New York, has made a donation of $350,000 for a public library. He only intimated an intention of leaving something!

Nature's nobleman. During the fire in New York, on Wednesday, last week, a female was discovered making her way through the flames into a house. The firemen detained her with much difficulty, and to their interrogations she only exclaimed, "My child! my child!" A noble hearted fireman rushed to where she pointed, and was soon seen issuing from the burning building with the infant in his arms. The scene was truly affecting, and the generous fellow who risked his own life to save that of the child, deserves the warmest thanks of every one.

Another! William E. Payne, of Boston, who recently died in Paris, at the early age of 34, performed an act of noble honesty, which deserves to be spoken of wherever his name is mentioned. His father died insolvent, leaving four children, and a full discharge was given by each of his creditors, upon receiving such proportionate dividend as the executor was able to pay.

Upon the death of his unmarried aunts, Mr. Wm. E. Payne inherited from them a large estate, and immediately sent to all his father's creditors, not as a donation, but as a final dividend out of his father's effects, the full balance of all the debts due from him at his decease. The whole sum thus distributed, it is believed, exceeded $20,000.

The memory of such an act as this, is a rich inheritance, to be transmitted from generation to generation.

[Salem Gazette.]

By the death of com. Rodgers, commodore Barron becomes the head of the navy, with a salary increased from $2,500 to $3,500 a year. Commodore Stewart, now in command of the navy yard at Philadelphia, is second upon the list of officers, having been forty years in the service.

Commodore Biddle has recently been appointed by the secretary of the navy to be governor of the United States naval asylum at Philadelphia.

Serious and extraordinary accident. A gentleman of Cobourg, (U. C.) Mr. Shaw Armour, formerly of Montreal, met with a dreadful accident on board the Rice Lake steamboat Newcastle, his escape from which is little short of a miracle. The particulars related to us are as follows: Mr. A. who is a man of a very large frame, was crossing the boat near the action of the fly wheel, when by some mischance, losing his balance, he fell with his arm through the wheel, and in an instant was dashed by its power headlong through an aperture ten and a half inches wide! As to be expected, he is dreadfully crushed, but we are happy to learn from Dr. Goldstone, who since attended him, that no bones are broken, and that at present he does not apprehend the consequence will be fatal. He was carried shortly after the accident to the Inn at Claver-ton, where he now remains. [Cobourg Star.]

Thunder storms and loss of life. The vicinity of Frederick, Md., was, on Thursday, the 6th inst., visited by a severe thunder storm and opportune copious rains. A barn was struck and destroyed by lightning. On Saturday, P. M. a violent thunder storm and tornado passed over Baltimore. The new warehouse of Messrs. Donnell and Lurman on Donnell's wharf, and which had reached to the third story and was one hundred feet by forty, was completely prostrated, and two German emigrants, a young man and young woman, out of several who had taken shelter in the building, were killed. A colored man had his leg broken, a brick layer was much bruised. A black boy near Fort McHenry was crushed to death between some lumber. Several roofs were blown off and vessels dragged from their moorings. In Philadelphia, to which place the storm reached, a ware house was struck, and three horses killed in a stable near the naval asylum. A young man was killed at Bristol on the Delaware, and a farm house at Morrisville destroyed.

Fire at Hudson, N. Y. A fire kindled by the cinders from the steamboat congress, while lying at the dock at Hudson, broke out in one of the old warehouses on Wednesday afternoon the 8th inst., about 3 o'clock, which proved to be more destructive in its ravages than was ever experienced in that city. The flames were blown by a fresh north west wind over the hill into the city, and raged with such fury as to render the efforts of the firemen unavailing. The fire swept through in a southeasterly direction to the south bay, where every house was consumed. It then extended up the hill towards the old Presbyterian church, doing great damage. Two extensive lumber yards, one belonging to Mr. Reed, and the other to Mr. Hudson, were entirely consumed. The large fire-proof stores and warehouses, near the docks, are not injured; nor did we learn that the whale company had suffered materially. Apprehending the destruction of their warehouses, the oil was rolled out on the dock, but was safe. The engines, with about sixty firemen, went promptly from Catskill to the aid of their fellow-citizens of Hudson. The flames were distinctly seen many miles up and down the river. We were at Kingston at 7 P. M., where the illumination was alarmingly sublime. In all, sixty buildings were consumed, and the loss is estimated at two hundred thousand dollars.

Saratoga springs. The Saratoga Sentinel gives a table of the arrivals and departures by rail-road and stage for the week ending the 5th inst. The arrivals were 1,343 by railroad and 284 by stage—total 1,627. The departures by railroad 1,354, by stage 3,40—total, 1,674. The Sentinel adds:

"Of the arrivals by private conveyance, we have no accurate knowledge; but they are estimated by well informed persons at not less than 300—so that the total number could not have been less than 1900. The departures, it will be perceived, correspond very nearly with the arrivals; had it been otherwise, the public establishments, with all their facilities, could not have furnished the requisite accommodations. The whole number of strangers now in the village is estimated at more than 3,000, and this number will probably not be materially diminished during the warm weather; for the departure of one through only makes room for the entrance of another, and an almost entire change of population is effected during a week. A visitant, indeed, who has been here a fortnight, is considered an old inhabitant, and entitled to all the rights and immunities of citizenship."

Tribute of respect to Dr. Abbott. It is well known that Dr. Abbott has been principal or preceptor of Phillips Academy, in Exeter, for a great length of time—we believe, quite half a century. He is still, we understand, in pretty good health, and we learn that several of the alumni of the college propose to present him with a picture of himself, and also with some other article, as a memorial of their respect. The meeting, it is understood, will take place at Exeter, on the 23d instant, at which Daniel Webster will preside. Among the eminent scholars of New England, there is a large number who in early life were under the care of Dr. Abbott. No doubt this occasion will call together an assembly, among which will be not a few distinguished men.

[Boston Atlas.]

Encouragement of agriculture. The legislature of Maine by a law of the last session have exempted from attachment, the plough, cart, and harrow of the farmer, and the necessary tools used by hand in agriculture.

A bounty has been offered for the production of corn; for the first thirty bushels raised, seven cents per bushel—for the quantity between thirty and sixty bushels, three cents—for the bushels of grain exceeding sixty, two cents each.

A similar bounty is bestowed for the cultivation of wheat—ten cents the bushel for twenty bushels—for the quantity between twenty and two hundred bushels, six cents each—and for each bushel over two hundred, three cents.

East India snakes. The secret so much wondered at, by which the East Indian jugglers safely handle venomous snakes, is said in the Oriental Herald, quoting the authority of lieutenant Hutton, to be this. They are drugged with opium, which renders them quiet and harmless. The effects of the drug will not wear off for a fortnight or three weeks. This fact lieutenant Hutton ascertained by personal experience; a drugged snake which he had purchased having, at the lapse of three weeks, flown at him unexpectedly and nearly strangled him.

Lynn, Mass. We learn with great pleasure that business in Lynn is rapidly reviving. Large numbers of purchasers for the staple of that industrious town, we are told have already made their appearance.

[Salem Gazette.]

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES. No. 26.—VOL. IV.]

WASHINGTON CITY, AUGUST 25, 1838.

[VOL. LIV.—WHOLE No. 1,404

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY WILLIAM OGDEN NILES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

THE HON. WM. PATTERSON, a representative in congress from Genesee county, New York, died at his residence in Warsaw on the 14th inst., aged 49 years. He had been confined to his chamber for several days previous to the adjournment of congress, and was quite indisposed when he left this city, in which he remained several days after the close of the session, in order to attend to business of his constituents. During the extra and regular session, we enjoyed frequent opportunities of becoming acquainted with the character of the deceased, and cheerfully testify to the excellent and estimable qualities awarded to him by those who knew him intimately and well, and so happily portrayed in the following notice of his death.

From the (Genesee) American Citizen.

The hon. William Patterson, representative in congress from this county, died at his residence in Warsaw, on the evening of Tuesday, the 14th inst., aged 49 years. His complaint was a fever, apparently induced by the fatigues attendant upon the close of the last session of congress, and exposures while on his return home. He was quite indisposed when he reached home, and the symptoms soon after assumed a serious aspect; still his friends flattered themselves that the unbroken energies of a very vigorous constitution, would be sufficient to withstand the violence of the disease. Their hopes were doomed to meet with a sad disappointment, and their anxious care and solicitude were alike unavailing. William Patterson is no more! He was kind and affectionate in his domestic relations; an exemplary Christian—a constant friend; the benefactor and advocate of the poor and oppressed; fearless, faithful and untiring in the discharge of his public duties—and in the fullest and broadest sense an upright and honest man.

IMPORTANT FROM THE FRONTIER. From the St. Louis (Mo.) Republican of the 14th inst. We are informed that an important despatch has been forwarded by major Mason of Fort Gibson, to general Gaines, the commander of this division. The substance of this communication is, that the Cherokees have built a council house, which is said to be considerably larger than any heretofore erected by any tribe of Indians. They have sent messengers, with the black and red wampum, to all the tribes from the Red river to the Sacs and Foxes on the Mississippi—omitting only the Kansas and Osage—inviting them to meet in council at the Cherokee council house in September next. The movement is believed to be but an incipient step to further difficulties, and made with a view of enlisting and uniting all the tribes along the frontier in such measures as may be adopted. They have proceeded with great caution and secrecy in the measure, and have endeavored to keep all their proceedings from the knowledge of their agents and of the officers of the post. The time proposed for holding the council is sufficiently late to admit of the emigrating Cherokees reaching their country. All the information elicited goes to confirm the opinion expressed some time ago, by general Arbuckle, of the hostile intentions of several of the tribes, though it is not believed that any movement is intended by them until the opening of spring.

General Gaines, we are told, has forwarded the despatch of major Mason to the proper department, with a request that he be permitted to attend the council with an armed force. This would probably be the most effectual means to awe them into a compliance with their duty, and would effectually prevent the formation of any plans for a general and united rising. It is greatly to be desired that his request should be granted.

The above rumor is confirmed by the following which we find in the Nashville Banner of the 18th inst.

We learn from an authentic source, that the Cherokees west of the Mississippi, have invited all the braves of all the principal tribes, except the Osages and Kansas, residing near our western frontier, north of the Red river, to meet them in council in the Cherokee country, on the Illinois river, about ten or fifteen miles above the mouth of the Barren Fork, on or about the 14th September next. The object of the council, including the Osages and Kansas, was not known. A rumor was sent by the Cherokees with the wampum and talk, to the Senecas, and other small tribes in that vicinity; from thence it was carried to the Shawnees, Delawares, and Kickapoos, near Fort Leavenworth. A Kickapoo runner then started with the wampum, two strings, the one black, the other white, to the Sacs, Iowas, &c. The belief is expressed, that the object was to make a simultaneous attack on the settlements of Arkansas and Missouri. Should the fears of the editor of the Banner be realized, scenes of blood, unparalleled in the history of the states, would ensue. There are now congregated on our western frontier, in the neighborhood of one hundred thousand Indian warriors, who need but little to fan them into excitement. They feel that they have been cheated and outraged by the people of the United States, and nothing would be more acceptable to them than an opportunity to enjoy a revenge—the greatest delight a red man knows. We know not what measures the government has taken to meet this anticipated avalanche, but the most prompt and efficient should be immediately resorted to.

MONTEVIDEO. Defeat of the national army. The brig Carroll, of Philadelphia, brings the following letter from an authentic source at Montevideo. It will be seen that the national army has been almost entirely destroyed, and that the government was making extensive preparations for the defence of the city.

Montevideo, June 23, 1838.

"It is now a matter of certainty that the national army has been almost destroyed, and Frutius, I think, will show himself in all next week. Government is making every effort for a last struggle, which will probably be in or near the city. Men and boys are being impressed, the streets closed up by brick walls, and every other demonstration of an expected attack.—General Curando Gomez, the third in command of the national army, reached town night before last, accompanied by a small escort. It is said about six hundred men escaped, in small parties, and are now seeking their homes. As near as I can learn, the government general was outwitted and led into an ambuscade.—The battle was fought on the other side of the Rio Negro, the strong hold of Don Frutius. The forces on either side may have been twenty-five hundred men.—perhaps the national army two thousand men. The general officers, in a council two days before the combat, determined that Don Frutius should not expose himself by entering the field. The command was consequently given to general Lavalle, a Buenos Ayrean.—At 4 P. M. they met, Lavalle opposing or showing a front of twelve hundred men, while on either flank he had six hundred in ambush. Gen. Ordo, supposing he had the whole army before him, made rapid, and, as appeared to him, successful charges, they fighting and retreating slowly and in good order, till the national army, confident of victory, had passed the ambuscade, when they wheeled in upon both flanks in the rear, while the main body stood their ground. Thus placed between two fires, the national army was cut to pieces. There is no prospect of the blockade coming off at Buenos Ayres."

BRASIL. A letter dated 24th May, at Port Alegre, Rio Grande, says: "On the 30th ultimo the 'Grande Divisao da Direita,' amounting to 1,800 men under gen. Barretto, Cunha and Calderon, at Rio Pardo, was entirely routed by the republican generals Bento, Manoel, and Netto. Such was the defeat, though shameful to relate, that only thirty men, among whom were the three generals, escaped. The loss to the emperor, besides the force, may be estimated at five hundred and fifty contos (about half a million of dollars) their field pieces, and fifteen hundred stand of arms, their ammunition, and about sixty or eighty contos of reis, fell into the hands of the republicans."

"This defeat has thrown every thing back, and now the imperial government can have no prospect of ever regaining this province, all the men they can send down from Rio de Janeiro only serve to feed the cause of the 'republicans.' The latter must gain the day, they are now full of spirits, can muster 5,000 men, lots of ammunition, arms, clothing, and even cash, to say nothing of first rate officers, and the best generals, whereas the 'Gallegos' have not got a man fit to take command of men. Barretto will go to Rio Janeiro for trial, as well as Cunha."

VENEZUELA. The Caracas Literat of the 14th July makes a flattering representation of the finances of the republic. It is stated that of the $6,000,000 of the internal debt, apportioned to Venezuela on the partition of Colombia into three states or republics, $4,000,000 have already been paid. The system of amortization of the debt, which was adopted by the congress, has produced the happiest effects; and various measures of economy have been introduced with great success, the consequences of which has been, that since January the government has been relieved from the necessity of borrowing, and has been enabled to make provision for the punctual payment of interest on the debt in England.

FROM FLORIDA. St. Augustine, Aug. 4. Col. Harney has gone on an expedition to scour the Withlacoochee. He has with him a force of 220 men. Capt. Mikler left Palatka two days since, to join col. H. at Micanopy. Col. Harney has 100 men armed with Colt's rifles, and disguised as Indians.

The tracks of three Indians were seen on Monday last, a short distance south of Buena Vista.

REVOLT AT HAVANNA. The New Orleans Bee furnishes the following information on the subject of the late disturbances, which have recently taken place in the chief city of Cuba:

It seems that the intestine commotions which for so many years have been afflicting the mother country, have extended to its dependencies. The island of Cuba, while under the inflexible administration of Tacón, was maintained in strict adhesion and fidelity to the queen. The intrigues of Don Carlos at length reached Havana, and his subsidized agents succeeded in corrupting the fidelity of several regiments quartered in the Moro Castle. As frequently happens, the plot was betrayed by one of the conspirators, and the new governor, Espeleta, who follows in the footsteps of his predecessor, immediately took the most energetic measures for its suppression. The doors of the barracks were closed, and the residence of the troops was at once converted into their prison. We learn that eighty of the most insubordinate were executed on the spot, and an equal number await the decision of the governor. As a sharp firing was heard from the castle, it is presumed that the executive did not accomplish his duty without determined resistance. It was doubtless the struggle of desperate men, who were aware, that if subdued, their decree would be irreversible.

At the last accounts, Havanna was quite tranquil, and business had resumed its usual course.

ELECTIONS. North Carolina. We gather the following from the Raleigh Register of the 20th instant:

There are 65 counties in this state, which send 170 members, returns from all which have been received, except Macon, Haywood and Yancy, and give the following results: Whigs 92, Administration 75—Whig loss 18, Whig gain 21. The counties to be heard from were represented in the last legislature by friends of the administration. Should this again be the case, then the whigs will have, on joint ballot, a clear majority of 14—8 in the senate, and 6 in the house. If there be any gain in either county, it will increase the majority by so much.

It is right to state, that though the Buncombe senator is claimed for the whigs, some doubt exists as to his election, Macon and Haywood forming part of the senatorial district, which counties remain to be heard from.

The vote for governor, at the last accounts, was as follows: Dudley (Whig) 29,170; Branch (Ad.) 16,345. At the last election, Dudley's majority over Spraight was 1,769.

In Kentucky, the result will not much vary from that of last year.

Alabama. A slip from the office of the Mobile Mercantile Advertiser of the 16th inst. gives the result of the state election in 22 counties, which have returned 27 whigs and 26 Van Buren men.—In the congressional district made vacant by the death of Mr. Lawler, Mr. Crabb, the whig candidate, was upwards of 700 ahead, all the counties heard from but one, and is no doubt elected.

Indiana. The Indiana Journal of the 18th contains returns from nearly all the counties in the state, and says: The counties to be heard from, have probably elected three Whigs and six Van Buren men to the house, and one Whig to the senate. If they have, parties will stand in the next legislature:

	Whig.	V. B.	Con.	Unknown.
Senate,	30	17	0	0
House,	58	37	3	1
	88	54	3	1

Whig majority over all other parties 30.

From Illinois, the returns indicate the election of Messrs. Douglas, Reynolds and Casey to congress, and Messrs. Carlin and Anderson to the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. They are all friends of the administration, except Mr. Casey, who is ranked among the conservatives. We have nothing certain in relation to the political character of the legislature.

In Missouri, Messrs. Harrison and Miller have been elected to congress by handsome majorities. A majority of the friends of the administration have also been elected members of the house of representatives.

BANKS, CURRENCY, &c. We learn from the "Globe" that directions have been given by the treasury department to the director of the mint at Philadelphia, to have dies prepared for coining eagles, the value of which is ten dollars, and that they will be struck with all convenient despatch. The coinage of the eagle ceased in 1804, because the erroneous standard of our gold caused it to be exported almost as fast as struck. The exhibits of the mint show upwards of $1,300,000 of this coin to have been struck.

Governor Pennington, of New Jersey, has issued his proclamation, in pursuance of an act passed at the late session of the legislature, requiring all the banks in that state to resume payment of their debts in specie on or before the 30th inst.

The Charleston Courier slip of the 14th inst., contains an official notice of the proceedings of the banks of that city, which resulted in the adoption of a resolution to resume specie payments on the 1st September.

Resumption in Mississippi. It is stated in the New York Journal of Commerce that the Vicksburg bank has arranged for a loan of $1,200,000, and the Planters' bank of Miss. for a loan of $1,500,000, and that the Mississippi state stock of five millions, issued for the establishment of the Union bank, has been so far negotiated as that the parties are authorized to draw immediately for two millions. These negotiations, amounting to about five millions in all, have been made at Philadelphia, chiefly, if not wholly, under the patronage of the U. S. Bank there, and will enable those institutions to resume specie payments forthwith.

Resumption in Alabama. The Bank of Mobile has invited a convention of delegates from all the banks in Alabama, to be convened at Blount Springs, on the 17th of September, for the purpose of proposing and taking measures for a simultaneous and early resumption of specie payments.

The Milledgeville Journal of the 14th inst. states that major Crawford, president of the board of commissioners of internal improvement, has succeeded in negotiating in New York a loan of half a million of dollars, to carry on the Western and Atlantic railroad now in progress by the state of Georgia, from the Tennessee line to the Chattahoochee.

The object of gen. McDuffie's contemplated visit to Europe is the negotiation of the South Carolina state loan for the relief of Charleston, granted in favor of that city at the late extra session of the legislature.

Bicknell's Philadelphia Reporter of Tuesday says—"No little excitement has been produced in Philadelphia, within the last week, by the extraordinary course of some of the New York brokers. These gentlemen have, in some instances, forwarded Philadelphia bank notes to this city, and, in order to avoid paying a fair rate for exchange on New York, have demanded the specie from the Philadelphia banks, and had it taken to the commercial emporium. Much indignation has been produced by this conduct. It is unfair, as well towards the Philadelphia brokers as the Philadelphia banks, and has naturally excited censure."

Revival of business. We understand that the western merchants are giving great activity to trade in this section of the country. So numerous have been their orders for shoes in Lynn and the other towns largely engaged in shoemaking, that they cannot be filled and fully complied with under two or three months; it is almost impossible to get workmen enough to supply the demand even in that time. [Boston Advocate.]

At St. Louis, on the 13th, exchange on Philadelphia was at 2 to 2½ per cent. premium. The president of the State Bank had returned from the east, having effected a sale of $240,000 of the state bonds, and a loan of another sum of equal or greater amount, both of which would enable the bank to proceed on a tolerably liberal scale in giving discounts.

The friends of governor Ritner, in Philadelphia, and in various sections of Pennsylvania, celebrated the 18th inst. as a day of jubilee—that being the day on which the banks resumed specie payments in obedience to his proclamation.

The Philadelphia American Sentinel says—"We understand that the collector of the port of Philadelphia receives the notes of the Bank of the U. States, Bank of the Northern Liberties, and Farmers' and Mechanics' bank, said institutions having notified him that they have resumed specie payments."

Brandon Bank of Miss. The Natchez Courier gives a statement of the affairs of the Brandon bank, from which it appears that its liabilities are $7,371,183

To meet which, it has notes and bills of planters of the state, $7,165,408
Due from other banks, chiefly out of the state, 396,796
Due from their cotton and cotton agency, 610,255
Gold and silver, 38,292
Premium on these two items preceding the last, 150,000

Leaving a balance in favor of the bank $8,360,751
989,569

Large sale. The estate of the N. York Insurance company, No. 34 Wall street, has been sold to George Griswold, esq. for the sum of $180,000. To refresh the recollection of distant readers, it is proper to say that the estate adjoins the Bank of New York, which is on the N. E. corner of Wall and William streets. It is 48 feet on Wall st., and 117 feet deep, and fronts of course on the new Merchants' Exchange: the buildings of no value. It is the largest fronting on the Exchange, which is to be found in a single ownership, and probably as desirable an estate as is to be found in the city, and we might just as well say—in the world. It was purchased by the company who have just sold it, about the year 1800 for $17,000, including however 20 feet more of depth, which was sold some years ago to lengthen the lots on Pine street, for $20,000, making the total amount of sales $200,000. It was not without great hesitancy on the part of the prudent directors of that day, nor until one of them more daring than the rest declared that he would buy it if the company did not, that they ventured the $17,000. That was before the destiny of Wall street was understood. The purchase is understood, and we believe avowed, to be in connexion with Mr. Alsop of Philadelphia, and for the "Bank of the U. States in New York." The capital of this institution, it will be recollected, is $200,000, which, with the new building to be erected on the lot, will be pretty well used up. All the circumstances have confirmed the opinion which we expressed some days ago, but took back again for want of a positiveness of evidence, that the Bank of the United States is the chief party in this movement, and that it is intended to be in fact, what its name describes, "The Bank of the United States (of Penn.) in New York." The purchase, at any rate, now made, is considered a good one, and is made by gentlemen who know very well what they are about. [N. Y. Jour. Com.]

BUENOS AYRES. Recent advices state that things were assuming a serious aspect since the approval of the course of gov. Rosas, by the legislature. The port was being fortified, and government had already purchased several vessels to be armed as men of war, under the command of admiral Brown, who had again been called into active service.

The operations of the flotilla would at first be confined to the protection of coasting vessels, against the launches of the blockading squadron. This will inevitably bring on a conflict which will be the precursor of a war with powder and ball instead of protocols.

ATLANTIC STEAM NAVIGATION. At a meeting of the citizens, held in the room of the Board of Trade, Merchants' Exchange, Philadelphia, August 23, 1838, to take such measures as may forward the plan for a communication by steam packets between that city and Europe, NICHOLAS BIDDLE was called to the chair, and Frederick Fraley appointed secretary.

Mr. Fraley stated to the meeting the purpose for which they had met, and the motives which were offered for action, and presented the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the success which has attended the recent effort to establish a communication by steam vessels between the city of New York and the commercial cities of England, has given a new aspect to the intercourse which will hereafter take place between the United States and Europe, and demands from the citizens of Philadelphia cordial and united exertions to secure for our own metropolis not only a participation in the advantages of that intercourse, but the means also of availing ourselves of the commanding and central position we occupy in relation to the vast territory which forms the interior state of the American union, now connected with our port by the magnificent system of internal improvement of our own commonwealth and those of other states, for the enlargement of our commerce and the full development of our resources.

Resolved, That it is eminently our duty as Pennsylvanians, cherishing the recollection that our noble commonwealth claims the great inventors of steam navigation, Rumsey, Fitch and Fulton as her sons, to seize upon the great mechanical agent which their genius brought into the service of mankind, and by its potent aid restore our city to the first rank among her commercial sisters, give active and profitable employment at home to our capital, now contributing to the prosperity of neighboring cities, and bring back to the shores of the Delaware; the forests of masts, which in former days cheered the hearts of our fathers, and laid the broad foundation of our wealth and power.

Resolved, That we have learned with lively satisfaction, the willingness of our brethren of Great Britain to co-operate with us in the prosecution of this great enterprise by a liberal subscription for the construction of one or more steam vessels to ply between London, Liverpool, and Philadelphia; and that in order to combine the capital of citizens of both countries for the attainment of that object, and place its success upon a basis commanding universal confidence, a committee of ten be appointed to report a plan of association, and such other matters as may appear to them advisable at an adjourned meeting to be held in the Philadelphia Exchange at the call of said committee.

On motion, Resolved, That the chairman have power to appoint the committee after adjournment.

On motion of Mr. Trevor,

Resolved, That the chairman and secretary be added to the committee.

N. BIDDLE, Chairman.

CAPTAIN DAVIDSON'S CASE. We copy the following letter from the Quebec Mercury. Our readers will doubtless remember the case to which it refers—the arrest of capt. Davidson, at Fort Covington, in this state, upon a writ sued out by a Mr. Paddock, a custom-house officer, in an action for false imprisonment, to recover damages for the arrest and detention of Mr. Paddock, last winter, whilst in Lower Canada on business, under suspicion of being a spy for the insurgents. Lord Duham, it will be seen, undertakes to indemnify Capt. Davidson if the suit goes against him: and this is right enough, if the captain was acting under orders when he arrested Mr. Paddock. [N. Y. Com. Adv.]

Castle of St. Lewis, Aug. 14, 1838.
My Lord: In obedience to your excellency's directions, I have inquired into the circumstances attending the arrest of Mr. Davidson, at Fort Covington, as stated by his brother, who came here to demand the interference of the British government in his behalf.

It appears to me, as I have explained to Mr. Davidson, that this is a matter in which the government cannot at present communicate officially with that of the United States. The latter government has not yet interfered. An American citizen, in his private capacity, has instituted proceedings to which his government or its magistrates are no parties. He has sued out a writ, and commenced an action, on most unjustifiable grounds. But in the United States as in Great Britain, the government and its magistrates have no discretion in such matters. Writs in civil suits are issued as matters of course; nor can the government in either country interfere to stop any proceedings which an individual may think proper to institute thereon. The British government has no reason to presume that Mr. Davidson will not receive the utmost redress that its own laws offer in similar cases; that the courts in the state of New York will not acknowledge Mr. Davidson's plea, that he acted under the authority of the government of Canada, and avenge his vexatious prosecution in costs, or entertain a counter-action against him. When the courts of law in the United States decide that the authority of the British government is insufficient to maintain the acts of its officers in its own territories, it will then be time for it to interfere.

In the mean time Mr. Davidson must, as I have advised him, give bail to the action; a step which, instead of amounting, as he seems to imagine, to a confession of the justice of the proceeding, shows that he means to dispute it. It is not, however, just or politic that the British government should allow its subjects to be harassed by the expense of vexatious persecutions for acts done under its authority. I have, therefore, informed Mr. Davidson that, should it appear on the trial that these proceedings are instituted on the ground of acts legally done by him in the discharge of his duty as a British officer or subject, the government will indemnify him for any expenses incurred by him in this behalf. I have given directions to adopt any measures that may be calculated to aid Mr. Davidson in procuring the most full and efficient defence.

The circumstance is no doubt calculated to create much excitement on the frontier. A singular perversion of the civil law of neighboring states seems to have been attempted for the purpose of harassing and terrifying those who most efficiently do their duty to her majesty. But I should hope that the feeling must have been calmed by the perception of the fact, that nothing has yet occurred to preclude all those thus aggrieved or menaced from trusting to the usual, but effectual, relief from the ordinary course of justice in the state of New York.

I have the honor to be your excellency's most obedient servant,

CHARLES BULLER,
Chief secretary.

DUTIES ON MANUFACTURES OF SILK. It is stated in the New York Star that in February last the then comptroller of the treasury, gov. Wolf, issued a circular, by which a duty of 12 1-2 per cent. was to be charged on all silk laces, and 25 per cent. on silk hosiery and silk gloves, which since the passage of the act of the 2d of March, 1833, had been entered as free. Remonstrances were forwarded to the comptroller against the said duties, when the following letter was received:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

First comptroller's office, April 4th, 1838.

Gentlemen: Your favor of the 5th ultimo was duly received, in reference to the duty properly chargeable on silk gloves, hosiery, and laces.

Being of opinion that the compromise act of the 2d of March, 1833, has released from duty all manufactures of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, coming from this side the Cape of Good Hope, except sewing silk, until the 30th of June, 1842, I have authorized the collector at New York to revise the entries of such of the articles mentioned, in a way that I have no doubt will be perfectly satisfactory to every one interested.

For more particular information, I refer you to him. I am, very respectfully, your obdt serv't,

J. N. BARKER, comptroller.

The Star adds—"This morning a 'Circular' was received in which said duties were 'revised' and further, a duty of 25 per cent. ordered on all silk ribbons, and on all goods composed of silk and cotton, which, as it will be perceived by the comptroller's letter, he expressly designates as free."

THE EXPLORING SQUADRON sailed from Hampton Roads on the afternoon of Saturday last. A list of the officers attached to the expedition shall have a place in the next "REGISTER."

The Norfolk Beacon of Tuesday says—We learn from the intelligent pilot who conducted the squadron to sea, that he left the Vincennes at 9 o'clock on Sunday morning, twenty-five miles east of Cape Henry, with a fine breeze from the north. The officers and crews were in excellent spirits, and all were rejoiced that they were fairly embarked on their interesting mission. The pilot describes the sight of the vessels of the squadron about the flag ship, all under full sail, as highly pleasing. He declared that he never saw men more bent on accomplishing all within their power for the honor and glory of the navy and of the country—all were full of life and zeal.

As there was a rumor afloat respecting some show of mutiny on board the Peacock, it may be well to state that there was no foundation for such a statement, and that a single sailor only used improper language, for which he was duly tried by court martial and punished.

Success and favoring gales attend the squadron. The officers have much to contend with, apart from the novelty of their enterprise, and its uncertain issue; but we trust that they will all come forth like men, and by their boldness and skill, whether successful or not, mingle their names with the destinies of their service.

IOWA. The lands in Iowa, commonly called Black Hawk's purchase, will be offered for sale, it is expected, in about two months.

There is a project for connecting the Wisconsin river with the Fox river, by two canals at different points. One of them is the Portage canal, of 502 rods in length, seven feet deep, fifty feet wide at the bottom, and seventy at top. Contracts are making at Green bay for the construction of this canal. The other canal is the Marquette and Kentucky city canal, which is more than thirty miles in length, for subscription to the stock of which books are in a few days to be opened in Philadelphia. The Fox river Transportation company has completed its arrangements for the transportation of emigrants and merchandise from Green bay to the Portage of the Wisconsin and Fox rivers; and the boats of the company started on their first trip on the 24th of May, freighted with goods, &c. for the interior.

COTTON TRADE OF NATCHEZ, MISS. During the season of 1837 and 1838, 41,787 bales of cotton were shipped from Natchez, Miss., viz:

By Miss. Shipping Co. to Liverpool,	36,210
" " " " Boston,	1,693
From Dunbar's Press to Liverpool,	37,793
By sundry merchants, Boston,	2,145
	1,849
Total to Liverpool,	38,355
" Boston,	8,432
	41,787

On publishing the above statement, the Natchez Courier remarks: Although the number of bales is small compared with the shipments made during the same period from New Orleans, yet the statement possesses great interest from the conclusive evidence which it affords, not only of the practicability of direct shipments to foreign ports, but of the ability and disposition of our people to adopt it upon an extensive scale. We are informed that more than double the number of bales would have been shipped, had there been facilities for compressing them. During the next season, this difficulty will be obviated by the extensive arrangements now making by the Shipping Company and Dunbar's Steam Press, which will enable these two establishments to despatch, in good order, 150,000 bales at least. The Shipping Company will be able to store about 10,000 bales in fire-proof sheds, at one time, which will be a great accommodation to planters shipping their own crops.

THE NATCHEZ. This noble vessel which does so much honor to the naval architects and mechanics of Baltimore, reached the city of Natchez on the afternoon of the 12th instant. It is stated in the Bulletin that she performed the trip from New Orleans in forty-one hours, a speed not often surpassed by the swiftest boats on the river. Her arrival was hailed with the most enthusiastic demonstrations of joy by the citizens of Natchez, and is thus announced in the columns of the Courier.

[Baltimore American.

All hail to the ocean child of Mississippi!—Arrival of "The Natchez," of Natchez.

This magnificent bulwark of Mississippi enterprise, which has excited the admiration of all who have seen her, and won for "the cotton state" a proud name in the annals of commerce, arrived at this port early yesterday afternoon. She first came in sight of "the home of her fathers" at about half past one o'clock, P. M., and sounded her approach in our ears by a copious salute of thunder from the cannon's mouth. Suddenly the bold front of our bluff hills presented an animated array of citizens, in whose every eye the feeling of honest pride glinted as they gazed with a pleasurable anxiety upon the nearing consummation of their brightest hope of state independence.

Another boom! "Is responded by "Old Saratoga," the stand-by of our artillery, and lo, another! Yes, "The Mississippi," poised on the lower bluff, also mingles her voice with the elements, to welcome to an anchorage the ocean star of her god-mother state. The alternate bursts of mutual congratulation were kept up by "The Natchez," "Old Saratoga," and "The Mississippi," with such soul stirring effect that like the nod of Jupiter they shook the surrounding elements to their centre. "The Natchez," as if on fairy foot, passed swiftly along before the gaze of a host of spectators and came to her moorings in the Cotton Press region, the upper environs of the city.

MUSKINGUM RIVER. Among the objects of internal improvement about to be prosecuted by the state of Ohio,—for be it remembered that the states which have gone most liberally into the system are those which are most anxious for its extension,—is the improvement of the navigation of the Muskingum river, by clearing out the channel and by the erection at suitable points of locks and dams. For some time past, great and well founded dissatisfaction existed throughout the Muskingum valley, at the determination to which the state commissioners had come, of having the locks of such limited dimensions as to be unsuitable for the passage of steamboats through them. It is stated, however, in the Zanesville Republican of the 18th instant that the commissioners, "at their recent session in Columbus, after a full investigation of all the facts connected with the improvement of the river Muskingum, have rescinded their order for reducing the size of the locks; and upon the array of facts and arguments addressed by the indefatigable committees of Washington, Morgan, and Muskingum counties, they agreed to increase the size thereof from 150 to 175 feet long, and from 34 to 36 feet in width. This will be joyful intelligence to the people not only along the Muskingum valley, but to others who are less directly interested in the improvement."

[Baltimore American.

THE FAULKLAND ISLANDS. The whale ship general Williams, of New London, which lately arrived at that port, was ordered off from the coasts of the Falkland islands, by a notification in the following form. It will be remembered that the British government expelled the Argentine flag from these islands some years since.

By command of the governor of the Falklands islands or Malvinas.

Sir: The British government having taken possession of the whole of these islands, it is their directions that all foreign vessels are not to fish or seal round or near them. You are hereby warned to leave the coast as soon as possible. After the 1st day of June, 1838, all vessels found here or at any other port, will be proceeded against, being considered as trespassers.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

W. J. SCOTT,

Master of H. B. M. ketch Sparrow, (pro) the governor of the Malvinas, 7th May, 1838.

DEATH OF DAPONTE. Signor Lorenzo Daponte being a resident of this city, died here on the 17th inst. at the advanced age of 90. His celebrated operas, written for Mozart, have given him a name all over the world. The Sunday Morning News states that he was a Venetian and native of Ceneda, educated for the church, and afterwards from his fine poetic talents and passion for music, that he became a prominent person in the court of the emperor, Joseph II, of Austria. Under his special protection, he formed a close friendship with the celebrated Mozart, which led to the production of these admired operas, Giovannina, Marriage of Figaro, &c. in which the poetry of Daponte is no less eternized by its own beauties than by the divine music in which it is embalmed. After the decease of Mozart, who died in his friend Daponte's arms, the poet went to London, and there for years was intimately associated with the early efforts to introduce a more perfect Italian opera. From thence signor Daponte came to America, where he has resided 32 years, chiefly in this city, and to his indefatigable exertions, commanding talents, and profound literary attainments, are we mainly indebted for the taste every where diffused in our country for the music and language of his native land. He has been the Cadmus to whom we owe an unpayable debt for these inappreciable gifts. His memory will endure; for both his native and adopted country have been honored by his disinterested labors and passionate devotion to the arts which he cultivated. As a Latin and Hebrew scholar he had perhaps no equal or superior here.

[N. Y. Express.

ADMIRAL LA BRETONNIERE. The Courier des Etats Unis copies from the 29th volume of Victories, &c. of the French, the following notice of Admiral la Bretonniere, now in command of the ships of war Dido and Berger, at present in our harbor. After noticing the part taken by this officer in the battle of Navarin, in which he was severely wounded, the following is added.

[N. Y. American.

Captain la Bretonniere, now rear admiral, is one of the officers of the marine of the republic and of the empire, still living, who have served in the most active manner, and taken part in a great number of battles. He particularly distinguished himself in the unfortunate battle of Trafalgar, where he was a lieutenant, first adjutant of rear admiral Magon. We have described in our vol. XVI. the admirable defence of rear-admiral Magon, with his ship, the Algeiras of 74 guns, against the English ship Thunderer of 80 guns, and the honorable death of this brave admiral. The fire of the enemy having cut off, besides this worthy chief, all the officers superior in rank to Mr. La Bretonniere, he found himself invested with the command of the Algeiras, and had to perform the melancholy duty of surrendering her to the enemy, after having defended her to the last extremity. When the tempest which arose on the next day after the battle and dispersed the English fleet, inspired in some portions of the French crews, left on board their captured vessels, the bold idea of re-taking them, Mr. La Bretonniere took the Algeiras from the enemy, and although she was dismantled of all her masts, he carried her into the harbor of Cadiz, with eight seamen of the English ship Thunderer, whom in their turn he made prisoners.

BARON'S CONFESSION. The Rochester papers of the 16th and 17th instant contain a short paper, purporting to be the confession of Octavius Baron, recently executed for the murder of Mr. Lyman—as follows:

The confession. I, Octavius Baron, sentenced to die on to-morrow, 25th of July, for the murder of William Lyman, do declare, that Thomas Bennet and Leon Fluell are entirely innocent of any participation in the commission of this crime—that they were not accessories before or after the fact—that they had no knowledge whatsoever of this murder but what they received in common with other citizens on the morning of my arrest.

I make this solemn declaration for the purpose of repairing the injury which those innocent persons may have sustained from any previous confession of mine, and also of protecting them from punishment for a crime of which they are as innocent as any other citizen.

I furthermore declare, lest any other person might be suspected or charged with a participation of the murder, that I had no accomplice in the committing of it.

About to appear in a few hours before the judgment seat of God, from whom, through the merits of my Redeemer, I hope for mercy, I do hope that this my last and dying confession will set aside all my previous confessions, and restore to liberty and society, those now indicted for the crime of which I am about to suffer, and of which I alone am guilty.

While with a heart broken with sorrow for this and all my other sins, I am perfectly resigned to the execution of the just sentence pronounced against me, I imploresly entreat young men in general to attend to the practical duties of the Christian religion, for with the neglect of these duties, in opposition to advice and frequent solicitation, commenced the unfortunate career which has led to the commission of the crime for which I must to-morrow suffer.

OCTAVE BARON.

The above confession was made and signed in the presence of Horace Gay, esq. and Ephraim Gilbert, the jailer.

THE NAVY.

From the National Intelligencer of the 20th inst. MEANS, GALES & SEATON: I notice in the "Madisonian" of to-day an article taken from the "Philadelphia Ledger," headed "The Navy," the writer of which, not satisfied with attempting to detract from some of the senior officers of the navy, has ventured to give credit to one for the achievement of another. He says, in speaking of commodore MORRIS as a member of the board of navy commissioners, "An accomplished seaman, a brave and successful officer, a worthy man, and entitled to the everlasting gratitude of the nation for saving the frigate Constitution in her celebrated chase at the commencement of the war."

Commodore Morris, at the time referred to, was but a lieutenant on board the Constitution, and had no more to do with saving the noble frigate than he had with the order to "let every thing go by the run," when the breeze first struck her, or with the celebrated exclamation of the "gallant Hull," immediately after the first broadside fired from the Constitution, in her engagement with the Guerriere: "Hurrah, boys, we've made a brig of her!"

Commodore Hull commanded the Constitution in both instances, and to him belong the credit and the glory of the escape and the capture.

Commodore Morris had received full credit for the honorable part he bore in those affairs.

The exceeding modesty of commodore Hull prompted him, on his arrival in Boston, after the fight between the Constitution and the Guerriere, to request of the inhabitants of "The Cradle of Liberty" a transfer of a part of their acclamations to his first lieutenant, Mr. Morris. We shall see if similar promptings are responded to in another quarter. E.

Washington, Aug. 18, 1838.

From the Intelligencer of the 22d inst.

TO THE EDITORS—GENTLEMEN: Your correspondent, E, in the Intelligencer of yesterday, first brought to my notice the quotation which forms the subject of his article.

In the chase, to which allusion is made, the situation of the Constitution was sufficiently hazardous, for many hours, to require the united exertions and resources of all, and to justify the respectful suggestion of any additional measure that might increase the chances for escape. Such suggestions were occasionally made by myself and several other officers—some, which met the approval of our commander, were adopted. That he was willing to receive and act upon such suggestions cannot certainly be considered as reflecting upon his well-known skill or judgment. He had too much of both to entertain any unworthy jealousy of others, if chance enabled them to recollect something which, under the circumstances of the time, he might have omitted.

Any suggestions which were thus made, whether by myself or others, were simply acts of common duty. They might, or might not, prove advantageous, and involved no responsibility on the part of those who made them.

Commodore HULL, on the contrary, assumed all the responsibility for the success of those which he adopted. If they had proved injurious, he would have been held accountable to the service and the country. If they proved advantageous, the principal, if not the whole, merit should certainly be his due. This principle is universal in military and naval service, and to officers this statement is unnecessary, as the application of the principle is well understood by them.

It certainly has always been well understood by commodore HULL and myself, between whom the most friendly personal and professional feelings have existed, uninterruptedly, for nearly 40 years. To prevent any cause for its being now interrupted by the statements of others, is the principal object, and will, I trust, be considered a sufficient apology for this communication.

I am, very respectfully, gentlemen, your most obedient servant, C. MORRIS.

Washington, Aug. 21, 1838.

THE ARMY—OFFICIAL.

GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 29.

War department, adjutant general's office,

Washington, Aug. 18, 1838.

I. The following regulation relative to the employment of persons to officiate as chaplains at certain posts and military stations, in conformity with the 18th section of the act of July 5, 1838, has been received from the war department, and is published for general information:

"War department, Washington, August 1, 1838.

1. The council of administration, on being duly instituted, agreeably to army regulations, are empowered to employ, from time to time, such persons as they may think proper to officiate as chaplain; and the name of the person so chosen and appointed will be reported by the commanding officer of the post to the war office, through the adjutant general.

2. The chaplain employed at any military post will be required to perform the duties of schoolmaster, under such regulations as may be established by the council of administration, approved by the commanding officer. He will teach and instruct the children of the private soldier, as well as of the officer.

3. The compensation of the post chaplain will be determined by the council of administration, subject to the approval of the secretary of war; but his monthly pay will not exceed forty dollars, in addition to which, he will be allowed four rations per day, with fuel and quarters provided for a captain.

4. The military posts at which chaplains are to be employed in conformity with the act of congress, will be selected by the secretary of war, and be announced in general orders; the number is limited to twenty. J. R. POINSETT."

II. The following is a list of posts at which chaplains are authorized to be employed agreeably to the above regulations:

No.	Names of Posts.	States or Territories.
1	Hancock Barracks,	Maine.
2	Fort Gratiot,	Michigan.
3	Fort Brady,	Michigan.
4	Fort Winnebago,	Wisconsin territory.
5	Fort Snelling,	Upper Mississippi.
6	Fort Crawford,	Wisconsin territory.
7	Fort Leavenworth,	Missouri territory.
8	Jefferson Barracks,	Missouri.
9	Fort Gibson,	Arkansas territory.
10	Fort Jessup,	Louisiana.
11	Fort Towson,	Arkansas territory.
12	Fort Monroe,	Virginia.
13	Fort Pike,	Louisiana.
14	Fort Morgan,	Alabama.
15	Fort Pickens,	Florida.

By order, R. JONES, adj't gen'l.

GENERAL ORDERS NO. 2.

Head quarters of the army,

Buffalo, N. Y., August 11, 1838.

The following disposition will be made of the troops approaching this frontier, from the Cherokee country:

1st. On reaching Cleveland, Ohio, the officer in command of the 2d regiment of artillery, will detach three companies under the officer next in command to the Michigan frontier, to report to brig. gen. Brady, at Detroit; and one at Fort Gratiot.

2d. On the return of the transport, (the steamboat Milwaukee), the commanding officer of the 2d regiment of artillery, will embark with the remaining companies for Buffalo, where he will establish the regimental head quarters and post four companies, detaching two companies to garrison Fort Niagara.

3d. The first regiment of artillery will move upon Plattsburg, where the head quarters will be established with four companies, two companies at French Mills, N. Y., one company at Swanton, one at Troy, and one company at Derby, in Vermont.

4th. When the tenth company of each regiment of artillery shall have been recruited, it will repair to regimental head quarters—that of the 2d regiment, will be thence detached to take their posts at or near Rochester, N. Y.

5th. The 4th regiment of artillery will take posts, till further orders, in the harbor of New York.

6th. The two companies of the 3d regiment of infantry, on the northern frontier, will repair to Houlton, (Maine,) where the head quarters of the regiment will be established; lieut. col. Cummings will take command of that post on being relieved by col. Worth.

7th. The 8th regiment of infantry will be concentrated at Sacket's Harbor, whence detachments or guard will be made and posted at Oswego, French creek, Ogdensburg, and such other points, intermediate, as the commanding officer may find expedient.

8th. The adjutant general of the army will order all other officers not belonging to the regiments on the northern frontier, to repair, without delay to their respective regiments, or to the particular duties to which they have been assigned.

The several commands, as arranged in general order, No. 1, will be continued as heretofore, except as to the posts in Vermont, which will hereafter be regarded as part of the command from French Mills, in New York, to the extreme end of the Vermont frontier—head quarters, at Plattsburgh. By order of MAJOR GENERAL MACOMB, Commander-in-chief.

From the Army and Navy Chronicle.

The names of the following cadets of the United States military academy, at West Point, are to be attached to the next Army Register, conformably to a regulation requiring the names of the most distinguished cadets, not exceeding five in each class, to be reported for the purpose at each annual examination in the month of June:

FIRST CLASS.

1. Wm. H. Wright, N. C.
2. P. G. T. Beauregard, La.
3. James H. Trapier, S. C.
4. Ste'n H. Campbell, Vt.
5. J. M. Scarritt, Mo.

SECOND CLASS.

1. Isaac J. Stevens, Mass.
2. Robert Q. Butler, Va.
3. H. W. Halleck, N. Y.
4. Jeremy F. Gilmer, N. C.
5. Henry C. Smith, Me.

THIRD CLASS.

1. Paul O. Hebert, La.
2. Wm. Page Jones, D. C.
3. C. P. Kingsbury, N. C.
4. John McNutt, Ohio.
5. Sylvanus Wilcox, N. Y.

FOURTH CLASS.

1. Zealous B. Tower, Mass.
2. Thos. J. Rodman, Ind.
3. Henry Wilson, Penn.
4. Josiah Gargas, N. Y.
5. Smith Stansbury, Md.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE MEDICAL STAFF OF THE ARMY.

The following gentlemen having been examined and approved by the army medical board, which convened in this city on the 16th ultimo, have been appointed assistant surgeons in the army:

1. James R. Conrad, Va.
2. Wm. T. Leonard, Md.
3. John Byrne, Md.
4. Ellis Hughes, Md.
5. D. C. De Leon, S. C.
6. R. McSherry, jr. Va.
7. Joseph Walker, Ill.
8. Charles Noyes, D. C.
9. Benj. W. Woods, Ky.
10. Gust. A. Williams, Va.

ARMY MOVEMENTS, &c.

The detachment of 400 U. S. troops under col. Crane, arrived at Lexington, Ky. on the 16th, on their way from Florida to the northern frontier.

A detachment of 125 regulars left Newport Barracks, Ky. on the 16th, in the steamboat Home, for Jefferson Barracks, Missouri.

A board of army officers, gen. Scott as president, are to devise a plan in detail to reorganize the different branches of the service, to make a thorough examination of the condition of each corps and regiment, to create absolute and unchangeable rules respecting seniority, brevet rank, promotion, transfer, furlough, extra service, &c. all so much needed. [Fredericksburg Treas.]

The Knoxville Register states that the 2d regiment U. S. artillery passed Campbell's station on the 3d inst., on their way from the Cherokee nation to Lake Erie, under the command of the following officers: col. J. Crane, commander; captain Green; surgeon G. R. Clark; adjutant lieut. Townsend; quartermaster Payton; commissary lieutenant Morgan; lieutenants Duncan, Bransford, Conckling, Luther, Allen, Daniels, Arnold, Pratt, Sedgewick, and Jones.

Six companies of the 1st artillery, and two companies of the 4th, have arrived at New York from the south destined for the northern frontier, and by the order of gen. Macomb, the troops are to be disposed of as follows:

Of the 2d regiment of artillery, two companies are to be posted at Detroit, one at Fort Gratiot, four at Buffalo, (the head quarters,) two at Fort Niagara. Of the 1st regiment, four are to be posted at Plattsburg, (the head-quarters,) two at French Mills, New York, one at Swanton, one at Troy, and one at Derby in Vermont.

The tenth company of each regiment is to repair to the regimental head-quarters, and the 2d regiment will thence be stationed near Rochester, New York. The 4th regiment, for the present, will take post in New York harbor. Two companies of the 3d regiment will take post at Houlton, Maine, under command of col. Cummings. The 8th regiment of infantry will be stationed at Sackett's Harbor, from whence detachments will be sent to the surrounding points. All officers are to repair to their regiments forthwith. The commands are to remain as in the previous general order No. 1, except the Vermont posts, which are now to be regarded as a part of the command at French Mills, N. Y.

CANADA—THE BOUNDARY, &c.

From the Quebec Gazette, Aug. 13.

The boundary line. It is probable that governor Kent, of the state of Maine, will attempt, shortly after the first of next month, to run and fix the boundary between that state and the British possessions, without the co-operation of the United States' and British governments. It will be a new exercise of state sovereignty, inconsistent with the constitution of the federation. But governor Kent will be acting in obedience to resolutions passed at the last session of the legislature, which were published some time ago in this Gazette. He is supported by a large party in the state of Maine and the United States, ever ready to embarrass the general government, and is besides a candidate for re-election as governor of Maine at the election which commences on the 3d of September; and the running and fixing the boundary has recently been made a local party question, in favor of which his supporters have decidedly pronounced. Under all the circumstances, he will probably find himself compelled to proceed to execute the resolutions of the legislature, till he is positively hindered by force, either on the part of the British or United States' governments. As to the former, governor Kent will probably not have long to wait, after his commissioners set to work within the disputed territory. We do not think it likely that any British authority will suffer itself to be ousted sans ceremonie, of an actual and acknowledged possession. The militia of New Brunswick are as good and well disposed for defence, as the militia of Maine for attack.

The proceedings of the legislature of Maine and governor Kent will probably render more difficult the settlement of the boundary question, on which we believe both the British and United States governments are sincerely intent; but in the present position of the two countries, we hardly think war will ensue. It is true, nevertheless, that when the passions of men, connected with national pride become inflamed, there is no great dependence to be placed on the influence of reason.

Some of the United States' papers have connected the meeting of the governors of the British North American provinces, with the difficulties about the boundaries. We rather think that the meetings in question relate entirely to the internal concerns of the provinces and projected improvements. The authority to recruit in Prince Edward's island, which has a population of 30,000 souls, has also been supposed to have been given in view of difficulties with the United States. It is sufficient to say, that this order is dated the 9th May last, and does not seem to have been extended to any of the other provinces, which contain a population of nearly a million and a half, and where recruits might be obtained in nearly the same proportion as in Prince Edward's island. We have no doubt, but that on the prospect of a war with the United States, twenty-five thousand men could be recruited in the provinces.

Correspondence of the Commercial Advertiser.

Quebec, August 16.

We are at this moment in some anxiety on the boundary question. The military here are of opinion that it will lead to some difficulty between the two countries, while the merchants hope the contrary; but all unite in doubting whether the matter will be brought to an amicable arrangement, the government of Maine having acted so decidedly. It is much feared that the course pursued by Maine will embarrass the general government. I am sorry to say that many of the Canadians are highly delighted at the prospect of a war between England and the United States.

There are very many citizens of New York and Baltimore at present in Quebec. The earl of Durham leaves us on Saturday in the John Bull steamer, to attend the Montreal races, and it is supposed that many of the Americans will also leave us to honor the race-ground with their presence, it being expected that for the attendance of company these races will surpass any that have even taken place in British America.

Yesterday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the 71st regiment, and two companies of the 73d regiment, paraded on the Champ de Mars, for the inspection of John Forsyth, secretary of state to Mr. Van Buren. The 7th hussars and royal artillery are also to be viewed by the secretary, at a quarter past 10 this morning.

[Montreal Courier.]

From the Boston Daily Advertiser, Aug. 21.

The northeastern boundary. It is stated in yesterday's Providence Journal that governor Kent, of Maine, "has directed a survey to be made of the disputed territory, and has ordered out the military to protect the surveyors in the performance of their duties." We have seen repeated statements of a similar purport in many of the papers, and some of them have quoted the Bangor Whig as the source from which they derived their information. We have not, however, seen any such statement in that paper, nor in any of the papers of Bangor or the vicinity. From the absence of any such announcement in the vicinity of the governor's residence, and in the neighborhood of the disputed territory, where any such movements would be likely to be known as soon as made, and immediately announced to the public, we infer that the report which has been so current is without foundation. We are confirmed in this belief from the impression that the position in which the boundary question was placed, in consequence of the earnest application of the executive of Maine, by the late debate in the senate of the United States, and by the report of the judiciary committee unanimously adopted by the senate, was so satisfactory to the state of Maine as to render any further measures by the government of the state for the present unnecessary. The adoption of that report makes it the imperative duty of the executive of the United States to press the negotiation in the manner most likely to produce a speedy result, and takes away all apology for any unnecessary delay. It also presents, in the most public way, before the people of the United States, and before the government of Great Britain, the point of view in which the question is unanimously regarded by the senate. In having attained this object, the government of Maine has effected an important advance towards a settlement of the question, and the next step, we presume, will be taken by the executive of the United States.

From the Rochester Democrat of August 18.

Important from Toronto. It affords us great pleasure to be able to communicate the release of sixteen state prisoners from the jail at Toronto. Several of them were condemned to death—among the rest, Charles Durand, a relative of Dr. Duncomb. It is supposed that the order for their release was received by the Great Western.

The following is copied from the Toronto Commercial Herald of Thursday:

His excellency sir George Arthur has been pleased to extend to the following prisoners her majesty's pardon, viz:

Seymour W. H. Stockdell, John McCormick, John Gillingham, Daniel Snell, and William DeLang, on condition of their giving security to keep the peace and be of good behavior for three years.

Abraham Haling, Jesse Cleaver, Silas Bardnell, John Brown, John Haling, Joseph Milbourn, Asa Wizen, Joel Wizen, John Hill, Daniel Shephard, and Charles Dnrand, on condition that they banish themselves within three days from the time of their liberation from prison, from this province, and that they remain absent for and during their natural lives.

Lewistown, Aug. 15.

It may be a matter of interest to your readers to be informed of the fate of the sixteen state convicts, sentenced to be executed on the 25th.

Three of them, Chandler, Wait, and McLeod, are to be executed on the 25th, agreeably to their sentence.

Eight others, including Miller and the other Americans, to be transported to some one of the British colonies for life. Three others to the penitentiary for three years.

The case of the remaining convict, Waggoner, has not been decided—great efforts having been made by his friends to procure his banishment to the states.

The trial of Beamer, who led a body of lancers at the affair of the Short Hills, comes on to day or to-morrow; and the general belief is that he will be convicted and sentenced to be executed.

[Albany Argus.]

Detroit, Aug. 14.

The vigilant officers of the customs yesterday made a seizure extraordinary. Among the goods discharging from the Bunker Hill steamer, were some boxes of great weight, one of which having been partially broken, revealed something that looked very like a piece of heavy ordnance. The officers broke open the box and discovered a cannon of beautiful workmanship, entirely new, from a manufactory at the east. Further search was made, and two other similar places were found, and have been lodged in the public store. They are presumed to be "patriot" goods, and intended for the next campaign, if any body of men can be found mad enough to engage in such an affair again.

The activity of the officers engaged in the service on this frontier is deserving of all praise, and we have no doubt will effectually prevent any future disturbances by those self-styled patriots, whose unlawful acts have subjected the government to injurious imputations and large expenses.

[Free Press.]

DISCOVERY OF THE SKELETON OF A MASTODON.

From the Crawford County (Ohio) Republican extra.

Bucyrus, August 14. Mr. Abraham Hahn, while engaged with his work hands in excavating a mill race, about three quarters of a mile east of Bucyrus, (Crawford county court-house,) yesterday, at the distance of from five to seven feet below the surface of the ground, discovered the skeleton of a Mastodon, in a reclined position.

The history of this genus of animals is involved in mystery. No tradition or human record furnishes evidences of its existence at any period. But that it once lived and walked upon the earth, the prince of quadruped kingdoms, is abundantly proven by the numerous and almost entire specimens of its organic remains that have been discovered in various parts of North America, and which have excited the wonder and astonishment of the naturalist and antiquarian.

From the peculiar structure and the immense size of its bones, it must have been an animal far exceeding in size and strength any species of the quadruped races now in existence. The place where this skeleton was found is very near the dividing ridge between the northern and southern waters of the state, in a wet, spongy soil. The bones, so far as discovered, are in a fine state of preservation.

The upper jaw and skull bones are perfect in all their parts, as formed by nature. The under jaw was accidentally divided in removing it from the earth.

This is the only instance in which the skull of the Mastodon has been found in a state of preservation; and it furnishes the only specimen from which correct ideas can be obtained respecting that massive and singularly shaped organ.

Some idea may be formed of the rank this monster held among the beasts of the forest when clothed with skin and flesh, and nerved with life, from the following dimensions of some portions of it, which have been rescued from oblivion:

The skull and upper jaw.

Horizontal length,	39 inches.
Length, following curvature of skull,	42½ "
Breadth across the eyes,	26½ "
Do. at back of head,	25½ "
Vertical height,	22 "
Height occipital bone,	16 "
Diameter of both nostrils,	11½ "
Diameter of each, measuring the other way,	5 "
Diameter of tusk sockets,	5½ to 6 "
Depth do. do.	22 "
Diameter of eye sockets,	6 "
Weight of skull and upper jaw,	160 pounds.

The under jaw.
Horizontal length, following outside curvature,	31½ inches.
Height to junction with upper jaw,	16½ "
Weight,	69 poundss.
Front molars,	6½ } inches
Back do.	5½ } apart.
Length back molar,	7½ inches.
Breadth back molar,	4 "
Length front molar,	4½ "
Femur, or thigh bone.
Length,	37 "
Largest circumference,	30 "
Smallest do.	15½ "
Tibia, (largest bone between thigh and hoof.)
Length,	22½ "
Largest circumference,	24½ "
Smallest do.	11 "
Fibula, (smaller bone between thigh and hoof.)
Length,	20½ "
Largest circumference,	12½ "
Smallest do.	4½ "
Humerus, (bone from shoulder to knee.)
Length,	30 "
Largest circumference,	34½ "
Smallest do.	14½ "
Rib.
Length outer curve,	43½ "
Smallest circumference,	5½ "

LETTER FROM MR. CALHOUN.

From the Columbia Telescope of the 11th inst.

We publish to-day a letter from Mr. CALHOUN to the committee of the late barbecue dinner in this place, which, as it did not arrive till several days afterwards, was not read to the company on that occasion.

Fort Hill, July 24, 1838.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your note of the 14th instant, inviting me to partake of a barbecue dinner, to be given at Columbia on the 28th inst. "as a welcome home to Senator PRESTON, by his fellow citizens of Richland district," and also to afford the other members of congress an opportunity to meet and address the people."

If I had no other reason for not accepting your invitation, the great distance and my recent return home, after a long absence in the laborious discharge of my public duties, would be, I hope, a sufficient apology; but there are others, which are insuperable, for declining it, which, acting with the candor and frankness that I trust shall ever mark my conduct on all occasions, I cannot withhold.

It is impossible I can mistake, that the welcome home to my colleague is intended as a testimony of approbation of his course generally, during the late session, but more especially in reference to the great and leading question of the day, which now so deeply agitates the country, and engrossed so large a portion of the time and attention of congress, at its late sitting. Thus understanding it, I can have no objection to it; but for me to participate in the welcome and the accompanying festivities, would be to condemn my own course. It was our misfortune to differ on the deeply important question in reference to which it is intended to do honor to his course. The difference was, on my part, with great reluctance. I could not but apprehend that a difference on such a subject, involving such important interests, and to be followed by such a mighty train of consequences, for good or evil, would ultimately divide and distract the state, to which no one could be more averse than myself. Every motive that could influence me, personal or patriotic, was on the opposite side. Individually, I had clearly nothing to gain by division or distraction. My position in the state and in the estimation of my fellow citizens could not be materially bettered, and was almost certain to be injured, by any change. But I had far higher motives than mere personal considerations to avoid every act which might by possibility lead to a division at home.

I have long regarded the south as the balance wheel of our beautiful, but complex, system of government, and I consider its union not only as necessary to its own prosperity and safety, but indispensable to the proper working of the whole machine. It is an opinion deliberately formed, after much reflection and no little experience. We are the weaker and the exposed section, and must, of course, have the deepest interest in confining the general government to its proper sphere, on which depend its safety and duration, so essential to the safety and prosperity of all. To effect this, union among ourselves is indispensable, while, as the weaker portion of the confederacy, it cannot endanger either the rights or the safety of the stronger. But union among ourselves at home, in our own state, if not necessary, is important to the union of the whole south. Circumstances to which I need not refer, have given to the state a pre-eminence and influence far beyond its extent, population or wealth.

Entertaining these views, I was ready to make any sacrifice short of principle and duty to avoid division and discord at home; but it was impossible for me, without sacrificing them, to take any other course, in the present juncture, than that which I did.

I long since foresaw its approach, and made up my mind as to the part I would act, should it arrive in my time. Four years ago, on the removal of the deposits, I openly avowed in debate the principles and sentiments on which I acted at the late and extra session, and, of consequence, could take no other course, without palpably contradicting my recorded opinions, and this without any change of principle or sentiment. So far otherwise, time and reflection have but served to confirm the opinions I then entertained and expressed. I do believe that the only real alternative left, is whether the government shall go back to its original policy, established by the act of 1789, and collect its revenue in the legal and constitutional currency of the country, and keep it by its own responsible officers, or charter another bank; or, in other words, between the constitutional treasury and another national bank, with sufficient capital and power to control the exchanges, the currency, the commerce, and the business of the union. All other measures—the pet bank system, special deposits, and all—are but temporary expedients, half-way houses, and so understood and avowed by the great body opposed to the separation of government from the banks. Between the two—the constitutional treasury and a national bank—I could not hesitate. I do most solemnly believe, that a bank with power and influence sufficient to effect the object proposed, would be the most dangerous of all measures—would be fatal to our free institutions, and destructive of the commerce, interests and safety of the staple states. Its powers would make it despotic, and enable it to control the action of congress, and to take from the people, in reality, the power of electing the president, who would be virtually elected by the bank, and be but an instrument in its hands. It would, in a word, make a master—not a master having a common interest in the whole, and a motive to protect and cherish all the parts, but a local and sectional master, whose power would be wielded to aggrandize and build up one portion, by oppressing the other.

Thus thinking, no alternative was left, but to pursue the course I did, even at the hazard of differing from my colleague and many of my old friends, for whom I have the highest regard and the kindest feelings. In taking it, I could not but foresee that it would bring me into conflict with the greatest and most powerful interest of the community, and that I should be subject to the most unfounded misrepresentations and the fiercest attacks. But, at such a crisis, and with my views of the consequences, I would have been unworthy of representing constituents so intelligent and patriotic, and who had so generously stood by me on so many trying occasions, if I had permitted any personal or selfish considerations to have the least influence.

Having thus differed on a question, according to my conception, of such vast magnitude and importance, I cannot accept your invitation to partake in a festivity intended to honor the course of my colleagues, without condemning and dishonoring my own, and am therefore compelled to decline it.

Nor can I consistently with a due regard to propriety attend the festivity in order "to address the people" on the occasion. My colleague and myself have both fully expressed our opinions on this and most of the other important subjects, which claimed the attention of congress at its late session, in our appropriate places in the senate. What we said has been published and is in the hands of our constituents. If additional light is wanted, as far as I am concerned, I shall cheerfully respond, when called on for that purpose, by any portion of my constituents; but in the present case, where from what has been stated, it is obvious, that different opinions are entertained by your invited guest and myself on a question which cannot but be prominently noticed at your festival, my presence could not be very agreeable either to him or myself.

In stating the reasons for my course and the motives which govern me, it is far from my intention to cast censure on that of my colleague. Neither of us is the rightful judge of the other, where we unfortunately differ in the discharge of our official duties. We hold the same high trust from the same constituency, to whom alone we are responsible for the fidelity and wisdom with which we may discharge our duty. My object is simply to assign the reasons why I cannot accept your invitation, and I have said as much as I have, in order to be clearly understood. Not to have answered your note might have been considered uncivil, and have exposed me to improper imputations; while it was impossible to answer it, with due regard to truth and candor and what was due to myself, without stating what I have. With respect, yours, &c.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

To Joseph A. Black, S. Boatwright, J. McCully, T. Center, W. Denley, I. D. Mordecai, J. C. Phillips, T. H. Wade, and Robert Adams, esq.

JUDGE WHITE AND MR. BELL.

The citizens of Knoxville honored these gentlemen with a dinner on their return from Washington. We copy the subjoined notice of their remarks from the Knoxville Register:

The speeches delivered by these distinguished statesmen at the public dinner on Wednesday last, we hope to be able to lay before our readers in a very short time. They are worthy of their authors, of our noble state, and of the palmiest days of our republic. Col. Bell appeared among us comparatively a stranger, except from reputation—and although laboring under the oppressions consequent upon a protracted and laborious session of congress, and the superadded fatigues of a long journey, yet he fully came up to a high public expectation, and in a speech of about two hours length sustained the exalted character he has acquired and the glorious cause he has so zealously espoused in the councils of the nation. Judge White spoke about an hour and a half, and in our estimation surpassed any former effort of his, which we have witnessed. He gave a full and lucid exposition of his present political attitude. In relation to the next presidential election, he, as well as col. Bell, declared they were uncommitted to the support of any person or party—that they were bound alone to their principles—those important and immutable principles upon which gen. Jackson's early election was advocated and sustained. That the most important of these principles were, a retrenchment of the extravagant expenditures of the public money, a limitation of the powers of the executive, and a reform of those abuses by which the power and patronage of the government were used to perpetuate the reign of the then existing functionaries—that these were the great and leading objects for which gen. Jackson was supported against J. Q. Adams in 1828—that they are as sacred and worthy of effort now, as they were then, and that consistency and patriotism require that Tennessee and the old Jackson party should rally upon the same ground, and endeavor to bring about precisely the same salutary reforms, by putting down the administration of Mr. Van Buren. Judge White repudiated the idea that he and Mr. Van Buren were ever of the same party, so far as principles are concerned. Mr. Van Buren was for a high tariff, while he was opposed to it—was for internal improvements, while he was against it. Mr. Van Buren is now for an increase of executive power, while Judge White is for diminishing and limiting it. His whole practice sanctions as legitimate a liberal use of power and patronage in advancing and sustaining his party, while Judge White's ideas of political integrity, as well as true policy, forbid it—and Mr. Van Buren is for a treasury bank, while he is opposed to it.

Judge White said it was possible that some candidate for the presidency might yet be brought forward who would be more acceptable to himself than either Mr. Clay, or Mr. Van Buren, but that this was, from present appearances, improbable; and that if no other candidates than these should be presented, upon a fair and just comparison of their claims, an attachment to great political principles which he has ever cherished and a sacred regard for the general welfare of the country would not suffer him long to hesitate in giving to Mr. Clay a decided preference.

But we will not by further anticipating increase the anxiety of our readers to see these speeches. We wish most ardently that every individual of these gentlemen's constituency could have been present to hear for themselves this able and lucid exposition of the course which consistency and political integrity require them to adopt and pursue.

THE CHEROKEES.

Head Quarters Eastern Division, Cherokee Agency, July 30, 1838.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your excellency's letter of the 21st instant, offering to pardon and cause to be released twelve Cherokees now in the penitentiary of Georgia.

But a little time before, instructions were received from the secretary of war on the same subject, and I am happy to be anticipated in my request founded thereupon, by the generous offer in question.

I send with this communication Mr. Hildebrand, a part Cherokee, and a trusty and intelligent young man, to receive and bring to this place the Cherokee prisoners. He is provided with sufficient funds, by the nation, to defray all necessary expenses in going and returning.

The Indian authorities are anxious not to leave one of their people behind.

No guard is supposed to be necessary to bring the prisoners to this place, as it is not doubted that they will be eager enough to return to their kindred and friends; and for their protection on the way, a paper from your excellency, in the nature of a passport, it is supposed, will be all-sufficient.

The whole body of the Cherokees remaining to be emigrated, evince the best dispositions, and the emigration to the west will be renewed the beginning of the month after the next.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c. &c.

(Signed)

WINFIELD SCOTT.

His ex. George R. Gilmer, governor of Georgia.

The Hamilton Gazette, printed at Ross's Landing, in Tennessee, says:

"The collection of the Indians commenced on the 25th of May last, under the direction of major general Scott, and, at the present time, all the Indians are collected at the different depots—about 8,000 at the Cherokee agency—2,000 at this place—1,500 at a new camp, 12 miles from the agency—and 800 at Fort Payne, Alabama. These numbers comprise all the Indians in the territorial limits of the nation, with the exception of a few who have pledged their words to come in in proper time.

"The whole number of Indians in the nation on the 23d May was estimated at 16,000; out of this number, about 2,600 were despatched by the superintendent, by water, to their new homes in the west, during the month of June. They are divided into three parties. The first, consisting of 950, started about the 15th of June, under the following officers: Lieut. Davis, U. S. artillery, conductor; Messrs. Reeves, Walder, and Cox, assistants; and Messrs. Oates and Folger, physicians. The second party of 800 started about the 10th of June, under the following officers: Lieut. Whitely, U. S. artillery, conductor; Messrs. John Hooke and P. Price, assistants; Messrs. Hodson and Morrow, physicians. The third party, consisting of 1,070, started about 16th June, in wagons, for Waterloo, Alabama, where they were to be embarked in boats. The officers in charge of the party are Henry Bateman, conductor; Messrs. Goody and Standiffee, assistants; Messrs. Hoyle and Willoughby, physicians.

"We understand the first party mentioned reached the Western Nation in 20 days, without the loss of a life. The second party is presumed to be near the borders of the Western Nation; and the third party has, perhaps, by this time, reached the Mississippi river.

"On account of the season, gen. Scott, on the 18th of June, suspended the emigration until the 1st of September next, at which time vigorous operations will be commenced; in the mean time, nothing will be done except to subsist the Indians at different depots."

From the Hamilton (Tenn.) Gazette, August 9.

The conference between gen. Scott and the Cherokee council is at length ended. The chiefs of the nation have undertaken the transportation of the remainder of the people to their new homes. It is now a national movement on the part of the Indians, and for the first time there is something like a unanimity of feeling and concurrence of the whole tribe. They have agreed on their part, to furnish all the subsistence and means of transportation that may be necessary to render the Indians comfortable on their journey to the west, and to commence the removal by the first of September, in detachments of about one thousand each, and, after the departure of the first, to have every consecutive detachment to start in a very few days.—It is computed that all the Indians can be removed in twelve detachments, and that the last will leave by the 20th of October. General Scott, on the part of the government, has agreed to allow sixty-five dollars per head for removal, and furnish in advance one-half of the amount. Each detachment will be conducted exclusively by their own people, accompanied by one or two physicians, who will, we suppose, receive their appointments from general Scott, with the concurrence of the chiefs. Until the departure of each detachment, the Indians are to be subsisted by the government.

Thus is settled, we hope forever, one of the most difficult and complex questions which the government has had to contend with since the last war.

If it has not terminated satisfactorily to all, the disaffected must make the most reasonable allowances for the principal actors in this scene. They have had parts to perform of the most delicate and responsible nature. They have had an injured nation's wounds to bind up, and at the same time to avoid compromising the interest or honor of the United States. In the fulfilment of the duties assigned to them, they have had to tear asunder the cords of affection which bound a noble tribe of people to their natal soil and the burial grounds of their fathers, and at the point of the bayonet force them to march to another land. These things, no doubt, combined to influence general Scott to run the risk of incurring the displeasure of many who have made sacrifices on the faith of the promises held out to the public. He was no doubt willing even to abridge his own well-deserved popularity if it would dissipate the gloom and sorrow which rested upon the Cherokees. Then let every lip be closed and every pen be dried that would reflect on that brave and venerated officer for the course he has pursued.

From the New York American of the 23d inst.

As we have seen several statements implying that these Indians were still dissatisfied, and subject, in consequence, to harsh treatment by the forces ordered to superintend their emigration, we take pleasure in imparting, on unquestionable authority, the following facts:

The whole of the Cherokees were, on the 31st ult. collected in four camps—of whom eight thousand were around the head quarters of gen. Scott, and the remainder, about four thousand, in three other camps—in addition to three thousand sent off to the west in June. They are perfectly content to emigrate as soon as the cool season shall return.—The general takes care to see them well fed and well clothed, furnished with tents, physicians, medicines, and hospital stores. The camp is about 12 miles by 4—covered with wood and shale—and supplied with 40 or 50 good springs and running streams, with the beautiful High-wassee river touching it on one side. The Indians are cheerful, and confide unreservedly in the general, who has succeeded in making an arrangement with them, by which they are to conduct the emigration themselves, the government furnishing, from time to time, upon the general's requisitions, out of the purchase money stipulated to be paid to the Indians—amounting to more than six millions of dollars—funds for carrying on the removal. The chiefs and head men are already engaging wagons and organizing parties for the land route. Two regiments only, the 4th infantry and 3d artillery, are retained by the general, rather for protection to the Indians than as a guard over them. The militia are all discharged. No sentinels are posted over any of the Indian camps, and none are wanted. The Indians not only do not attempt escape, but they could not be driven away.

We rejoice in being able to communicate these facts, which soften so much the rigor of the decision that dooms these Indians to deportation, and which redound so much to the honor of general Scott.

MEXICO.

The following is the speech of president Bustamante, delivered at the close of the session of the national congress on the 30th, of which we published an extract in the last "REGISTER."

Gentlemen: The constitutional term which finishes this day, presents circumstances as important for the republic as they are worthy the attention and examination of its legislators. Whether the internal condition of the country or its external relations be considered, you will discover during the period which has transpired since January of the present year, the favor of Providence and the protection which it has dispensed among us to secure the peace and the renown of Mexico among civilized nations. Turn your eyes, gentlemen, to the difficulty in which we are now involved, and reflect upon the numerous embarrassments we have overcome, and upon the necessity of general and constant co-operation, in order to ward off those evils which may otherwise afflict our country.

Tranquillity is being re-established; and the bands of rebels who succeeded temporarily in disturbing it in certain quarters, have been discomfited by the arms of the republic. The paltry few that remain will soon disappear, and the safety of the public roads and villages be perfectly established. It must be a source of satisfaction to the national representatives that the rebellion has been so promptly put down. The reflection that the good sense of the people opposes invincible obstacles to seditions, is a still greater cause of congratulation. All concur in regretting the evils which civil war has caused, and the unanimous voice of the people calls for public happiness by the maintenance of peace and order.

Were the latter not based on such solid foundations, the differences of the republic with the French government would draw down general execration upon the seditious. The friendly relations which existed with France have been interrupted, its naval forces now blockade our most important harbors, and commit other hostilities. The ultimatum of the French minister is as inadmissible as the dignity and honor of the Mexican nation are invariable. Consequently, the negotiations have become complicated, and the difficulties on both sides have reached the highest point, in spite of the loyal efforts and intentions of the government of the republic to prevent these altercations by honorable measures for both countries.

As congress is already informed of the pretensions of the French government and the grave injuries and offences which the nation have suffered from its hostilities, it cannot fail to appreciate at its proper value the prudent and dignified conduct of the executive. If honor were not the dearest attribute of a free republic, or if a war between two friendly powers were less prejudiced to our interests and welfare, it might be thought that the government should have inclined to one of those extremes which it has ever sought to avoid. But you, gentlemen, are well impressed with the advantages of that system of firmness and moderation which has obtained that respect which the name of the republic merits for the preservation of its peaceful relations with foreign powers.

The hostilities committed by the French naval forces, and the blockade suffered by our ports, would have justified the severest reprisals on the part of the republic. But, gentlemen, since the government has firmly established the nation, it has thought it best to conciliate the French cabinet by its generous moderation, that it may adopt another line of conduct more consonant with decorum and the interest of both countries.

I cannot decide with certainty what will be the termination of these unhappy differences, but I can assure you that whatever it may be, it will comport with the dignity of the Mexican nation. Disposed to sustain, in case of emergency, a war which we shall not have provoked, and desirous of an honorable peace between Mexico and France, the policy to be pursued by us under such circumstances, cannot be questionable.

You are aware that the United States have accepted the arbitration of a friendly power, proposed to them by the government of the republic, for the re-establishment of the amity and harmony so unfortunately interrupted. If I have deplored the unhappy state of our relations, I have never doubted that that cabinet will aid in the rational and just accommodation of the philanthropic sentiments existing between Mexico and the United States. I am now far from reviving the mutual complaints which have been made. Let the two governments apply themselves entirely to a definite and satisfactory arrangement, by which the differences which have endangered the continuance of peace with our neighbors, may be forgotten. The neutrality law lately passed by the two houses of the American congress, and the assurances given to our minister, should satisfy us with respect to their frank and sincere intentions.

The friendship of the republic with the other European and American powers, has extended to Belgium, and the new state of the equator. Their governments have sent plenipotentiaries fully accredited to accomplish negotiations with a view to give an impulse to commercial transactions with those countries. The government of the republic will receive them with all the attention which the reciprocal advantages they will confer, and the progress of our foreign relations alike merit.

I regret sincerely that I cannot announce to you the opening of the campaign of Texas. Your wisdom will enable you to appreciate the incapability of the government to overcome all the difficulties in the case. Fortunately, they all depend upon accidental circumstances, which will ultimately disappear and leave the government free to employ its resources and power in restoring the integrity of its territory.

The stagnation of foreign commerce, although it has severely affected all its ramifications, has likewise demonstrated the internal resources of the nation, and the necessity of a system of internal affairs by which the revenue of the administration may be provided for. This labor, so worthy of the house, would terminate the necessities of the treasury. To remedy this evil as much as possible should be one of the first objects of your attention.

I must not omit the wants which for many years the greater portions of the officers and valiant troops of the government have suffered with that exemplary patience which it is to be expected from true republicans. They would suffer still more were it requisite, but congress and the government should zealously protect these faithful servants of the country.

The army, police, and system of internal affairs being thoroughly organized, nothing can occur to shake the foundations of public tranquillity. The national character, which at various political crises, has been so nobly developed, will be the primum mobile of the fruitful elements of this privileged soil and of general prosperity. Our foreign differences will either terminate honorably, or will occasion new motives to induce the public to pursue its determination for the defence of its national rights. You, gentlemen, constitute one of the firmest pillars of the country, and your legitimate duties at the next session, will doubtless comport with the great object which distinguishes the constitutional compact. Consider well the important and multitudinous duties of the executive, and continue to assist him with the most ardent zeal and the most unflinching confidence.

From a communication made to the minister of war and marine, by the commandant general of the state of Tamaulipas, we learn that the sloop Gualpan, having put off from Tampico to embark some effects on board the British packet, was boarded by three armed boats from the French blockading brig. The British consul, who had hoisted his flag on board the said sloop, and was himself steering her, was removed from the helm, and ordered on board the French brig. He, however, resisted the demand, protested against such hostile proceedings, and insisted that the vessel should be searched. After a short detention he was suffered to proceed; and after placing the objects in question on board the packet, the sloop returned without further molestation to Tampico. We have understood that it is the intention of the consul (Mr. Crawford) to make a complaint to his government of this unwarrantable invasion of his rights. [Nat. Intel.]

APPROPRIATIONS AND OFFICES CREATED IN 1838.

Report of the clerk of the house of representatives of the United States, in compliance with the "act to authorize the appointment of additional paymasters, and for other purposes," passed July 4, 1836.

Office of the house of reps. of the U. S.

July 19, 1838.

In obedience to the sixth section of the "act to authorize the appointment of additional paymasters, and for other purposes," passed July 4, 1836, which requires "the secretary of the senate and clerk of the house of representatives, as soon as may be after the close of each session of congress, to publish a statement of all appropriations made during the session; and also a statement of the new offices created, and the salaries of each; and also a statement of the offices, the salaries of which are increased, and the amount of such increase," the clerk of the house of representatives submits the accompanying statements.

WALTER S. FRANKLIN, clerk ho. of reps.

Statements of appropriations made, new offices created with the salaries of each, offices the salaries of which are increased, with the amount of such increase, during the 1st and 2d sessions of the 25th congress of the United States of America.

July 18, 1838.

Prepared by the clerk of the house of representatives, in obedience to the 6th section of the act of July 4, 1836, entitled, "An act to authorize the appointment of additional paymasters, and for other purposes."

Statement of appropriations made during the 1st and 2d sessions of the 25th congress of the United States of America, specifying the amount and object of each.

EXTRA SESSION, OR 1ST SESSION 25TH CONGRESS.

H. R. 9.

Making further appropriations for the year 1837.

For pay and mileage of the members of congress and delegates	$248,500 00
For stationary, fuel, printing, and all other contingent expenses of the senate	80,000 00
For stationary, fuel, printing, and all other contingent expenses of the house of representatives	50,000 00
For the contingent expenses of the navy, as enumerated in the act of the 8d of March last, in addition to the amount appropriated by that act

For the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries

For defraying the expenses attending the prosecution of the claim of the United States to the legacy bequeathed by the late James Smithson, of London

For contingent expenses in the office of the treasurer

For preparing, printing, and binding documents ordered by the resolution of the senate of the 2d of July, 1836, 25th of February, 1837, and 2d of March, 1837, to be disbursed under the direction of the committee to audit and control the contingent expenses of the senate

H. R. 2.

Expense of issuing treasury notes

H. R. 8.

For suppressing Indian hostilities

120,000 00

10,000 00

5,000 00

500 00

25,000 00

20,000 00

1,600,000 00

$2,109,000 00

2D SESSION 25TH CONGRESS.

H. R. 224.

For the civil and diplomatic expenses of the government for the year 1838.

For pay and mileage of the members of congress and delegates

$567,680 00

For pay of the officers and clerks of the senate and house of representatives

40,400 00

For stationary, fuel, printing, and all other contingent expenses of the senate

50,000 00

For stationary, fuel, printing, and all other contingent expenses of the house of representatives

225,000 00

For compensation to the president and vice president of the United States, the secretary of state, the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of war, the secretary of the navy, and the postmaster general.

60,000 00

For salary of secretary to sign patents for public lands, per act of March 2d, 1833

1,500 00

For clerks and messengers in the office of the secretary of state

20,300 00

For the contingent expenses of the department of state, including publishing and distributing the laws

25,000 00

For the superintendent and watchmen of the northeast executive building

1,500 00

For contingent expenses of said building, including fuel, labor, oil, and repairs

3,350 00

For compensation to the clerks and messengers in the office of the secretary of the treasury

16,450 00

For compensation to the clerks in said office, per act of 23d June, 1836

3,600 00

For compensation to the first comptroller of the treasury

3,300 00

For compensation to the clerks and messengers in the office of the first comptroller

19,300 00

For compensation to the second comptroller

3,000 00

For compensation to the clerks and messenger in the office of the second comptroller, including the compensation of two clerks transferred from the office of the fourth auditor

12,250 00

For compensation to the first auditor of the treasury

3,000 00

For compensation to the clerks and messenger in the office of the first auditor

15,900 00

For compensation to the second auditor of the treasury

3,000 00

For compensation to the clerks and messenger in the office of the second auditor

17,900 00

For compensation to the third auditor

3,000 00

For compensation to the clerks and messengers in the office of the third auditor

27,250 00

For compensation to two additional clerks, employed under the act of the 18th January, 1837, for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed

2,400 00

For compensation to the fourth auditor

3,600 00

For compensation to the clerks and messenger in the office of the fourth auditor

15,950 00

For an additional clerk in the same, to carry into effect the act of the 8d March last, for the more equitable administration of the pension fund

1,000 00

For compensation to the fifth auditor

3,600 00

For compensation to the clerks and messenger in the office of the fifth auditor

9,800 00

For compensation to the treasurer of the United States

3,000 00

For compensation to the clerks and messenger in the office of the treasurer of the United States

16,750 00

For compensation to the register of the treasury

3,000 00

For compensation to the clerks and messengers in the office of the register of treasury

24,200 00

For compensation of the commissioner of the general land office, per act of 4th July, 1836

3,000 00

For compensation of the recorder, solicitor, draughtsman and assistant draughtsman, clerks, messengers, and packers, in the office of the commissioner of the general land office

107,850 00

For compensation to the solicitor of the treasury

3,500 00

For compensation to the clerks and messenger in the office of the solicitor of the treasury

3,950 00

For expenses of stationary, printing, and all other contingent expenses of the treasury department, viz:

For the office of the secretary of the treasury, including copying, and expenses incurred in consequence of the burning of the treasury building

12,500 00

For translating foreign languages, and for receiving and transmitting passports and sea-letters, in the office of the secretary of the treasury

300 00

For stating and printing public accounts

1,400 00

For the office of the first comptroller

2,000 00

For the office of the second comptroller

1,500 00

For the office of the first auditor

1,000 00

For the office of the second auditor

1,000 00

For the office of the third auditor, including $1,450, the estimated amount due to printers for publishing rules and regulations, and notices to claimants, under the act of the 18th of January, 1837, to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States

2,250 00

For the office of the fourth auditor

1,000 00

For the office of the fifth auditor

1,000 00

For the office of the treasurer of the United States

1,800 00

For the office of the register of the treasury

3,000 00

For the office of the solicitor of the treasury, including $500 for the purchase of books

1,500 00

For compensation of superintendent and two watchmen for the additional building for the use of the general land office

1,050 00

For compensation of the superintendent and watchmen of the southeast executive building

2,100 00

For contingent expenses of the building occupied by the treasury, including fuel, oil, labor, repairs, furniture, and for rent, amounting to $4,350 per annum

12,000 00

For compensation to the clerks and messengers in the office of the secretary of war, including the messenger in the bounty land bureau

18,250 00

For contingent expenses of the office of the secretary of war	$3,000 00	For salary of superintendent and watchman of the southwest executive building	1,250 00	For compensation of the governor, judges, and secretary of Wisconsin territory	9,100 00
For books, maps, and plans for the war department	1,000 00	For contingent expenses of said building	3,330 00	For contingent expenses, pay, and mileage of the members of the legislative assembly; pay of officers of the council, and taking the census of said territory, and for printing the laws; for furniture and rent of buildings	29,625 00
For compensation of extra clerks, when employed in said office	3,000 00	For compensation to three assistant postmasters general, per act 3d July, 1836	7,500 00	For compensation of the governor, judges, and secretary of the territory of Florida	11,700 00
For compensation of the commissioner of Indian affairs	3,000 00	For compensation to clerks and messengers in the general post office	48,600 00	For contingent expenses, pay, and mileage of the members of the legislative council of said territory; pay of the officers of the council, and for copying the laws for the printer	10,000 00
For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the commissioner of Indian affairs	16,400 00	For contingent expenses of said office, including four thousand dollars for rent and fuel for the auditor's office	12,500 00	For compensation to the chief justice, the associate judges, and district judges of the United States	101,400 00
For contingent expenses of said office	2,000 00	For arrears for the year 1837	6,749 98	For compensation of the chief justice and associate judges of the District of Columbia, and of the judge of the orphans' courts of said district	9,500 00
For compensation of the commissioner of pensions, including five hundred dollars for deficiency in the appropriation for 1837	3,500 00	For compensation of two watchmen	600 00	For compensation to the attorney general of the United States	4,000 00
For compensation of clerks transferred from the office of the secretary of war to the office of the commissioner of pensions	4,800 00	For compensation to the auditor of the post office	3,000 00	For compensation of clerk and messenger in the office of the attorney general	1,800 00
For compensation to clerks and messengers for the office of the commissioner of pensions authorized by the act of 9th May, 1836	13,450 00	For compensation to clerks and messengers in said office	55,500 00	For contingent expenses of said office	500 00
For compensation to clerks and messenger in the office of the paymaster general	6,100 00	For contingent expenses of said office, including the expense of quarterly books, stationery, printing, pay of laborers, and arrearage of expenses incidental to the occupation of the new office	7,437 00	For compensation to the reporter of the decisions of the supreme court	1,000 00
For contingent expenses of said office	300 00	For compensation of the surveyor general northwest of the Ohio	2,000 00	For compensation to the district attorneys and marshals, as granted by law, including those in the several territories	18,250 00
For compensation of the clerk and messenger in the office of the commanding general	1,300 00	For compensation to clerks in his office, per acts of 9th May, 1836	6,800 00	For defraying the expenses of the supreme court and the district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; also, for jurors and witnesses, in aid of the funds arising from fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred in the year 1838 and preceding years; and, likewise, for defraying the expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, and of prosecutions for offences committed against the United States, and for the safe-keeping of prisoners	350,000 00
For contingent expenses of said office	300 00	For compensation to the surveyor general for Illinois and Missouri	2,000 00	For expenses of printing the records of the supreme court	3,000 00
For compensation to clerks and messenger in the office of the adjutant general	7,650 00	For compensation to clerks in the office of said surveyor general, per acts of 9th May, 1836	3,200 00	For the payment of pensions granted by special acts of congress	1,050 00
For contingent expenses of said office	1,600 00	For compensation to the surveyor general of Arkansas	2,000 00	For the support and maintenance of light-houses, floating lights, beacons, buoys, and stakages, including the purchase of lamps, oil, keepers' salaries, repairs, improvements, and contingent expenses	856,863 00
For compensation of clerks and messenger in the office of the quartermaster general	7,300 00	For compensation of clerks in the office of said surveyor general	3,000 00	For survey of the coast of the United States, including the compensation of the superintendent and assistants	80,000 00
For contingent expenses of said office	600 00	For compensation of the surveyor general of Louisiana	2,000 00	For completing the public warehouse at Baltimore	25,000 00
For compensation of clerks and messenger in the office of the commissary general of purchases	4,200 00	For compensation to clerks in the office of said surveyor general, per acts of 9th May, 1836	4,300 00	For completing surveys in Alabama, according to the provision in the appropriation act of 3d March, 1837	2,500 00
For contingent expenses of said office	800 00	For compensation of the surveyor general of Mississippi	2,000 00	For surveys in Missouri, in the towns named in the act of 26th May, 1824	6,000 00
For compensation of clerks and messenger in the office of the commissary general of subsistence	4,300 00	For compensation of clerks in the office of said surveyor general, per acts of 9th May, 1836, including one thousand five hundred dollars for additional clerk-hire in preparing the survey and return of the Cherokee cession	500 00	For the compensation to two keepers of the public archives in Florida	1,000 00
For contingent expenses of said office	2,600 00	For compensation of the surveyor general of Florida	2,820 00	For salaries of ministers of the United States to Great Britain, France, Spain, Russia, and Prussia	45,000 00
For compensation of clerks and messenger in the office of the chief engineer	5,650 00	For compensation of clerks in the office of said surveyor general	2,000 00	For salaries of the secretaries of legation to the same places	10,000 00
For contingent expenses of said office, including one thousand dollars for expenses attending the removal of the office	2,000 00	For compensation to the commissioner of public buildings in Washington	2,800 00	For salaries of the charges des affaires to Portugal, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, Turkey, Belgium, Brazil, Chili, Peru, Central America, New Granada, and Venezuela, and for an outfit to a charge d'affaires to Peru	58,500 00
For compensation to clerk and messenger in the office of the surgeon general	1,650 00	For compensation to three assistants to the commissioner, as superintendent of the Potomac bridge; for the expense of oil for the lamps	1,942 50	For salary of the drogoman, and for contingent expenses of the legation to Turkey	6,500 00
For contingent expenses of said office	700 00	For compensation to the officers and clerks of the mint	20,400 00
For compensation of clerks and messenger in the ordnance office	8,630 00	For pay of laborers in the various departments of the mint, and for contingent expenses	14,600 00
For contingent expenses of said office	913 00	For compensation to the officers and clerk of the branch mint at Charlotte, North Carolina	6,000 00
For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the topographical bureau	2,500 00	For pay of laborers in the various departments of the same	3,600 00
For contingent expenses of said bureau	1,233 00	For wastage of gold, and for contingent expenses of the same	5,400 00
For compensation of superintendent and watchmen of the northwest executive building	2,250 00	For renewing the roof of the mint at Charlotte, North Carolina	2,000 00
For contingent expenses of said building, including rent of bounty land office; for improving the grounds for a new building; for land for the engine-house, authorized by the act of March 3d, 1837; and for the contingencies of the fire engines and apparatus	5,800 00	For compensation to the officers and clerk of the branch mint at Dahlonega, Georgia	6,000 00
For compensation of the clerks and messengers in the office of the secretary of the navy	12,850 00	For pay of laborers in the various departments of the same	3,800 00
For contingent expenses of said office	3,000 00	For wastage of gold, and for contingent expenses of the same	4,000 00
For compensation of the commissioners of the navy board	10,500 00	For enclosing the mint lot, and for buildings	7,500 00
For compensation to the secretary of the navy board	2,000 00	For compensation to the officers and clerks of the branch mint at New Orleans	12,900 00
For compensation to the clerks and messenger of the navy board	8,450 00	For pay of laborers in the various departments of the same	22,000 00
For contingent expenses of said office	1,800 00	For wastage of gold and silver, and for contingent expenses of the same	27,100 00

For the contingent expenses of all the missions abroad	$20,000 00	For the Mars Hill military road	364 00	dred and fifty thousand dollars for defraying the expenses of the courts of the United States, made in the "act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of government for the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, approved April sixth, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight," to be expended by the secretary of the treasury, under the direction of the president, upon the certificate of the judge of the circuit or district court of the United States of the circuit or district where the expenditure may have been made or the services rendered.
For salaries of the consuls of the United States at London and Paris	4,000 00	To enable the treasury officers to close the account of Charles Thomas, being part of an amount heretofore appropriated and carried to the surplus fund.		For the paper and printing of a complete catalogue of the books of the congress library, heretofore ordered	1,400 00
For expenses of intercourse with the Barbary Powers	17,400 00	To the state of Maine, to reimburse the expense of said state for allowances to Ebenezer S. Greely, for his sufferings and losses attendant upon his arrest and imprisonment in the jail at Frederickton, New Brunswick, in consequence of taking the census at Madawaska; and to John Baker and others, for sufferings and losses in relation to certain proceedings in said town, the sum of	1,175 00	For compensation to Ferdinando Pettrich, for models of statues for blocking to the western front of the capitol	600 00
For the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries	40,000 00	For continuing the construction of the patent office	50,000 00	For enlarging the contingent fund of the house of representatives, to provide for the payment for certain expenses incurred by the house by resolution of 27th of January, 1838	43,960 00
For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse	15,000 00	For furnishing machinery, and for other expenses incident to the outfit of the branch mints at New Orleans, Charlotte, and Dahlonega	2,800 00	For laborers, and horse, cart, and driver employed at the president's square	2,015 00
For clerk-hire, office-rent, stationary, and other expenses, in the office of the American consul in London, per act of 19th January, 1836	2,900 00	For salaries of the governor, secretary, chief judge, associate justices, district attorney, and marshal, and pay and mileage of the members of the legislative assembly of the territory of Iowa, and the expenses thereof, printing of the laws, taking the census, and other incidental and contingent expenses of the said assembly and territory	24,675 00	For repairs of the Potomac bridge	2,050 00
For interpreters, guards, and other expenses incidental to the consulates in the Turkish dominions	5,500 00	For erecting public buildings in the territory of Iowa	20,000 00	For three hundred feet of suction hose for the capitol and capitol grounds	200 00
For salary of the principal and two assistant librarians, pay of the messenger, and for contingent expenses of the library	4,210 00	For contingent expenses of the senate, not anticipated when the ordinary estimate of the year was prepared, being principally for engraving and printing maps, and other printing, the purchase of books and book-cases for the senate committee rooms, the expenses of committees of investigation, and the pay of clerks of committees	50,000 00	For cast-iron settees and chairs for the public grounds	150 00
For the purchase of books for the library of congress	5,000 00	For an outstanding balance of expenditures under the head of military surveys, and to enable the department to settle and close that account	10,000 00	For salary of the collector at the port of Vicksburg	500 00
For registers for ships and vessels, and lists of crews	4,000 00	For an outstanding balance of expenditures for surveys by the civil engineers, to enable that department to settle and close the account for those surveys	2,000 00	H. R. 82.
For compensation to a person employed in making an abstract of the pension laws, and in preparing the papers for congress, under the resolution of the house of representatives of the 9th of October, 1837	500 00	To close the account for the laying out and construction of a mail route and post road through the Creek country, in the state of Alabama, and to pay the balances due to contractors and workmen upon the said road, the sum of	1,945 50	For the benefit of the levy court of Calvert county, in the state of Maryland	3,000 00
For carrying into effect the fourth article of the treaty with Spain	3,000 00	For the salary of the additional judge of the orphans' court of Washington county, in the District of Columbia, the office having been created by a law of the present session of congress	1,000 00	H. R. 726.
For alterations and repairs of the capitol, and incidental expenses	6,331 00	For the salary of the judge of the criminal court of the District of Columbia, the said court having been established by a law of congress of the present session	2,000 00	For the erection of a court-house in Alexandria, in the District of Columbia	15,000 00
For filling up the street in front of carpenter's shop, and conducting water to the public stables	550 00	For enabling the secretary of the treasury to carry into effect the resolution of the 29th ultimo, on the subject of steam engines and steamboats, and the loss of life and property which has been suffered in their use, or so much thereof as he may find necessary for that purpose, the sum of	6,000 00	H. R. 733.
For lighting lamps, and superintendence of the public grounds around the capitol	5,976 00	For defraying the expenses of the marshals, deputy marshals, and other civil officers of the United States, in executing the provisions of an act passed at the present session of congress, entitled "an act to amend an act entitled 'an act in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, and to repeal the acts therein mentioned,' approved April twentieth, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen," the sum of twenty thousand dollars, to be paid out of the appropriation of three hun-		For compiling the statutes and other laws of the territory of Florida	2,000 00
For extending capitol square west, and improving the same south of the centre footway, according to the plan already in part executed, under the provisions of an act of the last congress	23,127 86			H. R. 822.
For attendance at the western gates of the capitol	547 50			For completing the public buildings in Wisconsin	20,000 00
For salary of the principal gardener	1,000 00			s. 30.
For alterations and repairs of the president's house, and for superintendence of the grounds around the same	4,815 00			For office-rent, fuel, and other incidental expenses for the office of the surveyor general of Wisconsin territory	350 00
For flag footways across Pennsylvania avenue at third, four-and-a-half, sixth, seventh, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth streets, and across first street east of capitol square	2,280 00			s. 98.
For repairing the marine hospital at Charleston, South Carolina	2,000 00			To provide for ascertaining the southern boundary line of the territory of Iowa	4,000 00
For the second payment to Luigi Persico, according to the contract made with him, for a group of statues for the capitol	4,000 00			s. 137.
For the second payment to the artists engaged in executing paintings for the rotundo of the capitol, under the joint resolution of the two houses	8,000 00			To provide for the payment of the annuities which may become due and payable to the Great and Little Osages, in the year 1838, and for other purposes	12,000 00
For purchasing eighty thousand pieces of parchment, and the expense of printing the same	13,600 00			s. 175.
For the service of the general post office, for the year 1838, in conformity to the act of 2d July, 1836 H. R. 412.	4,694,000 00			To refund to the Georgia Railroad and Banking company certain duties upon railroad iron	3,361 42
For the compensation of a topographer and clerks employed in the post office department, in conformity with the appropriation act of March 3d, 1837, and for one additional clerk to keep an appropriation account until the 1st of January, 1839	9,200 00			s. 269.
For the compensation of clerks employed in the auditor's office of the treasury for the post office department, from the 1st of January, 1838, till the 1st of January, 1839	10,500 00			For erecting public buildings in the territory of Iowa	20,000 00
For the documentary history of the revolution, the amount heretofore appropriated for that object, and carried to the surplus fund.				For the purchase of a library for the territory of Iowa	5,000 00
				For the contingent expenses of the same	350 00
				s. 291.
				For printing the Madison papers	5,000 00
				s. 189.
				For defraying the contingent expenses of the commissioner for adjusting the claims for reservations of land under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830 with the Choctaw Indians	5,000 00
				s. 11.
				To ascertain and designate the boundary line between the state of Michigan and the territory of Wisconsin	3,000 00
				s. 73.
				For testing the usefulness of inventions to improve and render safe

the boilers of steam engines against explosions s. 176.	$6,000 00
To refund certain duties upon railroad iron, paid by the New York and Harlem Railroad company s. 238.	905 63
To refund to the Newcastle and Frenchtown Turnpike and Railroad company certain duties paid by them upon iron imported for the construction of their railroad	2,008 83
	$8,252,366 22

H. R. 90.

For the support of the army for the year 1838.

For the pay of the army	$1,091,193 00
For the subsistence of officers	347,749 00
For forage of officers' horses	70,987 00
For clothing for officers' servants	26,550 00
For payments in lieu of clothing to discharged soldiers	80,000 00
For subsistence, exclusive of that of officers	730,912 50
For clothing of the army, camp and garrison equipage, cooking utensils, and hospital furniture	413,299 00
For the medical and hospital department	39,200 00
For the regular supplies furnished by the quartermaster's department, consisting of fuel, forage, straw, stationary, and printing,	203,000 00
For barracks, quarters, storehouses, embracing the repairs and enlargement of barracks, quarters, store-houses, and hospitals, at the several posts; the erection of temporary cantonments at such posts as shall be occupied during the year, and of gun-houses for the protection of cannon at the forts on the seaboard; the purchase of the necessary tools and materials for the objects wanted, and of the authorized furniture for the barrack rooms; rent of quarters for officers, of barracks for troops at posts where there are no public buildings for their accommodation, of store-houses for the safe-keeping of subsistence, clothing, &c., and of grounds for summer cantonments, encampments, and military practice	95,000 00
For the allowance made to officers for the transportation of their baggage, when travelling on duty without troops	50,000 00
For the transportation of troops and supplies, viz: transportation of the army, including the baggage of troops when moving either by land or water; freight and ferrages; purchase or hire of horses, mules, oxen, carts, wagons, and boats, for the purpose of transportation, or for the use of garrison; drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters, transportation of funds for the pay department; expense of sailing a public transport between the posts on the Gulf of Mexico, and of procuring water at such posts as from their situation, require it; the transportation of clothing from the depot at Philadelphia to the stations of the troops; of subsistence from the places of purchase, and the points of delivery under contracts, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require it to be sent; of ordnance from the foundries and arsenals to the fortifications and frontier posts, and of lead from the western mines to the several arsenals, the sum of	195,000 00
For the incidental expenses of the quartermaster's department consisting of postage on public letters and packets; expenses of courts martial and courts of inquiry, including the compensation of judge advocates, members, and witnesses; extra pay to soldiers, under an act of congress of the 2d of March, 1819;

expenses of expresses from the frontier posts, of the necessary articles for the interment of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; hire of laborers, compensation to clerks in the offices of quartermasters & assistant quartermasters at posts where their duties cannot be performed without such aid, and to temporary agents in charge of dismantled works, and in the performance of other duties; expenditures necessary to keep the two regiments of dragoons complete, including the purchase of horses to supply the place of those which may be lost and become unfit for service, and the erection of additional stables	92,000 00
For two months' extra pay to re-enlisted soldiers, and for the contingent expenses of the recruiting service	24,264 00
For the national armories	360,000 00
For the armament of the fortifications	100,000 00
For the current expenses of the ordnance service	93,000 00
For arsenals, (or so much thereof as may be sufficient to complete the arsenals already commenced, and those on the western frontier)	150,000 00
For the manufacture of elevating machines for barbette and case-mate carriages	5,000 00
For the purchase and manufacture of light field artillery	39,953 00
For the purchase of gunpowder and grape shot	37,500 00
For arrearages payable through the office of the second auditor	1,200 00
For arrearages payable through the office of the third auditor	3,000 00
For taxes on the Passyunk arsenal, near Philadelphia, for the years 1837 and 1838	1,450 00
For contingencies of the army	5,000 00
For paying the balance due the heirs of William Meldrum, one of the commissioners for surveying and marking the road from La Plaisance bay to Chicago	268 55
For paying Adam Eckfeldt, for fine gold and other expenses incurred by him in preparing nine medals ordered by congress for various distinguished officers	1,008 86

H. R. 412.

For carrying into effect the act for the increase of the army, to wit:
For pay	379,250 00
For clothing	216,730 00
For subsistence	74,645 00
For contingent expenses for recruiting	53,880 00
For defraying the expenses of the board of visitors at the Military academy, in addition to the sum contained in the annual appropriation for that object	698 75
For procuring new machinery for the Harper's Ferry armory, the sum of	20,000 00
H. R. 412.
For the support of the military academy of the United States for the year 1838.
For pay officers, cadets, and musicians	56,012 00
For subsistence of officers & cadets	39,566 00
For forage of officers' horses	1,152 00
For clothing of officers' servants	330 00
For defraying the expenses of the board of visitors at West Point	1,998 84
For fuel, forage, stationary, printing, transportation, and postage	15,295 00
For repairs, improvements, and expenses of buildings, grounds, roads, wharves, boats, and fences	7,257 50
For pay of adjutant's and quartermaster's clerks	950 00
For increase and expenses of the library	800 00
For miscellaneous items and incidental expenses	1,575 50
For the erection, as per plan, of a building for recitation and military exercises, in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated	18,254 60

For the erection of a barn and public stables	1,000 00
For compensation to the assistant professor of chemistry, mineralogy, and geology, at the military academy	300 00
For printing and binding the regulations of the military academy	360 00
For the reconstruction of the buildings for the library, engineer, chemical and philosophical departments at the military academy at West Point, destroyed by fire in February last	26,000 00
	$5,127,860 10

H. R. 89.

For certain fortifications of the United States, for the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight.

For Fort Warren, Boston harbor	$100,000 00
For the preservation of Castle island, and repairs of Fort Independence, Boston harbor	50,000 00
For Fort Adams, Rhode Island	100,000 00
For fortifications at New London harbor, Connecticut	25,000 00
For Fort Schuyler, East river, New York	100,000 00
For Fort Delaware, Delaware river	40,000 00
For Fort McHenry, Redoubt Wood, and Covington battery, near Baltimore	32,415 00
For Fort Monroe, Virginia	100,000 00
For Fort Calhoun, Virginia	30,000 00
For fortifications in Charleston harbor, and for the preservation of the site of Fort Moultrie	175,000 00
For Fort Pulaski, Cockspar island, Georgia	100,000 00
For the Fort at Foster's bank, Florida	33,000 00
For repairs of Fort Marion and of the sea-wall at St. Augustine	29,500 00
For the purchase of the charter-right to the bridge across Mill creek, at Fort Monroe	4,000 00
For securing the site of Fort Caswell, Oak island, North Carolina	8,500 00
For repairs of the old fort at the Barancas, Pensacola	75,000 00
For repairing Fort Niagara in the state of New York	3,000 00
For contingencies of fortifications	10,000 00
	$1,015,415 00

H. R. 393.

For the protection of the northern frontier	$625,500 00
---	---------------------

H. R. 225.

For the naval service for the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight.

For the pay of commissioned, warrant, and petty officers, and of seamen	$1,312,000 00
For pay of superintendents, naval constructors, and all the civil establishments at the several yards	69,770 00
For provisions	600,000 00
For repairs of vessels in ordinary, and the repairs and wear and tear of vessels in commission	1,200,000 00
For medicines and surgical instruments, hospital stores, and other expenses on account of the sick	75,000 00
For improvement and necessary repairs of the navy yard at Portsmouth, New Hampshire	20,000 00
For improvement and necessary repairs of the navy yard at Charlestown, Massachusetts	74,000 00
For improvement and necessary repairs of the navy yard at Brooklyn, New York	61,000 00
For improvement and necessary repairs of the navy yard at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania	21,500 00
For improvement and necessary repairs of the navy yard at Washington	30,000 00
For improvement and necessary repairs of the navy yard at Gosport, Virginia	77,500 00
For improvement and necessary repairs of the navy yard near Pensacola	76,500 00
For ordnance and ordnance stores	65,000 00
For defraying the expenses that may accrue for the following pur-

sen's and contingent expenditures	$12,500 00	of their titles to lands within other tribes, and for other purposes	2,000 00	are not able to supply themselves, and which may be necessary for their comfortable removal	100,000 00
For expenses of delegations of not exceeding three Choctaws, three Creeks, and five Osages, who have obtained permission to visit this city, including the usual presents and contingent expenditures	5,000 00	For defraying the expenses of fourteen Sac and Fox Indians, who were induced to visit Washington by the false representations of their conductor	221 50		$7,739,410 41
For the value of buildings of the Miamies, on the land ceded by them in the treaty of October 23, 1834	5,607 00	For the purpose of defraying expenses of negotiations with the Miami Indians $360; to be paid to the following persons in the following proportions, to wit:		H. R. 394.	For certain harbors, and for the removal of obstructions in and at the mouths of certain rivers, and for other purposes, during the year 1838.
For carrying into effect the treaties with the Chippewas of Saginaw, of 14th January and 20th December, 1837, and January 23, 1833	91,000 00	To William Marshall, for forty two days' service as commissioner	$336	For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Chicago, Illinois	$30,000 00
For carrying into effect the treaty with the Chippewas of the Mississippi, of July 21, 1837	209,500 00	To Henry L. Ellsworth, for forty-four days' services as commissioner	430	For continuing the construction of a harbor at Michigan city, Indiana	60,783 59
For carrying into effect the treaty with the Sioux of the Mississippi, of September 29, 1837, as ratified by the senate	233,250 00	To Allen Hamilton, for seventeen days' services as secretary	102	For continuing the construction of a pier or breakwater at the mouth of the river Saint Joseph Michigan	51,113 00
For carrying into effect the treaty with the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi, of October 21, 1837, as ratified by the senate	194,350 00	To defray the expenses of an exploring party of Miami Indians	860 00	For the continuation of the works at the harbor near the mouth of the river Raisin, Michigan	15,000 00
For carrying into effect the treaty with the Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri, of October 21, 1837	12,970 00	For affording temporary subsistence to such Indians west of the Mississippi who, by reason of their recent emigration, or the territorial arrangements incident to the policy of setting apart a portion of the public domain west of the Mississippi, for the residence of all the tribes east of that river, as are unable to subsist themselves, and for the expenses attending the distribution of the same	1,990 00	For continuing the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of Black river, in Jefferson county, state of New York	22,401 00
For carrying into effect the treaty with the Yanktons and Santee Sioux, of October 21, 1837	7,000 00			For continuing the improvement of the harbor at Whitehall, in the state of New York	15,000 00
For carrying into effect the treaty with the Winnebagoes, of November 1, 1837	415,500 00		150,000 00	For continuing the improvement of the channel at the mouth of Genesee river, in the state of New York	25,000 00
For carrying into effect the treaty with the Iowas, of November 23, 1837	500 00		$3,002,427 73	For continuing the removal of obstructions at Black river, Ohio	5,000 00
To the Osages, for interest at five per cent. on $69,120, being the value of 54 sections of land set apart by the treaty of 1825 for education purposes, & for which they have agreed to accept $2 per acre, as authorised by the senate in its resolution of the 19th of January last; which resolution also provides for the investment of the amount	3,456 00	H. R. 450.		For continuing the removal of obstructions at the mouth of the Huron river, in Ohio	5,000 00
To the Delawares, for interest at five per cent. on $46,080, being the value of 36 sections of land set apart by the treaty of 1832 for education purposes, and for which they have agreed to accept $2 per acre, as authorised by the senate in its resolution of the 19th January last; which resolution also provides for the investment of the amount	2,804 00	For preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities for 1838, and for arrearages for 1837.		For continuing the improvement of the navigation at the mouth of the Vermilion river, Ohio	23,626 57
For holding a treaty with the Creeks, for the purpose of adjusting their claims for property and improvements abandoned or lost in consequence of their emigration west of the Mississippi	2,000 00	For the suppression of Indian hostilities for the year 1838	$1,000,000 00	For continuing the improvement of Cleveland harbor, Ohio	51,856 00
For payment of the amount of depredations committed by the Osage and Comanche Indians on the property of the Choctaw Indians	825 00	H. R. 676.		For continuing the removal of obstructions at Cunningham creek, Ohio	5,000 00
For expense of holding a treaty with the Wyandot Indians of the state of Ohio	1,500 00	For forage for the horses of the dragoons, volunteers, officers, and in the service of the trains	400,000 00	For continuing the removal of obstructions at Ashtabula creek, Ohio	8,000 00
For the payment of the expense of the delegation from the Seneca Indians, who visited Washington to protest against the ratification of a late treaty entered into with them by a commissioner acting under the authority of the United States	799 23	For freight or transportation of military supplies sent into Florida and the Cherokee country	350,000 00	For continuing the removal of obstructions at Conneaut creek, Ohio	8,000 00
For the expenses of the delegation of the Senecas who visited Washington to urge the ratification of the late treaty with them and the other New York Indians, and the expenses of negotiating that treaty with the Senecas and the other bands of New York Indians, including all the expenses incident thereto	9,500 00	For wagons, carts, ambulances, and harness, and for boats and lighters	150,000 00	For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Presque Isle, Pennsylvania	30,000 00
For the expenses of submitting again to those Indians the treaty amended, ratified, &c. by the senate	4,000 00	For the transportation of supplies from the principal depots to the points of consumption including the hire of steamboats and other vessels, and the expense of public steamers and transport schooners	700,000 00	For continuing the improvement of Dunkirk harbor, New York	10,000 00
For holding a treaty with the Osages, for the extinguishment		For the hire of a corps of mechanics, laborers, mule-drivers, teamsters, wagon-masters, and other assistants	250,000 00	For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Portland, Lake Erie, New York	35,466 00
		For transportation, and other expenses of four thousand volunteers	100,000 00	For continuing the improvement of the harbor at Cattaraugus creek, Lake Erie, New York	32,410 00
		For miscellaneous and contingent charges of all kinds, not embraced under the foregoing heads	751,000 00	For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Salmon river, Lake Ontario, New York	30,000 00
		For drafts lying over, and arrearages for services and supplies in Florida and the Cherokee country	1,048,600 00	For continuing the construction of a breakwater at Plattsburg, New York	27,500 00
		For pay of four thousand volunteers, for 1833, including $133,415 arrearages for 1837	1,416,250 32	For continuing the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of Oak-orchard creek, New York	5,000 00
		For subsistence for militia, volunteers, and friendly Indians	265,040 00	For continuing the pier at Kennebunk, Maine	8,000 00
		For the purchase of powder and other materials for cartridges, together with the repairs of gun-carriages, small-arms, and accoutrements	35,000 00	For continuing the improvement of Big Sodus bay, New York	10,000 00
		For tents, knapsacks, and other supplies furnished by the clothing bureau	20,677 56	For continuing the pier and mole at Oswego harbor, New York	46,067 00
		For correcting an error in paying the Indians employed in the public service in Florida	7,775 53	For continuing the construction of a breakwater at Burlington, Vermont	50,000 00
		For all objects specified in the third article of the supplementary articles of the treaty of 1835, between the United States and the Cherokee Indians, the further sum of	1,047,067 00	For continuing the breakwater on Stanford's ledge, Portland harbor, Maine	26,366 00
		For satisfying all claims for arrearages of annuities for supplying blankets and other articles of clothing for the Cherokees who		For continuing the breakwater at Hyannis harbor, Massachusetts	8,764 00
				For continuing the breakwater at Sandy bay, Massachusetts	20,000 00
				For continuing the improvement of the channel of the river Thames, leading into Norwich harbor, Connecticut	10,000 00
				For improving the harbor of Westport, Connecticut	4,782 00
				For continuing the improvement of the navigation of the Hudson river, above and below Albany, in the state of New York, to be expended according to the plan and estimate recommended by the secretary of war	100,000 00

For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Wilmington, Delaware	$9,356 00	quire it, shall be paid out during the year 1833, to be applied to the objects as above specified, and the other half in like manner in the year 1839.		reef, according to said survey and report	100 00
For continuing the improvement of the harbor of New-castle, Delaware	11,573 00	s. 106.		For the erection of a light-house on Lynde point, at the mouth of Connecticut river, in addition to the sum of five thousand dollars already appropriated	2,500 00
For continuing the Delaware break-water	150,000 00	For the removal of the great raft of Red river	70,000 00	To complete a sea-wall, to preserve the light-house and other buildings on Fairweather island, near Black Rock harbor, pursuant to the report of captain Gregory	1,500 00
For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Baltimore, Maryland	20,000 00		$1,535,008 53	For the erection of buoys on such of the rocks in the harbor of Milford as may be designated by the superintendent of light-houses for that district	300 00
For continuing the improvement of the navigation of Cape Fear river, below Wilmington, North Carolina	20,000 00	s. 380.		For one buoy on a shoal west of Black point, and one buoy on Pond reef, in the bay of Niantick	160 00
For opening a passage of fifty yards wide and seven feet deep, at low water, between the town of Beaufort and Pamlico sound, North Carolina, and for improving New river	25,000 00	For building light-houses, light-boats, beacon-lights, buoys, and making surveys, for the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight.		For buoys on Cornfield-point rock, Adam's rock, and Oyster-pond-point rock, near Plumb island, in Long Island sound	240 00
For continuing the improvement of Pamlico, or Tar river, below Washington, North Carolina	5,000 00	STATE OF MAINE.		STATE OF NEW YORK.
For continuing the improvements of the inland channel between St. Mary's & St. John's, Florida	29,000 00	For the erection of two buoys near the entrance of Portland harbor, viz: one on Taylor's ledge, and one on Broad-cove rock	500 00	For completing a beacon on Romer's shoals, in addition to the appropriation heretofore made	10,000 00
For continuing the improvement of Dog-river bar and Choctaw pass, in Mobile harbor	50,000 00	For rebuilding the light-house on Wood island	5,000 00	To complete a light house on Esopus meadows, on the western shore of the Hudson river, in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated	3,000 00
For continuing the improvement of the Cumberland river in Kentucky & Tennessee, below Nashville	20,000 00	For placing monuments on Fort-point ledge, Adams' ledge, and Buck ledge, in Penobscot river, in addition to the former appropriation for that purpose	1,300 00	To complete a light house on Cedar island, Sag Harbor, in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated	2,500 00
For continuing the improvement of the Ohio river, between the falls and Pittsburg	50,000 00	For placing a monument on Bulwark ledge, about seven miles east-southeast of Portland light-house	3,000 00	For the erection of a light house on the northern islet in Fisher's sound, near the northwest end of Fisher's island	3,000 00
For continuing the improvement of the Ohio and of the Missouri river	20,000 00	For placing one buoy on Drummer's ledge, south of Mark island, and one buoy on Mark island ledge	500 00	For the payment of the balance remaining due for the expenses of procuring and locating buoys in the new channel in the port of New York, lately discovered and called Gedney's channel	870 36
For continuing the removal of obstructions at Grand river, Ohio	10,000 00	For erecting a light-house on Bear island, at the entrance of Mount desert harbor	3,000 00	STATE OF NEW JERSEY.
For continuing the works at Buffalo harbor	20,500 00	For erecting a monument on Bunker's ledge, outside of said island	1,000 00	For erecting a small beacon light at South Amboy, and putting down the following buoys, to wit: One on the tale of the Great Beds; one off Billon's Point shoal, southwest port of Staten island; one on the Middle Ground, near Prince's bay; one on the Old Orchard shoal; one off the point of the Great Kill shoals	1,050 00
For erecting a mound or sea-wall along the peninsula which separates Lake Erie from Buffalo creek, to prevent the influx of the lake over said peninsula	48,000 00	For placing one buoy at the southwest entrance of said Mount Desert harbor, and two buoys on the reef in the middle of Bass harbor	150 00	For the erection of a beacon light at the Corner Stake, so called, between Elizabethtown point and Shorter's island; also another small light or lantern on Shorter's island; also for buoys, &c., at the following places: A spar buoy at Bergen point; a spar buoy at the Mill rocks, in Newark bay; a spar buoy on the first oysterbed or point of the bar between the Hackensack and Passaic channels, one and a half mile below the crossing-place; a spar buoy at the Corner Stake, so called; a spar buoy at the crossing place, on the north side; a spar buoy at the Elbow; all pursuant to the report of captains Kearney, Sloat, and Perry	3,400 00
For continuing the preservation of Plymouth beach	2,400 00	For placing a buoy on Bantam ledge, outside of Ram island	200 00	STATE OF DELAWARE.
For continuing the preservation of Provincetown harbor	4,500 00	For erecting a stone beacon and a buoy on Half-tide ledge, in the county of Hancock	1,200 00	For rebuilding a floating-light on Fire-fathom bank, at the entrance of Delaware bay	15,000 00
For continuing the preservation of Rainsford island	7,353 00	For placing a spar-buoy on a ledge in the vicinity of Crabtree's point, about four miles below Sullivan harbor, in said county	150 00	STATE OF MARYLAND.
For continuing the sea-wall for the preservation of Fair-weather island, and repairing the breakwater near Black Rock harbor, Connecticut	11,550 00	For the erection of a monument or beacon on York ledge, off the entrance of York harbor	10,000 00	For placing four buoys at or near Pool's island channel	1,200 00
For continuing the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of Bass river, Massachusetts	10,000 00	For erecting a light-house and sea-wall at Saddleback ledge, in Penobscot bay	10,000 00	STATE OF VIRGINIA.
For continuing the breakwater of Church's cove, town of Little Compton, Rhode Island	18,000 00	STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.		For placing spar-buoys in James river, between Day's point and Richmond city, on such ledges and shoals as may be selected	3,000 00
For the protection and improvement of Little Egg harbor	10,000 00	For the erection of a pier on the east side of Whaleback light-house, to protect the same, in addition to the appropriation already made for that purpose	17,000 00	For building a light-boat to take place of the one in the narrows of the Potomac	8,000 00
For improving the natural channels at the northern and southern entrances of the Dismal-swamp canal	10,000 00	STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS.		For placing three or more buoys at the entrance of Onancock creek, in the county of Accomac	300 00
For the improvement of the navigation of Savannah river, Georgia	15,000 00	For the erection of two small beacon-lights on the north side of Nantucket island, in addition to former appropriation for that purpose	2,100 00	STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA.
For the improvement of the Arkansas river	40,000 00	For completing the light-house on Mayo beach, in Wellfleet bay	2,000 00	For marking, staking out, and placing buoys or other such monuments as are most suitable, to designate the channels in Crowatan sound, and at outlets of Pasquo-
For removing the sand-bar occasioned by the wreck in the harbor of New Bedford, the unexpended balance of an appropriation of ten thousand dollars, made July 4, 1836, being	7,691 37	For a monument, in the place of one carried away, on Bowditch's ledge, in the harbor of Salem	5,000 00
Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the appropriation heretofore made of $10,000 for removing the mud shoal called the Bulkhead, in the harbor of Appalachicola, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the deepening of the straight channel in the same harbor.		For a monument on Bowbill ledge, in the harbor of Manchester, or for removing the same, at the discretion of the secretary of the treasury	5,000 00
Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the several sums appropriated by the first section of this act, which exceeds $12,000 each, one half thereof, if the public service re-		For rebuilding the two light-houses on Plum island, near Newburyport	4,000 00
		STATE OF RHODE ISLAND.
		For buoys or dolphins in Providence river	600 00
		For placing two spindles at the mouth of Pawcatuck river	400 00
		STATE OF CONNECTICUT.
		For placing six buoys in the western, and six in the eastern entrance of Mystic river, from Fisher's island sound, in the state of Connecticut, according to the survey and estimate of F. H. Gregory, reported to the board of navy commissioners on the seventh day of August last, four hundred and thirty-five dollars; and for buoys on the rock in the channel east of Ram island, and upon Turner's tank, Little, and Perquimans rivers	$1,000 00	expedient, of the reflector apparatus, of the most improved kinds, to be imported and to cause the said several sets to be set up, and their merits, as compared with the apparatus in use, to be tested by full and satisfactory experiments; and the sum of $15,000, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated for that purpose; and the secretary of the treasury is also further authorized to ascertain, by suitable and proper experiments, the merits of the apparatus lately invented by Mr. E. Blunt of New York; and if, in his judgment, it has merits which justify the adoption of it, he is hereby authorized to contract with Mr. Blunt, to light any light-house on the coast with it; and the sum hereby appropriated for the above purposes is	2,500 00	For the survey of Des Moines and Iowa rivers	1,000 00

For the construction of a new light boat, in lieu of that now stationed off Wade's point	8,000 00			For a survey and estimated cost of a railroad from Milwaukee to Du Buque	2,000 00
For a light house on Pea island or Boddy's island, as the secretary of the treasury shall deem to be most for the public interest	5,000 00				$540,800 00
For three buoys or such marks designating Chickamacomico channel, in Hyde county, as shall be found most suitable for that purpose	150 00			House of representatives.
For placing buoys at the mouth of Shallote river	500 00			Private claims	$31,693 67
STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.				Senate.
For erecting buoys on St. Helena bar	1,000 00			Private claims	18,409 93
STATE OF OHIO.					$45,103 60
For securing, or rebuilding on a better site, the light house on Turtle island, at the entrance of Maumee bay, in Lake Erie	6,700 00			RECAPITULATION.
For completing a beacon light near the entrance of Sandusky bay, in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated for that purpose	3,900 00			Extra session.
For the construction of a light house on the northwest end of Bass island, commonly called Put-in-bay in Lake Erie, instead of one on Cunningham's island	2,000 00			For the support of the government and suppression of Indian hostilities for the year 1837	$2,109,000 00
For placing buoys on a shoal or sunken inland near the western Sister island, and to the southward thereof, in Lake Erie	550 00			2d session 25th congress.
STATE OF GEORGIA.				Civil and diplomatic	8,252,360 22
For constructing a floating-light to be stationed in Tybee channel, in lieu of an appropriation of that sum heretofore made for a similar light on Martin's Industry shoal	10,000 00			Army	5,127,860 10
For placing three buoys at the entrance of St. Andrew's inlet	540 00			Fortifications	1,015,415 00
For placing beacons or buoys at the entrance of Brunswick harbor	1,000 00			Protection of the northern frontier	625,500 00
STATE OF ALABAMA.				Navy	6,062,136 30
For the construction of a light-house on Dauphin island.	8,000 00			Revolutionary and other pensioners	2,058,532 62
STATE OF LOUISIANA.				Current expenses of the Indian department	3,002,427 73
For marking the entrance and the channel of the Atchafalaya bay	1,500 00			Preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities	7,739,410 41
For rebuilding the light-house at the southwest pass of the Mississippi river	20,000 00			Harbors	1,535,008 53
For completing a light-house at or near the southwest pass on the Vermilion bay, in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated	8,000 00			Light-houses	307,010 36
STATE OF MICHIGAN.				Miscellaneous	540,300 00
For rebuilding a light-house on Bois Blanc island, if a suitable site for the same can be found on said island	5,000 00			Private claims	45,103 60
For erecting a light-house at New Buffalo, on Lake Michigan, instead of one at city west, provided for by an act in 1827	5,000 00				$38,413,064 87
For erecting a light-house on South Manitou island, Lake Michigan	5,000 00			Statement of the new offices created and the salaries of each, and also a statement of the offices the salaries of which are increased, and the amount of such increase, during the two last sessions of congress, made in pursuance of the 6th section of the act of the 2d of July, 1836, to provide for the appropriation of additional payments, and for other purposes.
For erecting a light-house at Presque Isle, Lake Huron	5,000 00			NEW OFFICES.
For erecting a light-house on Point aux Borgues, Saginaw bay, Lake Huron	5,000 00			Governor of the territory of Iowa	$1,500 00
TERRITORY OF WISCONSIN.				As superintendent of Indian affairs	1,000 00
For the construction of a light-house on Grassy island, at the head of Green bay, near the mouth of Fox river	4,000 00			Secretary of the territory of Iowa	1,200 00
TERRITORY OF FLORIDA.				Chief justice supreme court territory of Iowa	1,500 00
For placing buoys at the mouth of the St. John's in addition to the appropriation heretofore made for that purpose	850 00			Two associate justices, ($1,500 each)	3,000 00
For erecting a light-house on Carysfort reef, in addition to the appropriation already made for that purpose	40,000 00			District attorney, same as others
Sec. 2. And be it further enacted,				Marshal " "
That the secretary of the treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to cause two sets of dioptric or lenticular apparatus, one of the first, the other of the second class, and also one set, if he deems it				Judge criminal court District of Columbia	2,000 00
				Judge orphans' court District of Columbia	1,000 00
				Two registers and two receivers, Wisconsin territory west of the Mississippi, same compensation as others
				Surveyor general Wisconsin territory	1,500 00
				Register and receiver northwestern land district of Louisiana, same as others
				Collector for the port of Vicksburg	500 00
				NEW REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.
				1 colonel, same compensation as other officers of same grade.
				1 lieutenant colonel do. do.
				1 major do. do.
				10 captains do. do.
				10 1st lieutenants do. do.
				10 2d lieutenants do. do.
				ARTILLERY.
				4 captains, same compensation as other officers of similar grade.
				4 1st lieutenants do. do.
				4 2d lieutenants do. do.
				CORPS OF ENGINEERS.
				1 lieutenant colonel, same pay as other officers of same grade in the dragoons.
				2 majors do. do.
				6 captains do. do.
				6 2d lieutenants do. do.
				COMMISSARY DEPARTMENT.
				1 assistant commissary general of subsistence, pay same as lieutenant colonel of cavalry.
				1 commissary of subsistence, pay of quartermaster of the army.
				3 commissaries of subsistence, pay of assistant quartermasters.
				ORDNANCE.
				2 majors, pay of officers of dragoons of same grade.
				1 professor of chemistry, mineralogy, &c. at West Point, pay of professor of mathematics.
				MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.
				7 surgeons, same pay as other surgeons.
				Note. —The other appointments authorized by the new army bill, are staff appointments, to be made from the line of the army, and do not increase the number of officers.

CHRONICLE.

Steam ships. The Philadelphia U. S. Gazette of Wednesday says: We learn with pleasure, that the project of adopting the proposition of the English company to run steam ships between Philadelphia and England and France, is now being matured, and will shortly be laid before the public in a form which, we have reason to believe, will be acceptable, and which will secure that co-operation necessary to success."

The New York Journal of Commerce states, on the authority of gentlemen connected with the French trade, that it has been determined at Havre to build four steam ships of 1800 tons burthen each, to constitute a line between that port and New York. The keel of one had been laid, and arrangements were making to complete them all, as soon as possible.

The Great Western left New York on Thursday afternoon the 16th inst. during a violent gale, having on board 86 passengers, and a vast number of letters, the charges on which were nearly two thousand dollars.

She made her last voyage to Bristol in twelve and a half days, and came in sight of land in just twelve days from Sandy Hook. According to the log of that voyage, the shortest distance made in any one day after the first was 216 miles, or just nine nautical miles per hour; and the greatest distance in any day 264 miles, being eleven nautical miles per hour.

The ship Woodbury, Cutting, arrived at New York from Liverpool, reports having seen the steam ship Great Western on the 7th inst. in lat. 40 15, lon. 71 34.

Reminiscence. The hon. Gullian C. Verplanck, at a dinner on board the Great Western, related the following:

"Looking over (said he) a number of old New York papers, I met with one published about the middle of the last century, giving an account of the coronation of George III, which had been brought out in a vessel called the Sally Ann, from Bristol to this port in eighty days. I could not help being struck with the wonderful improvement in our day, by the construction of such vessels as the Great Western, which brought to this port from the same city a full account of the like event, in the coronation of Queen Victoria, in fourteen days and some few hours."

We learn with pleasure that the tunnel on the Harrisburgh and Lancaster railroad is now completed, with the exception of one facade. The passengers are now conveyed directly through it, and the whole distance between Lancaster and Harrisburgh is now run in one hour and twenty minutes; and passengers leaving this city at six o'clock, A. M. arrive at Harrisburgh at two o'clock, P. M. Since last Saturday, the cars have used the tunnel, and we may congratulate the travelling public upon the completion of a work that renders a journey to Harrisburgh a pleasure. [U. S. Gaz.]

Scarcity of birds. It has been remarked by those who live in the country and observe the signs of the times, that never, in any season, have so few birds been about. We have remarked the same fact ourselves, in riding within a dozen miles of the city; and the probable cause of the decrease is owing to the death-searching spirit of the sportsman, who spares neither chipbird nor robin red breast. The orchard birds are of great value to the farmer, in destroying insects, but are of little or no use to the sportsman; and to kill a bird for mere idle sport is indeed cruel. [Boston Post.]

SNAIX AHOY

There is sum live rattail snax tu be sean in a borks on this bote fur sick spunts a cite for groan loax and children half prise.

Please tu call on Old Dick
N B kash pade or no sho

The above is verbatim of an advertisement posted on a small bunk room door on board of the elegant pleasure steamboat on Lake George, alias Lake Horicon, as taken personally, and snakes seen by the communicator. [N. Y. Star.]

A novel arrival. Arrived at this port, yesterday, sloop Native, captain Solomon Attiquen, from the Indian Plantation, Marshpee, Mass. This vessel was built by the native Indians on their plantation, is owned by them, and is commanded by one of their number. She is 32 tons burthen, and is here for a cargo of lumber. [Bangor Whig.]

Great feat in swimming. One of the soldiers of the 82d regiment, at Malden, U. C., deserted to the American side by swimming from that place to Grosse Isle, a distance of three miles. He was pursued to Grosse Isle by an officer and guard, but was protected by American citizens.

Transportation of the mail. It is stated in a western paper that a new mail line has been established between New Orleans and Louisville, by which the mail is to be carried in steam boats, regularly three times a week, between those cities. There are to be eight boats on the line, and each boat to have a postmaster on board, whose duty it is made to attend to the receipt and delivery of the mail at the different points on the route. The contractors for thus carrying the mail, are to receive for this service $180,000 a year.

Military road. We learn from the Little Rock Gazette, that major Belknap and capt. Bonneville, two of the commissioners appointed by the secretary of war to locate a road from Fort Smith to Red river, had made all their arrangements, and were on the eve of starting to perform the duties assigned them. The road about to be located by the above commissioners, it is understood, is to leave Fort Smith on the Arkansas, and run as directly south with the line of the state as the nature of the country will admit, to Red river, upon which road it is the intention of government to erect two forts, for the purpose of defence.

The national road. The editor of the Wheeling Gazette, who has recently travelled over fifty or sixty miles of the national road west of that city, reports it to be in wretched condition. It has (he says) been very much cut up, and heretofore instead of breaking up stone to repair it, holes have been filled up by throwing them unbroken upon the road, thus rendering it very hard upon horses, and extremely rough. A large number of hands are now employed on the road, and it is probable ere long it will be in much better order. The rate of toll have been advanced since the 1st of August to double price, which has given cause for much complaint, not only to travellers, but also to farmers, tavern keepers, and others along the road. It is feared that the very high tolls charged will be sufficient to cause wagoners and drovers to seek some other route.

The automaton chess player, so long the wonder of the world, the rope dancers, trumpeter, confederation of Moscow, and all the other pieces of mechanism which composed the exhibitions of the late Mr. Maelzel, are to be sold at public sale in Philadelphia on the 1st September next, by his administrator, Mr. Jno. F. Oil.

Sam Putch outdone. On Tuesday last about two miles below the steamboat landing on the Genesee river, a horse attached to a cart loaded with wood, was precipitated from the bank, cart and all, to the water's edge below, a distance of 75 feet nearly perpendicular, and after adjusting himself, commenced browsing upon the shrubbery, without having received the least apparent injury.

[Rochester Daily Advertiser.]

Something new. A very curious feat was performed on Monday evening last at the Washington race course by a youth of eighteen years of age for a wager of $50. He was to carry a man, weighing one hundred and twenty-five pounds, around the course, measuring one mile, which he performed with the greatest ease in seventeen minutes. After performing the feat he ran about fifty yards and back again, with his load on his shoulders, amid the loud huzzas of the multitude who had assembled to witness the feat.

[Potomac Advocate.]

$500 reward for a missing letter. Five hundred dollars reward will be paid for the delivery of a letter written by the governor of Georgia to Slade, the abolitionist. It is to be distinctly understood, that said letter is not to be read by the finder, there being certain passages in it, that ought not to meet the public eye. Upon delivery or transmission of said letter to the executive department, the above sum will be paid out of any monies in the treasury not otherwise appropriated. [Savannah Georgian.]

Conviction of a mail robber. The Little Rock Gazette of the 1st instant says:

"The trial of Robert A. Linebaugh, for purloining money from letters, while entrusted with opening the mails at Greenville, Clark county, last spring, took place last week, before the U. S. District court, Judge Johnson presiding. The case was fully made out, and the jury found a verdict of guilty—sentence, 10 years' imprisonment."

Cumberland coal. The Frederick Herald says: "Some estimate may be formed of the value which is attached to the Cumberland coal, as well as of the importance that this mineral is about to attain, as an article of export from our state, so soon as our system of internal improvements are completed, from the fact, that this coal is preferred, as we have it from good authority, on board the steam boat Great Western, to any other which they have tried."

END OF VOLUME FIFTY-FOUR.

Correction. Captain Charles, owner and master of the schooner Merchant, of Elizabeth city, N. C., utterly denies the truth of the statement that has been published respecting that vessel, to wit: that it passed near the wreck of the Pulaski and was hailed by some of the survivors, but passed on, giving no attention to their cries for help. Captain Charles was not on board at the time, the schooner being then in command of a captain Gaylard; but he says that he has conversed with many of the passengers who were saved from the Pulaski, and heard nothing of the kind from any of them. To this negative evidence he adds the affidavit of the mate, as follows:

State of North Carolina, } Elizabeth city, August 14,
Pasquotank county, } 1838.

Personally appeared before me James M. Pool, one of the justices of the peace for Pasquotank county, Rufus Robbins, who being first duly sworn, deposed and saith, that he was the mate on board the schr. Merchant of Elizabeth city, on her late voyage from Elizabeth city to Wilmington, N. C. loaded with corn—that the statement taken from the Philadelphia Exchange books and published in the Baltimore American has been shown to him this day, and that the same is entirely false as regards the said schr. Merchant being hailed by the sufferers of the Pulaski for assistance. He farther swears that they never saw the Pulaski, nor does he believe that they went within fifty miles of the wreck of the said Pulaski,—he farther states that the schr. Henry Cameron arrived at Wilmington twelve hours previous to the arrival of the schr. Merchant.

RUFUS ROBBINS.

Sworn to before me this 18th August, 1838.

JAMES M. POOL.

Some laborers employed in grading a street in Norfolk, at a spot where it passed through an old burying ground, struck upon a coffin near which was a trunk much decayed. It was found to contain a substance resembling tinder, which was once bank notes, or perhaps, continental money, and a parcel of gold coin, all of which was greedily taken up by the black men engaged in digging. They would not reveal the number of coins in the trunk. The one of which they exhibited proved to be a ducat, coined in Holland in 1758, and is valued at $2.50.

The cattle are dying off at a shocking rate in some parts of New Hampshire by some unknown disease. The bodies putrify so soon after death, that it is necessary to bury them immediately. Some persons had been poisoned by attempting to skin the dead animals. [Gazette.]

A late Mobile Chronicle states, that Messrs. Fountain and Prince, members of two prominent houses in that city, are about to embark in a new enterprise—that of establishing a commercial house in Liverpool. This is of course with a view to favor, or profit by the direct trade between Mobile and Liverpool.

New cotton. The first bale of new cotton reached here on Saturday, by the rail road cars from Harrisburgh. It is from the plantation of Turner Clanton, esq., Columbia county, (Ga.) and consigned to Messrs. Luffite & Brother. The quality is said to be excellent. We understand 13 cents was offered for it and refused. [Charleston Courier, Aug. 19.]

The eldest of the craft. The venerable colonel Andrew Marchalle, a veteran of the revolution, died on the tenth instant at Washington, Adams county, Mississippi. The deceased was the father of the then typographical art in Mississippi, having brought into the then territory in '97, a small printing press the first ever used there.

[New Orleans American.]

Hunting in Mississippi. Two parties in Lowndes county started, last week, on a hunting excursion, in the course of which they bagged 5 3/4 scalps. L. H. Willeford's company, consisting of 11, counted 2,404, and that of J. A. Snell 1,521. [Id.]

The packet ship Oxford, which sailed from New York on Monday for Liverpool, carried out eight thousand letters.

A weighty toast. The following heavy affair, in the way of toasts, was given at the celebration of the 4th in Boston:

"The fifty-six signers of the Declaration of Independence; the heaviest fifty-six the world ever saw—the whole strength of Great Britain couldn't raise it."

The Alexandria Gazette states that the village of Orcoquan, Va. was much infested by mad dogs, and that a citizen of that place, who had been bitten by one, had gone to the "mad-stone" in another country for relief.

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

This book is due on the latest date stamped below. Please return or renew by this date.
